CALIFORNIA REPORTER

95 PACIFIC REPORTER

Action by D. Coplew against A. W. Durand and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, for appellants. J. Wiseman Macdonald, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff had entered into a contract with defendants to do the painting, polishing, enameling—in short the “finishing”—of the woodwork and floors of defendants’ house. By the terms of the contract progress payments were to be made, 75 per cent. of the contract price to be paid on completion, and 25 per cent. 36 days after final completion. The progress payments were made as in the contract provided, and this action is brought to recover the 25 per cent. final payment, which defendants refused to make.

The contract provided that the work was to be “strictly first-class and to be done to the entire satisfaction of the owner and the architect”; as to the payments, “that in each of said cases a certificate be obtained and signed by the said architect.” Defendants’ refusal to pay was based upon the declaration of the architect that the work was not first-class and was not done to his satisfaction. Where work is to be done to the satisfaction of a person, evidenced by a certificate to that effect, the production of such a certificate is a condition precedent to a right of action upon the contract. This proposition is too well established to be questioned, and, indeed, is not questioned in this case. Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, 38 Am. Rep. 54; Loup v. California, etc., Co., 63 Cal. 97; Cox v. McLaughlin, 63 Cal. 196; Tally v. Parsons, 131 Cal. 516, 63 Pac. 833; Kihlberg v. U. S., 97 U. S. 398, 24 L. Ed. 1106; Wangler v. Swift, 90 N. Y. 38; 9 Cyc. 618.

To make his case, in the absence of such certificate, the contractor pleaded and the court found that the work was done to the entire satisfaction of the owner and the architect, and that the refusal to issue the completion certificate was wrongful and was due to plaintiff’s refusal to do certain repair work which was not required of him by the contract. The evidence, while conflicting, established to the satisfaction of the trial court the following facts: Under the terms of the contract plaintiff was to be paid $2,165. The work consisted of the finishing of the woodwork of the doors and walls and the finishing of the hardwood floors. The hardwood floors were naturally the last woodwork to be put in place and the last to be finished by the contractor. The contractor proceeded with his work upon the doors and walls, receiving partial payments. In the early part of August he had completed all this work, and nothing remained for him to do under his contract but to finish the floors, which were not as yet ready for him. The architect asked the plaintiff what would be the value of the work which he had yet to do upon the

1. CONTRACTS — PERFORMANCE — APPROVAL OF ARCHITECT.

Where work is to be done to the satisfaction of a person evidenced by a certificate, the production of such a certificate is a condition precedent to a right of action on the contract.

2. SAME—WITHHOLDING CERTIFICATE.

Where from the nature of work to be paid for on certificate of approval by an architect there might be latent defects, not discoverable at the time of completion, but becoming patent after lapse of time, or the defects were apparent and the architect frequently called the contractor’s attention to them and paid the progress payments under repeated promises of the contractor to repair the defects before the work was finally turned over for acceptance, there was reserved to the architect the right of final approval or rejection at the time of final payment.

3. SAME—FRAUD.

Where work to be paid for on certificate of approval by an architect has been completed to the satisfaction of the owner and the architect, and the architect without warrant refuses to issue his certificate, the refusal under such circumstances being unreasonable, the necessity for production thereof as a condition precedent to an action on the contract is dispensed with.

floors, and plaintiff replied, "About $200." The architect then stated that he would allow him the full 75 per cent. of the contract price, deducting the value of the separate work yet to be done upon the floors, and did so; the architect himself testifying that he knew that he had paid precisely 75 per cent. of the entire contract price, excepting $200, the cost or the value of the work upon the floors. It is in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff that at the time of the completion of all this woodwork, excepting the floors, the architect and owner both expressed themselves satisfied with it. This condition of affairs obtained from August 8, 1904, when the last payment, amounting to 75 per cent. was made, until January 22, 1905, when plaintiff finally completed the work upon the floors. The delay was through no fault of his. Meantime decorators had been called in, and in doing their work they had injured the work done by plaintiff. This is not disputed, and a separate contract was entered into by defendants with plaintiff to repair the damage so occasioned by the decorators. This work, in turn, he did to the apparent satisfaction of the defendants. At least he was paid in full therefor. It is not satisfactorily explained why at this time he should have been employed at a special price to do this repair work, if, as defendants' architect contends, he was at that time insisting that the original work was incomplete, unsatisfactory, and poor. The floors were done by plaintiff, as the court finds, in a satisfactory and workmanlike manner. Then, when in due course plaintiff demanded his final payment, the architect refused to give him a final certificate, stating that the woodwork had been damaged by water, panels and joists were cracked and would have to be replaced, and that he looked to the plaintiff to finish these damaged panels and joists, to which plaintiff replied that he could not be expected to do the work twice, when he was paid but once for it. In fact it was necessary to replace panels to the number of about 60, and those panels in turn had to be "finished."

Appellants, however, contend that, notwithstanding these progress payments which had been made, and notwithstanding the fact that the woodwork had been completed to the satisfaction of the architect and owners, and evidence of that completion given by the payment of the 75 per cent., still the owners and architect retained a right under the contract to exercise a later judgment, and were not legally required to pass final judgment until the contractor was ready to turn over to them his work as complete. Haynes v. Second Baptist Church, 88 Mo. 285, 57 Am. Rep. 413. In this connection it is pointed out that the very finding of the court, while to the effect that the work had been performed to the satisfaction of the architect and owner, declared also that it was not performed in a good and workmanlike manner, so that, whatever payments the owners and architect might choose to make during the progress, they still had the right to refuse the certificate for the final payment if at that time the work had not been performed to their satisfaction under the terms of the contract. This undoubtedly is true. Where, from the nature of the work, there might be latent defects, not discoverable at the time of completion, but becoming patent after the lapse of time, it might be important that the architect should not exercise final judgment until after the lapse of the 36 days; or where, as the architect contends in this case, the defects were apparent, and he frequently called the contractor's attention to them, and paid the 75 per cent. under repeated promises of the contractor to repair the defects before the work was finally turned over for acceptance. Under such circumstances it would unhesitatingly be held that there was reserved to the architect the right of final approval or rejection at the expiration of the time named. This was the position of the defendants in this case, and that position was supported by the testimony of the architect. But the difficulty which confronts appellants lies in the fact that the court did not accept their version. Its direct finding that the work was done to the satisfaction of the architect impliedly, but positively, negatives the contention that he was, during all of that time, insisting that the work was imperfect and incomplete.

The case which is thus presented is one where the work has been completed to the satisfaction of the owner and architect, and the latter thereafter and without warrant refuses to issue his certificate for the final payment. The refusal under these circumstances being unreasonable, the necessity for the production of the certificate is dispensed with. Katz v. Bedford, 77 Cal. 322, 19 Pac. 523, 1 L. R. A. 826; Nolan v. Whitney, 88 N. Y. 649; Phillips, etc., Co. v. Seymour, 91 U. S. 646, 23 L. Ed. 341.

For these reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

CAMPBELL v. SANTA MARIA OIL & GAS CO. (L. A. 1,961.)

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS — CONTRACTS FOR ISSUE OF STOCK—LIABILITY TO ASSESSMENT.

Plaintiff, a lessee of oil property, who was also director and secretary in a corporation, proposed at a director's meeting that the corporation acquire the leasehold to be paid for in stock of the company issued as fully paid and non-assessable. At a subsequent stockholders' meeting the directors were requested to purchase for $300,000, "payable in the fully paid stock" of the company, without specifying that the stock should be non-assessable. The offer in this form was made by the board of directors, and was accepted, and the conveyance made. Plaintiff himself as secretary prepared the certificates of stock, and caused to be printed across the face of each the word "nonassessable." Held, that it was not the mere offer of plaintiff to sell for nonassessable stock, but the offer which the corporation made in return to buy for "fully paid" stock and its acceptance which constituted the contract, and the fact that plaintiff caused the word "nonassessable" to be printed on the certificates without authority had no weight in determining the rights of the original parties, whatever effect the word might have had if the stock had passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser without notice.

2. SAME—OFFICERS—ESTOPPEL TO QUESTION REGULARITY OF CORPORATE ACTS.

A director of a corporation, who voted as such for the levying of an assessment on the capital stock, is estopped to object to defects and irregularities in the assessment, and the estoppel binds the assignee of his interests.

3. SAME—RECOVERY OF STOCK—ACTION—TENDER—SUFFICIENCY.

A tender to a corporation by the owner of stock which was sold for a delinquent assessment of the amount of the delinquent assessment and costs is insufficient to sustain an action under Civ. Code, § 347, providing that no action must be sustained to recover stock sold for delinquent assessments upon the ground of irregularity in the assessment, unless the party first tenders to the corporation or the party holding the stock sold, the sum for which it was sold, with subsequent assessments "and interest on such sums from the time they were paid."

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen and Charles Monroe, Judges.

Action by John B. Campbell against the Santa Maria Oil & Gas Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Conroy, for appellant. Wright, Bell & Ward, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action brought by the assignee of one Kloeckner to recover certain stock sold for delinquent assessment under section 347 of the Civil Code. Defendant is a California corporation, having a capital stock of $500,000 divided into 500,000 shares of the par value of $1 each. Plaintiff's right to relief is based upon his allegations of certain irregularities in the assessment, and upon his claim that there was an agreement that the stock in question should be nonassessable. The court found against plaintiff's contentions. Judgment passed for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

As plaintiff is but the assignee of Kloeckner, with whom all of the transactions of the corporation were had, his name may be dropped from consideration. Kloeckner and others were the lessees of certain oil land in Santa Barbara county. The owners of the leasehold concluded to incorporate for convenience in operating their property. To that end certain of them, including Kloeckner, subscribed to articles of incorporation and for five shares of the capital stock of the defendant company. The incorporation was duly had. At the first directors' meeting after the officers of the corporation had been chosen Kloeckner, being one of the directors and retary of the corporation, proposed that the corporation acquire the leasehold, if possible, from himself and his associates, "and to use in payment of the purchase capital stock of the company to any amount not to exceed $300,000; the stock to be issued as fully paid and nonassessable by the company." At the stockholders' meeting next held the stockholders requested the board of directors "to purchase said leasehold interest for the price of $300,000, payable in the fully paid stock of this company." After this action at the stockholders' meeting another directors' meeting was held at which the proposition was fully discussed, and it was resolved to acquire the leasehold estate "for 300,000 shares of the fully paid stock of this company." The offer thus formulated the court finds was accepted, and the leasehold conveyed to the corporation for $300,000 of the fully paid capital stock of the company. The conveyance was actually made to the corporation, the stock ordered issued to Kloeckner and his associates in such proportion as Kloeckner himself directed upon payment by the purchasers of the United States revenue tax. Kloeckner, in fact, prepared these certificates for issuance. The stock certificates, which he himself, as secretary, procured to be printed, bore upon the face of each, without authority from the board of directors, the word "nonassessable." The contention that the contract between Kloeckner and the company was for nonassessable stock is based upon these circumstances. But it was not the mere offer of Kloeckner to sell the leasehold interest for $300,000 of nonassessable stock which fixed the liability of the corporation. It was the offer which the corporation in turn made to Kloeckner, and which he accepted, which determines the rights of the parties. By that offer, and in the acceptance of that offer, it nowhere appears that nonassessability of the stock was a condition of the contract. In terms, the leasehold was to be conveyed to the corporation for 300,000 shares of the fully paid capital stock of the company, and this in fact was done, and the circumstance that Kloeckner himself caused to be printed on the stock certificates of the company the word "nonassessable" can have no weight in determining the rights of the original parties to the contract, whatever effect the words might have if the stock had passed into the hands of an innocent purchaser, without notice.

It was pleaded by the defendant that Kloeckner was estopped from denying the validity of the assessment, in that he was a director of the defendant corporation, and voted affirmatively for the adoption of the resolution levying the assessment. The court so found upon abundant evidence. That having participated in all of these matters, and having voted as a director for the levying of this assessment, an estoppel is raised against Kloeckner's objections to the defects and irregularities in the assessment, is too well settled to require discussion. It is sufficient to refer to the cases of Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 357, 33 Pac. 1107; Macon & Augusta R. R. Co. v. Vason, 57 Ga. 314; Kansas City Hotel Co. v. Harris, 51 Mo. 464; Willamette Freighting Co. v. Stannus, 4 Or. 263; Stone v. Great Western Oil Co., 41 Ill. 86. As an estoppel, of course, binds the parties and their privies, the estoppel is equally effective against Kloeckner's assignee, plaintiff in this action. Kessler v. Ensley Co. (C. C.) 123 Fed. 559; Union Dime Savings Bank v. Wilmot, 94 N. Y. 228, 46 Am. Rep. 137.

The final contention of plaintiff is that he elected under section 347 of the Civil Code to pay, and tendered to the corporation, the amount of the assessment, with costs; but, as the court holds, his averment was simply that he offered to pay the costs and assessment on the last day of the six months immediately preceding the sale. This offer was insufficient to entitle Kloeckner to redeem or to entitle him to bring the action under the section above cited, inasmuch as no tender or payment was made of the amount of interest.

For these reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re HEBERLE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,079.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 24, 1908.
Rehearing Denied April 23, 1908.)

1. WORDS AND PHRASES—"DISTRIBUTED."

The word "distributed" is not a technical word in conveyancing; but, if it has any technical meaning, it is with reference to decrees of distribution in probate courts.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2133.]

2. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION IN FAVOR OF TESTACY—VOID TRUSTS.

A testator directed real property to be held in trust for certain beneficiaries. The trust was void. The will further provided that, in case testator should dispose of the trust property, the trustees should pay to the same beneficiaries the amount received for the property, "it being my will that" they "receive from my estate the said real estate or its value." The trustees were empowered to sell real property, except the property subject to the trust, "which is not to be sold but is to be kept and distributed" to the beneficiaries. Held, that the paramount intention of the testator was not that the property should descend to his beneficiaries through a trust, but that with or without a trust they should with certainty receive property to that value, and, since a construction which favors testacy is always preferred to one resulting in intestacy, the fact that the trust was void should not operate to defeat testator's intention, and render him intestate as to the estate attempted to be devised in trust.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Petition by Jacob Heberle and another for partial distribution to them as heirs at law, of a portion of the estate of George Heberle.

From an order sustaining, without leave to amend, demurrers to the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Milton K. Young, F. E. Lacy, and Dennis & Loewenthal, for appellant. Lee, Scott & Chase, for respondent Jacob Swigart. Murphy & Schmidt, for other respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from an order sustaining, without leave to amend, demurrers to the petition of Jacob Heberle and Eva Dickhof for partial distribution to them, as heirs at law, of a portion of the estate of George Heberle, deceased; it being the contention of petitioners that as to this portion he died intestate. The petitioners' status as heirs at law is not in question. The only question is whether or not from a construction of the will of deceased intestacy resulted as to the property in controversy.

The deceased by his will, after directing the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, devised and bequeathed to trustees all the rest and residue of his estate upon specified trusts. By the seventh paragraph of his will he directed certain real property upon Spring street, in the city of Los Angeles, called for convenience the "Spring street property," of the estimated value of $65,000, to be held by the trustees for the term of five years, "and then the same by said trustees to be conveyed to the children of my deceased brother Martin Heberle, late of Miamisburg, Montgomery county, state of Ohio, share and share alike." It is conceded by all parties to this litigation that this trust is void. Estate of Walkerly, 108 Cal. 628, 41 Pac. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 97; Estate of Cavarly, 119 Cal. 408, 51 Pac. 629; Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70; Estate of Dixon, 143 Cal. 511, 77 Pac. 412; Estate of Sanford, 136 Cal. 97, 68 Pac. 494. At the time of his death the testator still owned the Spring street property. The question to be answered is what disposition is to be made of it. Admittedly, if intestacy results as to this property, the petitioners are entitled to share in it.

Reading the whole will, we find next this clause: "In case I should dispose of said property, then it is my will that my trustees pay over to the said children or grandchildren of my said deceased brother the amount received by me for said property. It being my will that the said children and grandchildren of my deceased brother shall receive from my estate the said real estate or its value." By the fourteenth paragraph the testator empowers the trustees to convert real estate into money by sale. The seventeenth paragraph, however, is a limitation of this general power, and reads as follows: "That the power to sell my real estate, as set forth in the fourteenth subdivision shall not affect my said Spring street property, which is not to be sold, but is to be kept and distributed to the children of my said deceased brother Martin." The trust created by paragraph 7 being void in its creation, no estate as to the Spring street property passed to the trustees. If in the will there are no other apt words disposing of the property upon the failure of this trust, intestacy as to it must be the result. The trial court found those words in the seventeenth subdivision of the will above quoted, and, in view of the fact that a construction which favors testacy is always preferred to one resulting in intestacy (Dunphy's Estate, 147 Cal. 96, 81 Pac. 315), it may not be said that the interpretation is not a permissible one. The seventeenth paragraph contains a direction for the "distribution" of the Spring street property to the children and grandchildren. While it may be argued that the word has reference to distribution by the trustees under the trust, yet it is not a word aptly used for such purpose, while it is apt in its application to a direct devise. It is equally open to the construction, therefore, that the distribution to the children is to be at the hands of the court. As is said in Estate of Dunphy, supra, the word "distributed" is not a technical word in conveyancing, and is not usually found in deeds. "If it have any legal technical meaning, it has such meaning with reference to decrees of distribution in probate courts." It appears that while the testator designed in case he died possessed of the Spring street property that that property should be held for five years, yet that, if the Spring street property had been sold, they were to receive in money the amount obtained from such sale directly, and not through the medium of trustees. The paramount idea in the testator's mind, therefore, was not that the property should descend to his beneficiaries through a trust, but that, with or without a trust, they should with certainty receive property to that value from his estate. Under the wording of this instrument, therefore, the trial court was correct in holding that its conclusion that the trust was void did not, in contemplation of the other language employed in the will, so defeat the testator's intent as to render imperative a finding of intestacy.

For which reason the decree appealed from is affirmed.

STREATOR v. LINSKOTT et al. (S. F. 4,976.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS—CONCLUSION OR FACTS.

An allegation in an action to enjoin the issuance of bonds that plaintiff has no speedy or adequate remedy at law is a mere conclusion of law without value, in the absence of allegation of facts supporting it.

2. INJUNCTION—GROUNDS OF RELIEF—INJURY THREATENED.

Where, if a taxpayer is right in his contention that Pol. Code, §§ 1880-1886, authorizing the issuance of school district bonds, have, as to school districts composed in whole or in part of municipal corporations of the fifth class, been superseded by Act March 23, 1893, Laws 1893, p. 292, c. 210, and an amendment thereof, approved March 11, 1897, Laws 1897, p. 103, c. 99, the alleged invalidity of the issue of bonds sought to be enjoined will appear on the face of the bonds, the taxpayer can suffer no damage if the bonds are put in circulation, they being void even in the hands of bona fide holders, and has no cause of action.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—SCOPE—THEORY AND GROUNDS OF DECISION OF LOWER COURT.

Where, in an action by a taxpayer to enjoin the issue of school district bonds on the ground that Pol. Code, §§ 1880-1886, authorizing the issuance of school district bonds as to school districts composed in whole or in part of municipal corporations of the fifth class, have been superseded by act approved March 23, 1893, Laws 1893, p. 292, c. 210; and an amendment thereof, approved March 11, 1897, Laws 1897, p. 103, c. 99, and that the provisions of that act as amended were violated in various particulars by the bonds proposed to be issued and the proceedings purporting to authorize their issuance, the court below declined to pass on the question raised by defendants that the act of 1893 and its amendment, if applicable to the school district in question, was unconstitutional, and sustained a demurrer on the ground that the complaint did not show that the taxpayer would suffer any injury by issue of the bonds, the Supreme Court will not decide the question of the validity of the bonds "independent of the ground upon which the superior court based its decision," since, if on examination it should agree with the contention that the district in issuing the bonds must proceed under the act of 1893, it could not afford the taxpayer any relief without reversing a judgment rightly made on a ground fairly presented by the record.

4. SAME—REVIEW—ABSTRACT QUESTIONS.

The Supreme Court will not undertake to decide abstract questions of law at the request of a party who shows no substantial right that can be affected by a decision either way.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court. Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Clark P. Streater against James A. Linscott and others, chairman of the board of supervisors and other officers of the county of Santa Cruz. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh R. Osborn, City Atty., for appellant. Benj. K. Knight, Dist. Atty., for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This is an action brought by a resident and taxpayer of the city of Santa Cruz against the chairman of the board of supervisors and other officers of the county of Santa Cruz to enjoin them from signing or issuing certain bonds authorized by a vote of the electors of a school district embracing the city of Santa Cruz and certain outlying territory. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the plaintiff appeals from the ensuing judgment of dismissal.

The complaint sets forth the proceedings had for the purpose of authorizing the issuance of the bonds. It is not disputed that these proceedings were in strict accordance with sections 1880 to 1886 of the Political Code. The position of the appellant is, however, that these sections have, as to school districts composed in whole or in part of municipal corporations of the fifth class, to which it is claimed the city of Santa Cruz belongs, been superseded by an act entitled "An act to enable school districts in cities of the fifth class, and school districts which embrace territory, a portion of which is within and a portion of which is without such cities of the fifth class, to issue bonds, etc.," approved March 23, 1893 (St. 1893, p. 292, c. 210), and an amendment to said act approved March 11, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 103, c. 99). It is pointed out that the provisions of this act as amended are violated in various particulars by the bonds proposed to be issued, and the proceedings purporting to authorize their issuance. The contention of the respondents in the lower court apparently was that the act of 1893 and its amendment, if applicable to the school district in question, are unconstitutional. The judgment contains a statement showing that the court below declined to pass upon the constitutional question involved, and that the demurrer was sustained upon the ground that the complaint did not show that the plaintiff would suffer any injury by reason of the issuance of the bonds. In this the court was clearly right. All that the complaint contains connecting the plaintiff with the subject-matter of the suit is to be found in the allegations that he is a resident and taxpayer of the city of Santa Cruz, and that he "has no speedy or adequate remedy at law." The latter is, of course, a mere conclusion of law, valueless in the absence of averment of facts supporting it.

The complaint sets forth at length an order of the board of supervisors prescribing the form of the proposed bonds. From this it appears that the bonds themselves, if issued, will contain at least two provisions which, according to the contention of the appellant, conflict with the requirements of the act of 1893 as amended: (1) The bonds provide that interest shall be payable annually, while the only authority given by the act of 1893 is to issue bonds bearing interest "to be payable semiannually"; (2) the bonds declare that they are issued and sold "for the purpose of raising money for purchasing school lots, for building one or more schoolhouses, or insuring the same," etc. The act of 1893 does not authorize the issuance of bonds for the purpose of insuring schoolhouses or other property. The respondents suggest no doubt of the sufficiency of either of these objections to invalidate the bonds, if the act of 1893 is the only law authorizing the issuance of such bonds. If the appellant is right in his contention that this act is the one that governs, the alleged invalidity of the issue will appear on the face of the bonds, and they will be void even in the hands of bona fide holders for value. "It results that the plaintiff as a taxpayer can suffer no damage if the bonds are put in circulation, and has no cause of action." McCoy v. Briant, 53 Cal. 247; Hop- kins v. Lovell, 47 Mo. 102; Polly v. Hopkins, 74 Tex. 145, 11 S. W. 1084.

We are informed by the appellant's brief that this is "a friendly proceeding to determine the validity of the legal method adopted," and are asked to decide the question of such validity "independent of the ground upon which the superior court based its decision." This we cannot do. If we should, upon examination, agree with the contention that this district, in issuing bonds, must proceed under the act of 1893, we could not afford the appellant any relief without reversing a judgment which was rightly made upon a ground fairly presented by the record. Furthermore, regardless of the fact that the trial court based its decision upon this particular ground, this court will not undertake to decide abstract questions of law at the request of a party who shows no substantial right that can be affected by a decision either way. It may be advantageous for municipalities desiring to issue bonds to obtain from this court, in advance, a "certificate of title" attesting the validity of the proposed issue, but such relief can be obtained only in a proper proceeding, that is, one in which the decision of the question sought to be presented will be necessary to the disposition of a real controversy between parties having an actual interest in the matter in litigation.

The judgment is affirmed.

HATCH v. NEVILLS et al. (L. A. 1,756.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 22, 1907.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

A contract for street improvements providing that all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under the agreement, or from any unforeseen obstruction or difficulties which may be encountered in the prosecution of the work, etc., shall be sustained by the contractor, is void as tending to increase the cost of the work, and is therefore insufficient to support an assessment for work done thereunder.

E. C. Denio and A. B. McCutchen, for appellant. R. W. Kemp, for respondents. O. B. Carter, amicus curiæ.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered in favor of defendants in an action to foreclose a street assessment lien for work done in the city of San Pedro.

The various proceedings of the city board of trustees leading up to the contract itself provided that the work should be done in accordance with certain specifications on file in the office of the city clerk. These specifications included the following clause: "All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under this agreement, or from any unforeseen obstruction or difficulties which may be encountered in the prosecution of the same, or from the action of the elements, or from encumbrances on the lines of the work, or from any act or omission on the part of the contractor, or any person or agent employed by him, not authorized by this agreement, shall be sustained by the contractor." In the case of Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213, this court held that there could be no valid assessment for street work done under a contract which referred to and included specifications containing the following language: "All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications shall be sustained by the contractor." The italicized portion of the provision which we have quoted from the specifications in the present case is substantially the same as the clause considered in Blochman v. Spreckels, and, on the authority of that case, the contract and assessment here sued upon must be held to be invalid. It is unnecessary to consider any other point made by the respondents.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Jan. 28, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 26, 1908.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACT—VALIDITY.

A contract for street improvements subject to specifications, one of which required that all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under the agreement should be sustained by the contractor, was void and insufficient to sustain an assessment for the work done.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to quiet plaintiffs' title to a lot in block 1, town of Garvanza, in the city of Los Angeles, against the lien of a street improvement bond issued upon an assessment for the cost of street work done under the "Vrooman Act." From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs declaring such bond void the defendant Tryon-Brain Company, the holder of the bond, appeals. From the resolution of intention to the contract for the street work upon which the bond is based, reference is made in all steps of the proceedings to certain specifications on file in the office of the city clerk. These specifications are the same as those considered by the Supreme Court in the opinion rendered in Woollacott v. Meekin, 91 Pac. 612, being general specifications Nos. 68, 54, 52, 55, and 51 used by the engineer's office of the city of Los Angeles. The provision therein that "all loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under this agreement, * * * shall be sustained by the contractor," was held to render void an assessment resting upon such specifications. A careful consideration of appellant's brief and the record here, and of the opinion filed in the Woollacott v. Meekin Case, leads to the conclusion that there is no question of law left for the decision of this court.

On the authority of that case, the cases therein cited, and Hatch v. Nevills, 95 Pac. 43, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JUDGMENT—FINDINGS TO SUPPORT.

Where the only issue raised by the findings of the parties in question was as to the amount of sales to defendant K. during a certain period beginning February 20, 1906, and the amount of payments by K. during the same time, and it appeared from the findings of the court that K. bought goods of plaintiff to the amount $2,179.20 prior to February 20th and $2,020 subsequently, and that K. paid $1,145.89 prior to February 20th and $2,147.77 subsequently, a judgment for plaintiff for $903.54 could not be sustained, since the findings as to the transactions prior to February 20th, being made outside the issue, would not support a judgment.

SHAW, J. Action against sureties on bond to recover payment of the value of goods sold to principal. The appeal is from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

On February 20, 1906, William Klinge, as principal, and George G. Garrettson and one Walger, as sureties, executed a certain bond to the Los Angeles Brewing Company in the sum of $1,500. By the terms of this instrument, copy of which is made a part of a verified complaint, it was provided that the brewing company should sell to said Klinge, as principal, such amount of beer as he might demand, and should open and establish an account with him, and, as it might deem advisable, extend to him a line of credit for such purchases as he might make, not exceeding $1,500. To secure the payment of any indebtedness incurred by said Klinge for beer sold him by said brewing company, appellant and Walger, as sureties, undertook and agreed to pay the same on demand. Plaintiff alleges that between February 20, 1906, and July 18, 1906, under and in accordance with the terms of said instrument, it sold and delivered to Klinge certain beer, for which he agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $930.54, which sum, although demanded, he had failed to pay. By his separate answer appellant admits all the allegations of the complaint, except that he alleges the aggregate amount of beer sold by plaintiff to Klinge between said dates to have been $2,045, instead of $930.54, as stated in the complaint, and alleges, further, that between said dates Klinge paid to plaintiff on account of said purchase the sum of $2,047.77, and avers that plaintiff was paid in full for all beer so sold to Klinge under the provisions of said contract. It thus appears that the only issue joined by the pleadings related to the transactions had between the parties subsequent to February 20, 1906; plaintiff charging that the amount sold was of the value of $930.54, no part of which had been paid, and defendant alleging that the value of the beer sold was $2,045, all of which had been paid. This constituted the sole issue before the court.

The court made the following finding: "That previous to the 20th day of February, 1906, the plaintiff did sell and deliver beer to the defendant Klinge, for which the agreed price was $2,179.20; that subsequent to the 20th day of February, 1906, and in pursuance of the instrument in writing hereinbefore set forth, the plaintiff did sell and deliver certain quantities of beer to the defendant William Klinge for the agreed price of $2,020; that all the goods hereinbefore mentioned were charged to the defendant Klinge on the books of the plaintiff in the form of a running account; that prior to the 20th day of February, 1906, the defendant Klinge did pay to the plaintiff the sum of $1,145.89 on said running account; that subsequent to the 20th day of February, 1906, the defendant Klinge did pay to the plaintiff the sum of $2,147.77 on the said running account; that all of said payments, both subsequent and prior to the 20th day of February, 1906, when received by the plaintiff, were immediately placed upon the books of the plaintiff to the credit of the defendant Klinge on said running account; that prior to and at the time of the filing of the complaint herein, for the said goods sold and delivered, the agreed price unpaid was the sum of $905.54." If we disregard that part of the finding as to the dealings between the parties prior to February 20, 1906, no reference to which appears in the complaint, and consider only that portion applicable to the issues raised by the pleadings, it would appear that during the period specified in the complaint Klinge bought beer of plaintiff to the value of $2,020 and paid on account thereof, and for other goods purchased, the sum of $2,147.77. The court so finds. It cannot be claimed that such finding supports the judgment rendered. In order to sustain the judgment we must invoke the support of a finding not within the issues, namely, that relating to transactions had between Klinge, the principal, and respondent, prior to February 20, 1906, and in no wise mentioned or referred to in the complaint. The law will not permit this to be done. A finding made outside the issues will not warrant a judgment. Moynihan v. Drobaz, 124 Cal. 212, 56 Pac. 1026, 71 Am. St. Rep. 46; Green v. Chandler, 54 Cal. 626; Gamache v. South School District, 133 Cal. 145, 65 Pac. 301. It follows, from what has been said, that the court erred in its conclusion of law that plaintiff was entitled to recover of defendant Garretson the sum of $905.54.

The transcript contains a bill of exceptions purporting to embody certain evidence had upon the trial. This, however, is not a subject for consideration upon this appeal, for the reason that the appeal was not taken within 60 days after the entry of judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 939. The evidence given on behalf of defendant seems to bear upon the question of unfairness claimed to have been exerted in procuring appellant's signature to the bond, but no such issue was tendered.

The judgment is reversed.

Pardee & Pardee, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, under an information charging him with the crime of murder, was convicted at the trial of murder of the second degree. From the judgment and the order denying him a new trial, he takes this appeal.

The homicide occurred on the 22d day of January, 1907, in the county jail at Susanville, the defendant having been arrested and confined in said jail on that day upon suspicion that he was insane. The sheriff, who made the arrest, employed the deceased, Perry Stout, to remain with and guard the defendant during the night of the day of the arrest. At about the hour of 12 o'clock that night one Packard, a night watchman and deputy sheriff, went to the jail with food or "supper" for Stout and the prisoner. On reaching the inside of the jail he found Stout lying dead on the floor. Death, it was learned upon investigation by the sheriff, who had been summoned to the jail immediately upon the discovery of Stout's death, and by the autopsy physician, who later examined the body, was caused by knife wounds. The defendant, as stated, had been arrested on the supposition that he was insane. He had been engaged as a laborer on tunnel work for the Western Pacific Railway, and was placed under arrest by the sheriff at a point on the line of said railway known as "Camp No. 1." The evidence discloses that the defendant had been on a protracted "spree," or under a state of alcoholic intoxication for a number of days previous to his arrest, and that his actions prior to and at the time of his said arrest were so unusual and queer that it was generally believed by his acquaintances that he had lost his reason. The sheriff was notified of the conduct of the defendant, and was requested to place him in custody, and, in obedience to said request, arrested and confined him in the county jail, as already related. The defendant did not deny killing Stout, but interposed the defense that, at the time of the commission of the homicide, he was insane.

On the 4th day of February the district attorney was about to proceed with the arraignment of the defendant upon the information filed against him, when, upon a suggestion by counsel representing the accused, the court, by the authority of section 1368 of the Penal Code, made an order, reciting that a doubt existed as to the sanity of the prisoner, and that the question of his sanity be submitted to a jury. Thereupon a jury was summoned and impaneled to try the question of defendant's mental condition. The jury, after hearing evidence, returned a verdict "that said alleged insane person is at the present time insane." Upon this verdict the judge of the superior court made an order committing the accused to the Napa state hospital for the insane. The effect of this verdict and order of commitment to the state hospital was only, of course, to suspend, until such time as the prisoner might recover, further proceedings involving his arraignment and trial. On the 18th day of March, 1907, the medical superintendent of the state hospital officially declared the recovery of the defendant, and accordingly made an order, in compliance with section 2139 of the Political Code, discharging him from said hospital. The defendant was subsequently returned to the custody of the sheriff of Lassen county, and on the 18th day of July put upon his trial for the crime of murder, as charged against him in the information.

The defendant, on this appeal, makes the complaint that the trial court erred to his prejudice in a number of its rulings upon questions of evidence, and likewise erred in giving and refusing certain instructions. It is also urged that certain jurors impaneled to try the case received evidence bearing upon the issues of the case out of court. But it will not be necessary to notice all the assignments of error; for we are in no doubt that a reversal of the cause is imperatively demanded because of prejudicial error involved in the charge of the court to the jury. The only defense interposed to the charge was, as we have seen, that the defendant was, at the time he killed the deceased, insane to the extent that he was without volition or responsibility; that is, that he was so unbalanced mentally that he was powerless to know and appreciate the wrongfulness or criminality of his act. The circumstances attending the homicide, according to the description given by the witnesses of the wounds inflicted upon the body of the deceased, were of unusual atrocity and wickedness, if the act was committed by the defendant in a state of sanity. There were found upon the body of the deceased by the autopsy physician something like 30 wounds, all of which, with the exception of 1, were produced by a knife. A few of the wounds were inflicted, in the opinion of the physician, after the deceased had expired. One of the wounds—that on the right side of the neck—extended over an inch to the left of the median line to 2½ inches beyond the right ear, severing the jugular vein and carotid artery.

There is evidence tending to show that the defendant for some days prior to the homicide had been indulging in alcoholic drinks to such an extent that he became a victim of delirium tremens; that, as before suggested, his actions were so far from his ordinary and apparently normal manner of conducting himself that those who had some personal acquaintance with him became convinced that his mind was affected to the extent at least of temporary dethronement of reason. Expert testimony was offered by both sides as to the mental sanity of the defendant at the time of the commission of the act of killing. As is usual in almost all cases in which insanity is relied upon as a defense to crime, the testimony of the alienists was conflicting—those for the defense claiming that the defendant was certainly insane at the time, and those testifying for the prosecution declaring with equal positiveness that, while he was laboring under certain hallucinations, superinduced by long continued alcoholic intoxication, he nevertheless had intelligence enough to know that his act was not only wrongful but criminal. The defendant and the deceased had never met before the evening preceding the morning on which Stout was found to have been slain, and no motive or reason for the homicide is shown by the record. The defendant made no effort to escape, and there was some evidence to the effect that the opportunity was readily available to him to do so had such a thought been in his mind. In short, the evidence was such that the jury would have been warranted in returning a verdict either for or against the accused.

If the defendant was, at the time he killed Stout, insane to a degree that he was incapable of knowing and understanding that he was thus doing wrong, then he was entitled, under the law, to an absolute acquittal. Logically, under the evidence as presented in the case at bar, either one of two verdicts only could properly have been returned—the one that the defendant was guilty of murder of the first degree; the other an acquittal altogether of any offense embraced in the charge in the information. By this we are not to be understood as saying that a verdict of guilty of murder of the second degree or of manslaughter could or should not be sustained, if the instructions and rulings of the court did not involve prejudicial error. We only make the suggestion for the purpose of illustrating the proposition that the defendant was entitled to a full and accurate statement by the court to the jury of the law applicable to the sole defense interposed by him against the charge alleged in the information. The court signally failed to so instruct the jury, as must be readily obvious from an examination of its full charge, and particularly from the following instruction read and submitted to the jury as the law upon the question of insanity as a defense to the charge of murder: "If you believe and find from the evidence that the defendant was, at the time of the alleged killing, insane from any cause, either of a temporary or settled nature, then you should not find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, for, if insane, he could not form that willful, deliberate, premeditated, and malice aforethought intent which the law absolutely requires to constitute murder in the first degree." The objection made to the quoted instruction is that the court thereby in effect declared to the jury that they could find the defendant guilty of any crime included within that charged in the information other than murder of the first degree, even though they believed the defendant was insane to the extent of irresponsibility at the time he killed the deceased. The instruction, while stating the law correctly as far as it goes, is, we think it will not be disputed, open to the criticism involved in the complaint urged against it. If the court had elsewhere in its charge stated the law fully and correctly upon this subject to the jury, then there might be room for the application of the argument advanced that the charge, considered in its entirety, or as a whole, fairly presented the law relating to the defendant's only defense, and although, even under the mentioned circumstances, the instruction would be none the less vulnerable to the criticism made against it, there would perhaps be some ground for holding that it did not operate prejudicially to the accused. But we have searched the record in vain for a single line in any of the court's instructions bearing upon the issue of insanity in which the jury were told that, if the defendant was shown by sufficient proof to have been insane at the time of the commission of the act, he was thereby under our law absolved from responsibility for the same, and consequently entitled to an absolute acquittal, or a verdict of not guilty of any offense comprehended in the charge preferred against him. The criticised instruction, standing alone, and without any other or further or more correct amplification of the law applicable to insanity as a defense to the crime of murder, cannot reasonably be construed to mean anything less than that, if the defendant were shown to have been insane when he killed Stout, he would thereby be entitled to an acquittal of murder of the first degree, because his mentality was such that he could not conceive and form the malice aforethought essential to a consummation of the crime of murder of that degree, but that as to the other degree of murder or manslaughter insanity would not excuse him. This is not the law as it should have been declared to the jury, and the instruction was highly prejudicial.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded.

7 Cal. App. 559

PEOPLE v. SIMMONS. (Cr. 60.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 17, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 16, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PRESENTING.

Under the express provisions of Pen. Code, § 1174, as amended in 1905, the time specified therein and in section 1171 within which the draft of a bill of exceptions must be presented to the judge or delivered to the clerk may be extended for a reasonable period by the judge, but only for good cause, and upon affidavit showing the necessity therefor, presented upon written notice to the adverse party, who may file counter affidavits, and in no case may the time be extended by the stipulation of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2857-2860.]

2. SAME—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS PRESENTED TOO LATE—PRESUMPTIONS.

Attorneys will be presumed to know the procedure necessary to secure an extension of time in which to prepare a bill of exceptions, and where they fail to observe it their misunderstanding or misconstruction of the statute cannot excuse their default.

3. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT FOR RELIEF.

Affidavits in support of a motion to be relieved from the objection that a proposed bill of exceptions was not presented in time are not aided by the recital in the motion that it would be made "on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect," where they do not present the grounds constituting the mistake, etc.

4. SAME—QUESTION PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT.

An appeal from the judgment alone without a bill of exceptions presents for review only the action of the trial court in giving and refusing instructions.

5. SAME—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In a murder case an instruction that the prosecution is not required to establish accused's guilt beyond any possible doubt, but all that is required is moral certainty, that is, that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind, and, if the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of accused's guilt, they should convict, was not erroneous, because failing to state that the jury should be satisfied "to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt," especially where the instructions as a whole required that degree of proof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1877-1882.]

6. SAME—CONSIDERATION OF CASE BY JURY.

In a murder case it was not error to refuse a requested instruction that if, after consideration of the case, a juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of accused's guilt, it would be his duty not to vote for a verdict of guilty, and not to be influenced in so voting for the single reason that a majority of the jury should be in favor of such a verdict, where the court repeatedly charged that they must be convinced of accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt or else acquit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

7. SAME—TRIAL—DUTY TO GIVE INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION.

It will be presumed that refused instructions were not pertinent to any fact shown by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3032.]

8. HOMICIDE—MURDER—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—THREATS.

In a murder case a requested instruction that a threat of accused could not be considered unless the jury believed that the act upon which it was conditioned was done by deceased was properly rejected, since the character of the threat may have been such, and the condition upon which it was to be executed of such trivial importance, as to show malice, even without evidence that the act upon which the threat was conditioned was performed by deceased, especially as an attempted performance by deceased of the condition would make the threat admissible.

9. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In a murder trial a statement in an instruction that "there is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence that renders it any less reliable than any other class of evidence" was not violative of the constitutional provision prohibiting judges from charging with respect to matters of fact, and was not erroneous where, when considered with other instructions, it could only be understood as meaning that circumstantial evidence is just as reliable as any other kind, if it convinces the jury of accused's guilt to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

H. C. Simmons was convicted of murder, and appeals from an order refusing to settle a bill of exceptions and from the judgment. Affirmed.

Weldon & Held, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

BURNETT, J. There are two appeals in the case upon separate records—one from an order refusing to settle a bill of exceptions, and denying and refusing to grant the motion of defendant to be relieved from the objection of plaintiff that defendant's proposed bill of exceptions was not presented in time, and the other from the judgment of life imprisonment upon conviction of murder in the first degree, with that penalty fixed by the jury. In this opinion we shall consider the questions arising in both appeals.

1. Judgment was entered against defendant on October 2, 1906. The court on the same day made an order granting defendant 30 days in addition to the time allowed by law in which to prepare, serve, file, and present his bill of exceptions. On November 10th, and before the expiration of the time theretofore allowed, the district attorney entered into a stipulation with the attorney for defendant that the latter should have to and including December 11th to present his bill of exceptions. On December 8th defendant gave notice that on December 10th he would present his bill to the judge. On December 10th said bill was duly presented, and thereupon the district attorney objected to the settlement upon the ground that the said proposed bill of exceptions was not presented "within the time required by law, as expressed in sections 1171 and 1174 of the Penal Code, nor was the same delivered to the clerk for the judge within said time, nor was the time expressed in said sections extended by any order of any court or any judge." The defendant then made application on affidavits to be relieved from said objection of the district attorney. These affidavits were made by the attorneys for defendant, and they set out the facts above stated, and that the order of the judge extending time was made in open court in presence of the district attorney, who made no objection, and that affiants "solely and implicitly relied upon the said extension of time so given by said stipulation and the order of the court, and did believe that by compliance therewith the presentation of said proposed bill of exceptions would be made in due time, and did believe that said order and stipulation waived the necessity of securing such extension by the presentation of affidavits, and that the securing of such affidavits and other steps prescribed by said sections 1171 and 1174 were not necessary where the attorney for plaintiff consented to such extension of time." The district attorney filed a counter affidavit presenting the additional fact that the said order of the court was made without any showing by affidavit or otherwise of any good cause therefor, and without any notice being served upon the district attorney, and that he neither assented to nor objected to the granting of said time to said defendant, and that no other order was ever made by any court or judge extending said time. The court denied defendant's application, and refused to settle any bill of exceptions.

Said section 1174, as amended in 1905, provides that: "The time specified in this section and section 1171 within which the draft of a bill of exceptions must be presented to the judge or delivered to the clerk, may be extended for a reasonable period by the trial judge, * * * but only for good cause and upon affidavit showing the necessity therefor, presented upon written notice of at least two days to the adverse party, who shall have the right to file counter affidavits. In no case can the time be extended by the stipulation of the parties." Here the order extending the time was made, as we have seen, by the judge without any affidavit having been filed, and without any notice having been given to the adverse party. Again the proposed bill was presented, not within the period covered by the order, but some time thereafter, upon the theory that there was an extension by virtue of the stipulation. To uphold appellant's contention that the bill should have been settled would be to disregard the plain provision of the statute. The significance of said provision was considered and determined by this court in the case of People v. Blis, 84 Pac. 676. In that case it was said: "The present statute introduces additional requirements, which we cannot hold to be merely directory. * * * But it is claimed that it was nevertheless within the discretion of the court, 'after hearing the whole matter, to make the order setting down the bill for settlement, and giving the district attorney time in which to file his amendments to the bill.' We cannot concur in this view of sections 1171 and 1174, and must hold that, when a defendant in a criminal action seeks to obtain an extension of time within which to have his bill of exceptions settled, he must proceed substantially as directed by the statute. Doing this, the judge is then clothed with discretion, and his action would be disturbed only where its abuse is made to appear." There is no pretense that appellant complied with the requirement of said statute. Hence the court below had no authority to consider the proposed bill of exceptions.

But if it were a matter of discretion, and the court had jurisdiction to relieve the appellant of his default, it could not be said that there was any abuse of said discretion. There is nothing in the affidavits of the attorneys for appellant to show that they were not familiar with the requirements of the law. It must be presumed that they had knowledge of the procedure to be taken in order to secure an extension of time in which to prepare their proposed bill. Knowing the law, they departed from its plain provisions at their peril. We might surmise that the amendment to said section 1174 had escaped the attention of counsel, but we must base our decision upon the record as we find it. No effect can be given to the statement in one of the affidavits that counsel, in view of the said order and stipulation, believed that they were acting within the purview of the law, as a misunderstanding or misconstruction of the statute cannot excuse default. Chase v. Swain, 9 Cal. 130; Thompson v. Harlow, 150 Ind. 455, 50 N. E. 474. Neither can the affidavits be aided by the recital in the motion that it would be made "on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect of defendant and his counsel herein." Facts must be presented from which the court reaches the conclusion that the relief should be granted. The court is not concerned with the opinion of affiant that his neglect is excusable. Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 485, 39 Pac. 863.

Complaint is made that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "The prosecution is not required to establish the guilt of the defendant beyond any possible doubt. All that is required is moral certainty, that is, that degree of proof which produces conviction in an unprejudiced mind; and if, from the evidence in this case, the jury are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, then your verdict should be one of conviction." The criticism of appellant is as follows: "Our contention is that not only must the jury be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, but to a moral certainty before they can convict." It is hard to understand how a juror can be satisfied beyond a "reasonable doubt" and not to a "moral certainty" of the guilt of defendant; but, conceding a difference, it is without significance, as the jury must have understood from the instructions as a whole that they must be satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant in order to convict him.

There was no error committed by the court in its refusal to give the following instruction: "If after consideration of the whole case any juror should entertain a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the defendant, it is the duty of such juror so entertaining such doubt not to vote for a verdict of guilty, nor to be influenced in so voting for the single reason that a majority of the jury should be in favor of a verdict of guilty." It was fully covered by other instructions given by the court. In fact, the court fully and repeatedly charged the jurors that they must be convinced of defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, or else it was their duty to acquit. For instance: "I charge you, gentlemen of the jury, that there must be in your minds an abiding conviction to a moral certainty of the truth of the charge derived from a comparison and consideration of all the evidence, and you must be satisfied of the truth of the accusation against the defendant to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, or your verdict must be not guilty." This instruction was addressed to all the jurors, and any one would be very obtuse indeed who did not understand from it that each individual juror could not vote for conviction under any circumstance unless he was satisfied of the guilt of the defendant to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt. The law does not require such tautology as is advocated by appellant.

As to the refusal of the court to give a proposed instruction upon circumstantial evidence, it is sufficient to say that it is substantially covered by other instructions, and besides the general suggestion is applicable to this as to all the instructions refused that it must be presumed that they were not pertinent to any fact shown by the evidence.

The instruction as to threats given as modified was as favorable to defendant as he was entitled to. The latter portion, that the threat could not be considered unless the jury believed that the act upon which the same was conditioned was done by the deceased, was properly rejected. The character of the threat may have been such, and the condition upon which it was to be executed of such trivial importance, as to show malice, even without any evidence whatever that the act upon which the threat was conditioned was performed by deceased. And besides, as suggested by respondent, an attempted performance by deceased of the condition would make the threat admissible while the proposed instruction required a complete performance.

Appellant complains of the following statement in one of the instructions given by the court: "There is nothing in the nature of circumstantial evidence that renders it any less reliable than any other class of evidence." It is contended that this is in violation of the provision of the Constitution which prohibits judges from charging juries with respect to matters of fact, and in support of the position People v. Vereneseneckockhoff, 129 Cal. 511, 58 Pac. 156, 62 Pac. 111, People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 8, 62 Pac. 297, and Estate of Blake, 136 Cal. 311, 68 Pac. 827, 89 Am. St. Rep. 135, are cited. The Vereneseneckockhoff Case, however, goes much beyond the case at bar, as will be seen from the following quotation: "The court enlarged upon the necessity of a resort to such circumstantial evidence in order to punish crime and protect the community, and said: 'Providence, the laws of nature, and the relation of things are so linked and combined together that a medium of proof is often furnished leading to conclusions as strong as those arising from direct testimony.' And again: 'Circumstantial evidence has this great advantage—that various circumstances from various sources are not likely to be fabricated.'" It will be readily seen also upon examination that the instructions condemned in the other two cases are materially different from what we have here. On the contrary, in reference to an instruction containing the same statement, the Supreme Court, in People v. Wilder, 134 Cal. 184, 66 Pac. 229, declares: "It may be said that as to this instruction containing a declaration of law there may be grave doubt, but as to the statements there contained not being prejudicially erroneous there is no doubt. People v. Vereneseneckockhoff does not go to the length of holding such an instruction reversible error." The ruling was the same in the case of People v. Howard, 135 Cal. 266, 67 Pac. 148. But, assuming that the prosecution relied partly or wholly upon circumstantial evidence for a conviction, we think it was proper for the court to tell the jury that they might base their verdict upon circumstantial evidence as well as upon direct evidence. In other words, that there is nothing in its nature that renders it any less reliable than any other class of evidence. Considered with other instructions, it could only be understood as meaning that circumstantial evidence is just as reliable as any other kind, if it convinces the jury of defendant's guilt to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt.

We have examined the record carefully, and find no error. The order refusing to settle the bill of exceptions and to relieve appellant of his default is affirmed.

session having no notice of such ex parte order, she could, to secure an available record on appeal, move to vacate the order and writ, and, on denial of the motion, appeal from the order of denial, instead of appealing directly from the ex parte order.

3. MANDAMUS—ACTS OF COURTS—PROCEEDINGS FOR REVIEW.

An order in a partition suit denying defendant's motion to vacate an order for a writ of assistance directing defendant's removal from the premises and the placing of the purchaser in possession, a sale having been confirmed, being in substance an order for the delivery of possession of land, it was the judge's duty, under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 945, on proper application, to fix the amount of the undertaking to be given to stay proceedings on the writ pending defendant's appeal; and mandamus lies to compel performance of that duty.

4. APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY.

The Supreme Court will not declare an appeal from an order confirming a partition sale to be without merit because no bill of exception to the order has been proposed or settled, and the time therefor has expired where the order has not been exhibited to the Supreme Court, since it may be erroneous on its face.

In Bank. Application by Pauline Gordan for mandamus against Thomas F. Graham, judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ granted.

W. T. Kearney, for petitioner. Louis Hirsch and Jesse H. Steinhart, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an application for a writ of mandate. On February 14, 1908, in an action for partition, entitled Rosa Bloom v. Pauline Gordan et al., the superior court made an order denying the petitioner's motion to vacate an order for a writ of assistance theretofore issued therein, directing the sheriff to remove petitioner from the premises involved in the suit and place one Fannie Abrahamson in possession thereof. Desiring to appeal from this order, and to obtain a stay of proceedings on the writ pending the appeal, the petitioner applied to the respondent to fix the amount of the undertaking necessary to stay such proceedings. This the respondent refused, and petitioner asks a mandate to compel respondent to proceed to fix the amount of the proposed undertaking.

An interlocutory decree of partition directing the sale of the property by the referees was filed in Bloom v. Gordan on January 9, 1906, and it became final on March 10, 1906, if not before. Bloom v. Gordan, 150 Cal. 763, 90 Pac. 115. The sale was made by the referees to Fannie Abrahamson in pursuance of the decree, and, after due notice, it was confirmed by an order made on January 15, 1908, and entered on February 3, 1908. The writ of assistance was issued by authority of an order made ex parte on February 11, 1908. On February 13, 1908, the petitioner, Pauline Gordan, gave notice of appeal from the order confirming the sale and filed the undertaking on appeal as required by law. She had notice of the making of that order, but

GORDAN v. GRAHAM, Judge of Superior Court. (S. F. 4,965.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL—RIGHT OF REVIEW—PERSONS AGGRIEVED—SALE IN PARTITION—CONFIRMATION.

Since a valid sale and conveyance of land in a partition suit would terminate a tenant in common's interest and right of possession, she could oppose the confirmation of a sale and have it vacated if not made legally, or for an adequate price, and could appeal from an order confirming such sale.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 947-952.]

2. SAME—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—WRIT OF ASSISTANCE.

For appeal purposes an ex parte order in a partition suit that a writ of assistance issue to let the purchaser into possession, a sale having been confirmed must be considered as an order made after final judgment; it being as plainly in aid of the order of sale as the order of confirmation, and, the tenant in pos-no formal notice of the entry thereof, so far as appears, has ever been given to her. The interlocutory order of partition adjudged that Pauline Gordan was the owner of an undivided one-third of the premises as tenant in common. She was in possession. A valid sale and conveyance under the order would terminate her interest and right of possession. She had the right, therefore, to oppose the confirmation of a sale and to have it vacated if not made in conformity with law, or for an adequate price, and the corresponding right to review, on appeal, an order confirming such sale. It has been held that the purchaser at such a sale may appeal directly from an order vacating the sale; that, so far as he is concerned, such order is appealable as an order made after final judgment; and that the interlocutory order directing a sale is to be regarded as a final judgment with respect to subsequent orders in aid of its execution. Hammond v. Cailleaud, 111 Cal. 213, 43 Pac. 607, 52 Am. St. Rep. 167; Dunn v. Dunn, 137 Cal. 56, 69 Pac. 847. If it is an order made after final judgment and appealable as such by the purchaser, it must be so as to the adverse parties, the tenants in common. The appeal of Pauline Gordan from the order confirming the sale is therefore a valid appeal, if regularly taken. In so far as Rovegno v. Hunt, 83 Cal. 446, 23 Pac. 524, is contrary to this conclusion, it must be considered as overruled by the decisions in Hammond v. Cailleaud and Dunn v. Dunn, supra. We think it was wrong in principle, on that point. Neither the interlocutory order for the sale, nor the order confirming the sale, directed that the purchaser be let into possession. That direction was first given by the court when it made the ex parte order that a writ of assistance should issue to the sheriff. The latter also must be considered, for the purposes of an appeal, as an order made after final judgment; it being as plainly in aid of the order of sale as is the order of confirmation. Being made ex parte, the tenant in possession having no notice, she had the right, in order to secure an available record on appeal, to move for a vacation of the order and writ, and, if the motion were denied, to appeal from the order of denial, instead of appealing directly from the ex parte order. Pignaz v. Burnett, 119 Cal. 163, 51 Pac. 48. In substance this appeal is from an order for the delivery of possession of real estate, and it was therefore the duty of the respondent under section 945, Code of Civil Procedure, upon a proper application in that behalf, to fix the amount of the undertaking to be given to stay proceedings on the writ pending the appeal, and mandamus lies to compel performance of the duty. This was expressly decided in Green v. Hebbard, 95 Cal. 39, 30 Pac. 202.

Rovegno v. Hunt, 83 Cal. 445, 23 Pac. 524, is cited as a case holding that mandamus is not maintainable in such a case. In that case, however, the order confirming the sale directed that the purchaser be put into possession upon the delivery of the deed. No appeal had been taken therefrom, and it had become final by lapse of the time for appeal. Hence there could be no merit in an appeal from a subsequent order granting a writ of assistance, and it was obviously taken merely to vex and annoy the purchaser. For that reason the writ of mandate in that case was denied. Mandamus is a discretionary writ, and it may perhaps be denied when it is sought in aid of an obviously vexatious and fruitless appeal. Wiedwald v. Dodson, 95 Cal. 453, 30 Pac. 580; Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 147, 78 Pac. 540; 26 Cyc. 149, 156; 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 754, 758. It is suggested that the appeal from the order confirming the sale is likewise without merit, because no bill of exception to the order has been proposed or settled and the time therefore has expired. But the order has not been exhibited to us, and we cannot say that it may not be erroneous on its face. See 26 Cyc. 152.

It is ordered that a peremptory writ issue as prayed for, and that proceedings on the writ of assistance be stayed until the expiration of five days after the respondent shall have fixed the amount of the undertaking to be given by petitioner to stay proceedings thereon pending an appeal from the order refusing to vacate the order directing the issuance of the writ of assistance.

CITY OF SAN DIEGO v. POTTER, Auditor.
(S. F. 4,975.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—FISCAL MANAGEMENT—ISSUANCE OF BONDS—PURPOSES.

St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing the incurring of expenses by cities, towns, and municipal corporations for municipal improvements, including street work, etc., and regulating the acquisition, construction, and completion thereof, did not authorize the issuance of bonds except for the purposes for which ordinary revenues of a city might be expended.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1897-1905.]

2. SAME—CONSTRUCTION OF STREETS AND BOULEVARDS.

Under St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing the incurring of expenses and issuing of bonds by cities, etc., for municipal improvements, including street work, and Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 161, c. 153) § 26, as amended by St. 1891, p. 206, c. 147, providing that the city council may order the whole or any part of the work mentioned therein, which includes street work, paid out of the city treasury from such fund as it may designate, the building and construction of streets, highways, and boulevards are objects for which the city council may in its discretion expend the ordinary revenues of the city, and bonds may be issued for those purposes under St. 1901, notwithstanding the existence of Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248), authorizing the city to acquire public parks and boulevards.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1899.]

3. SAME—PURCHASE OF LAND FOR STREETS.

The charter of San Diego authorizes the common council to pay for land to be used for streets, highways, etc., out of the ordinary revenues of the city, and makes the general laws of the state relative thereto applicable. St. 1889, p. 70, c. 76, provides for the laying out, etc., of streets, and section 22 (page 76) provides that, if the council deem proper that the boundaries of the district to be benefited by the improvements shall include the whole city, the commissioners shall purchase the lands, and, if there is not sufficient money in the city treasury to pay for such improvements, the cost shall be assessed upon the whole taxable property, and be included in the next general assessment, and St. 1903, p. 386, c. 268, § 36, relative to street improvements, provides that it shall not affect the act of 1889. Held, that these statutes authorized the council to pay for lands to be used for roads, boulevards, etc., out of the ordinary revenues of the city, and hence propositions to acquire lands for those purposes were properly submitted under St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing the incurring of indebtedness by cities, etc., and this is true, notwithstanding the existence of St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248, authorizing the construction of parks and boulevards.

4. SAME—SUBMISSION OF QUESTION TO VOTE—QUESTIONS SUBMITTED.

St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing the incurring of indebtedness by cities, etc., for municipal improvements, provides that the council, having first determined that the public necessity demands the acquisition, construction, etc., of any municipal improvement, including street work, or other works necessary to carry out the purposes of the city, may at a subsequent meeting call a special election, submitting a proposition for incurring the debt set forth in the resolution, and no other question than the incurring of the indebtedness for that purpose shall be submitted, provided that propositions for incurring debts for more than one purpose may be submitted at the same election. Held, that the act authorized the submission of several propositions for incurring indebtedness, and the fact that a proposition submitted was for an indebtedness which the city had no power to incur did not invalidate the election as to the remaining authorized propositions.

5. SAME—PUBLIC PARK.

The act authorized the submission of a proposition by the city for incurring an indebtedness for acquiring a public park.

6. SAME—STATUTE AUTHORIZING INDEBTEDNESS.

It was not necessary, under St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizing the council of cities, etc., to incur indebtedness for municipal improvements, and submit at a special election the proposition of incurring a debt for the purpose stated in the resolution, that the council, in the ordinance calling the election, designate whether the bonds were issued under the act of 1901, or under the park and boulevard act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248), the provisions of the act of 1901 having been strictly complied with.

7. SAME—PROVISION FOR PAYMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32, authorizes the incurring of indebtedness for municipal improvements, and section 5, p. 28 provides that a part of the bonds issued thereunder, to be determined by the city council, which shall not be less than one-fortieth of the whole amount of such indebtedness, shall be paid each year. Bonds were authorized by popular vote to be issued in the sum of $59,108.55; the ordinance providing there should be 119 bonds issued, 118 to be of the denomination of $500, and one of the denomination of $108.55, three of the bonds to become due yearly, the order of payment beginning with the smallest number, and continuing until all were paid. Held, that the manner provided by the ordinance for the issuance and payment of the bonds was a sufficient compliance with the statute.

In Bank. Mandamus by the city of San Diego, a municipal corporation, against Daniel Potter, as auditor of the city, to compel defendant to issue certain bonds. Peremptory writ awarded.

Geo. Puterbaugh, City Atty., for petitioner. Sam Ferry Smith, for respondent. O'Melveny, Stevens & Millikin, as amici curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Application for writ of mandate prayed to be directed against Daniel Potter as auditor of the city of San Diego. This is an application for a writ of mandate to compel defendant to perform certain ministerial acts relative to certain municipal bonds of plaintiff. It is conceded that he is bound to perform these acts if the bonds are not void, and defendant's refusal to so perform is based on the contention that they are void. The bonds were issued under the act of the Legislature enacted in the year 1901, entitled "An act authorizing the incurring of indebtedness by cities, towns, and municipal corporations for municipal improvements, and regulating the acquisition, construction, or completion thereof" (St. 1901, p. 27, c. 32), and admittedly all the proceedings were in strict accord with the provisions of that act except as hereinafter noted.

Seventeen separate matters were specified in the resolution adopted by the common council expressing the determination of the council as to the public interest and necessity, with a statement of the estimated cost of each, and the ordinance subsequently adopted calling a special election submitted to the electors 17 separate propositions for incurring a bonded indebtedness, one proposition as to each of the matters specified in the former resolution. Each of 14 of these propositions received at such special election the requisite number of votes to carry it, and the bonds were issued thereon. The other 3 propositions were defeated. It is claimed that among the 17 propositions submitted at this election there were 3 which were not authorized to be submitted by the provisions of the act (2 of which were carried), and that the effect of including the same was to render the election a nullity as to all the propositions submitted.

The propositions attacked are the following:

"Fourth. Shall the city incur a bonded indebtedness of $70,000, other and different than any other indebtedness proposed in this ordinance, for the extension and improvement of the street and highway system of the city, all as shown in the said resolution and in the recital thereof in the preamble of this ordinance?" In such resolution and preamble the matter is stated thus: "(4) The building, construction, and acquisition of the following lines of boulevards in said city, namely"—followed by a designation and general description of various boulevards, and a statement of the estimated cost of each.

"Fifth. Shall the city incur a bonded indebtedness of $5,000, other and different than any other indebtedness proposed in this ordinance, for the building, construction, and acquisition of a road from the intersection of M and Thirty-Second street to Mount Hope Cemetery, all as shown in the said resolution and in the recital thereof in the preamble of this resolution?" In such resolution and preamble the proposition is put in the same way, except that after the words "Mount Hope Cemetery" the following is stated: "Together with the acquisition of the land on which such road may be located, according to the survey thereof made by the city engineer of said city, and filed with the city clerk thereof," etc.

"Seventeenth. Shall the city incur a bonded indebtedness of $5,000, other and different than any other indebtedness proposed in this ordinance, for the construction of three public lavatories to be hereafter located in the city," etc.

The fourth and fifth propositions may be considered together. It is established by the decision of this court in Redondo Beach v. Cate, 136 Cal. 146, 68 Pac. 586, that the general act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 399, c. 26), did not authorize the issuance of bonds except for a purpose for which the ordinary revenues of the city might be lawfully expended. This doctrine has not been modified by any subsequent decision. The act of February 25, 1901, is the same as the general act of March 19, 1889, in every respect material to this question, and is not susceptible of a different construction. If, therefore, any proposition included a purpose for which the ordinary revenue of the city could not be used, it was not authorized by the act of 1901. It is clear that the fifth proposition included, in addition to the building and construction of the road to Mount Hope Cemetery, the acquisition of the land on which the road was to be located. We think it is equally clear that the fourth proposition included, not only the building and construction of certain boulevards, but also the acquisition of the land upon which at least some of them were to be constructed. The term "acquisition" used in relation to the boulevards is certainly broad enough to include the obtaining of the lands upon which they are to be laid out. The building and construction of streets, highways, and boulevards are objects for which the legislative body of a city or town may, in their discretion, expend the ordinary revenues of the city (section 26, Vrooman Act [St. 1885, p. 161, c. 153] as amended by St. 1891, p. 206, c. 147), and for that reason fall within the purposes for which bonds may be issued under the act of 1901, besides being included in the term "street work" used in said act, which has been defined to mean "work upon a street—work in repairing or making a street." See Mill Valley v. House, 142 Cal.

700, 76 Pac. 658. And bonds may be issued for those purposes under the act of 1901, notwithstanding the existence of the public park and boulevard act of March 19, 1889. St. 1889, p. 361, c. 248. See City of Oakland v. Thompson (Cal. Sup.) 91 Pac. 387. But if there be included with these authorized purposes an unauthorized purpose, for the whole of which a single aggregate sum is specified, it is impossible to separate the good from the bad, and the whole must fall.

Defendant's claim in this regard is that there is no law that authorizes the common council of the city of San Diego to pay for the land to be used for roads, streets, highways, or boulevards from the ordinary revenues of the city. This claim does not appear to us to be well founded. The city charter expressly empowers the council to widen any road, and to open or lay out any new street or highway through public or private property, and makes the general laws of the state relative to such matters applicable. The general laws applicable appear to be the act of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70, c. 76), and the act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376, c. 268), under either of which it was the right of the city to proceed (St. 1903, p. 386, c. 268, § 36). As is claimed by learned counsel, the act of 1889 does provide for the payment of the expenses of acquiring the necessary land, etc., from a fund to be collected by an assessment upon the property of the district benefited thereby; but the effect of section 22 thereof clearly is to authorize the council to pay the whole thereof from the ordinary revenues of the city, if they deem the improvement of such general benefit to the city that the whole city constitutes the district to be benefited thereby. The section is practically the same in effect in the respect under discussion as section 26, Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 161, c. 153, as amended by St. 1891, p. 206, c. 147), authorizing the council to pay the whole or any portion of the cost of street work out of the ordinary revenues of the city. We are of the opinion that this is a complete answer to the objection made by learned counsel to the fourth and fifth propositions, based upon the decision of this court in Redondo Beach v. Cate, supra; the propositions being for certain designated boulevards and roads which the council had in effect declared to be of such general benefit to the city that the city should pay the whole cost thereof. These propositions were therefore within the act of 1901, and this is true notwithstanding the existence of the public park and boulevard act. City of Oakland v. Thompson, supra.

The seventeenth proposition, the proposed issuance of bonds for $5,000, for the construction of three public lavatories, was not carried at the election, and no bonds have been issued thereon. The question whether it was an authorized proposition under the act of 1901 is therefore important only in the event that it be held that the submission of a proposition for an indebtedness not authorized by the act at an election held under the act would invalidate the election as to all the other propositions submitted. The contention to this effect is based on the language of the act which, after providing that the legislative body of the municipality, having first determined by resolution that the public interest or necessity demands the acquisition, construction, or completion "of any municipal improvement, including bridges, waterworks, water rights, sewers, light or power works or plants, buildings for municipal uses, * * * street work, or other works, property or structures necessary or convenient to carry out the objects, purposes, and powers of the municipality," provides that such legislative body may at any subsequent meeting, call a special election, and submit thereat "the proposition of incurring a debt for the purpose set forth in said resolution, and no question other than the incurring of the indebtedness for said purpose shall be submitted, provided that propositions of incurring indebtedness for more than one object or purpose may be submitted at the same election." The proviso as to different propositions being submitted at the same election was enacted for the first time in the act of 1901; the former act covering the same subject-matter, and that of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 399, c. 261), not containing any such proviso. The proviso was not essential to the proper submission at the same election of more than one of the propositions included in the act, for without it the act clearly permitted such submission, and such was undoubtedly the practice under the former act. See Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 515, 38 Pac. 900; City of San Luis Obispo v. Haskin, 91 Cal. 549, 27 Pac. 929. It is to be noted that the former act, without the proviso, provided, immediately after the limitation above quoted, that "the ordinance calling such special election shall recite the objects and purposes for which the indebtedness is proposed to be incurred," which is a confirmation of this construction of the previous language. We cannot assume that the object of the insertion of the proviso in the act of 1901 was simply to authorize that to be done which was already fully authorized by the language of the former act. It appears clear to us that the object of the proviso was to limit the prohibition immediately preceding by making it inapplicable to any proposition of incurring indebtedness. This is the plain literal meaning of the language used in the limitation and proviso, and such meaning appears to us to give full effect to the legislative purpose.

The argument of learned counsel that the purpose of the prohibition was to secure a free and fair expression of the will of the voters on the propositions for indebtedness, unaffected by the consideration of other questions, and without the opportunity of political trades and combinations that would be afforded by the submission at the same time of other propositions, may be conceded to be well based; but, as we view the language of the act, it must be held that the Legislature deemed that this purpose would be sufficiently attained by a limitation of the electors to a consideration of propositions for indebtedness, unembarrassed by the consideration of propositions of a different nature. It will be noted that the act of 1901 is broad enough in terms to include the issuance thereunder of bonds for practically every kind of municipal improvement that a city is empowered to make by the law applicable to it, and it can hardly be assumed in the face of language admittedly permitting the submission at the same election of propositions for indebtedness for the many different purposes authorized by the act that the Legislature was in any degree seeking to avoid possible evils resulting from the submission at one time of many different propositions for indebtedness. We cannot see that the fact that a proposition for indebtedness submitted is one for an indebtedness which the city has no power to incur affects the question at all. Although unauthorized, it is nevertheless a proposition of incurring indebtedness, the submission of which is not prohibited by the prohibitory clause relied on, and therefore its submission does not invalidate the election as to the remaining authorized propositions. In view of our conclusion upon this point, it is unnecessary to determine whether the city of San Diego had the power to expend municipal funds for "public lavatories."

The demurrer of defendant also makes the point that a proposition for a bonded indebtedness of $25,000 for the acquisition of a park was unauthorized. This proposition was, like the public lavatory proposition, defeated at the election. What we have said in regard to the lavatory proposition is applicable to this. However, in view of the decision in City of Oakland v. Thompson, supra, it must be held that the proposition for this indebtedness was properly submitted under the act of 1901.

We see no force in the contention that the proceedings for the issuance of the bonds are void for failure on the part of the council to designate in their ordinance calling the election, or in some order or record prior to the election, whether the bonds proposed for boulevards and parks were to be issued under the park and boulevard act of 1889, or the general act of 1901. It seems to us that it was apparent on the face of the record that the proceeding was one under the act of 1901, but whether this be so or not it is clear that the provisions of the act of 1901 as to notice, etc., were literally complied with, and that there is nothing in the law requiring the designation referred to.

The only other objection made is one to the ordinance adopted after the election providing for the issuance of the bonds. The act of 1901 provides in section 5 that bonds issued under the act shall be payable substantially in the manner following: "A part to be determined by the legislative body of the municipality, which shall be not less than one-fortieth part of the whole amount of such indebtedness, shall be paid each and every year on a day and date, at the city treasury, to be fixed by the legislative branch of the municipality," etc. As to the bonds to be issued in the sum of $59,108.55 for a certain indebtedness authorized by the electors, the ordinance provided that there should be 119 of said bonds, 118 of which should be of the denomination of $500, and one of the denomination of $108.55, the $500 bonds to be numbered from 1 to 118, consecutively, and the $108.55 bond to be numbered 119, and also: "Three of said bonds shall become due and payable annually at the time and in the manner hereinafter specified, the order of payment beginning with the smallest numbered bond, and continuing from the less to the greater until all of said bonds shall have been paid." It is said that as 119 is not a multiple of three it would be impossible for the ministerial officers charged with the duty of preparing the bonds to prepare them so as to make them payable three each year. We see no room for misunderstanding as to the requirement of the ordinance in this regard. What it means and provides is that the 119 bonds shall be so prepared that, commencing with the smallest numbered bond, three shall become due and payable each year, leaving two to become due and payable the last or fortieth year.

We have now noticed all of the objections made by counsel to the bonds, and are of the opinion that none is well based. It follows that plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue in accord with the prayer of the petition.

TRACY et al. v. COFFEY, Judge of Superior Court. (S. F. 4,872.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1908. Rehearing Denied April 30, 1908.)

1. WILLS—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS—ORDERS—ENTRY IN MINUTE BOOK OF COURT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1704, provides that orders in probate proceedings must be entered at length in the minute book of the court. An order admitting a will to probate recited in the caption: "In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, * * * Department 9. Probate." The order was signed by the judge. In thereafter entering the order in the minute book the quoted words in the caption were omitted, and the word "said" in the phrase "the said proofs" in the order was also omitted. Held that, in the absence of a statute expressly authorizing the making of a memorial of the terms of an order by the method of writing it on a separate piece of paper signed by the judge, the entry of the order was sufficient notwithstanding the discrepancies between the entry and the order.

2. SAME—TIME TO APPEAL—COMMENCEMENT OF PERIOD—ENTRY OF ORDER.

The time within which to appeal from an order admitting a will to probate begins to run from the date of the entry of the order in the minute book of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 823.]

In Bank. Application for writ of mandate by Laura E. Tracy and others against James V. Coffey, as judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to compel respondent to settle a bill of exceptions. Denied.

Horace W. Philbrook (W. J. Bartnett and Wm. T. Baggett, of counsel), for petitioners. J. C. Campbell and Thomas H. Breeze, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The petitioners apply for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to settle a bill of exceptions relating to the proceedings and evidence taken upon the making of an order admitting to probate the will of Jacob Z. Davis, deceased, the purpose of the petitioners being to use the said bill of exceptions upon an appeal to the Supreme Court from said order.

The order in question was made on August 17, 1897, and was entered at length in the regular minute book of the department of the superior court on September 5, 1897. The time for taking the appeal therefrom expired on November 4, 1897. Before this entry the order was reduced to writing and signed by the judge. The document as signed had a caption at the top of its first page beginning with the words: "In the Superior Court of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, Department 9. Probate." In entering the order in the minute book this part of the caption was omitted. At another place in the entry the word "said" of the phrase "the said proofs," as the order was drawn in the document, was omitted. Claiming that these omissions vitiated the act of entering the order and rendered the entry null and void, the petitioners caused it to be again entered in the minute book of the court on July 31, 1907, with the aforementioned part of the caption and the word "said" carefully inserted. Their contention now is that this latter entry is the only valid and effectual entry of the order that has ever been made, and that the time wherein they could appeal therefrom did not begin to run until that date. Acting upon that theory, they took proceedings for an appeal to this court within 60 days after the said date, and asked for the settlement of the proposed bill of exceptions.

The variations aforesaid of the minute book entry of September 5, 1897, from the signed order, did not vitiate it, or annul its effect as an entry of the order. It is admitted that that entry was made in the proper minute book. The part of the caption omitted was not a necessary part of the order, and the omission of the word "said" did not affect the meaning of the phrase, and was of no importance or significance. There is no statute expressly authorizing the making of a memorial of the terms of an order of the superior court by the method of writing it on a separate piece of paper, and having the judge attach his signature thereto. It has become customary to do so in many instances, and the courts have often recognized such a memorial as competent evidence of the terms of the order. But the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1704) expressly requires probate orders to be entered in the minute book of the court. It is the order there entered which is the order of the court, and it is the date of the entry of this order which, under our decisions, set the time running for an appeal. In making entries in the minute book it is neither necessary, nor, so far as we are advised, customary, to begin the entry of each order with a statement of the name of the court in which it is made. The fact that another memorial exists consisting of a document filed with papers in the case, and that there are some slight discrepancies, such as those above mentioned, between the filed order and the entry in the minute book, would not affect the validity of the minute entry, nor extend the time of appeal until another entry was made. The petitioners have no valid appeal, and no right to any bill of exceptions on the appeal they are attempting to take.

The petition is denied.

GREAT WESTERN GOLD CO. v. CHAMBERS. (Sac. 1,444.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1908.)

1. APPEAL — ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL — SCOPE OF REVIEW.

Upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial, review is limited to the grounds upon which such a motion may be based, enumerated by Code Civ. Proc. § 657, and upon which the new trial was asked; and questions relating to the sufficiency of the complaint, rulings upon demurrers, and the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3476-3482.]

2. SAME.

The failure of a trial court to find upon a material issue is an error of law, and error in denying a new trial asked on that ground may be reviewed on appeal from the order.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3476-3482.]

3. SAME—RECORD—CONTENTS—PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS FOR REVIEW—MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL.

Though it was not essential that defendant's notice of intention to move for a new trial, on judgment for plaintiff, be incorporated in the statement on appeal or the bill of exceptions, it is essential to the Supreme Court's right to review the trial court's action on the motion that it should appear by the record that the ground for a new trial presented on appeal was presented by the motion, and mere general specifications in the statement or bill of exceptions that the court erred in rendering judgment for plaintiff and against defendant are not sufficient to constitute such a showing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 2306-2309.]

4. TRIAL—FINDINGS—FAILURE TO MAKE NOT SHOWN.

Failure to find upon any issue of fact, in an action for damages, is not shown, in that the judgment being for $40,000, while the findings show, not only $40,000 damages on one transaction, but also $11,700 on other transactions, there is nothing by which the sum awarded can be referred to any one or more of the particular transactions alleged.

5. APPEAL — REVIEW — SCOPE—MATTERS NOT NECESSARY TO DECISION.

On appeal from an order denying defendant a new trial on judgment for plaintiff in an action for damages, based on several transactions, the Supreme Court need only review findings and alleged errors material to one transaction, where, if the trial court's action in regard to that transaction was correct, it appears that the judgment would have been the same as it is, though the findings upon all the other transactions had been in defendant's favor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3331.]

6. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — EXECUTION OF AGENCY—FRAUD—PURCHASE OF PROPERTY—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

A company having directed its agent to purchase or contract to purchase property, and he having conspired to defraud the company by procuring title to be taken for $90,000 by one who gave the company an option to purchase for $150,000, $20,000 being paid down, the company did not lose its right to recover from the agent by thereafter paying, with knowledge of the fraud, $110,000 to close the purchase, the company not being bound to rescind nor to resort to an action to compel a conveyance for $90,000.

7. SAME—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

Where a company's agent for the purchase of certain property conspired to defraud it by procuring title to the property to be taken for $90,000 by one who gave the company an option to purchase for $150,000, the company could recover from the agent the difference between the price it was required to pay to complete the contract and acquire the property and the sum for which the agent and his confederates actually acquired the option.

8. APPEAL—REVIEW—ORDER REFUSING NEW TRIAL.

On appeal by defendant, in an action for damages, from an order denying a new trial on judgment for plaintiff, he may not assert the defense of accord and satisfaction, nor of release by the release of a joint tort-feasor, since, so far as the facts upon which defendant relies are shown by the complaint as amended and the findings, the question of the sufficiency of the complaint and findings to support the judgment cannot be considered, and since neither defense was pleaded below, and there being no finding relative to the matter other than the finding in accord with the allegations of the amendment to the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3476-3482.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Charles M. Head, Judge.

Action by the Great Western Gold Company against James J. Chambers. From an order denying defendant a new trial on judgment for plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

Milton S. Hamilton, for appellant. Bush & Perry, Sweeney & Sissons, and Rickel, Crocker & Tourtellot (Morrison, Cope & Brobeck, of counsel), for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The complaint as originally filed was for an accounting, and for judgment for such amount as should be found due plaintiff thereon. It was alleged that defendant, as the agent and general manager of plaintiff in Shasta county, Cal., received large sums of money for the transaction of the business of plaintiff, and for the purpose of purchasing for plaintiff certain mining properties, and failed to account for the same, and converted a large portion thereof to his own use. Various transactions relative to the Vandevere group of mines, the Murray mine, and the Roan and Putney mines, whereby defendant improperly obtained from plaintiff and converted to his own use sums aggregating $11,700, were alleged. It was further alleged that on or about September 20, 1902, defendant, while acting as the agent and trustee of plaintiff, was directed to proceed to Salt Lake City and purchase or procure for plaintiff a contract for certain mines in Shasta county known as the "Afterthought" for not exceeding $150,000; that, acting under said instructions, defendant proceeded to Salt Lake City, and for the purpose of defrauding plaintiff in the matter of said purchase entered into an agreement and conspiracy with one Snyder and one Mitchell, whereby Snyder was to take the title to said mines from the owner, one Tabet, for $90,000, and Snyder was thereupon to give plaintiff an optional contract for the purchase for $150,000; that plaintiff, without knowledge of said conspiracy, accepted the contract from Snyder at the suggestion of defendant, and paid thereon to Snyder $20,000 as a first payment ($10,000 of which was divided between defendant, Snyder, and Mitchell), the balance to be paid, $90,000 on September 20, 1903, and $40,000 on March 20, 1904. During the trial the complaint was amended by adding an allegation that thereafter plaintiff paid on said contract to Snyder the sum of $110,000 in full payment and discharge of the same, making in all the sum of $130,000 paid thereon, whereby there was lost to plaintiff and plaintiff was damaged by reason of said fraudulent agreement and conspiracy in the full sum of $40,000. This allegation was apparently deemed denied. The trial court found in accord with the allegations of the complaint as thus amended in regard to the Afterthought transaction, as well as in regard to the other transactions alleged, and, plaintiff waiving all claims except the right to recover $40,000, rendered judgment against defendant for that sum.

This being simply an appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, some of the points made by learned counsel for appellant in their briefs cannot be considered. Upon an appeal from an order denying a new trial the appellate court is limited in its review of the action of the trial court to the grounds upon which such a motion may be based (Code Civ. Proc. § 657), and upon which the new trial was asked. It is well established that questions relating to the sufficiency of the complaint, rulings upon demurrers, and the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment cannot be considered on such an appeal. Swift v. Occidental M. Co., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700; Holmes v. Warren, 145 Cal. 457, 78 Pac. 954; Brownlee v. Reiner, 147 Cal. 641, 82 Pac. 324; Co. Bank v. Jack, 148 Cal. 438, 83 Pac. 705, 113 Am. St. Rep. 285; Wheeler v. Bolton, 92 Cal. 167, 28 Pac. 558; Brisson v. Brisson, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186. The failure of the trial court to make a finding of fact upon a material issue renders the decision one against law, and error in overruling a motion for a new trial made on that ground may be reviewed on appeal from the order. Swift v. Occidental M. Co., supra. There is, however, nothing in the record to indicate that any such failure was a ground of the motion made in the lower court. The notice of intention to move for a new trial was not incorporated in the statement or bill of exceptions, and it was not essential that it should be; but it is essential to our right to review the action of a trial court on motion for new trial that it should appear by the record that the ground for a new trial presented here was presented by the motion in the trial court. The record being otherwise silent upon the matter, this may be made to appear by proper specification of error in the statement or bill of exceptions (Pico v. Cohn, 78 Cal. 384, 20 Pac. 706; Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 99, 77 Pac. 762); but manifestly the mere general specifications that the court erred in rendering judgment for plaintiff and against defendant are not sufficient to constitute such a showing. Upon the record before us we cannot assume, for the purpose of reviewing the action of the trial court, that one of the grounds specified on the motion in the lower court was that the decision was against law. Regardless of what we have said upon this point, however, it is not pointed out by counsel wherein the trial court failed to make a finding upon any material issue. The point in this connection appears to be that the judgment being only for $40,000, while the findings show, not only the $40,000 damage arising from the Afterthought transaction, but also $11,700 damage arising from the other transactions specifically alleged, there is nothing by which the sum awarded can be made referable to any one or more of the particular transactions alleged. This clearly does not show a failure to find upon any issue of fact. Upon the record here we are therefore limited to a consideration of the contention that the evidence was insufficient to support the material findings of fact and the alleged errors of law committed by the trial court in ruling upon evidence. It is further clear that only those findings and alleged errors that are material to the Afterthought transaction need be considered here; for, if the action of the trial court in regard to that matter was free from error, it is apparent that the judgment would have been the same as it is, even though the findings upon all the other matters had been in favor of defendant. Robinson v. Placerville, etc., R. R. Co., 65 Cal. 266, 3 Pac. 878; White v. Douglass, 71 Cal. 119, 11 Pac. 860.

There is ample support in the pleadings and evidence for the findings in accord with the allegations of the original complaint as to the Afterthought transaction, and also for the findings in accord with the allegations of the amendment relative to the subsequent payment by plaintiff of the further sum of $110,000 in full payment of the amount due under the Snyder option, as reduced by stipulation of the parties. It is earnestly contended that the finding as to the damage resulting to plaintiff therefrom, which is as follows: "Whereby there was lost to said plaintiff, and plaintiff was damaged by reason of said fraudulent agreement and conspiracy and acts upon the part of said defendant in the full sum of $40,000"—is not sustained by the evidence. This finding appears to have been attacked by proper specification of insufficiency of evidence to support it. The contention in this behalf is based on the fact alleged to have been shown by the evidence that all the money paid to Snyder by plaintiff on account of such transaction, except the $20,000 paid at the time of the giving of the option, viz., $110,000 was paid after plaintiff had obtained full knowledge of the fraudulent conspiracy between defendant, Snyder, and Mitchell, and it is also claimed that, although plaintiff, to obtain the property covered by the option, paid $40,000 more than it would have paid if it had not been for the wrongful and fraudulent acts of its agent, if any injury was caused plaintiff in the matter, it was caused solely by the payment voluntarily made by plaintiff with full knowledge of all the facts. We are unable to see how defendant can be heard to assert that this loss was not caused by his wrongful acts. By reason of his willful and fraudulent breach of trust plaintiff had accepted an option to purchase for $150,000 property which it desired to acquire, and for which it was willing to pay, if necessary, as much as that sum, when, as a matter of fact, the purchase price to the defendant was only $90,000, and plaintiff, but for the fraudulent acts of defendant in regard thereto, would have been given an option to acquire the property for a consideration of $90,000. If by reason of such acts it paid more than $90,000 for the property, it was necessarily damaged thereby to the extent of the difference between $90,000 and the sum actually paid. Admittedly plaintiff, desiring to have the property, was not required to rescind upon discovery of the fraud. Nor was it required to resort to an action to compel a conveyance upon payment of $90,000. Notwithstanding knowledge of the fraud on the part of plaintiff, the result of such action might be in some degree uncertain, and plaintiff was not required to take the chance of thus losing the opportunity of purchasing the property. It is not disputed that a party thus defrauded may upon discovery of the fraud complete his contract, and then maintain an action for the damages caused him thereby. Such damage in the case at bar, it appears very clear to us, was the amount of the difference between the price which plaintiff was required to pay to complete the contract and acquire the property and the sum for which defendant and his confederates actually acquired the option. See King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 642, 76 Pac. 486. It does not assist defendant in his contention that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding of $40,000 damage that plaintiff obtained a reduction of $20,000 on the original price from Snyder, thereby reducing the amount of damage from $60,000 to $40,000. By the contrivance of defendant, and for the purpose of enabling him to profit at the expense of his principal, the property which plaintiff desired to acquire had been placed within the control of Snyder, and plaintiff could not obtain the same without acceding to the demands of Snyder under the option given, except by resorting to an action against him to compel a conveyance, which might well turn out to be impracticable or without efficacy. This chance of losing the property it was not required to take. It had the clear right to pay Snyder the full amount of the $130,000 that remained due on the option, and then maintain an action against the defendant for the $60,000 loss which would thus have been caused, and the only effect of obtaining from Snyder a reduction of $20,000 on the amount to be paid to obtain the property, so far as the amount of damage caused by defendant's acts was concerned, was to reduce the amount of damage by $20,000 to defendant's benefit. It still remained that plaintiff was damaged by the acts of defendant in the sum of $40,000.

It is urged that the acceptance by plaintiff of the proposition of Snyder to accept $20,000 less than the amount originally named as the purchase price in the option, and the payment by it to Snyder of the $110,000 thereunder, had the effect to release the defendant from all liability for damages "upon the principles governing accord and satisfaction," and that in any event defendant was released from all claim of damage by what is said to have been a release of Snyder, a joint tortfeasor. It is not necessary to discuss on its merits either of these points, for it is clear that neither is available to defendant on this appeal. So far as the facts upon which defendant relies in this behalf are shown by the complaint as amended and the findings of the trial court, it is only necessary to again state that the question of the sufficiency of the complaint and findings to support the judgment cannot be considered on an appeal from an order denying a new trial. Neither the defense of accord and satisfaction nor that of release, both of which are affirmative defenses, was pleaded by defendant in the lower court, and there is no finding of fact relative to the matter other than the finding in accord with the allegations of the amendment to the complaint which we have already set forth. Except as to the damage thereby found to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of defendant's acts, this finding was not attacked by any specification of insufficiency of evidence to sustain it, and the evidence shows it to be in accord with the undisputed evidence given on the trial.

Only three alleged errors in rulings on evidence are pointed out in appellant's briefs. The first two rulings claimed to be erroneous could not by any possibility have affected the result as far as the Afterthought transaction was concerned, and it is unnecessary to determine whether they were technically wrong. The third ruling was one excluding certain documentary evidence offered by defendant. The evidence so offered was clearly immaterial and irrelevant to any issue in the case, and the ruling of the lower court was correct.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

PEARSALL et al. v. HENRY et al. (S. F. 4,355.)

(Supreme Court of California. Nov. 19, 1907.)

1. CONTRACTS—WRITTEN CONTRACTS—MODIFICATION BY PAROL—"EXECUTED AGREEMENT."

Under Civ. Code, § 1698, providing that a written contract may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and section 1661, declaring that an executed agreement is one the object of which is fully performed, an oral agreement altering a written contract is not enforceable, unless its terms have been fully performed by both parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, § 1123.]

2. SAME — SUBSTITUTION OF PAROL AGREEMENT.

Where the parties to a written contract made an oral settlement of their differences due to disputes as to their rights under the contract, and the oral settlement imposed new obligations on the parties, and each, in consideration of the new promises, agreed to do things which he was not bound to perform under the contract, the contract was abrogated, and the oral settlement took its place, and it was not affected by Civ. Code, § 1698, providing that a contract in writing may be altered only by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement.

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — PART PERFORMANCE OF PAROL CONTRACT WITHIN THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

An oral agreement bound plaintiff to convey to defendant land in one county, and bound defendant to convey to plaintiff an interest in land in another county. Plaintiff performed his part of the agreement. Held, that he could, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, compel performance by defendant, under the rule that, where there is an oral agreement by which each of the parties is to convey land to the other, the conveyance by one on the faith of the agreement is such part performance as will in equity take the case out of the operation of the statute, though he could not sue at law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 120, 121.]

4. SAME—ACTS CONSTITUTING PART PERFORMANCE.

Acts to constitute a part performance of a parol contract, unenforceable under the statute of frauds, must have been done with a view to carry out the contract, and, when so done, the contract is enforceable.

5. SAME—QUESTION OF FACT.

Whether acts were done with a view to carry out a parol contract unenforceable under the statute of frauds, so as to constitute a part performance thereof, is a question of fact.

6. APPEAL — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where the evidence is conflicting, the findings of the trial court are conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983–3989.]

7. TRIAL—FINDINGS OF FACT—SUFFICIENCY.

Where the ultimate question was how much a party had expended in purchasing land, and the court found on sufficient evidence the amount expended, an error in a finding as to the price per acre was immaterial.

8. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE — WRITTEN CONTRACTS—WANT OF CONSIDERATION.

Want of consideration for a contract in writing may, when properly pleaded, be shown by parol.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1981–1989.]

9. SAME — PAROL CONTRACT SUPERSEDING WRITTEN CONTRACT—PROOF—ADMISSIBILITY.

Parol evidence of a contract superseding a contract in writing is competent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2052.]

10. SAME—AMBIGUOUS CONTRACTS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where a written contract is ambiguous, proof of the circumstances surrounding its execution and of what was said in regard to the ambiguous provisions is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 2085–2101.]

11. APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

The erroneous admission of evidence, which does not support the claim of the successful party, does not justify a reversal on the appeal of the defeated party.

12. SAME—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE ON APPEAL.

Where the error in the findings of fact on one issue, arising from the insufficiency of the evidence to support it, does not affect the proper findings on other issues, the cause will be remanded for retrial on such issue alone.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by H. May Pearsall and another against James E. Henry and others, copartners under the firm name of J. E. Henry & Sons. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Louis Titus, H. M. Wright, and Titus, Wright & Creed, for appellants. Campbell, Metson & Campbell and J. N. Gillett (Philip Mansfield, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought by Clarence E. and H. May Pearsall, husband and wife, against James E., George E., John H. and Charles B. Henry, copartners under the firm name of J. E. Henry & Sons. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff Clarence E. Pearsall during the months of February, March, and April, 1901, purchased a tract of redwood timber land in Del Norte county, in this state, and paid thereon as part of the purchase price and for securing the title the sum of $39,009.61, $6,400 of which belonged to his wife, H. May Pearsall; that the said Clarence E. Pearsall also expended as incidental and necessary expenses in purchasing said lands the further sum of $5,000, or thereabouts. It is alleged that on or about the 23d day of April, 1901, the defendants promised and agreed with the plaintiffs that, if the plaintiffs would convey said lands to them, they, the defendants, would in the latter part of May, 1901, pay to plaintiffs the money they had paid upon such lands as aforesaid, and the moneys expended by Clarence E. Pearsall as expenses in obtaining the same. It is then averred that the plaintiffs, relying upon this promise, conveyed all of said lands to the defendants, but that said defendants have failed and refused to pay any part of said moneys to plaintiffs. The complaint sets forth an assignment by Clarence E. Pearsall to H. May Pearsall of all his right, title, and interest in and to said sums of money, and asks judgment against the defendants for the amounts so alleged to have been paid for securing the lands and for expenses.

The defendants answered, denying, among other things, the making of the alleged agreement, and denying that the lands had been conveyed to them pursuant to any such agreement. The position of the defendants is clearly set forth in their pleadings, which include, in addition to an answer, a counterclaim and a cross-complaint. They allege that the conveyance set forth in the complaint had been made pursuant to the terms of two written agreements between the defendants and the plaintiff Clarence E. Pearsall. The first of these bears date the 20th day of October, 1900, and after reciting that the parties of the first part (the appellants herein) contemplate purchasing from the California Redwood Company a tract of land in the county of Humboldt containing 16,800 acres, or thereabouts, at the price of $30 per acre, and that said California Redwood Company has promised to Pearsall a commission of 2½ per cent. on said price for making said sale, declares that the Henrys agree that, in the event of their purchasing the said tract of land from the California Redwood Company, they will sell to Pearsall at the price of $40,000 an interest in the tract, bearing such relation to the whole tract as $40,000 bears to the entire purchase price, less the commission. By this agreement Pearsall agrees to purchase said interest and that he "will, in addition, pay said parties of the first part any and all commission he may receive from the California Redwood Company." This agreement considered by itself had no reference to the lands mentioned in the complaint herein, but it was supplemented by the making of a second agreement dated February 8, 1901, which provides that, "in consideration of certain favors extended to the party of the first part (Pearsall) by the party of the second part (J. E. Henry & Sons) in the purchase of redwood timber lands in the county of Humboldt, the party of the first part hereby agrees to purchase for the party of the second part certain redwood timber lands in the county of Del Norte, in the state of California," in certain described townships and sections. The agreement goes on to recite that Pearsall has already secured options on the lands which the parties of the second part expect to purchase, and that papers in escrow are lodged in bank, and provides that Pearsall is to make out a list showing the above tracts of land on which he has options, together with the names of the owners and number of acres contained in each tract, and the price per acre which the several owners are to receive for their lands. On such tracts as the purchase price is $15 per acre or under, Pearsall is authorized by J. E. Henry & Sons to purchase, paying for same the prices agreed upon between the present owners and Pearsall, but Pearsall is not to buy any of the tracts of land mentioned for a price exceeding $15 per acre, without special instruction from the Henrys, "all deeds to be made in the names of the parties of the second part, who are to pay the prices at which the lands are now deeded in escrow." The Henrys agree to furnish Pearsall necessary funds to secure the different tracts. The parties of the second part further agree to pay the expenses of the party of the first part while he is engaged in securing the deeds provided for, said expenses not to exceed $250. It is the purchase of the land in Del Norte county described in this agreement of February 8, 1901, that gives rise to the present controversy.

In the pleadings on the part of the defendants it is alleged that in December, 1900, they purchased the 16,800 acres of land in Humboldt county mentioned in the agreement of October, 1900, and that Pearsall received as a commission for making such sale the sum of $89,000. This is alleged to be far in excess of any sum paid by Pearsall for the lands purchased by him under the contract of February, 1901. By their counterclaim the defendants ask judgment against Pearsall for the excess, and by their cross-complaint they seek an accounting of the balance of commissions that may remain in Pearsall's hands. The cross-complaint also seeks to compel the conveyance of 320 acres of land claimed to be a part of the tract purchased by Pearsall for the Henrys, and by Pearsall conveyed to J. N. Gillett, who is made a party defendant to the cross-complaint. The answer to the cross-complaint does not deny the execution of the written instruments in question, but alleges that these instruments were executed by Pearsall without consideration; alleges that, after the making of these agreements, differences had arisen between Pearsall and the defendants regarding their rights and obligations arising out of their several contracts; and that subsequently Pearsall and the Henrys entered into a new agreement for the purpose of settling all of the matters in controversy; and that, by this new contract, it was agreed that the parties were to convey to the defendants all of the lands secured by Pearsall, and that the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs all sums of money paid by them for the purchase of lands in Del Norte county, and the expenses incurred in securing the same. The defendants also agreed, as is alleged, to waive all claims which they had for commissions received by Pearsall on the sale of the lands in Humboldt county purchased from the California Redwood Company, except 2¾ per cent. of the purchase price, which had heretofore been paid by Pearsall to the defendants. Plaintiffs allege that their conveyance of the land in Del Norte county was made in reliance upon this agreement. From this summary of the pleadings it will be seen that there is no controversy about the fact that plaintiffs did convey to defendants the land in Del Norte county. The real dispute is as to the agreement under which this conveyance was made; the defendants claiming that it was made by virtue of the written agreement above described, and the plaintiff contending that these written agreements were abrogated and superseded by a new and different agreement. More specifically, the difference between the parties relates to the commissions to be paid by Pearsall to the Henrys upon the sale of the lands in Humboldt county. If, as claimed by the plaintiffs, only 2¾ per cent. of the purchase price paid on the Humboldt transaction was to be turned over, defendants are largely indebted to the plaintiffs. On the other hand, if, as is contended by the defendants, Pearsall was bound to account to them for the total commission amounting to $89,000, this amount was sufficient to repay him for all advances made in acquiring the Del Norte lands, and to leave a large balance due from him to the defendants.

The findings and judgment were in favor of the plaintiffs. So far as concerns the conveyance of the Del Norte lands to defendants, the court finds that the written agreements of October 20, 1900, and February 8, 1901, respectively, were executed as alleged in the answer and cross-complaint; that between the 1st day of February, 1901, and the 23d day of April, 1901, the plaintiff Clarence E. Pearsall purchased in his own name, and partially paid for from his own funds, a tract of redwood timber land situated in Del Norte county, containing 8,115 acres; that he expended in purchasing said land the sums of $4,650 for expenses, and $39,009.61 on account of the purchase price, the cost of said land to him having been $12.50 per acre, exclusive of expenses. It is found that Pearsall received $89,000 as commissions on the sale of the 16,800 acres of Humboldt land, and that of this sum $14,000 had been paid to defendants. It is further found that in the month of April, 1901, disputes arose between Pearsall and the defendants growing out of their written agreements; Pearsall claiming that the agreement of February 8, 1901, had been obtained from him by fraud, and the defendants claiming that they were entitled to the lands purchased by Pearsall at the exact price paid for the same, without allowing any commission or expenses, which claim was by said Pearsall denied, he claiming that the defendants were to pay $15.20 per acre for said lands. The defendants also demanded that said lands be immediately deeded to them; Pearsall claiming that there should be no conveyance until he had been paid at the price of $15.20 per acre. The finding as to the new agreement upon which this suit is founded is in the following words: "That upon the 23d day of April, 1901, plaintiff Clarence E. Pearsall, and the defendant James E. Henry, representing the firm of J. E. Henry & Sons, met in the city of Eureka, state of California, and made a full and complete verbal settlement of all accounts existing between them as follows: Said James E. Henry, for said J. E. Henry & Sons, agreed with said Pearsall that for and in consideration of said Pearsall waiving all claims and demands against defendants over and in excess of $12.50 per acre upon the lands which had been purchased by him, to wit, the 8,115 acres in the county of Del Norte, state of California, and deeding said lands at once to defendants, that defendants would faithfully carry out the terms of the agreement of October 20, 1900, in relation to deeding said Pearsall the amount of said lands represented by his $40,000 purchase as shown by said agreement; that defendants would waive any and all claims to any commissions under said agreement, save and except 2¾ per cent. which defendants had theretofore received, and would repay said Pearsall the entire amount of money he had paid out of his own and his wife's funds in the purchase price of said 8,115 acres of land in Del Norte county aforesaid, and would repay said Pearsall any and all expenses he had incurred in the purchase of said lands, and that said defendants would pay said sums of money on or about the first day of June, 1901; that said Pearsall accepted the terms of said agreement and fully agreed thereto." The court found that Pearsall made the conveyance as provided in said agreement; that no part of the moneys paid by him for said lands or expenses incurred by him has been repaid; that he had transferred his claim against defendants to his coplaintiff, H. May Pearsall, and directed judgment in favor of H. May Pearsall for the sum of $43,650.61, with interest, the total amounting, at the date of the findings, to $51,876.95. Judgment for this amount and costs followed, and the defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Many of the findings of the court are attacked as unsupported by the evidence. Before proceeding to the examination of these points, we shall consider the contention of the appellants that the findings, even if sustained by the evidence, do not support the judgment. The argument in this regard is based primarily upon the proposition that the alleged agreement of April 23, 1901, by virtue of which the parties settled all of their then existing differences, and agreed upon an immediate conveyance by Pearsall of the lands, was void and unenforceable because not in writing. The defendants urge that this oral agreement of April 23d was a mere modification or alteration of some of the terms of the agreements of October, 1900, and February, 1901; and since it was still executory was void under the provisions of section 1698 of the Civil Code. That section reads as follows: "A contract in writing may be altered by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise." According to section 1661 of the Civil Code an executed agreement is one "the object of which is fully performed. All others are executory." If the agreement of April 23, 1901, is to be regarded as a mere modification or alteration of the then existing agreements, it must be conceded that it was not executed within the meaning of section 1698, and is therefore not now enforceable. An oral agreement altering a written agreement is not executed unless its terms have been fully performed. Performance on the one side is not sufficient. There must be a complete execution of the obligations of both parties in order to bring the modification within the terms of the statute. Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 657, 60 Pac. 426; Thompson v. Gerner, 104 Cal. 168, 37 Pac. 900, 43 Am. St. Rep. 105; Platt v. Butcher, 112 Cal. 634, 44 Pac. 1060; Mackenzie v. Hodgkin, 126 Cal. 591, 59 Pac. 36, 77 Am. St. Rep. 209; Harloe v.

Lambie, 132 Cal. 133, 64 Pac. 88. But we think the agreement of April 23, 1901, as the same is found by the court, was not a modification or alteration of the written agreements, but was a new agreement superseding those then existing. The finding which has already been quoted at length does not indicate that the parties intended to alter one or more of the terms of the written agreements, leaving those agreements in other respects to remain in force. The idea conveyed by the finding is that these agreements were virtually abrogated, and that the new oral agreement was to take their place. It imposed new obligations upon the parties, and each, in consideration of new promises then made by the other, agreed to do acts which, according to his own contention, he was not then bound to perform. To such new agreement, substituted for an existing written agreement, section 1698 of the Civil Code has no application. Stockton, etc., Works v. Glenn's Falls Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 175, 53 Pac. 565. See, also, Adler v. Friedman, 16 Cal. 139.

But it is urged by appellants that, even if the agreement of April 23, 1901, is not to be treated as an unexecuted oral modification of a written agreement, it is still, as an oral agreement for the sale of real property, invalid under subdivision 5 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Unquestionably this agreement which provided for the conveyance by plaintiffs of the 8,000 odd acres of land in Del Norte county, and the transfer by defendants of an undivided interest in the lands in Humboldt county, was an agreement which, by the provisions of the statute of frauds, was required to be in writing. But where the plaintiffs have, as it is here found they have, fully executed the agreement on their side, are the defendants in a position to raise the objection that the contract was not in writing? While full performance of so much of the contract as would bring it within the statute of frauds will enable either party to sue upon the remaining stipulations (Browne, Statute of Frauds [5th Ed.] § 117), the statute will still prevent recovery when any stipulation which is itself required to be in writing remains unperformed. Here the contract as found required the defendants to convey an interest in the Humboldt lands. This stipulation being unperformed, and the contract being undoubtedly entire, the rule as just stated would make the bar of the statute applicable to any suit upon said contract. Fuller v. Reed, 38 Cal. 100. But this rule refers merely to the effect of the statute as a legal defense. Notwithstanding the applicability of the statute as a bar at law, there may still have been such part performance as will impel a court of equity to specifically enforce the contract. Where there is a verbal agreement under which each of the parties is to convey land to the other, it is generally held that a conveyance by one on the faith of the agreement constitutes such part performance as will in equity take the case out of the operation of the statute. Caldwell v. Carrington, 9 Pet. (U. S.) 86, 9 L. Ed. 60; McClure v. Otrich, 118 Ill. 320, 8 N. E. 784; Farwell v. Johnston, 34 Mich. 342; Baker v. Scott, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 606. See Swain v. Burnette, 89 Cal. 564, 569, 26 Pac. 1093. The case at bar is within the principle of these decisions, and the conveyance by plaintiffs therefore places them in a position to compel compliance by the defendants with the undertakings on their part.

It is further argued that the conveyance by plaintiffs cannot be treated as a part performance of the alleged oral agreement of April 23d upon the ground that acts claimed to constitute a part performance must clearly appear to have been done with a view to carrying out the oral contract relied upon. Browne, Statute of Frauds (5th Ed.) § 454; Williams v. Morris, 95 U. S. 456, 24 L. Ed. 360; Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 142; Foster v. Maginnis, 89 Cal. 264, 26 Pac. 828. But whether or not the acts do so clearly appear to have been done is primarily a question of fact for the trial court, and the trial court here has found that the conveyance to the defendants was made pursuant to the oral agreement of April 23d. This is sufficient to meet the requirements of the rule. We are satisfied that, if the evidence sustains the findings of the court, those findings were properly held to result in the judgment entered. Are the findings sustained by the evidence? The principal attack is directed against the finding of the making of the oral agreement of April 23, 1901. The appellants make an elaborate argument with a view to showing that the conveyance by Pearsall was made in recognition of his obligations under the written agreement of February, 1901, and that no oral agreement, as claimed by the plaintiffs and found by the court, was in fact entered into. It is not to be denied that there are certain circumstances appearing in the record which lend support to this contention. Apart from the suspicion which must always attach to a claim that a formal agreement in writing has been superseded by an oral contract, much more favorable than the writing to the party who asserts the making of the new agreement, Pearsall's own testimony was greatly shaken by the production of letters in which he had made statements entirely at variance with his position at the trial. But his testimony as to the making of the agreement of April 23d was corroborated by several witnesses, and the degree of credit to be accorded to him, as to the other witnesses, was a question for the trial court. The witnesses for the plaintiffs testified that the agreement in question had been made. The witnesses for the defendants testified that it had not been. It was for the trial court to decide which set of witnesses was telling the truth. While it may be that the court reached the wrong conclusion on this question of fact, its decision is conclusive in this court, if there was a substantial conflict of evidence, and it cannot be doubted that there was such conflict here. It is found that Pearsall had expended in purchasing the lands and securing the options the sum of $4,650 as necessary and incidental expenses. The only testimony as to these expenses is that of Pearsall himself. Adding together all of the items testified to by him, the sum falls considerably short of the amount found by the court to have been expended by him. Indeed, the respondents make no attempt to point out any evidence which will sustain the finding that $4,650 was so expended. The findings as to the amount paid out by Pearsall on account of the purchase price of the land are by no means satisfactory when measured by the evidence. The court made two findings relating to this item. Finding 8 is that Pearsall had paid upon the purchase price of the land the sum of $39,009.61. Finding 9 declares that the actual cost of said lands to Pearsall had been the sum of $12.50 per acre, exclusive of expenses. The record discloses absolutely no evidence in support of the latter finding. Nowhere in the testimony is there any suggestion of a price of $12.50 per acre. Pearsall and those from whom he claims to have bought all say the price to him was $12 per acre. But, since the ultimate and important question in this connection is how much Pearsall had expended in purchasing the land, an error in the finding as to the price per acre is of no consequence, if finding 8 that he had expended $39,009.61 is supported by the evidence. We think the record does contain sufficient evidence to support this finding, although that evidence is not as clear as might be desired. Pearsall testified that he had bought and paid for the 8,115 acres at the rate of $12 per acre. The amount so claimed to have been expended, after deducting advances made by the defendants and $14,000 due them (according to Pearsall's contention) on account of commissions, left a sum greater than that found by the court to have been expended by Pearsall. While it is difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain from the record how the court arrived at the exact figure of $39,009.61, there was some evidence, not directly contradicted, tending to show that that amount or more had been expended by Pearsall. The other findings, so far as they are material, are supported by sufficient evidence.

We come to the exceptions taken to the rulings of the court in sustaining and overruling objections to evidence. There are more than 100 of these exceptions, and they must necessarily be treated briefly. Many of them are based on the action of the court in admitting correspondence and evidence of conversations of the parties prior to the agreement of February 8, 1901. It is urged that this violated the rule that the execution of a written contract supersedes all negotiations preceding its execution. See Civ. Code, § 1625. But here the plaintiffs in their answer to the cross-complaint averred that the two written agreements relied on by the defendants had been executed by Pearsall without any consideration whatever. That want of consideration for the execution of a writing, when properly pleaded, may always be shown by parol proof, is elementary, and the testimony in question was relevant to the issue framed. Testimony of the oral agreement of April 23, 1901, was objected to on the ground that it was an oral unexecuted modification of a written agreement. That objections of this character were properly overruled follows from what has been said in discussing the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment. If, as is shown in an earlier part of this opinion, the agreement of April 23, 1901, constituted, not a modification of the written agreements, but a new contract superseding them, oral evidence of such new contract was competent. Pearsall was allowed to testify to the conversations which took place between him and some of the defendants at the time of signing the contract of October 20, 1900. This conversation related to the provision for turning over the commissions to be received by him on the Humboldt sale, and the purpose of the testimony was to show that the understanding was that only 2½ per cent. of the purchase price, and not the entire commission, was to be accounted for. There was no error in this. The writing which recited that the commission was to be 2½ per cent., and then contained an agreement to pay over all commissions, was ambiguous. Whether by its terms Pearsall was to turn over only the 2½ per cent. stated to be the amount shown, or was to turn over all commissions, whatever might be their amount, was fairly open to doubt. To clear up this ambiguity which appeared, when it was shown that the commissions were in fact much more than 2½ per cent., it was proper to allow the plaintiffs to show the circumstances surrounding the execution of the writing, and all that was said in regard to these clauses. Balfour v. Fresno Co., etc., 109 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 876. Some of the testimony offered to show what money had been paid by Pearsall through a bank in Crescent City was immaterial because not directly connected with the transactions in dispute. But we cannot see that the admission of this evidence was in any substantial way prejudicial to appellants. The most that can be said is that it had no tendency to support the claim of Pearsall as to the amount expended by him in the purchase of the lands. If it had no such tendency, its admission was not a matter of sufficient importance to justify a reversal. The exceptions taken in connection with the testimony regarding Pearsall's expenses in acquiring the land need not be considered in view of our conclusion that the evidence does not support the finding as to such expenses. On the whole case, we find no substantial error except that involved in the finding just mentioned. Since this does not affect the other issues, it will not require a retrial of the entire case. Emerson v. Yosemite G. M. Co., 149 Cal. 50, 85 Pac. 122; Robinson v. Muir (Cal.) 90 Pac. 521.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to retry the issues raised regarding the expenditures made by C. E. Pearsall on account of incidental expenses in purchasing the lands mentioned in the complaint, and to enter a judgment in favor of H. May Pearsall for the amount, if any, found to have been so expended, together with the amounts due by reason of the other findings.

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1908. Rehearing Denied April 30, 1908.)

1. EVIDENCE — PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS.

Parol evidence is admissible to show a substitution of a new parol agreement for a prior written one; Civ. Code, § 1698, providing that a written contract may be "altered" by a contract in writing or by an executed oral agreement, and not otherwise, not being applicable.

2. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—ORAL AGREEMENT TO TRANSFER LAND — ESTOPPEL — PART PERFORMANCE.

Where a party to an oral agreement to convey land conveys it, and the other parties accept it under the contract, they are estopped to raise the objection that the contract was not in writing as required by the statute of frauds.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Frauds, Statute of, §§ 287, 289.]

3. SAME.

The mere fact that an act relied upon as part performance of an oral contract within the statute of frauds was an act which the performing party was bound to do under a prior written agreement is not conclusive against the claim of part performance of the new oral agreement, as there is no hard and fast rule on that question, but it is one of fact for the determination of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Frauds, Statute of, §§ 287, 289.]

4. SAME.

The rule as to the effect of part performance of an oral agreement invalid under the statute of frauds is based on equitable considerations, and, when it clearly appears that there has been such a performance by a party of his part of the agreement as to make it inequitable to allow the other party to repudiate it on the ground that it was not in writing, he will be estopped from doing so.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Frauds, Statute of, §§ 287, 289.]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Opinion in department affirmed, and judgment below modified and affirmed.

For departmental opinion, see 95 Pac. 154.

PER CURIAM. A rehearing of this appeal was ordered after decision in department. Upon further consideration, we adhere to the department opinion. As stated therein, section 1698 of the Civil Code must be held to be inapplicable where the offer is to prove a substitution of a new agreement for the prior written agreement. This is very clearly shown in the opinion in Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786, where it was held that one sued upon a written agreement could show by parol evidence that a subsequent written agreement was executed upon the consideration and agreement between the parties that the former agreement should be canceled, and all claims of the plaintiff against the defendant thereunder waived. Speaking of such evidence, the court said: "Its purpose was to show that that agreement had been canceled by mutual consent, and had no longer any operative effect. Such evidence is as admissible as is oral testimony that the terms of a written agreement have been fully performed by the parties, or that the instrument evidencing such agreement has itself been canceled and destroyed by the concurrent act of both parties. In either case, the object and effect of such evidence is not to change any of the terms of the contract, but to show that the contract has no longer any existence, and therefore cannot be made the basis of an action. The objection that the written agreement could be altered only by an agreement in writing, or by an executed oral agreement (Civ. Code, § 1698), has no application to the facts offered to be shown. The offer was to show that the subsequent written agreement had been substituted for the original agreement, and the oral agreement of which proof was offered was the agreement to make this substitution. It was not an offer to prove an executory oral agreement, but an oral agreement that had been fully executed by the substitution. This, in effect, was an offer to prove a novation. Farmers' N. G. Bank v. Stover, 60 Cal. 387." See, also, Adler v. Friedman, 16 Cal. 138. It is true that to effect a substitution the new agreement must be valid in itself (Adler v. Friedman, supra), and, solely by reason of the statute of frauds, the new agreement was one that was required to be in writing in order to be valid. But the objection on this score is fully answered by what is said in the department opinion on the effect of the performance of Pearsall of his part of the contract, the conveyance to the defendants of the Del Norte county lands. Having accepted such conveyance under the new contract (which is the effect of the findings of the trial court), the defendants are no longer in a position to raise the objection that such new contract was not in writing. We do not understand the authorities relied on by learned counsel for defendants to hold that the mere fact that the act relied on as part performance was something which the party performing had been obligated to do under a prior agreement is conclusive against the claim of part performance of the new oral agreement. Some of them say that, to constitute part performance, the acts relied on must be referable exclusively to the oral contract (see Page on Contracts, § 719), but, as we understand it, this means no more than that in the light of all the circumstances of the particular case such acts are so referable. There is no hard and fast rule under which the mere existence of a prior obligation to do the acts bars all inquiry on the subject. The rule as to the effect of part performance is based entirely on equitable considerations, and, when it is clearly and unequivocally made to appear that there has been a performance by a party of his part of an oral agreement required by the statute of frauds to be in writing, under such circumstances as to make it inequitable to allow the other party receiving the benefit thereof to repudiate it on the ground that it was not in writing, he is estopped from doing so. The question whether there has been a part performance of the oral agreement is necessarily one of fact to be determined by the trial court. If the testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses be taken as true, as to which the trial court was the sole judge, it affords unequivocal and satisfactory evidence of the particular oral agreement alleged by Pearsall, and showed acts of part performance referable exclusively, under all the circumstances, to such oral agreement. The findings of the trial court sufficiently show a consideration for the oral contract in the existence of the disputes between the parties and the settlement thereof, and there is sufficient evidence to sustain such findings.

In department it was held that the evidence was insufficient to support the finding as to the amount of incidental expense incurred by Pearsall in acquiring the Del Norte county lands, and for which, under the oral contract, he was entitled to reimbursement. The trial court found this amount to be $4,650, and included such amount, with interest from July 1, 1901, in the judgment. The judgment of this court was that the judgment and order be reversed, with directions to the trial court to retry only the issues regarding the expenditures on account of such incidental expenses, and to enter judgment in favor of H. May Pearsall for the amount, if any, found to have been so expended, together with the amounts due by reason of the other findings. Plaintiffs, for the purpose of obviating any further proceedings, have filed in this court their waiver of any further claim on account of such incidental expenses, and their consent that the judgment be modified by deducting therefrom the said amount of $4,650, with interest thereon from July 1, 1901, leaving plaintiff H. May Pearsall entitled at the date of the judgment (April 22, 1904) to the sum of $46,443.11, with interest from said date at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and costs of suit taxed at $189.55. This obviates the necessity of a new trial.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed. The judgment is modified by inserting the amount of $46,443.11 as the amount which plaintiff H. May Pearsall shall receive in lieu of the $51,876.95 awarded, and, as so modified, said judgment is affirmed as of its original date. Defendants shall recover the costs of this appeal.

PEKIN MIN. & MILL. CO. v. KENNEDY et al. (Sac. 1,609.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1908.)
APPEAL—REVIEW OF FORMER DECISION.

On an application by one not a party to an action to review a decision of the Supreme Court rendered many years ago, which repeated the substance of certain findings of the trial court reflecting upon the integrity of petitioner, it is impossible for the court to attempt to amend or correct the findings of the trial court, and so impossible for it to afford him specific relief, though all the evidence on a full examination fully and completely exonerates the applicant.

In Bank. Action by the Pekin Mining & Milling Company against James Kennedy and others. Application by Frank B. Ogden for review of former decision of the Supreme Court of California as reported in 81 Cal. 357, 22 Pac. 679. Application denied.

McFARLAND, J. In 1889 this court handed down a decision in the above-entitled case, which will be found reported in 81 Cal. 357, 22 Pac. 679. In its opinion this court made reference to, and repeated the substance of, certain findings of the trial court, which findings reflected upon the fair dealing of Frank B. Ogden, petitioner herein. The gist of these findings was that the said Ogden improperly and in fraud of the rights of James Kennedy and others, defendants, represented at an execution sale of certain mining claims of the Oro Fino Mining Company, that the Oro Fino Mining Company was not the owner of the property, and, after the sale, wrote his name in the constable's certificate of sale under execution. In the answer of Kennedy and others in the above-entitled suit no charge of fraud was made against Ogden, and there was no intimation that he was to be charged with fraud. Nothing in the answer tended to give notice that any such fraud was claimed. At the trial of the cause Ogden was called, testified, and went his way. Upon his examination neither his integrity nor the fairness of his acts was called in question. He never was informed during or after the trial of the cause that his testimony had been disputed, or his fair dealing questioned. He had no interest in the litigation, and the first knowledge that he acquired that the findings of the trial court in any way reflected upon him was from reading the reported decision of this court. Immediately upon becoming aware of this decision, the said Ogden himself presented the matter to the Bar Association of Alameda county, of which he was a member, with a request that an immediate investigation of his conduct be had. Such investigation was had, and resulted in his complete exoneration, and the Bar Association of Alameda county addressed a letter, early in the year 1890, to the justices of this court, declaring that, after examination, the said Ogden, who at that time had become a judge in the county, was about to request a hearing before this court of the matters touching his integrity, and asked that such hearing be granted him. The judges of the superior court of Alameda county, expressing from their own knowledge the highest opinion of the character of Judge Ogden, united with the Bar Association in this request. The request which was urged upon this court personally by Judge Ogden, and also by a committee of the Bar Association of Alameda county appointed for that purpose, was to the effect that this court should in some appropriate manner investigate the matter of the alleged fraud of Ogden, and report its conclusions thereon in some suitable way by footnote or appendix to the case of Pekin Mining & Milling Co. v. Kennedy, already reported. The justices of this court, each and all expressing willingness to do anything to subserve the ends of justice, pointed out the impossibility of adding such footnote to the volume because it was already in print, and suggested, moreover, that as the judgment of this court in the case had been a judgment ordering a new trial it would be possible for Judge Ogden, upon such new trial, to have the facts thoroughly investigated, and a finding in accordance with those facts declared by the trial court. Judge Ogden then immediately communicated with Marcus P. Bennett, Esq., who had been the attorney for the plaintiff in the litigation, urging him to press the case for retrial, and offering to bear all the cost and expenses attending such trial, for the sole purpose, so far as he was concerned, of presenting to the court all of the evidence upon the question of his alleged fraudulent practice. Judge Bennett replied that a new trial was impracticable, as the hostile interests had been consolidated and the case had passed from his management and control, concluding his letter by offering his assistance to do whatever he could "to remove the blot from your good name, which I believe has been most unjustly attached to it."

Judge Ogden then requested Judge Bennett to confer with Judge Williams, who was the trial judge, and learn from him whether he would not be willing to take evidence and report upon this single matter, it being urged that he could do so without impairment of any of the rights under the decision, since his judgment had been reversed by the Supreme Court, and his finding of the fraudulent practice of Ogden was not within the issues of the case and in no way necessary to sustain the judgment. Judge Williams, in turn, could not see his way clear to try any portion of the case by piecemeal and declined to do so. Appeal was also made to George G. Blanchard, Esq., who had been the attorney for the defendants in the case, asking his aid that the matter might be thoroughly investigated and cleared up, and Mr. Blanchard wrote that he "exonerated Mr. Ogden from all imputation or wrong in the matter you refer to. * * * I am ready to do anything in my power to relieve Mr. Ogden in the matter you speak of. Judge Williams has gone out of office and of course can make no order in the case. Say to Mr. Ogden to prepare such a paper as will meet the facts of the case, and it shall be done with as he may suggest."

Being thus unable to obtain relief from any quarter, Judge Ogden was constrained to give over his attempts, and in this situation the matter rested until 1893. In that year Judge Ogden's name was under consideration by Governor Markham for appointment to the position of judge of the superior court of Alameda county. Confronted by the case in the eighty-first volume of our Reports, his excellency appointed a commission, composed of the three judges of the superior court of Alameda county, to take proofs on the matter and report their findings to him. Such proofs were taken, and the following findings were made:

"The transaction which bears most heavily against the said Ogden is found in the decision of the Supreme Court, expressed in this language: 'It had been agreed between Miller, Bargion, and Kennedy that the latter should bid off the property in his own name. But it had also been agreed between Miller and Frank B. Ogden, that said Ogden should attend the sale for the purpose of procuring the title to said mine to be taken in his (Ogden's) name. Ogden attended the sale, and it was agreed between him and Kennedy that, for the purpose of deterring bidders, Ogden should give public notice at the sale that the mine did not belong to said Oro Fino Corporation, but was the property of him (Ogden). Such notice was accordingly given, and the mine was bid in by Kennedy, as before stated, but another complication arose. Ogden volunteered his assistance to the justice of the peace to write out the certificate of sale, and inserted therein his own name as purchaser, instead of that of Kennedy. This was not known to or discovered by the constable (Cline) or Kennedy.' Upon these matters we make the following findings: Said Ogden did attend the sale and give public notice that the mine did not belong to said Oro Fino Corporation, but was the property of him, Ogden. This notice was given in the belief, honestly entertained by said Ogden, that the title to said mine was in fact and in law in him, the said Ogden, under his deed from Schenck. This belief was at the time shared by Kennedy, Bargion, and Miller. There was no attempt to defraud the judgment creditor, Phelps, or prevent his obtaining from the sale the full amount of his judgment, and, in fact, the full amount of his judgment and costs was bid and the judgment creditor, Phelps, received all of the money from the sale of the property to which he was entitled under his judgment. It is true that Ogden volunteered his assistance to the justice to write out the certificate of sale, and inserted therein his own name as purchaser. It is not true that this was done without the knowledge of Kennedy or in fraud of Kennedy or Bargion, or in fraud of any person soever. We find that the said Ogden volunteered his services merely as penman. That he wrote his name in the certificate of sale because it was the understanding and agreement between Miller, Bargion, and Kennedy that he should do so. And here we proceed to a brief analysis of the testimony before us on this point:

"Manifestly there was no fraud and no impropriety in the said Ogden writing his name in said certificate, if in fact it was understood between Kennedy, Bargion, and Miller that the certificate should be issued in the name of Ogden as purchaser. Miller swears that it was the understanding between himself, Bargion, and Kennedy that the certificate should be taken in Ogden's name, and states the reasons therefor in his affidavit. Peter Bargion is now dead. His wife, however, makes affidavit to the high opinion which her husband always entertained of the character of the said Ogden, and her recollection that the certificate of purchase at the sale, under the Phelps judgment, should be taken in the name of Frank B. Ogden. The said Ogden testifies to like effect as Miller. In addition to this we have the evidence of Hon. Walter Van Dyke (now judge of the superior court of Los Angeles county, at that time attorney for said Miller), in the form of a letter addressed to said Ogden, bearing testimony to the honorable conduct and character of Ogden, and to the fact that the mine 'was sold under the Phelps claim, and was bid in by Ogden, Kennedy paying the money at the sale'—a payment understood, at the time, to be a payment on account of his indebtedness to Miller—which evidence is strongly corroborative of that of Ogden and Miller. We have next the testimony of George G. Graham, likewise in a letter, to the effect that he was present at the sale, and drove Ogden and Kennedy to the mine. That at the sale Ogden stated, and the constable, Cline, announced, that the property was sold to Frank B. Ogden. That after the sale at the time Kennedy referred to the fact that the certificate was in the name of Frank B. Ogden. There is also the testimony of the justice of the peace, Tracy, taken upon the trial of the case, to the effect that Ogden wrote the certificate at his, the justice's, dictation, and that he, the justice, saw Ogden write his name in the certificate. And here it can scarcely be believed that if it was not by the justice at that time known to be the proper name therein to be inserted, he would have done as he testifies that he did, said nothing about it until a month or two thereafter. There is also the additional fact, undisputed by the evidence, that the said Ogden wrote the certificate in duplicate, each containing his own name, left them for the constable to sign, with instructions to the constable to file one for record, and it in fact was filed, and to deliver the other to Kennedy upon the payment by Kennedy of the money. One was actually filed for record and carried as matter of law, constructive notice to the world, of its contents, and the other was actually delivered to Kennedy long prior to July 1st, the date of his difference and trouble with said Miller. It is difficult to believe that any person would attempt the perpetration of so palpable a fraud, and one in its nature almost impossible to escape detection, and attempt the perpetration of such a fraud, the justice himself knowing that Ogden's name was written therein, the constable being called upon to sign them as his official act, one being placed of record, the other delivered to Kennedy himself, it is difficult, we say, to believe that under all these circumstances the fraud should have gone undetected, until nearly a month after the date of the beginning of the troubles between Kennedy and Miller.

"We are of the opinion that the more rational view is that the charge of fraud was simply an afterthought of defendant Kennedy. In this we are sustained by the opinion of Hon. Marcus P. Bennett, then attorney for plaintiff, now judge of the superior court of El Dorado county, who says in his letter above quoted, 'I contended for a very different finding, and argued the case on the theory of your entire innocence in taking the certificate in your own name, and supposed that the court would find in accordance with that theory, and was mortified and surprised that it did not.' Also the opinion of Hon. George C. Blanchard, found in his letter to A. A. Moore, above quoted, to the effect, that he exonerated Mr. Ogden 'from all imputation of wrong in the matter,' and that he had already willingly executed a declaration to that effect. As against all this testimony the charge of fraud has to be sustained, if sustained at all, upon the testimony of the single witness, Kennedy. And the proposition briefly stated is this: If Ogden wrote his name in the certicate of sale, without the knowledge and consent of Kennedy, he was guilty of a fraud. If he wrote his name in the certificate, with the knowledge and consent of Kennedy, he was entirely innocent of any fraud. Kennedy says this was done without his knowledge and consent. Giving to the testimony of Kennedy all the weight to which it is entitled, as the testimony of a single, credible witness, it is still greatly overweighed by all of the other testimony before us, which is entirely in favor of the account given by said Ogden.

"But is the testimony of Kennedy to be treated as the testimony of a credible witness? Assuredly not. No testimony impeaching Kennedy was before the trial court of El Dorado county, and little testimony in favor of Ogden was before the court; for, as has been hereinbefore set forth, it could not be determined by Ogden, and was in fact unknown to Ogden, that his integrity was to be questioned in that case. The answer of Kennedy, on file in the action, raises no such issue, and it was not to be supposed by Ogden or by the attorney for the plaintiff in that case, that his good name would be involved in the litigation. In illustration of this fact it may be noted that the Hon. Walter Van Dyke, who was familiar as an attorney and adviser with all of the matters, testified in the case by deposition. He could and would doubtless then, as he does now, bear witness to the good faith of Ogden in all of the transactions. But his deposition is silent upon the question. No interrogatories were put to him upon the subject of the certificate, because no one upon the plaintiff's side at that time knew that foul play would be charged in relation to the certificate. It is not for one moment to be supposed that had all of this evidence now before us been taken in the trial court the finding in question would have been made.

"In addition to that we have stated that Kennedy is not to be considered as a credible witness, and this is so because of the certified copies of papers now before us, and here marked as exhibits, it is proved that the said Kennedy had been convicted and sentenced in the state of New York for the crime of conspiracy committed as follows: 'The said Kennedy conspired with one Thomas and procured insurance upon the life of one Edward G. Burnham, a fictitious and nonexisting person, in the sum of $10,000. Thereafter the said Kennedy procured a corpse, represented to the insurance companies that the corpse was the corpse of the said Burnham, caused the said corpse to be buried, and sought to collect the insurance. Also that said Kennedy fled to the state of California, from the state of New York, to escape meeting four several indictments preferred against him by the grand jury of the city of Buffalo in 1883 (the transactions here under consideration took place in 1884), accusing said Kennedy of forgery and false pretenses as set forth in Exhibit G.' Also that the said

Kennedy was at that time a lawyer, and was after due process disbarred by the Supreme Court of Erie county, New York, for his wicked, corrupt, and felonious practices, and that his license to practice law was by said court canceled and revoked. Also that upon coming to this state the said Kennedy procured himself to be admitted to practice before the superior court of El Dorado county upon presentation of his said canceled certificate from the state of New York, and upon representation that the said certificate was in full force and effect, and upon testimony of his good moral character, furnished by the constable, Cline, who was a witness against said Ogden in the Pekin Mill & Mining Company suit. Thereafter the fact being made known to the judge of the superior court of El Dorado county, who was the same judge who tried the Pekin Mill & Mining Company's suit, and made the said finding against the said Ogden, supported largely, if not wholly, by the testimony of said Kennedy, the said Kennedy failing to appear before the court to explain his conduct in the premises was by the court ordered disbarred and forbidden to practice.

"As against this evidence of dishonesty of said Kennedy, there is before us abundant evidence of the highest kind and of the strongest nature in support of the character and reputation of the said Ogden for truth, honesty, and integrity; and, moreover, the judges of this court from long knowledge of and personal acquaintance with the said Ogden are themselves, and each of them, able to bear evidence, and do hereby bear evidence, that the said Ogden during all his life has borne and now deservedly bears the highest reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity, and is known and accredited in the community in which he resides as a man of the utmost rectitude in all the affairs of life.

"In conclusion, therefore, the judges of this court find that in none of the transactions mentioned or referred to in the Pekin Mill & Mining Company's suit was the said Ogden guilty of any fraud; but, to the contrary, his conduct throughout was entirely free from fraud, and characterized by the best motives."

The foregoing findings from the record before us are abundantly substantiated. Notwithstanding that the citizens of Alameda county have repeatedly expressed their conviction of Judge Ogden's integrity, by continuously and uninterruptedly electing him to the office of judge of the superior court, nevertheless the record of the case in the eighty-first volume of our Reports stands, and, unless corrected, will stand against him, his children, and his children's children as a monument of infamy. For this reason, and upon this showing, he asks this court to afford him relief.

The statements in 81 Cal., 22 Pac., were based, of course, exclusively upon the findings made by the trial court. They were in no sense the result of an examination by this court, nor could they in any sense be construed as expressing the views of this court upon the matter. It is manifest that the exoneration of Judge Ogden upon the showing thus made is full and complete. This court also, from personal knowledge of Judge Ogden, joins in the expression of confidence embodied in the findings of the judges of the superior court of Alameda county. But, from the character and limits of the jurisdiction of this court, it is impossible for it to attempt to amend or correct the findings of the trial court, and, so, impossible for it to afford Judge Ogden this specific form of relief. However, the publication of the foregoing must suffice for his complete exoneration.

CARMICHAEL v. CAMPODONICO. (Civ. 398.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 22, 1908.)

PUBLIC LANDS—LAND ACTUALLY OCCUPIED—HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Even though land belonged to the United States when the state conveyed it to plaintiff, yet he having inclosed, improved, cultivated, and been in the actual possession of it, it was not subject to entry under the United States homestead laws, so that notwithstanding defendant made such entry he was not authorized to go on the land and oust plaintiff, so that plaintiff may recover it by ejectment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Public Lands, § 53.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by J. Carmichael against E. Campodonico. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Adair, for appellant. J. M. Corcoran, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The complaint is in the usual form for an action in ejectment. The denials of the answer present a striking illustration of the "negative pregnant," but they were treated as putting in issue all the material allegations of the complaint. The affirmative averment upon which defendant relied is as follows: "All the land above mentioned was prior to and up to June, 1905, public land of the United States; that on the 10th day of June, 1905, this defendant entered as a homestead said 160 acres of land in the United States Land Office at Stockton, Cal.; that he now holds the land office receipt No. 7933, entitling this defendant to the lawful possession and occupancy of the last above-mentioned tract; that he now holds and occupies said premises entered as a homestead under and by virtue of the laws of the United States."

At the trial defendant admitted that a patent was issued by the state of California on November 9, 1871, to John Wilson; that the plaintiff deraigned title from the said patentee by mesne conveyance; that the patentee and his successors in interest were in the actual and continued possession of said land from November 9, 1871, until the same was sold to plaintiff about five years ago. This was supplemented by the testimony of plaintiff that said land was inclosed by a substantial fence, and had improvements thereon and was used for agricultural purposes, and that it was in the actual possession of his tenant, one John Lord, who was ousted by defendant at the time of the latter's entry in June, 1905.

The foregoing facts justify the findings and judgment of the court below in favor of plaintiff. The case of Gragg v. Cooper, 150 Cal. 584, 89 Pac. 346, is decisive of the controversy here. It is there held, as stated in the syllabus: "Public land of the United States, actually occupied and possessed by one who has it inclosed by a substantial fence, and is using it for agricultural purposes, without other right, is not subject to entry by a qualified claimant under the homestead laws of the United States; and the process of obtaining from the officers of the United States a certificate of such entry and a receipt for fees paid, in pursuance of a declaration of his intention to settle upon the land as a homestead, filed with them, does not authorize him to go upon the land so possessed and oust the prior possessor, or to recover possession in an action against him."

We see no necessity to continue the discussion, as the other questions suggested by appellant are entirely immaterial. It is probably true that the state had no title to convey to Wilson, and that the premises in controversy are still a part of the public land of the United States; but defendant is in no position to litigate these questions in this proceeding, and the possession of plaintiff as aforesaid and his ouster by defendant constitute sufficient ground for the action of ejectment.

The judgment is affirmed.

FERGUSON v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF SONOMA COUNTY et al. (Civ. 422.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 20, 1908. Rehearing Denied
April 2, 1908.)

1. MANDAMUS — PLEADING — SUFFICIENCY OF ANSWER.

In mandamus to compel a school board to issue to plaintiff a high school certificate to teach, and to set aside an order suspending such certificate, plaintiff alleged that he repeatedly demanded of the board and its members that they set aside the order suspending the certificate and issue to him his high school certificate. The answer denied that plaintiff did repeatedly demand or did at any of the times mentioned in the complaint demand of the board that they set aside the order suspending the plaintiff's certificate as alleged in the complaint, and further denied that the board or any of its members at any of the times mentioned in the complaint or at all refused wrongfully, or that they or any of them still continued to refuse, to issue to the plaintiff his certificate or to set aside the order suspending it. Held, that the averments in the complaint of the demand were sufficiently traversed by the answer to warrant the court in taking evidence upon that issue.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where, in mandamus, the findings as to demand having been made upon defendants before suit supported the judgment, it would be presumed on appeal that the evidence as to demand supported the findings, and that the question was heard and determined by the court as though made an issue by the pleadings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; A. G. Burnett, Judge.

Mandamus by James Ferguson against the county board of education of Sonoma county and Minnie Coulter, superintendent of schools, to compel defendants to issue and deliver to petitioner a high school certificate. From a judgment denying the writ, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. V. Costello and Costello & Costello, for appellant. C. H. Pond and R. L. Thompson, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Mandamus. Petitioner prayed for a writ directing defendants to issue and deliver to him a high school certificate. Defendants had the judgment, from which plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone.

It is alleged in the complaint that on August 1, 1901, there was duly issued to him a high school certificate by defendant board, which said certificate was to continue in force for the period of six years from its date; that pursuant to proceedings taken by said board on July 9, 1904, it wrongfully and unlawfully passed the following resolution: "Be it resolved that the certificate of the said James Ferguson (plaintiff) be and is hereby indefinitely suspended for unprofessional conduct and evident unfitness for teaching." It was alleged "that said plaintiff has repeatedly demanded of the said board of education, and of and from the said members thereof, first above named, that they set aside the said alleged order suspending said certificate, and issue and deliver to him his high school certificate, as aforesaid," and "that said board and said members still continue to refuse and fail to issue and deliver to said plaintiff his certificate or to revoke, annul, or set aside said alleged order of suspension of said certificate." The court found that plaintiff "never made demand upon the defendant the county board of education of the county of Sonoma, California, nor upon any of its members, to be reinstated as a regularly authorized teacher of said county, nor to revoke said order of said board of education indefinitely suspending the plaintiff's certificate as a teacher * * * nor to restore the plaintiff's said certificate to teach * * * prior to the commencement of this action, nor at all." As conclusion of law the court found that no legal demand was made upon defendants "to reinstate the plaintiff's authority to teach * * * nor to revoke the order * * * suspending the teacher's certificate of the plaintiff * * * nor to restore plaintiff's said certificate * * * revoked by said board of education on the 9th day of July, 1904; that said demand is a necessary precedent to the maintaining of said action, and to the issuing of a writ of mandamus in said matter." The writ was therefore denied. The sole point made on the appeal is "that a demand is admitted upon the pleadings, and the findings do not therefore support the judgment."

By the answer the defendants "deny that the plaintiff did repeatedly demand, or did at any of the times mentioned in the amended complaint herein or at all demand, of the said board * * * that they set aside the said order or resolution indefinitely suspending the plaintiff's certificate as alleged therein; and further specifically deny that said board of education or any of the members thereof * * * at any of the times mentioned in said amended complaint, or at all, refused, wrongfully * * * or that they or any of them refused wrongfully * * * or at all, or that they or any of them still continue to refuse to issue or deliver to the plaintiff herein his said certificate, or to revoke or annul or set aside said order indefinitely suspending said certificate." The principal issue presented by the complaint was the validity of the board's action in suspending plaintiff's certificate, and the remedy he was asking was a revocation of this alleged order of suspension, the effect of which would have been to leave his certificate in force. But whether or not this would follow we think the averments of demand were sufficiently traversed to warrant the court in taking evidence upon that issue, and we must presume that the evidence so taken supported the findings. It is a rule of law that before making an application for the writ of mandamus demand must be made on the defendant to perform the act sought to be enforced by the writ. Price v. Riverside L. & I. Co., 56 Cal. 431.

Respondents contend that under section 1088 of the Code of Civil Procedure it was incumbent upon appellant to allege and prove demand whether denied or not. Where default is made the section seems to uphold this view; and in Jackson School District v. Cuthbert, 134 Cal. 508, 66 Pac. 741, where the defendant failed to answer, it was said: "If the trial court cannot grant the relief on the pleadings, it would seem to follow that this court cannot reverse a judgment denying writ, unless it is made to appear that such showing was made before the lower court as would require the issuance of the writ." This decision seems to be in conflict with the decisions in Pereria v. Wallace, 129 Cal. 397, 62 Pac. 61, and Hayward v. Pimental, 107 Cal. 386, 40 Pac. 545. In the Pereria Case there was no answer; in the Hayward Case there was an answer. Section 1088 reads: "The writ cannot be granted by default. The case must be heard by the court, whether the adverse party appear or not." In the Pereria Case the court seems to have relied upon section 1094 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads: "If no answer be made, or if the answer raise no material issue of fact, the hearing must be before the court. If no answer be made, the case must be heard upon the papers of the applicant." As we think the issue of demand was sufficiently presented, and as the presumption is, in the absence of the evidence, that the findings were supported by the evidence, we prefer not to express an opinion upon the point suggested by respondents.

Furthermore, on the appeal from the judgment alone it must be presumed that the evidence supported the findings, and, as the latter support the judgment, we must presume that the question of fact as to the demand was heard and determined by the court as though made an issue by the pleadings.

The judgment is affirmed.

MEEK v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA RY. CO. (Civ. 346.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California, Feb. 25, 1908.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL—MOTION FOR INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE.

The refusal of a motion for new trial, based on the ground that the evidence did not support the findings, cannot be reviewed; the statement for the motion not having advised the court which of the findings was claimed to be unsupported, and there being evidence to support one of them.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1743.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Mae Meek against the Southern California Railway Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bernard Potter and Frank James, for appellant. T. J. Norton, E. E. Millikin, and E. W. Camp, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a new trial. The action was by a passenger who had been ejected from a train by defendant's servants, without cause, and in a violent manner. The complaint stated facts sufficient to entitle plaintiff to general damages, and, in addition, set out certain facts entitling her to special damages. The answer denied the various allegations of the complaint, and by way of further defense pleaded an accord and satisfaction. The court found in favor of plaintiff upon each of the allegations of the complaint relating to general damages, but against plaintiff on her plea of special damages, and found in favor of defendant upon the plea of accord and satisfaction.

The findings are sufficient to support the judgment. The only specifications of error found in the statement on motion for a new trial are that "the plaintiff gave and duly served and filed her notice of intention to move for a new trial, upon the grounds that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings and decision of the court; that the findings and decision of the court are against law." We cannot consider the statement on motion for a new trial to determine whether or not the evidence supports the findings and decision, for the reason that the statement contains no specifications of error, as provided by section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides that, "when the exception is to the verdict or decision upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to justify it, the objection must specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient." It is insisted by appellant that this section has no application when a single finding only is against the appellant, and all the other findings are in her favor. Under the record in this case it is unnecessary to pass upon this question, for, as a fact, there are two findings against appellant, and from the general specifications it is not possible to ascertain which finding is attacked. In Swift v. Occidental Mining, etc., Co., 141 Cal. 168, 74 Pac. 700, it is said, in speaking of the rule established by the section referred to: "That the object of the rule requiring these specifications is, first, to shorten the statement of the evidence by excluding everything irrelevant to the specified fact; and, second, to notify the opposing party of the particular finding called in question, in order that he may see that the statement fairly and fully presents the evidence bearing upon that particular matter." The statement on motion for a new trial in the case at bar only purports to contain such evidence as is material to the case, which must be construed as a statement that it is all of the evidence material in connection with the findings specified as unwarranted. "The specifications should in some form distinguish each particular proposition of fact excepted to from all others found by the court." Dawson v. Schloss, 93 Cal. 194, 29 Pac. 31; De Molera v. Martin, 120 Cal. 546, 52 Pac. 825. Treating the grounds of motion for new trial found in the statement as being specifications of error, the trial court was not advised, either when settling the statement or hearing the motion for new trial, as to what particular finding of fact the moving party claimed was unsupported. It cannot be said that there was no evidence in support of either finding against plaintiff, for on the plea of special damages the finding is entirely warranted from the evidence. Hence the rule applying where there is an entire absence of evidence is not applicable here.

Judgment and order affirmed.

WIENER v. H. GRAFF & CO. et al.
(Civ. 431.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 20, 1908.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—RENEWAL—CONSTRUCTION—"SIGNIFY."

Where a lease entitled the lessees to a renewal, provided they signified their acceptance in writing to the lessor on or before September 1, 1904, such provision only required the lessees to make known, manifest, notify, or express in writing their acceptance or desire to continue the lease, such terms being synonymous with "signify," as used in the lease, any writing adequate for that purpose being sufficient to operate as an election to renew.

2. SAME—TIME.

Where a lease provided for a renewal on the same terms, if the lessees signified their acceptance in writing on or before September 1, 1904, it was incumbent on the lessees to give notice of their election to renew within the time specified, and on the giving of such notice they became entitled to hold for another term under the original lease and not under the notice, the lease being regarded as extended for the new term.

3. SAME—NOTICE—REQUISITES—SIGNATURE.

Where a lease provided for renewal on notice to the lessor, and within the time specified a member of the lessee firm forwarded to the lessor by registered mail a letter enclosed in one of the firm's business envelopes, with the firm name and address in the corner, reciting a description of the lease, and stating that H. Graff & Co., as the lessee firm, "elects to avail itself of the renewal privilege and requests the continuance of the lease for a new term," such notice was sufficient, though no signature was subscribed thereto.

Appeal from Superior Court Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Selma S. Wiener against H. Graff & Co. and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for appellant. H. H. Welsh, Bernhard & Southerland, George Cosgrave, M. F. McCormick, and Crichton & St. John, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to recover the possession of certain real property situated in the city of Fresno, alleged to be unlawfully withheld from plaintiff by defendants. Defendants claim possession under the provisions of a lease from the owner to H. Graff & Co. and by subleases by the latter.

It appears that the property in question was the subject of a lease between the owner, one J. J. Konigshofer, as lessor, and H. Graff & Co., a copartnership, lessees, dated December 1, 1899, for the term of five years, from its date, at the yearly rental of $1,500, payable monthly in advance, on the first day of each month, in equal monthly installments of $125. The lease contained the following provision: "And it is hereby further agreed, that the parties of the second part (lessees) shall have the privilege of one year's additional lease on the same terms and at the same rental as heretofore, provided that they signify their acceptance in writing to the party of the first part (lessor) on or before September first, nineteen hundred four;" that the rental was paid at all times, as agreed in the lease, to W. T. Mattingly for the lessor, who appears to have been his agent to receive the rental, up to December 1, 1904, and was thereafter tendered, on the first of each month, to Mr. Mattingly but was refused, no reason for such refusal being given; that in June, 1904, H. Graff, a member of the firm of H. Graff & Co., forwarded in a letter by registered mail to Konigshofer at Alameda, Cal., inclosed in one of the firm's business envelopes "with the firm name and address in the corner," the following notice: "Fresno, Cal., June 7, 1904. J. J. Konigshofer: Take notice that H. Graff & Co., the lessee named in that certain indenture of lease made by you as lessor, to H. Graff & Co., as lessee, on December 1st, 1899, which said lease is recorded in Volume H. of Leases, page 133 et seq., thereof, Fresno County Records, and whereby the said lessor did lease to the said lessee that certain real property, situated in the county of Fresno, state of California, and described as follows, to wit: In the Wiener Block in the city of Fresno, county of Fresno, better described as the three stores nearest the alley in said block, said Wiener Block being on Tulare Street between I and J Sts., Fresno, Cal. And which said lease contains the following covenant: 'It is hereby further agreed that the parties of the second part shall have the privilege of one year's additional lease on the same terms and at the same rental as heretofore, provided that they signify their acceptance in writing to the party of the first part on or before September 1st, 1904,' does hereby elect to avail itself and accept the privilege contained in said covenant just described, and requests the continuance of said lease under the same terms as are now contained in said lease for the period of one year from and after the first day of December, 1904. ———."

No explanation is given why this acceptance happened not to be signed. It appears further that Mr. Graff "received back the registry card receipting for the letter," which was introduced in evidence "and is signed by Mr. Konigshofer receipting for the letter containing the notice forwarded by the witness and referred to in his testimony"; before sending the notice Graff gave it to Mattingly who handed it back to Graff, and told him he would have to furnish it to Mr. Konigshofer, and gave him the latter's address at Alameda. It appeared that H. Graff & Co., was incorporated in 1901 and made an assignment to the corporation of the following property: "The stock of merchandise, furniture and fixtures, horses and wagons, certificates of stock, warehouse, all bills receivable and all indebtedness due, together with the good will of that business heretofore conducted by us in the city of Fresno * * * and known as the merchandise business of H. Graff & Company. It being the intention * * * to sell and convey * * * all their right, title and interest and ownership in and to the said copartnership business of H. Graff & Company and in and to all personal property of every kind and character owned and possessed by said partnership on this date." Whether this assignment carried with it the lease in question or was so intended does not appear otherwise than from the above description of the property assigned.

The contention of appellant is that the notice given by the lessees failed to meet the requirements of the lease which required that in the event of seeking a renewal thereof they should "signify their acceptance in writing to the party of the first part on or before September first, 1904"; that something more than giving notice was required; "that the writing itself in and of itself signify and prove the acceptance of the lease and its extension for the additional term," which it failed to do because not signed by the lessees. It is not disputed that if the notice or acceptance, which was in fact served upon the lessor in due time, had been signed by the lessees it would have effected its object and would have secured the additional term of one year. The sole question, therefore, would seem to be, was the notice ineffectual to accomplish this object? It seems to us that the phrase "provided that they (the lessees) signify their acceptance in writing to the party of the first part (the lessor)" means simply that the lessees were to make known, manifest, notify, or express in writing their acceptance or desire to continue the lease, for these terms are synonymous with the term "signify" as used in the lease. It is doubtless true that it was intended not only that the lessees should so make known or signify in writing their acceptance as to secure the privilege of the additional term, but also that the lessor could hold them to its performance; the acceptance, in short, should be mutually enforceable.

It is also true, we think, that the contract was one for the renewal of the lease and it was incumbent upon the lessees to give notice of the option within the time limited in the lease (Shamp v. White, 106 Cal. 220, 39 Pac. 537); and this they did. We think further that upon compliance with the condition as to giving notice the lessees would then be entitled to hold for the additional term under the original lease and not under the notice—the lease would then become a lease for both the original and extended terms. Sheppard v. Rosenkrans, 109 Wis. 58, 85 N. W. 199, 83 Am. St. Rep. 886.

Appellant cites several cases in support of her contention. Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 16 Cal. 375, was a case where the maker and indorser of a note were sued. On the day the note matured the notary left a notice at the residence of the indorser—who was absent at the time—describing the note and stating that it was protested by him for nonpayment, and that the holder looked to the indorser for payment. The court said: "This notice was without any signature of any kind, nor did it indicate in any way from whom it proceeded. It was ineffectual, therefore, to charge the indorser." There was nothing in the body of the notice or attached to it in any way to show by whom the notice was given. In Marston v. Brashaw, 18 Mich. 81, 100 Am. Dec. 152, it was held that the officer taking the acknowledgment of a deed must subscribe the certificate, and that his name written in the body of the certificate is not sufficient. Held similarly, also, as to the transcript of a justice's judgment, where the same was not signed, in Bigelow v. Booth, 39 Mich. 624. So held in Clark v. Wilson, 127 Ill. 449, 19 N. E. 860, 11 Am. St. Rep. 143, as to the certificate of a notary, the reason in part being that the statute required the officer to subscribe his name to the certificate. 4 Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) 200, is cited to the effect that to constitute the signing of a bill or note the drawer's or maker's name must be written with intent to authenticate and give effect to the contract thereon; but at page 109 of the same volume it is stated that, apart from statutory requirements, the name need not be subscribed, and it is sufficient if it appear in any part of the instrument; thus, where it is declared that "I, J. S., promise to pay" is as good as "I promise to pay," signed "J. S." Note 2. The intent, then, is not alone shown by the instrument being subscribed by the party to be charged. See Auzerais v. Naglee, 74 Cal. 60, 69, 15 Pac. 371; California Canneries Co. v. Scatena, 117 Cal. 447, 49 Pac. 462. See, also, 25 Ency. of Law, p. 1065, where it is stated that in neither ordinary nor legal language is the word "sign" or "signature" confined to the writing of the name at the bottom of the paper. We are cited to Hoffman v. Anthony, 6 R. I. 282, 75 Am. Dec. 701, to the point that where a notice of mortgagee's sale was not signed it was held invalid. It appeared that the notice did not state who made the mortgage or to whom it was made; nor who advertised the sale; nor who was to conduct the sale, and, finally, no means were pointed out by which any one could ascertain the terms of the power to sell or the conditions upon which it might be exercised. Very properly the notice was held to be insufficient. In Thomas et al. v. Caldwell et al., 50 Ill. 138, the action was to recover for labor and material furnished in the erection of a church building under a written contract. One Short, with others, was sued upon this contract, and although his name appeared in the body of the contract he did not sign it, and it was held that he was not a party to the agreement, and it was error to render a decree against him for the payment of the money. To like effect, it is claimed, is D'Argy v. Godefroi, 1 Mart. (O. S.; La.) 75, but we have not been able to find this case. Obviously these were instances involving the binding force of contracts which at no stage had been signed by the parties sought to be charged. Clemmons v. Brownfield, 19 Mo. 118, is cited, but we find no such case in that volume. Spinney v. Downing, 108 Cal. 666, 41 Pac. 797, was an action in which the defendant, by way of cross-complaint, relied upon a contract to furnish certain building material. The court said: "It appears without conflict that it was the understanding and agreement between plaintiff and Downing that the proposed contract should be reduced to writing, and signed by both parties. This fact is made very clear by the evidence. The paper as drawn up was signed by Downing, but for some reason which does not appear never was signed by the plaintiff, Spinney. It, therefore, never became a binding or subsisting obligation upon either." The reason for this was "that the proposed contract contained reciprocal stipulations and covenants upon the part of each as a consideration for the acts of the other." In that case the intention was that the contract should be signed by both parties, but here there is no intention express or necessarily implied that the lessees should subscribe the acceptance before it should be a binding obligation, nor was the signature of the lessor necessary. The notice was to be in writing and sufficiently authenticated, but we do not think that such authentication could be manifested only by signing the paper at its bottom. It was addressed to the lessor and directed him to take notice that the lessee (naming the firm) "does hereby elect to avail itself and accept the privilege contained in said covenant just described (the notice identified the lease by stating its date and place of record and set forth the particular clause granting the option), and requests the continuance of said lease under the same terms as are now contained in said lease for the period of one year from and after the first day of December, 1904." On its face and in its body it appeared to have emanated from H. Graff & Co., the lessees, and the purpose of the notice is stated with clearness and precision. When it was delivered to and received for by the lessor he could not have doubted by whom it was sent nor the purpose intended in sending it. Notice, when required by statute has been held not the equivalent of knowledge, but "notice of itself," said the court in Williams v. Bergin, 108 Cal. 166, 171, 41 Pac. 287, 288, "imports that the information given thereby comes from an authentic source, and is directed to some one who is to act or refrain from acting in consequence of the information contained in the notice." In Michigan State Ins. Co. v. Soule, 51 Mich. 312, 16 N. W. 662, the validity of a foreclosure sale was challenged on the ground, among others, that the notice of sale was not properly signed. The court held that as the statute did not require the party foreclosing to sign his name to the notice "it was sufficient if the name appeared therein." See, also, Fitzpatrick v. Fitzpatrick, 6 R. I. 64, 75 Am. Dec. 681. It was held in Evans et al. v. Backer et al., 101 N. Y. 289, 4 N. E. 516, that "the omission to indorse upon papers served or filed the post-office address or place of business of the attorney, as required by rule 2 of the Supreme Court is a mere irregularity, and entitles the party served either to return the paper, or move to set it aside; but he cannot, after receiving it without objection, safely disregard the function which the paper is designed to perform."

Respondent cites an English case quite in point. Carleton v. Hobart, 14 Wkly. Rep. 772. A lease contained a clause enabling the tenant "to surrender and deliver up the premises" at the end of every three years, he first giving the lessor "six calendar months' previous notice of his intention so to surrender the said premises." The notice given was as follows: "Notice to surrender. Sir. I hereby give you notice that I will surrender and deliver up to you, the quiet and peaceable possession of all that and those house and lands of Altavilla, which I hold from — as tenant. Dated the 22nd day of September, 1863. To John Parker Carleton, Esq., and all whom it may concern." The notice bore no signature. The action was for rent notwithstanding the surrender of the possession by the tenant and his placing a keeper in charge on the day noticed. "O'Hagan, J. There are two points in the case; first, was the notice sufficient under the terms of the contract? and, secondly, was everything done by the defendant necessary to determine his tenancy after the service of notice? On both points I agree with the majority of the court below. There is nothing about names or signatures in the proviso, and the question substantially is, whether, on the face of the notice, the parties, lands, dates, and so forth, are sufficiently set forth to convey the intention of the tenant to the landlord. The only question is as to the person from whom the notice purports to come, and though he is not specified by name, yet he calls himself the tenant of the lands of Altavilla, and the expression 'surrender' also shows that he regards the relation of landlord and tenant as subsisting between them. I think this conforms to the requirements of the deed. The parol evidence merely showed what is necessary to show by parol in every case of notice — i. e., that the notice was served and understood." With him concurred four justices — one other dissenting. The notice in the case at bar is stronger in its facts than the case cited, for it clearly shows "from whom the notice purports to come." Nor can we see that a different rule would apply where the notice is intended to convey an intention to hold over than where the intention is to surrender the premises. Appellant would distinguish the two cases on the ground that in Carleton v. Herbert the question was as to what amounts to sufficient "written notice," while here the question is what is a sufficient "written acceptance." The view we take of the matter admits no such distinction. It is written notice of acceptance — i. e., notice of the lessee's intention to renew the lease, with which we are to deal as it was in the Carleton Case written notice of surrender; and, after all is said, it comes to this: What, under the circumstances, was sufficient "written notice"? With this notice in his possession, served in June, 1904, the lessor expressed no objection and made known no dissent until November 9, 1904, when he served notice on all of the defendants that the tenancy would expire on December 1st following, and requiring them to yield up possession. The lessees thereafter, regularly on the first of each month, tendered the rental, but it was refused, and this action was commenced January 28, 1905.

Just what point plaintiff relies upon in showing the incorporation of H. Graff & Co. and the assignment of the firm's partnership business to the corporation is not clear. It may have been to hold the corporation as subtenant with other defendants, and it is urged also in the argument to show that the notice was insufficient because the lessor could not determine from it whether it came from the partnership or from the corporation. The record states the fact of the incorporation, but does not state that plaintiff knew the fact or was in any way misled by it or acted upon it. We do not see that this feature of the case in any wise affects the principal question argued by appellant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

DAVIS v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF MERCED COUNTY et al. (Civ. 424.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 20, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 20, 1908.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—LIQUOR LICENSES — ORDINANCES—CONSTRUCTION.

Under an ordinance of a county providing that no saloon license within territory embraced in any election precinct shall be granted where the number of electors equal in number to a majority of the whole number in the precinct within one mile of the proposed place of business sign a protest, or where it appears that the applicant is not a fit and proper person, etc., a protest against the issuance of a license signed by the requisite number of electors is alone sufficient to defeat an application for a license whether or not the applicant is a proper person.

2. SAME.

A county ordinance providing that no saloon license in territory embraced in any election precinct shall be granted by the board of supervisors where a designated number of electors sign a written protest, or where it appears that the applicant is not a fit person, etc., though construed to require the denial of an application on the filing of a protest signed by the requisite number of electors, irrespective of the question of whether or not the applicant is a fit person, is not invalid as allowing the electors to decide whether a license shall be granted, and thereby take the determination away from the board of supervisors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Mandamus by M. Davis against the board of supervisors of Merced county and others to compel defendants to issue a retail liquor license. From a judgment denying the writ, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John A. Wall, for appellant. H. S. Shaffer and Frank H. Farrar, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action for a writ of mandate commanding the defendants to issue to plaintiff a license to conduct a retail liquor saloon business in the town of Le Grand, Merced county, pursuant to Ordinance No. 107, duly made and passed by defendants. The writ was denied, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Section 25 of Ordinance 107 is as follows: "No license shall be granted to carry on such business within the territory embraced in any election precinct in said county if a number of electors equal in number to a majority of the whole number of electors residing in said election precinct within one mile of the proposed place of business shall sign a written protest and file the same with the clerk of said board at or prior to the time of said hearing, or if, from any other cause, it shall appear to said board upon said hearing that said applicant is not a fit and proper person to be intrusted with such license to conduct such business, or if it shall appear that such application is not made in good faith, or that the proposed location of said business is objectionable, or that any rule of said board would be violated, or that any of the statements made in such application are willfully untrue, or for any other reason deemed by the board sufficient for such refusal, whether presented by protest filed with the clerk of said board or otherwise.

* * * If upon such hearing it shall appear to the said board that the applicant is a proper person to be intrusted with the conduct of such business, and the place designated in said application is a proper place for the carrying on said business, the board shall make an order approving said application and directing the clerk of said board to issue to said applicant a permit to carry on said business."

Plaintiff filed his application with said board pursuant to said ordinance, which later came on duly to be heard, and was heard. Prior to the hearing there was filed with said board, and at said hearing was considered, the protest in writing of a majority of the whole number of electors residing in the election precinct within one mile of the proposed place of business of plaintiff. The board of supervisors made an order which, after certain recitals, reads as follows: "It appearing that a majority of the electors residing within one mile of the proposed place of business have signed the petition objecting to the granting of a license, it is unanimously ordered that the application of M. Davis (petitioner) be and the same is hereby denied."

The following stipulation was entered into at the trial: "It is stipulated and agreed that the averments, as a defense, contained in the answer of the defendants, particularly showing that the denial of the application of the plaintiff for a liquor license was solely and entirely by reason of the filing of the protest, designated as 'Exhibit A' in said answer, are true. It is admitted that the Commercial Hotel in the town of Le Grand would be a proper place for the conduct of a saloon business, provided a majority of the electors of Plainsburg precinct residing within one mile of said Commercial Hotel did not object to having any saloon in said town of Le Grand."

Appellant makes but two points: First, that the board of supervisors cannot, upon a protest alone, refuse the license, but that it must appear that the applicant is an unfit person, of which latter fact the protest is but evidentiary; secondly, that in granting or refusing a license the board acts in a judicial capacity, and cannot delegate its authority to any number of citizens.

1. Appellant's first point seems to rest upon a construction to be given the ordinance itself, which he contends does not give the board authority to refuse the license upon the fact alone that the protest mentioned in the ordinance has been filed. We cannot agree with appellant. It seems quite clear to our minds that the ordinance was intended to declare, and clearly does declare, that, where a majority of the electors in any election precinct residing within one mile of the proposed saloon sign and file a written protest against granting the license, no license shall be granted. This provision of the ordinance is not limited or restricted by the subsequent provisions, but the protest itself is sufficient to defeat the application regardless of the fact as to whether or not the applicant is "a fit and proper person to be intrusted with such license to conduct such business." It is but a form of limited local option. There is nothing in Reed et al. v. Collins et al., 90 Pac. 973, in conflict with this view. No such ordinance as we have here was involved in that case.

2. We are unable in the provision commented upon to discover any delegation of judicial power conferred by the ordinance upon the board of supervisors. Aside from this question, the power to enact the ordinance is not assailed, and we need not discuss its constitutionality upon any other ground. The point is that the giving of conclusive effect to the protest is equivalent to allowing the electors to decide, thus taking the determination away from the board. Appellant cites In re Bickerstaff, 70 Cal. 35, 11 Pac. 393, quoting as follows: "The condition only relates to the mode of applying for a license, not the power to issue it. Jurisdiction to issue is put in motion by the petition and certificate; and upon the petition fortified by the required certificate and report as evidence, the city council acts judicially in making the order." This was said with reference to an ordinance which required the petition to be accompanied by a certificate of five respectable citizens to the good moral character, sobriety, and suitableness of the applicant to keep and conduct a saloon. The court further said: "But the means prescribed for procuring the license constitute the law of the application to exercise the right to carry on the business, and it is necessary to comply with the law in order to enjoy the right, if the law is valid and reasonable. It was entirely competent for the city council, in passing the ordinance, to annex as a condition to granting a license to carry on business that an applicant for the license shall show himself a suitable person to carry on the business, and to provide that it shall be conducted in such a way that the business itself shall not threaten or become dangerous to the social order of the municipality." We see no essential difference in the two cases. In the case cited the license could not be granted unless a certain certificate of citizens attested the good moral character of the applicant, while here the license is not to be granted if a certain number of certain electors protest against it. In both cases the ordinance prescribes the condition on which the applicant may hope for the success of his application. In the one case his application is made to depend upon his obtaining a certificate of certain persons; in the other it will be denied if certain persons object.

Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747, involved an ordinance not unlike that in Ex parte Bickerstaff, supra, the supervisors being restrained from granting the license except upon the written consent of a majority of the board of police commissioners, or in case of their refusal, then upon the written recommendation of not less than 12 citizens of San Francisco owning real estate in the block or square in which said business of retail liquor dealer is to be carried on. The objection there made was that the license was made to depend upon the arbitrary will of the board of police commissioners or of the property owners. The court said: "But whatever force this objection might have in reference to licenses to carry on the ordinary avocations of life, which are not supposed to have any injurious tendency, it has no force in the present case. It is well settled that the governing power may prohibit the manufacture and traffic in liquor altogether, provided only that it does not interfere with interstate commerce. See Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205. And if the governing power can prohibit a thing altogether, it can impose such conditions upon its existence as it pleases."

Let us suppose an ordinance requiring that a majority, instead of 12, as in the Christensen Case, of the electors in the election precinct first give their written consent before the board is empowered to grant the license; is there any essential difference in such a case from that where it is made unlawful for the board to grant the license if before the board has acted a majority of the electors file a written protest against granting the license? We see none. The law has prescribed the condition upon which the license may or may not issue, and the issuing of the license is but made to depend upon the condition prescribed by the law.

State v. Gerhardt, 145 Ind. 439, 44 N. E. 469, 33 L. R. A. 313, arose under an act of the Legislature (Acts 1895, p. 248, c. 127), section 9 of which provided that, if a remonstrance in writing, signed by a majority of the legal voters of any township, shall be filed with the auditor of any county three days before any regular session of the board of commissioners against the granting of a license to any applicant for the sale of spirituous liquors within said township, it shall be unlawful thereafter for such board of commissioners to grant such license to such applicant therefor during the period of two years from the date of filing such remonstrance. Among other objections it was urged against this law that it delegated legislative powers to the county commissioners, and that it empowered a majority of the voters of a township to suspend the operation of general laws. In an elaborate opinion the act was sustained. The principle there discussed and decided is the same as in the present case, and meets our entire approval.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. OLIVER. (Cr. 72.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 25, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — SENTENCE — LESS THAN MINIMUM — EFFECT.

A sentence of seven years' imprisonment on a conviction of grand larceny after a previous conviction of burglary is not void, though Pen.

Code, § 666, provides 10 years' imprisonment as minimum punishment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3282.]

2. SAME — APPEAL — DISPOSITION OF CASE — FAVORABLE ERROR.

A judgment of conviction will not be reversed on defendant's appeal for error in imposing a shorter term of imprisonment than the statute authorizes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3188.]

3. WITNESSES — ACCUSED PERSONS — FORMER CONVICTION.

Pen. Code, § 1025, providing that where one is accused of an offense and also of a previous conviction and pleads not guilty, and admits the previous conviction, the charge of such conviction must not be referred to on the trial, does not prevent the people asking accused on his cross-examination if he has ever been convicted of a felony; the section not being intended to prevent the people from impeaching accused's testimony by the rules applied to other witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 1129-1132.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW—EXCLUSION OF PROSECUTING WITNESSES—DISCRETION.

The exclusion of witnesses for the prosecution at defendant's request is not an absolute right in all cases, but rests in the court's sound discretion, including the power to except one or more witnesses from the operation of an order.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1549.]

5. SAME.

It is proper to permit an officer active in a prosecution to remain in the courtroom to advise the district attorney as to the facts, interest, character of witnesses, etc., though the prosecution's witnesses generally are excluded, and charges that such officer or witness has abused his privilege should be first brought to the knowledge of the trial court; suggestions of such abuse made for the first time in the appellate court not being subject to consideration in the absence of any showing in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1551.]

6. SAME—REFUSAL OF INSTRUCTIONS—INVASION OF JURY'S PROVINCE.

An instruction singling out accused as a witness to call special attention to the weight and defects of his testimony, and to declare exclusive rules by which his testimony alone is to be considered, and in effect instructing the jury that, however unworthy of belief he might be, the jury must give some weight to his testimony, is properly refused, as conflicting with the rule that the jury are the exclusive judges of the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1732-1748.]

7. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED.

Instructions covered by those given are properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

8. SAME — APPEAL—REVIEW — INSUFFICIENT PRESENTATION OF OBJECTIONS.

Rulings refusing instructions will not be reviewed where neither the record nor the briefs specify wherein the refusal was error.

9. SAME—APPEALABLE ORDERS.

An order denying a motion in arrest of judgment is not appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2591.]

10. SAME—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

The jury is the judge of the truthfulness of witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1719.]

11. SAME—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

The jury's findings are conclusive on appeal, where sustained by evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3074-3076.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Harrison Oliver was convicted of grand larceny, and he appeals from the judgment and from orders denying a new trial overruling his motion in arrest of judgment. Judgment and order denying a new trial affirmed.

Henry H. Roser, J. C. Crouch, and M. C. Hester, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was informed against for the crime of grand larceny, and by the information also accused of a previous conviction of burglary. He confessed the previous conviction, and pleaded not guilty to the charge of grand larceny. Upon the trial of the offense charged, the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term of seven years. He appeals from the judgment, from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial, and from an order of that court overruling his motion in arrest of judgment.

The first point made on the appeal is that the sentence imposed (seven years) is less than the minimum term of imprisonment provided by the statute (Pen. Code, § 666) in cases of conviction of grand larceny after a previous conviction of burglary (ten years), and therefore void. As said in In re Reed, 143 Cal. 634, 77 Pac. 660, 101 Am. St. Rep. 138, such a judgment is not void. It is within and not in excess of the statute. Ex parte Soto, 88 Cal. 629, 26 Pac. 530. Even where the term imposed is in excess of the maximum fixed by the statute, it is merely erroneous, and, if the judgment be reversed for this reason, the appellate court will remand the cause with directions to proceed to judgment on the verdict. People v. Riley, 48 Cal. 549. The application of such a rule to the case at bar would result in inflicting a penalty upon the defendant for appealing from the erroneous action of the trial court. This is not the policy of the law, which appears to be that, where a defendant complains of an error in his own favor, such error will not be corrected to his detriment. For instance, where a verdict was set aside and a new trial granted by the trial court on the ground that the verdict was too favorable to the defendant, the Supreme Court reversed the order, and directed the trial court to proceed to pronounce judgment on the verdict rendered. People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 303, 47 Pac. 128. The court applied to the case simply the rule that, the error committed not being to the prejudice of the defendant, he cannot complain of a determination of his case more favorable to him than the evidence warranted. People v. Barnhart, 59 Cal. 381; People v. Maroney, 109 Cal. 279, 41 Pac. 1097; Pen. Code, § 1404.

The defendant was a witness upon his own behalf, and the district attorney was permitted, against objection, to ask him on cross-examination if he had ever been convicted of a felony. This is assigned as error and a violation of the provisions of section 1025 of the Penal Code that, "in case the defendant pleads not guilty and answers that he has suffered the previous conviction, the charge of the previous conviction must not be read to the jury, nor alluded to on the trial." The previous conviction charged in the information was a specific "burglary," while the question of the district attorney was addressed to a "felony" generally; so that it can hardly be said that the conviction which defendant admitted by his plea was necessarily the same felony referred to by the district attorney in his question. But, if it be conceded that this distinction cannot be drawn, it was not error to permit the question to be asked. Prior to the re-enactment of section 1025 in 1905, it was held that the direction in section 1093 that "the clerk in reading it (the indictment or information) shall omit therefrom all that relates to such previous conviction" did not make it error to ask this question of defendant upon cross-examination where he had offered himself as a witness in his own behalf. People v. Arnold, 116 Cal. 686, 48 Pac. 803. The reasons for that opinion, addressed to the distinction drawn between section 1093 of the Penal Code and section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure, appear equally applicable here upon a comparison of the latter section (section 2051, Code Civ. Proc.) with section 1025 of the Penal Code. Says the court: "The obvious purpose of this section [Pen. Code, 1093] was to give the defendant the benefit of withholding from the jury a knowledge of such prior conviction in all instances other than where, by the conduct of his own case, the production of such fact is rendered essential to a proper presentation of the case of the people. It was not designed thereby to change or affect the ordinary rules of evidence for the elucidation of truth, to which a defendant, like any other witness, subjects himself upon taking the witness stand. Under the rule established in this state, the defendant's character for truth, honesty, and integrity is in issue when he offers himself as a witness, and he thereupon becomes, as held in People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 86, 45 Pac. 175, 'subject to the same rules for testing his credibility before the jury, by impeachment or otherwise, as any other witness.'" It is clear that it was not the intention of the Legislature by the re-enactment of section 1025, any more than it was by the enactment of section 1323, to give to a defendant the opportunity of making any statements upon his direct examination that he might choose, and preclude the prosecution from testing the truth or falsity of such statements, or to prevent the people from impeaching the defendant's testimony by the same rules applied to the testimony of other witnesses. People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 476, 35 Pac. 80; People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 689, 66 Pac. 976; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 388, 77 Pac. 169.

The refusal of the trial court to exclude the witness Wright from the courtroom with the other witnesses, at the request of the defendant, was the exercise of a proper discretion upon the part of the court; no prejudice from its action being shown. The exclusion of the witnesses for prosecution at the request of defendant is not an absolute right in all cases, but rests in the sound discretion of the court (People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 515, 11 Pac. 673; People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387; People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 622), and this includes the power to specially except one or more witnesses from the operation of an order made for this purpose. It is the general practice, as observed by the court in ruling, to permit some officer, active in the prosecution of the case, to remain for the purpose of advising the district attorney as to the facts, the interest and character of witnesses, etc. Such a practice is proper, and charges that such officer or witness who has abused his privilege should be first brought to the knowledge of the trial court, that they may be corrected, if there be any ground for the charge. Suggestions of such abuse made for the first time in the appellate court cannot be considered in the absence of any showing in the record.

In presenting as error the court's refusal to give certain instructions requested by the defendant quite a number are mentioned, but no reasons are assigned or argument presented why the action of the court was error. One alone (No. 20) is specifically referred to. This instruction is open to the objection, so often before the court, that it singles out the defendant as a witness to call especial attention to the weight and defects of his testimony, and to declare exclusive rules by which his testimony alone is to be considered. It in effect, instructs the jury that, however unworthy of belief they may find the defendant, they must give some weight to his testimony. This is directly in conflict with the rule of evidence that the jury are the sole and exclusive judges of the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses, which was given in another instruction by the court. The refusal of this instruction was not error. People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 329, 57 Pac. 1067; People v. Ross, 134 Cal. 256, 66 Pac. 229; People v. Monreal (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 385. Many of the other instructions refused were clearly duplicates of those given by the court, and some were open to the same objection as No. 20, and the court properly refused to give these. If there is any reason why the action of the trial court in refusing to give the other instructions asked by defendant was error, it has neither been specified in the record nor presented in the briefs filed. Nothing being urged and no suggestion made why the trial court's action was erroneous, it is not necessary for us to consider these instructions.

The attempted appeal from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment is ineffective, as no such appeal is authorized by the Code or our system of practice. People v. Lonnen, 139 Cal. 635, 73 Pac. 586. No presentation of any matters which might be considered in connection with this ruling has been made upon the appeal from the judgment. The order denying the motion for a new trial is also assigned generally as error, without specification, other than that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict and judgment. Under the latter head, it is contended that the evidence does not establish an exclusive possession of the stolen property by defendant, and that proof of possession is not alone sufficient to sustain a conviction of larceny. The latter proposition may be conceded as a question of law, but it has no application to the facts of the case at bar. The evidence for the people, if true, sustains the verdict in every respect. Its truthfulness was a question for the jury, and this court will not disturb their finding in this regard.

No prejudicial error appearing, the judgment and order denying motion for new trial are affirmed.

Ex parte FLOYD. (Cr. 128.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Feb. 21, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF CRIME—ATTEMPTS—DEFINITIONS—"ATTEMPT TO COMMIT CRIME."

An attempt to commit a crime is an endeavor carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of execution of the ultimate design. It is an act immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he had the power of carrying his intention into execution, and would have done so but for some intervening cause.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 51.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 622-627.]

2. SAME—SOLICITATION AND PREPARATION.

The law recognizes an intention to commit a crime and an attempt to commit such crime. An intention not followed by an overt act cannot be punished, and there is also a distinction between an attempt to commit a crime and merely soliciting one to commit it, as there is between an attempt and mere preparation. Merely soliciting one to commit a crime is not a punishable crime.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 21-28, 51.]

3. FORGERY — ATTEMPTS — SOLICITATION — CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY.

An agent for a tobacco company, without authority, authorized a publishing company to print a large number of certificates entitling the holder to one or more cigars, reading on its face, "Good for one, twelve and one-half cent cigar at any of our stores on the Pacific Coast. M. A. Gunst & Co." Nothing further was done by either party, and the publishing company did not intend to print any of the certificates without express authority from the tobacco company (M. A. Gunst & Co.). Held, that the facts did not show an attempt to commit the crime of forgery, but a mere solicitation.

Application by J. D. Floyd for habeas corpus to secure his release from custody under an order of a magistrate's court binding him over to answer to the charge of an attempt to commit forgery. Prisoner discharged.

Jas. P. Sweeney, for petitioner.

COOPER, P. J. On the 28th day of September, 1907, a complaint was filed in the police court of the city and county of San Francisco, charging the defendant with "Attempt to make, alter, forge and counterfeit a certain instrument and due bill for the payment of property, in the words and figures following, to wit: That the face of said instrument and due bill was figures, to wit: 'Good for one 12½c cigar at any of our stores on the Pacific Coast. M. A. Gunst & Co.'" An examination was held by a magistrate of said police court, and defendant was held to answer to the superior court for the crime of "attempt to commit forgery." He now applies to this court to be discharged upon the ground that the evidence taken before said magistrate does not show that any public offense has been committed.

The evidence is before us with the petition, and shows the facts to be as follows: The prisoner had for some time prior to May 31, 1907, been in the employ of M. A. Gunst & Co., dealers in cigars and tobacco in the city and county of San Francisco. About the 25th of September, 1907, he went to the place of business of one Lyons, a publisher, and after some conversation as to printing gave Lyons an order or request in writing as follows: "September 25, 1907. I hereby authorize the Pacific Goldsmith Publishing Co. to print 50,000 tickets like sample, to wit, 30,000 for five cigars ea, 12½ cent cigars; and 20,000 for one cigar each for 12½ cent cigars. Purchasing Agent for M. A. Gunst & Co. Price to be $5 per thousand. [Signed] J. D. Floyd." Lyons took the order, and told the prisoner that he would see about it, and, if everything was correct, he would print the tickets as per the order. M. A. Gunst & Co. had not authorized the prisoner to have any such tickets printed. The above is all that was done either by the prisoner or by Lyons. Lyons did not commence to print the tickets, nor did he intend to do so without authority from M. A. Gunst & Co. Do the above facts show an attempt to commit the crime of forgery?

An attempt to commit a crime is an endeavor carried beyond mere preparation, but falling short of execution of the ultimate design. It is an act immediately and directly tending to the execution of the principal crime, and committed by the prisoner under such circumstances that he had the power of carrying his intention into execution, and would have done so but for some intervening cause. The law recognizes a distinction between an intention to commit a crime and an attempt to commit such crime. An intention followed by no overt act cannot be punished. There is also a distinction between an attempt to commit a crime, and merely soliciting one to commit it, as there is between an attempt and mere preparation. Mere soliciting one to commit an act which would constitute a crime, if committed, is not made criminal by our Penal Code. It was said by Blackburn, J., in the early case of Regina v. Cheeseman, Leigh & C. 140: "There is no doubt a difference between the preparation antecedent to the offense and the actual attempt; but, if the actual transaction is commenced which would have ended the crime if not interrupted, there is clearly an attempt to commit the crime." In the case of People v. Murray, 14 Cal. 159, where the evidence disclosed declarations of the defendant of his intention to contract an incestuous marriage with his niece, his elopement with the niece for that avowed purpose, and his request to one of the witnesses to go for a magistrate to perform the ceremony, it was held that the acts fell short of an attempt to commit a crime. It was said by Field, J.: "It shows very clearly the intention of the defendant, but something more than mere intention is necessary to constitute the offense charged. Between preparations for the attempt and the attempt itself there is a wide difference. The preparation consists in devising or arranging the means or measures necessary for the commission of the offense. The attempt is the direct movement toward the commission after the preparations are made." In People v. Stites, 75 Cal. 570, 17 Pac. 693, the court said: "Mere intention to commit a specific crime does not itself amount to an attempt as that word is employed in the criminal law. There must in addition to the intent—the mens rea—be some act done toward the ultimate accomplishment of the proposed crime. But even such acts do not always of themselves amount to an attempt or to an offense of which human laws will take cognizance; for, if they be but acts of preparation, however elaborate, our municipal law would not assume to deal with them." In People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 Pac. 44, it was said by Henshaw, J., in discussing an erroneous instruction in a case where the defendant was charged with forgery: "The portion of the instruction above quoted is directed to the third class of acts; that is to say, to the attempt to pass. By it the jury was told that if one, having a forged instrument in his possession, knowing it to be forged, delivers it to another with intent to have it uttered, published and passed as genuine, he is guilty of forgery. But such was not the common law, and such is not the law under our Code. In general, before an attempt to commit a crime can be made out, some overt act towards its commission other than a mere act of preparation for its commission must be established. * * * Now, the essence of the third class of forgeries is the attempt to injure an innocent person by foisting upon him a known false instrument. As is aptly said in People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 509, where the subject is learnedly and exhaustively considered: "Uttering implies two parties—the party acting, and the one acted upon. If it be by way of sale, there must be a vendee. If by pledge, there must be a pledgee. If by offer, there must be some person to hear the offer. If it simply declare its goodness, there must be some one addressed as reader or hearer." Therefore, if one deliver to his agent a false instrument with the design that the agent shall utter or pass it, the crime of uttering or attempting to pass is not complete until after some overt act done by the agent to this end, for until this shall come to pass, in contemplation of law, the paper is still within the control of the principal, and all the steps are but steps of preparation. Equally true is it that if A. and B. should conspire to commit a crime, and A. should deliver a forged instrument to B., by whom it was to be uttered, and B. should destroy the paper without attempting to pass it, the crime of uttering or attempting to pass would not have been committed, for there would have been no effort to foist it upon an innocent person, and, as has been said, if the uttering is by offer, the offer must be made to some one." Applying the reasoning in that case to the present, Lyons was but the agent, or rather, the person selected by the prisoner to do the thing the prisoner had in mind. The instrument or ticket that was to be forged or counterfeited or duplicated was still, in contemplation of law, in the possession and under the control of the prisoner. He could have gone to Lyons and countermanded the order, and taken back the ticket or instrument at any time. Lyons never set a type, procured paper or materials, or in any way or manner began the work of printing.

We therefore conclude that the acts of the prisoner amounted to nothing more than solicitation, and that an actual attempt to commit the crime, within the meaning of the law and as defined by the authorities, was not made. However wrongful may have been the intention of the prisoner, or however criminal may have been his motives, we cannot hold under the authorities that the mere preparation or solicitation, as disclosed by the evidence in this case was an attempt to commit the crime charged against the prisoner.

It is therefore ordered that he be discharged.

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 21, 1908.)

1. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL—ANOTHER ACTION PENDING.

Defendant leased property from executors under an agreement to surrender the premises when they were sold, upon 30 days' notice and payment to him of his actual expenses in putting in crops, etc., and the land was thereafter sold by the executors and due notice given to defendant to quit the land, which he refused to do, and also refused to furnish a statement of his expenses in putting in crops. Defendant appealed from the decree confirming the executors' sale of the premises, and the decree was affirmed on appeal, and thereafter this action for unlawful detainer was brought against defendant by the purchasers. Held, that defendant's contention that the perfecting of the appeal from the decree confirming the sale suspended further proceedings upon the order appealed from, and stayed the present action, was untenable, as at the time it set up this plea of abatement the appeal was not pending; it being essential that the matter in abatement exist at the time of the filing of the plea.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT—RECOVERY OF POSSESSION BY LESSOR—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—DAMAGES.

Where defendant leased property under an agreement to surrender the land upon its sale by the lessors, and the land was sold and due notice given, but defendant wrongfully held over under an erroneous claim that it had the right to retain possession on the ground that a perfected appeal suspended the sale, the lease having been terminated by the notice, in an action by the purchasers for unlawful detainer, they were entitled, under Civ. Code, § 3334, providing that the detriment caused by the wrongful occupation of land, except in certain cases, is the value of the use of the property for the time occupied, to recover the value of the use of the property, and not merely treble the amount of the rent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by J. J. Buhman, Jr., and others against Nickels & Brown Bros., a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See 82 Pac. 85.

Bell, York & Bell, for appellants. Webber & Rutherford, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action is unlawful detainer for the recovery of certain premises in the county of Napa and damages for the detention thereof. Before trial defendant surrendered to plaintiffs the possession of said premises, thereby leaving for determination as the sole issue to be tried, the question of damages for the use and occupation of said land from March 7, 1903, to and including August 31, 1903, the latter being the date of said surrender.

From the complaint the following facts appear: On December 15, 1900, one Charles Robinson died testate in the county of Napa; his will was admitted to probate, and D. S. Kyser and E. W. Hottel were appointed executors thereof. On September 2, 1902, by an instrument in writing, said executors leased to defendant certain premises in said county known as the "Robinson ranch" for the term of one year, with the following proviso: "It is further mutually understood and agreed by the parties hereto that in case of a sale of the demised premises the second party will quit and surrender the said premises upon thirty days' notice, and the said first party will pay to the second party the actual cost or expense said second party may have been put to in putting any crop of hay or grain upon said premises." On the 15th day of October, 1902, pursuant to the terms of the will, the executors sold the property to plaintiffs, and upon the return of said sale and after notice given the sale was confirmed by order of the superior court December 30, 1902. In pursuance of said order the executors made and delivered a deed to plaintiffs on January 19, 1903. On February 4th following plaintiffs served upon defendant a written notice as provided in the lease, demanding the possession of said premises. On the 12th of February a demand was made upon defendant to furnish plaintiffs with a statement of the actual cost that defendant had incurred in putting in any crop on said premises. Defendant refused to deliver possession, and declined to furnish any statement of the said expense incurred by it. On March 6th plaintiff offered in writing to pay defendant the sum of $4 per acre for every acre that defendant had put to grain, said amount being sufficient to cover the entire cost. "That said defendant unlawfully holds over and continues in possession of said premises after demand made, and after the expiration of the time specified and provided in said written lease." The monthly value of the rents and profits is $500 per month. The only defense attempted to be set up in the answer filed February 21, 1906, which we are called upon to consider is that an appeal was taken by defendant to the Supreme Court from the order of the superior court confirming the sale of the property to plaintiffs, and "that said appeal from said order or decree confirming said alleged sale to plaintiffs was at the time of the filing of the complaint herein pending and undetermined in the Supreme Court, and said appeal was not determined until the 19th day of February, 1904 (and said alleged order or decree was during all of said time and until the said 19th day of February, 1904, duly stayed)." There was a further and supplemental answer to the effect that defendant surrendered possession on August 31, 1903, but that is not involved in this appeal. A demurrer to the answer was sustained, and, defendant declining to amend, judgment was entered for plaintiffs for $1,255, from which the appeal was taken.

Appellant urges two grounds for reversal, but they are so manifestly untenable as to require scarcely more than a mere statement of them. The first is stated as follows: "The perfecting of the appeal from the decree confirming the sale of the premises to respondents suspended all further proceedings upon the order or decree appealed from," and quite a number of decisions is cited to the effect that "where a suit is pending in the Supreme Court on appeal the judgment below is suspended for all purposes"; but the obvious reply is that at the time this answer was filed setting up this plea in abatement the appeal was not pending in the Supreme Court at all, but it had been decided against appellant, affirming the judgment below, and had been the final judgment in the case for two years. The answer discloses the time when the said judgment was rendered by the Supreme Court, but it is silent as to its character. The court, however, would take judicial notice of the judgment affirming the order of sale. Hollenbach v. Schnabel, 101 Cal. 312, 35 Pac. 872, 40 Am. St. Rep. 57; Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Painter, 113 Cal. 247, 45 Pac. 320. Hence, it having been finally adjudged at the time the answer was filed that plaintiffs were the owners of the property on and after January 19, 1903, and none of the allegations of the complaint having been denied, there was nothing for the court to do but to find for the plaintiffs for the value of the unlawful use of the property by defendant from March 7 to August 31, 1903. Under appellant's contention respondents could never maintain an action for the unlawful detention of the property for the reason that an appeal was taken from the judgment directing the conveyance of the property to plaintiffs. The vice of the position is found in the fact that appellant ignores the rule that "matter in abatement of the plaintiff's action must exist at the time of filing the plea. A plea of a pending suit is ineffectual unless the former suit is pending at the time the plea is filed." California Sav. & L. Soc. v. Harris, 111 Cal. 137, 43 Pac. 526. As we have seen, at the time the answer setting up the plea was filed, the other suit was not pending, but had been long since finally determined.

The other contention is equally without merit. It is asserted that respondents were entitled to recover only $750, being treble the amount of the rent provided in the lease. This conclusion is based upon the erroneous view that respondents sought to recover under the lease. The lease had been terminated by the notice given, and defendant was unlawfully holding over under a claim that it had the right to retain possession by virtue of a perfected appeal. Hence the action was for the value of the use of the property, as provided in section 3334 of the Civil Code. This value was alleged to be $1,255, and this was not denied by the answer.

There is no merit in the appeal, and the judgment is affirmed.

1. REPLEVIN—POSSESSION—NECESSITY.

An action brought under the claim and delivery statute asking for possession of the property and for recovery of its value, if possession could not be given, cannot be sustained against a defendant not in possession of the property at the time the action is commenced.

2. SALES—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—TITLE.

A vendee of personal property claimed title through a bill of sale, but never had possession of the property which, on the death of the vendor, passed into his estate, and was sold for a valuable consideration under a power in the will, and the sale confirmed. Held, that the vendee could not recover the property as against the purchaser, who had no notice of the prior sale, since by Civ. Code, § 3440, a transfer of personal property not accompanied by a change of possession is fraudulent and void as against purchasers in good faith subsequent to the transfer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Replevin by Constance Isabella Runge against Louisa Wilson, executrix, and another. From a judgment for defendants, and from the denial of a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This action is for the recovery of possession, or value, if delivery cannot be had, of certain personal property. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and defendants had judgment, from which, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It appears that on October 31, 1905, one E. J. Wilson was the owner and in possession of certain personal property described in the complaint, and on that day executed a bill of sale thereof to plaintiff, but Wilson remained in possession, and plaintiff never had possession; on August 22, 1906, Wilson died testate while in possession of said property; by his will his wife, one of the defendants, was named as executrix, and she was duly appointed as such executrix on September 17, 1906; by the terms of the will she was given authority to sell the property of the estate without any order of the court; on September 22, 1906, the executrix sold the property in dispute to defendant Heeter for a valuable consideration, who had at the time no knowledge of any claim of plaintiff upon the property nor does it appear that his codefendant, the executrix of Wilson's will, knew of the sale to plaintiff; the sale to defendant Heeter was confirmed by the court before demand made upon either of the defendants, and before the commencement of the action; defendant Heeter took immediate possession of the property upon purchase, and was in possession when the action was commenced; plaintiff made demand for possession upon both defendants prior to the commencement of the action, but was refused.

Appellant claims, and it is not disputed, that as between her and Wilson the sale was good and passed the title in the property to her, and the property could have been recovered from the grantor—citing Francisco v. Aguirre, 94 Cal. 180, 29 Pac. 495. She further contends that, no creditor complaining, Wilson's executrix was in no better position than her testate; that she had no greater title than her testate, and, having no title, could convey none, and none passed by confirmation of the sale to respondent Heeter—citing Robinson v. Haas, 40 Cal. 474.

Respondents' contention is: (1) That plaintiff cannot recover against respondent executrix because she was not in possession when the action was commenced—citing Riciotto v. Clement, 94 Cal. 107, 29 Pac. 414; Richards v. Morey, 133 Cal. 437, 65 Pac. 886. (2) Appellant cannot recover against the executrix, because the sale was not accompanied by an actual and continued change of possession, and the sale was therefore, as to the executrix, fraudulent and void—citing section 3440, Civ. Code; Magraw v. McGlynn, 26 Cal. 429; Ex parte Smith, 53 Cal. 208; Francisco v. Aguirre, 94 Cal. 185, 29 Pac. 495; dissenting opinion of the chief justice in Murphy v. Clayton, 114 Cal. 526, 46 Pac. 460. (3) Appellant cannot recover against defendant Heeter, because he was an innocent purchaser in good faith for value without notice, and also because the sale by Wilson was fraudulent and void as to Heeter—citing Civ. Code, § 3440; Palmer v. Howard, 72 Cal. 293, 13 Pac. 858, 1 Am. St. Rep. 60; Stockton Sav., etc., Soc. v. Purvis, 112 Cal. 236, 44 Pac. 561, 53 Am. St. Rep. 210; Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 297, 53 Pac. 911, 59 Pac. 827, 46 L. R. A. 371.

1. This is the ordinary action in claim and delivery. The relief sought is possession of the property, or the alternative relief given by the statute, if possession cannot be had. Upon the complaint recovery for conversion against either of the defendants could not be justified. The distinction between replevin (our claim and delivery) and trover is clearly pointed out in Riciotto v. Clement, supra, and it was there held that, if the property was not in the possession of the defendant at the commencement of the action, plaintiff could not recover. Richards v. Morey, supra. The judgment in favor of defendant executrix must therefore be sustained.

2. Appellant's title rests upon a bill of sale of personal property which appellant did not at the date of sale or ever afterwards take or have possession of, but which at all times to his death remained in the possession of the vendor. She testified that she never even saw the property. This property came into the possession of the executrix of the last will of the vendor as property belonging to his estate, and was by her sold in due course to defendant Heeter under a power given by the will, and the sale was confirmed by the court. The vendee, Heeter, was a purchaser in good faith for value subsequent to the sale to appellant, and without knowledge of plaintiff's claim, and is brought directly within the provisions of section 3440 of the Civil Code. Ruggles v. Cannedy, supra.

It is not necessary to decide the question suggested in respondents' second point, as the other two points are well taken.

Judgment and order affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 22, 1908.)

1. EJECTMENT—RIGHT OF ACTION—GROUNDS.

The allegations essential to an action of ejectment in form are the estate of plaintiff, possession by defendant at the commencement of the action, and his wrongful withholding of the same, and where plaintiff was for many years prior to the commencement of the action, and at its commencement, the owner of premises and entitled to exclusive possession, and defendants had been, and were at that time, in possession of the premises and wrongfully withheld possession, plaintiff was entitled to recover, and a general demurrer was properly overruled.

2. SAME — PLEADING — "CROSS-COMPLAINT" — SUFFICIENCY—STATUTE.

In an action of ejectment, where defendants filed a purported cross-complaint, which did not relate to the land for the recovery of which the action was brought, it was not a "cross-complaint" within Code Civ. Proc. § 442, permitting defendant seeking affirmative relief against any party, relating to or depending upon the transaction upon which the action is brought, or affecting property to which the action relates, to file, with his answer, a cross-complaint, and hence a demurrer was properly sustained thereto.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases. vol. 2, p. 1761.]

3. APPEAL — APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE.

In an action of ejectment, there being no bill of exceptions, and defendant having appealed on the judgment roll alone, statements in appellant's brief that the judgment below was procured through false testimony cannot be considcred on appeal, as it will be presumed that the evidence is sufficient to support a finding upon which the judgment rests.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3673-3678.]

4. SAME—FINDINGS BY COURT—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

Whether testimony is false must ordinarily be left exclusively to the determination of the trial court, and, when so determined, is usually conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by Abel McFarland against Louise Matthai and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louise Matthai and Rose Matthai (Warner Temple, of counsel), for appellants. Theo. A. Bell and Bell, York & Bell, for respondent.

HART, J. Action in ejectment. The appeal is from the judgment, and is brought up on the judgment roll alone. The complaint is in the usual form in actions for the recovery of possession of real property. It alleges that the plaintiff for many years prior to the commencement of the action had been, and "he now is, the owner and entitled to the exclusive possession" of the premises in dispute, and that the "defendants have been and now are in possession of said premises," and "have wrongfully and unlawfully withheld, and do now wrongfully and unlawfully withhold, the possession of said premises and the whole thereof from plaintiff."

A general demurrer to the complaint was overruled by the court, and properly so. The essential allegations necessary to an action in ejectment in form are the estate of plaintiff, possession by defendants at the commencement of the action, and their wrongful withholding the same. Haggin v. Kelly, 136 Cal. 483, 69 Pac. 140; Hihn Co. v. Fleckner, 106 Cal. 97, 39 Pac. 214; Hihn v. Mangenberg, 89 Cal. 268, 26 Pac. 968; Rego v. Van Pelt, 65 Cal. 254, 3 Pac. 867; Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 246.

No error was made by the court in its order sustaining the demurrer to the alleged cross-complaint. The land concerning which complaint is made by defendants in their so-called "cross-complaint" is not the land referred to in plaintiff's complaint. The affirmative matters set out by defendants in no sense constituted a cross-complaint. See Mills v. Fletcher, 100 Cal. 142, 34 Pac. 637; Nelson v. O'Brien, 139 Cal. 628, 73 Pac. 469; Phillips v. Hagart, 113 Cal. 554, 45 Pac. 843, 54 Am. St. Rep. 369; Mining Co. v. Mining Co., 83 Cal. 589, 23 Pac. 1102. The affirmative relief sought by the purported cross-complaint does not relate to or depend upon "the contract or transaction upon which the action is brought," or does not affect "the property to which the action relates." Code Civ. Proc. § 442.

The statement in the brief of appellants to the effect that the judgment was procured through false testimony cannot be considered here. There is no bill of exceptions, the appeal being from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. The presumption is that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings upon which the judgment rests. Besides, the question as to whether testimony is false or not is one which must ordinarily be left exclusively to the determination of the trial court, and, when so determined, is usually conclusive on appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

The widow, appointed administratrix with will annexed, after the removal of the executor, filed her account in which she sought credit for a family allowance accruing between the date of the return of the inventory and an order granting an allowance entered October 14, 1895. On January 12, 1893, the court made an order for a family allowance. The inventory was filed June 17, 1893. On October 14, 1895, the court reduced the family allowance and on May 4, 1898, another order reducing the allowance was entered. Held, that a decision of the court denying the credit on the ground that the order of January 12, 1893, ceased to be operative on the return of the inventory, and that the allowance provided for by the orders entered had been paid, was conclusive, and the widow could not claim under an alleged order of May 1, 1894, granting an allowance, which order was not entered in the minutes and of the existence of which she had no knowledge at the time of the settlement of her account.

A judgment determining the rights of parties to a controversy cannot be overcome by showing new or additional evidence which the party was unable to produce on the trial.

4. SAME.

The rule that a judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction is conclusive is based on considerations of public policy, and the enforcement thereof is essential to the maintenance of social order.

The general rule is that where it is sought to bind a person by a former judgment it is necessary that he should have been not only a party to both actions, but must have appeared in both in the same capacity.

6. SAME.

A judgment denying the right of a widow to any credit for family allowances rendered in proceedings for the settlement of her account as administratrix is conclusive on her right to a family allowance in a subsequent proceeding therefor, instituted by her individually, she being in both proceedings the real party in interest, asserting individual, and not representative, rights.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased. From an order of the probate court giving an allowance to Teresa Bell, widow of decedent, Louisa J. Thompson and others, creditors of decedent, appeal. Reversed.

James M. Allen, Drown, Leicester & Drown, Garret W. McEnerney, W. B. Bosley, John S. Drum, and Maurice V. Samuels, for appellants. T. Z. Blakeman, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This in an appeal by some of the creditors of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, from an order of the probate court entered in said estate on February 24, 1905, nunc pro tunc as of May 1, 1894, directing that a family allowance of $2,000 a month continue to be paid from June 17, 1893, to Teresa Bell, as widow of said deceased, till the further order of the court, and from a judgment and order that a balance due her under said nunc pro tunc order of $32,665.80 be paid her from the estate of said deceased. A clearer understanding of the point involved in this appeal may be had by a preliminary statement of certain conceded facts.

Teresa Bell is the widow of Thomas Bell, who died October 16, 1892, and whose will was admitted to probate. On January 12, 1893, on petition of said widow an order of court was made for a family allowance of $2,000 a month payable to her commencing from the date of the death of decedent till the further order of the court. The inventory in the estate was filed June 17, 1893. On October 14, 1895, the court made an order reducing the family allowance from $2,000 to $1,500 a month, and on May 4, 1898, made still another order reducing said family allowance to $100 a month. On March 24, 1900, the powers of the executor of deceased—George Staacke—were suspended, subsequently revoked, and said Teresa Bell appointed special administratrix. After the order revoking his letters was on the appeal of said executor affirmed by this court (Estate of Bell, 135 Cal. 194, 67 Pac. 123), said Teresa Bell was appointed administratrix with the will annexed of said estate. She subsequently, on February 10, 1902, filed her account as special administratrix in which she credited herself with payments of family allowance which she claimed were due and unpaid between June 17, 1893, and October 14, 1895. These items of credit were contested by the creditors of the estate, on the ground that no order for a family allowance prior to the order of October 14, 1895, except the order of January 12, 1893, was made; that the latter order became null and void on the return of the inventory of the estate on June 17, 1893, and that all the installments of family allowance accruing prior to June 17, 1893, had been paid her by the executor of the estate. The probate court overruled these objections of the creditors, and settled said final account of said Teresa Bell as special administratrix with said credits for family allowance after the return of said inventory and up to October 14, 1895, sustained and allowed. The creditors appealed from said order, and this court reversed it, holding (and this is all that it is necessary to be stated now) that the order of January 12, 1893, directing that a family allowance be paid, ceased to operate on the return of the inventory on June 17, 1893; that as the only order made subsequent to said June 17, 1893, was the order of October 14, 1895, the court erred in crediting said Teresa Bell with all items for family allowance under the order of January 12, 1893, subsequent to the return of said inventory and prior to the order of October 14, 1895. Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679. This decision was made in February, 1904.

Immediately following its rendition said Teresa Bell filed a petition in the probate court in the matter of said estate, in which she alleged (referring to the allegations in a general way) the making of the first two orders for family allowance above referred to; that no order for such allowance was made subsequent to the filing of the inventory on January 17, 1893, until October 14, 1895; that subsequent to the filing of said inventory it was considered and believed by the petitioner, the executors, the judge of the court, the creditors of the estate, and all the parties interested, that the order of January 12, 1893, continued in full force till the making of the subsequent order of October 14, 1905; that until January 1, 1894, the executors regularly paid said $2,000 a month family allowance; that after the said month, on account of delay on the part of the executors in collecting the income of the estate, petitioner agreed with said executors to allow the ready money in the estate to be used by them in paying assessments on certain stocks owned by the estate for their preservation and for the benefit of the estate, and to await payment of her allowance until a later date, when it was agreed by the executors that all her accrued allowance should be paid her; that under this arrangement only certain amounts were paid on said family allowance during the years 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, and 1898 (the particular items for each year were set forth) aggregating $29,213.59; that she was unable to support the family on the sums paid, and was compelled to borrow on the security of her separate estate certain amounts yearly (specified in the petition) aggregating $25,000. It is then alleged that during all the time from June 17, 1893, to October 15, 1895, the estate was amply able to pay a family allowance of $2,000 a month. The concluding allegations are that all arrears of family allowance had never been paid, but that a large portion had been paid by the executors subsequent to October 16, 1895, upon orders and judgments of the court in the matter of said estate recognizing said balance and arrears on October 14, 1895, and directing said payments to be made on account of said arrears, which said orders and judgments were not in the record upon which the Supreme Court decided that the order of January 12, 1893, became inoperative after June 17, 1893. The prayer of the petition was in the alternative, that an account be taken of the family allowance paid petitioner since October 15, 1895, and chargeable by the orders and judgment of the court made subsequent to October 15, 1895, to the balance of the family allowance due petitioner from the time prior thereto, and for an order directing the payment of any balance of said sums in arrears to petitioner, or for an order allowing and fixing the family allowance of petitioner for the period of time from June 17, 1893, to October 15, 1895, at the sum of $2,000 a month as in accord with the purpose and intent of the court and all parties interested in said estate at that time, and after deducting the amounts paid by the executors from June 17, 1893, to October 16, 1895, for family allowance, the balance be paid to petitioner.

The appellants jointly demurred to the petition and moved to strike out certain portions of it which, being overruled and denied, they answered, denying the allegations of the petition save as to the orders of the court for family allowance and the allegation therein as to the matter decided by this court, and averred that all amounts due said petitioner for family allowance had been paid and exceeded the sum of $83,541. As a further defense they set up the proceedings in the matter of said estate settling the account of George Staacke, the executor of the will of deceased as to the amount paid to petitioner by said executor for family allowance prior to August 6, 1898, which was contested between the creditors of the estate and petitioner; the order of settlement of said account by the probate court about January 5, 1900, and an appeal to this court by certain of said creditors and the decision of this court on said appeal, and pleaded said decision (Estate of Bell, 131 Cal. 1, 63 Pac. 81, 668) as barring and estopping petitioner in this pending proceeding from claiming that the amount paid her up to said August 6, 1898, for family allowance was less than $80,000. They likewise set up the proceedings for the settlement of the final account of petitioner as special administratrix of said estate filed February 10, 1902, to which we have heretofore referred, in which she sought credit for items of family allowance between the making of the order of January 12, 1893, and that of October 14, 1895, the objections and contests thereto by said creditors, the matter of the appeal to this court from the order settling said account by allowing such credits the decision and judgment of this court reversing said order (Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679), and pleaded such judgment of this court as final and conclusive and as barring and estopping petitioner from asserting any alleged right to a further family allowance as set forth and asserted in her pending petition. The statute of limitations was further interposed against the claim or right of petitioner to the relief demanded.

Upon the issues thus made the matter proceeded to a hearing, and while the petitioner was presenting her case to the court it developed from the evidence (at least that was the claim of petitioner and the court took that view of it) that the executors of the estate had on February 2, 1894, petitioned the court for a reduction of the family allowance, which petition was opposed by the widow; that the matter of the petition for said reduction coming on to be heard, the executors were examined, the condition of the estate inquired into, and thereafter the matter continued from time to time on the calendar of the court; that on May 1, 1894, the matter coming on again for further hearing, and the attorneys for the executors and for said widow having reached some agreement in the matter, they asked the court to dismiss the petition for a reduction. This the court declined to do, but ordered the application for a reduction of the family allowance by said executors off the calendar, and further ordered that the allowance of $2,000 a month remain and continue until the further order of the court; that the clerk of the court had entered in the minutes the first part of the order directing the petition for reduction off the calendar, but had omitted to enter the balance of the order. Upon this showing from the evidence the petitioner immediately applied for and obtained, over the objection of appellants, leave of court to amend her petition to conform to the facts thus proven, and an amended petition was filed, it being stipulated that the answer to the former petition should stand as the answer to the amended petition, and that all new matters alleged in the petition should be deemed denied by the creditors who had answered. The amendment which was made to the petition by leave of the court and to meet the alleged proof of the making of the order of May 1, 1894, was substantially as follows: The allegation in the original petition that no order was made by the court after the order of January 12, 1893, and until the order of October 14, 1895, was stricken out, and it was alleged that after the filing of the inventory it was believed by petitioner, the executors, the court, and the creditors that an order of court existed granting petitioner an allowance of $2,000 from and after the date of the filing of the inventory, as well as prior thereto, and until the order of October 14, 1895. The prayer of the petition was also changed to conform to the amendment made, to the extent of asking that an order nunc pro tunc as of May 1, 1894, be entered in conformity to the order of the court made on that day but not entered, continuing the family allowance from June 17, 1893, to October 14, 1895, at $2,000 per month. The amended petition being filed, the trial proceeded, and upon a submission of the evidence upon both sides the court made its findings of fact in favor of the petitioner, in accordance with the allegations of the amended petition and against the appellants as to all defenses interposed by their answer. The court specifically found that on the 1st day of May, 1894, the court had ordered and directed that the family allowance of $2,000 a month should remain and continue and be paid to the said widow until the further order of the court, but that through the mistake or inadvertence of the clerk of the court, it had not been entered in the minutes of the court, and that there remained unpaid to the petitioner the sum of $32,665.80 as a balance due her under said order.

The court further specifically found against the appellants on the defenses interposed by their answer, namely, that the petitioner was barred and estopped by the judgments of the Supreme Court, which were pleaded, from asserting a claim for family allowance based on said order of May 1, 1894, or from asserting that any family allowance accrued in her favor between the return of the inventory on June 17, 1893, and the order of October 14, 1895. As conclusions of law from the findings the court held the petitioner entitled to have an order nunc pro tunc as of May 1, 1894, entered, directing that a family allowance of $2,000 a month remain and continue to be paid to said petitioner as widow of said deceased from the assets of said estate until further order of the court, and made a further order directing payment from said assets to her of the balance of family allowance due her under said order of court rendered on the 1st of May, 1894, and entered nunc pro tunc as of that date, amounting to the sum of $32,665.80. An order to that effect was accordingly made.

Various points are urged by appellants for a reversal. The main attack, however, is directed against the findings, the claim of appellants being, in effect, that none of the essential findings of the court are supported by the evidence, and it is particularly contended that this is true as to the findings with reference to the effect of the pleaded decisions of this court. As to them it is claimed that they are not only not sustained by the evidence, but that they are directly contrary to it, and that the conclusions of the trial court as to the effect of those decisions upon the present claim of petitioner are erroneous.

In the view we take of the sufficiency of the attack by appellants upon the findings relative to the prior decisions of this court pleaded by them as a bar, it will be unnecessary to discuss the many other findings which are also attacked. In fact, as far as the finding relative to the decision of this court in the Estate of Bell, 131 Cal. 1, 63 Pac. 81, 668, we shall not discuss it at all, because at most that decision bears only upon some of the minor matters involved in the present proceeding which are claimed to have been affected by it. Our consideration will be devoted solely to the findings in as far as they relate to the effect of the decision pleaded and reported in the Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679. We say the effect of the decision, because that is the question presented by the attack upon the findings relative to it. There is no question of conflicting evidence embarrassing the consideration. A transcript of the record on that appeal and the decision of the court based upon it were offered in evidence and constituted the evidence upon which this finding was made. The claim of the appellants under this evidence addressed to their answer pleading the decision in bar of petitioner's right to assert relief under the order of May 1, 1894, was, among other things, that the decision pleaded was a final and conclusive adjudication that there was no such order of May 1, 1894, or any order of the probate court in said estate making any family allowance, save the three orders of January 12, 1893, October 14, 1895, and May 4, 1898. The finding of the court respecting this decision was of a negative character; that it did not debar or estop the petitioner from asserting or enforcing any alleged right to a further family allowance, nor was the cause of action or relief set forth in the petition barred by such decision. So that, as we say, under this finding the question is what was the effect of that decision on the present asserted right of petitioner; what was decided by this court.

It will be observed that while this finding relates to the effect of the decision upon a further family allowance to petitioner, that proposition, while involved in the original, is not involved under the amended petition. Under the amended petition the right to the payment of the allowance was asserted to have accrued under the alleged existing order of May 1, 1894, an order which had been made but not entered, and which the court ordered entered nunc pro tunc, and upon which it based its award for an accrued allowance upon it of $32,665.85. It is the effect of the decision of this court in the Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679, upon the right of petitioner asserted under this order which is to be determined, and we are satisfied that the position of these appellants with respect to it is correct; that that decision was final and conclusive against the existence of any other order than the orders of January 12, 1893, October 14, 1895, and May 4, 1898; that it was res adjudicata that no order for family allowance of May 1, 1894, or other order save these three above mentioned had been made prior to 1902 when the account of petitioner as special administratrix, in which she sought credit for family allowance between June 17, 1893, the date of the return of the inventory, and October 14, 1895, was contested and determined, and that all she was entitled to under any then existing orders had been fully paid her. This appears to us to be so clear from the record which was before this court on appeal from the order settling the account of petitioner as special administratrix, the decision of this court upon it, and the application of the doctrine of res adjudicata, that no extended elaboration of the matter is called for.

The general rule as to res adjudicata is that: "Matters which have been judicially determined cannot be again drawn into controversy between the same parties. The judgment of a court having jurisdiction directly upon the point in controversy is, as a plea, a bar; and, as evidence, competent and conclusive as between the same parties and their privies; not only where the subject-matter is in all respects the same, but where the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter." Garwood v. Garwood, 29 Cal. 514; Green v. Thornton, 130 Cal. 482, 62 Pac. 750. "An adjudication is final and conclusive not only as to the matter actually determined, but as to every other matter which the parties might have litigated and have had decided as incident to, or essentially connected with, the subject-matter of the litigation, and every matter coming within the legitimate purview of the original action, both in respect to matters of claim and of defense." Harris v. Harris, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 88; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266. "Where a court of competent jurisdiction had adjudicated upon a particular matter, that matter is not open to inquiry in a subsequent action for the same cause, between the same parties, notwithstanding the defendant may have discovered new evidence not in his power at a former trial." Kilheffer v. Herr, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 319, 17 Am. Dec. 658.

Now, applying this doctrine to the matter under consideration, it appears from the transcript on appeal in the matter of the application of petitioner as special administratrix that she sought credit in the settlement of her account for items of family allowance aggregating the sum of $20,000, payment of which she had made to herself under a claim that they were due as such family allowance, and had accrued between the date of the return of the inventory and the order of October 14, 1895. Petitioner was appointed special administratrix in March, 1900, and her account was filed in February, 1902. The creditors of the estate (the same appellants here) filed a contest against the allowance of such items on various grounds, among others: (1) That no order making any family allowance out of said estate was given or made at any time subsequent to the filing of the inventory and prior to October 14, 1895; (2) that no order or orders making any family allowance out of said estate had at any time been given or made other than, or in addition to, the said three orders so made respectively on January 12, 1893, October 14, 1895, and May 13, 1898; (3) that the amounts of family allowance payable under said orders immediately referred to had been fully paid; (4) that all family allowance at any time ordered by said court had been paid in full prior to the appointment of petitioner as special administratrix. Upon these issues raised by this contest a trial was had culminating in an order overruling the objections of the contestants to the allowance of said items. An appeal was taken by the contestants from the order settling the account so far as it allowed the special administratrix said contested amounts of family allowance paid to herself and the order allowing them was reversed by this court in the decision referred to—Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679. An examination of that decision, demonstrates that this court decided that the orders of family allowance made by the probate court in said estate were those of January 12, 1893, October 14, 1895, and May 13, 1898; that the first order ceased to be operative on the return of the inventory on June 17, 1893; that all family allowance which had accrued under said three orders had been paid, and directed the court to settle the final account by rejecting the payments in controversy, which were amounts asserted to have accrued under the order of January 12, 1893, and between the return of the inventory and the order of October 14, 1895.

We perceive no ground for any claim that this decision is not conclusive upon the right asserted by petitioner in the present proceeding. Her claim under it now, and the right she presently asserts, is for an order directing the payment of these same items of family allowance—which this court decided on the appeal referred to she was not entitled to—by virtue of an order claimed to have been made on May 1, 1894, but never entered in the minutes, and of the making of which she claims she was not advised until during the hearing on the present proceeding. But the fact that such an order was made and was either forgotten or its making undisclosed to her by the attorney who represented her when it was made and who subsequently ceased to do so, cannot affect the conclusiveness of the judgment on appeal, which is in fact a determination that no order for the payment of family allowance was made or existed after the return of the inventory and up to the making of the order of October 14, 1895.

In her account as special administratrix she sought credit for the payment to herself of this allowance as having accrued in her favor between those dates. She could only have been entitled to such credits by virtue of the existence of some order of court making a family allowance which authorized the payments they represented. The contestants objected to their allowance expressly on the ground that there was no such order or any orders for family allowance, save the three which have been mentioned. There was, therefore, raised a direct issue as to what orders for payment of family allowance had been made which would support the claim to the credits asserted by petitioner. In support of her right to a credit for such payments, the administratrix offered the three orders above referred to, but no other. If the order of May 1, 1894, had then been made as found by the court in the present proceeding, it would have supported the claim petitioner asserted in her account as administratrix and which was contested for want of its existence, and it was essential to sustain such claim that she should have proved it. Whether that order, or any order authorizing their payment existed, was the issue in the contest and it was necessarily determined by the decision on appeal in that matter that no order, other than the orders specially referred to, was in force from the return of the inventory to October 14, 1895, under which any allowance asserted to have accrued during that period could be supported or sustained. If there was any order in force during that time, then the contested accounts were properly payable under it for that period, and instead of being rejected would have been allowed by this court by virtue of such order. In determining, however, that the amounts sought to be credited in her account were payments made to herself under the order of January 12, 1893, asserted to have accrued between the date of the return of the inventory and the order of October 14, 1895; that that order ceased to operate on the return of the inventory; that all allowance which had accrued under the orders of 1895 and 1898 had been fully paid; and that the account of the administratrix should be settled by the lower court by rejecting the contested items—this court decided that there was no order of court under which such contested payments could be sustained. That decision is final and conclusive against the existence of the order upon which petitioner now bases her right to the payment of these same amounts.

It is insisted by counsel for respondent that the decision of this court referred to has no bearing upon the order of May 1, 1894, which he denominates a separate and distinct order, because that order was not before this tribunal for consideration. But if the order was separate and distinct that fact cannot affect the question of the conclusiveness of the decision under consideration, because, whatever its character, its existence was a point at issue in the contested account proceeding. The question directly at issue was whether there was any order of court which could sustain the contested items. It was not a question as to a particular order, but what orders had at any time provided for a family allowance which would support them. If the order of May 1, 1894, was made, it would have sustained their payment. It would have been direct, as it was in fact essential, evidence necessary to support them, and was evidence that existed and which might have been produced at the hearing of said contest. The most that can be claimed by respondent now is that she was not aware of this order when the contest over the account was being had. But this only amounts to an insistence that the conclusiveness of the decision against the existence of any other orders during the period involved in said contest, save the three orders mentioned, may be overcome by showing that new evidence—the existence of another and fourth order—can now be produced. But under the authorities the conclusiveness of a judgment cannot be avoided for that reason. A solemn judgment determining the rights of parties to a controversy cannot be overcome by showing that new or additional evidence can now be produced upon the issue there involved and decided, which the party was unable to produce upon the former trial. If such a rule could obtain, judgments would never be conclusive. The rule as to the conclusiveness of judgments is based upon considerations of public policy—that there may be an end to litigation. The Supreme Court of the United States in Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. U. S., 168 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, 42 L. Ed. 355, referring to the general rule as to the binding effect of judgment on matters definitively put in issue and directly determined, says: "This general rule is demanded by the very object for which civil courts have been established, which is to secure the peace and repose of society by the settlement of matters capable of judicial determination. Its enforcement is essential to the maintenance of social order, or the aid of judicial tribunals would not be invoked for a vindication of rights of persons and property, if, between parties and their privies, conclusiveness did not attend the judgment of such tribunals in respect to all matters of property put in issue and actually determined by them."

It is further insisted by respondent that the decision we have been discussing is not binding upon her in the present proceeding, because, here, she appears individually, and in the former proceeding she appeared as administratrix; that where it is sought to bind a person by a former judgment it is necessary that he should have been not only a party to both actions, but must have appeared in both in the same capacity or character. As a general rule this is true, but it can have no application here. While it is true that petitioner was acting in her official capacity as administratrix when she was seeking to sustain her right to the payments involved in the contest over her account, it was for her own individual benefit and for her sole advantage that she was asserting it. It involved nothing with relation to her official capacity, save that she had paid it to herself individually. She was asserting her claim in her own right as the real party in interest; she was not asserting any right proceeding from her official capacity as administratrix. Both then, and now, she was insisting upon the right to the allowance upon exactly the same ground; that she was entitled to it as having accrued in her favor during the period between the date of the filing of the inventory and the order of October 14, 1895, under orders of the court awarding it. Under these conditions it cannot be said that she appeared in either matter in a different capacity or character. In both proceedings she was the real party in interest, asserting individual, and not representative, rights, and is bound by the judgment. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 535; 1 Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 174; Colton v. Onderdonk, 69 Cal. 155, 10 Pac. 395, 58 Am. Rep. 556.

We have pursued this discussion sufficiently. The finding of the trial court as to what was determined in the decision in the Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679, and the conclusions of that court as to the effect of that decision, are erroneous. It decided, and was conclusive to the point, that no order of court, save the orders specially mentioned in it, existed making an allowance to petitioner between the return of the inventory and the order of October 14, 1895, and determines that all allowances under any order of court making them had been fully paid to respondent.

Under this view, it is, as we have said, unnecessary to consider any other of the various grounds urged by appellants for a reversal.

The order appealed from is reversed, with costs to the appellants.

ADMINISTRATORS — ALLOWANCE TO WIDOW — JUDGMENT — REVIEW.

A judgment denying to a widow a family allowance as prayed for by her in an amended petition therefor, rendered on appeal by certain creditors of the decedent from a judgment awarding an allowance, precludes the widow from further proceeding under the original petition, and inures to the benefit of all creditors of decedent, and a creditor appealing generally from the judgment and order granting an allowance is entitled to a reversal though he stood on his demurrer to the original petition which was overruled, and took no further part in the proceedings, during which the petition was amended so as to withstand the demurrer, by alleging other distinct grounds for the same relief.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased. From an order giving Teresa Bell, the widow of the deceased, a family allowance, the National Bank of D. O. Mills appeals. Reversed.

James M. Allen, Drown, Leicester & Drown, Garret W. McEnerney, W. B. Bosley, John S. Drum, and Maurice V. Samuels, for appellants. T. Z. Blakeman, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from the same judgment and order in favor of respondent for payment of family allowance as was involved in the appeal of Louisa J. Thompson et al. (S. F. 4,582 this day decided and reversed) 95 Pac. 372. Unlike that appeal, however, the present one involves the validity of an order of court overruling the joint, general demurrer to the original petition of respondent interposed by this appellant and the other creditors of the estate represented in the Thompson appeal, and the order denying their motion to strike out certain parts of the petition. This appellant rested on its demurrer and motion to strike out, and after the order of court respecting them, while the other demurring creditors answered, this appellant did not in any manner further appear in the cause by answer or otherwise, except to take this appeal after the proceeding had culminated in the judgment and order awarding petitioner her claim for a family allowance. The transcript on this particular appeal is identical with the transcript in the Thompson Appeal. It appears therefrom that the other creditors had answered, and during the trial of the proceeding the petition of respondent was amended, and the relief thereby asked was based on allegations substantially different from those contained in the original petition and were sufficient to withstand a general demurrer. See decision in the Thompson Appeal, supra.

In the Thompson Appeal we held that the decision in the Estate of Bell, 142 Cal. 97, 75 Pac. 679, was conclusive against the right of petitioner to recover upon the cause of action stated in her amended petition. Such reversal on that ground precludes petitioner from further proceeding under the present petition as it stands, and such reversal inures to the benefit of all the creditors of the estate, as well as this appellant, as the creditors presenting the Thompson appeal. As far as the petition to which appellant demurred is concerned, it has no further legal existence as a petition, and no possible action can be taken on it which will affect this appellant. Under these circumstances, as appellant appeals generally from the judgment and order of the court, a general reversal of the order appealed from, as far as this appellant is concerned, should be had, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. WHITE LAW. (Cr. 94.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 3, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 30, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Defendant and three others were jointly charged with robbery committed March 4, 1903. A witness testified that on the evening of March 1st she heard N., one of the defendants, state to the others in front of a restaurant that she (N.) knew an old woman who had $2,000 or $3,000 and some diamonds that were easy to get, that the best time would be when the children were at school, and that witness saw three of the defendants together leave the premises where witness and some of the defendants resided on the afternoon of March 2d. Another witness who resided in the house that was robbed testified that on March 2d defendant followed her home, and pretended to have been sent by a real estate agent with whom witness was acquainted to sell witness a rooming house, on which subject witness had an interview with him in the house that was robbed, and that on the succeeding day defendant sent witness a message asking her to meet such real estate agent at 1 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of looking at another house, and while she was away on such errand defendant and two of the other conspirators entered prosecutrix's house and assaulted and robbed her. Held, that such evidence of the transactions on March 1st and 2d were admissible as showing a plan to rob prosecutrix's house, and to get the inmates other than prosecutrix away.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 764, 765.]

2. WITNESSES—CORROBORATION.

In a prosecution for robbery, it was proper to permit the physician who attended the victim for the injuries received at the hands of the robbers to fully describe such injuries, as corroborative of her evidence that force was used to consummate the crime.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1287.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

Bernard Whitelaw was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. S. Barnes, for appellant. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant, Bernard Whitelaw, was jointly charged with Michael Nolan, John Davis, and Docia Nolan with the crime of robbery committed upon one Emma Mathews. Upon the trial of the defendant, Whitelaw, he was convicted of the crime as charged, and this appeal is from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The only points relied on for a reversal concern certain rulings of the court in admitting certain evidence over the objections and exceptions of defendant, and are utterly without merit. The salient facts of the case, as disclosed by the evidence, are as follows: In the month of March, 1903, Mrs. Emma Mathews resided at 543 Haight street in the city and county of San Francisco, with her son aged 13 years, her daughter, Mrs. Ida Tuttle, and her daughter's daughter aged 12 years. A witness for the people, Ruby Grills, testified that she heard defendant Docia Nolan say to the other three defendants in front of a restaurant on the evening of March 1, 1903: "I know an old woman out here who has $2,000 or $3,000 and some diamonds. Her husband died a short time ago, and it would be easy to get, and the best time would be when the children are at school." The same witness also saw the three defendants, Whitelaw, Davis, and Michael Nolan, together leave the premises, 413 O'Farrell street, where she and some at least of the defendants resided, on the forenoon of March 2, 1903. Mrs. Ida Tuttle testified: That on March 1, 1903, she resided with her mother, Mrs. Emma Mathews, her mother's little boy, and her own little girl, at 543 Haight street. That on the 2d day of March, 1903, she came down town about 11 o'clock to see Mr. Johnson, a real estate dealer, whose office was at Turk and Market streets, looked at a house in the Mission and visited other places, and started home between half past 12 and 1 o'clock, taking the Haight street car on Market street. While going out Market street she saw the defendant Whitelaw looking at her. He was standing on the rear platform of the car. She got off the car at Haight and Fillmore streets, passing said defendant on the platform in doing so, and went to her home. She had just taken off her hat when the door bell rang. She opened the door and found appellant at the door. He asked if Mrs. Tuttle was in, and she answered: "I am Mrs. Tuttle." He then informed her that he had a lodging house to sell, gave the location, price, number of rooms, etc., and informed her that he had been sent by Mr. Johnson. During this interview Mrs. Mathews also came into the room and saw appellant. Mrs. Mathews said to Mrs. Tuttle: "You don't want that house. You want a larger house." And Mrs. Tuttle told appellant to go back to Mr. Johnson and have him sell the house. Whereupon he left. In the forenoon of March 4, 1903, appellant sent to Mrs. Ida Tuttle by a messenger boy a message written by him as follows: "San Francisco, March 4th, 1903. Mrs. Tuttle, please be at house on N. E. corner Polk and Larkin street at one p. m., or as near that time as possible, to get first chance. Johnson." Shortly after receiving the message Mrs. Tuttle left the house at about 12:30 o'clock, and went to Mr. Johnson's office, thus leaving Mrs. Mathews alone, the little boy and girl having also left the house. In about five minutes after Mrs. Tuttle left the house appellant, Davis, and Michael Nolan appeared at the residence of Mrs. Mathews, and, on the door being opened by Mrs. Mathews, stepped into the hallway, and informed her that they had been sent by "Johnson." They passed into the parlor, drew pistols, with which they threatened and struck her, demanded her money and diamonds, beat and maltreated her most brutally, and succeeded in getting away with $60 in money and a watch. They escaped from the premises through the back door and yard.

The evidence connecting appellant with the crime is abundant, and the only points urged for a reversal, as we have before stated, concern the rulings of the court in admitting certain testimony. Appellant objected to the admission of the testimony given by Ruby Grills as to what she heard said by Docia Nolan to the other three defendants on the evening of March 1st, and also as to the fact that she saw the three male defendants together on the morning of March 2d. Appellant also objected to the admission of the testimony given by Mrs. Tuttle as to where she was on March 1st, and as to the happenings of March 2d. The objection to this testimony seems to be that it was no part of the res gestæ, and was too remote in point of time from the actual commission of the offense. But it is perfectly apparent that every word of it that was in any way prejudicial to appellant tended to connect him with the commission of a deliberate and carefully planned robbery. It shows that the crime that was finally committed on the 4th day of March was probably conceived by the appellant and his fellow defendants on March 1st, and more fully planned on March 2d by appellant. The testimony of Ruby Grills and Mrs. Tuttle as to what occurred on March 1st and 2d tended to support the manifest theory of the prosecution that the robbery was the consummation of a deliberate and previously concocted plan of defendant and his codefendants to entice Mrs. Tuttle away from her home, and then, while both she and the two children were away, to rob Mrs. Mathews and the house of such valuables as they could get. The admission of this testimony was clearly proper, and is fully supported by People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 50 Pac. 390. See, also, People v. Kelly, 146 Cal. 119, 79 Pac. 846; People v. Linares, 142 Cal. 18, 75 Pac. 308; People v. Oldham, 111 Cal. 648, 44 Pac. 312; and State v. Ryan, 47 Or. 338, 82 Pac. 703, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862.

It was likewise proper for the court to allow the physician who attended Mrs. Mathews for the injuries received at the hands of appellant and his codefendants, to fully describe such injuries. It was corroborative of the evidence of Mrs. Mathews that force was used.

No other reason being suggested why the judgment or order should be reversed, both are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. AH LEAN. (Cr. 121.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 3, 1908.)

1. RAPE—EVIDENCE—INCRIMINATING CIRCUMSTANCES.

In a prosecution for rape alleged to have been committed on October 8, 1905, it was error to permit a physician to testify as a witness for the prosecution that he examined prosecutrix on October 24th and found that she had venereal chancroids, which appeared to be about 12 days old, for the purpose of showing that the venereal disease was contracted by prosecutrix from defendant.

2. WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

On a prior trial of another for rape, alleged to have been committed on prosecutrix on September 26, 1905, a physician testified that he had examined the girl in October and found that she had venereal chancroids, and in the prosecution of defendant for alleged rape on the same girl occurring October 8th, the same physician testified that on October 24th the girl had chancroids of about 12 days' standing. Held, that it was error to refuse to allow defendant's counsel on cross-examination to ask prosecutrix whether or not she had chancroids or any sores inside her private parts on October 8, 1905.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—OTHER OFFENSES.

In a prosecution for rape it was error to permit the prosecution to prove by the prosecutrix that she had intercourse with defendant several times before the date stated in the indictment, and that the usual price he paid her was $1.50, as showing other offenses than that charged.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 822-824; vol. 42, Rape, § 64.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Ah Lean was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

E. L. Rhodes, for appellant. Attorney General Webb (B. A. Herrington, of counsel), for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant is charged in the indictment with the crime of rape, in having had sexual intercourse on the 8th day of October, 1905, with one Lillie Ida Davis, an unmarried female under the age of 16 years. A trial was had before a jury, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation of the defendant to the mercy of the court, and judgment was thereupon entered, sentencing the defendant to a term of eight years in the state prison. This appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. The facts and circumstances surrounding this case, and the character of the girl Lillie Ida Davis, are fully set forth in People v. Fong Chung (filed May 27, 1907; Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 105, a case in which the defendant there was charged with rape upon the same girl on the 26th day of September, 1905, and such facts and circumstances need not be here repeated. In the record of this case at least some of the matters held to be error in the Fong Chung Case are repeated.

The prosecution called Dr. McMahon, who testified that he examined the girl on the 24th day of October, 1905, and found at that time that she had venereal chancroids, which appeared to be about 12 days old. As this referred to a time only 16 days after the alleged rape, it is apparent that the object, and the only object, of the testimony was to give the jury the impression that the venereal disease was contracted by the girl from the defendant. The testimony certainly did not tend to prove the age of the girl, nor the fact that the defendant had had sexual intercourse with her, unless it had been proven that on the 8th day of October, 1905, the defendant had a venereal disease.

Dr. Cothran testified in behalf of the defendant that the day before the trial he examined the defendant, and that he did not have any venereal disease, and that if he had had chancroids or venereal warts at any time within the prior three months he would have been able to detect signs of such disease, but that he found no signs of any venereal troubles of any kind.

The defendant's counsel, in cross-examination, asked the prosecuting witness whether or not she had chancroids or any sores inside her private parts on the 8th day of October, 1905. The prosecution objected to each question asked in regard to such matter on the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and the court sustained the objection. The rulings were clearly erroneous, and it is only necessary to refer to the Fong Chung Case as to the reasons. In that case the rape upon the same girl was alleged to have taken place on the 26th day of September, 1905, and the same physician was called to show that early in October the girl had a venereal disease or chancroids. In this case the alleged rape occurred on the 8th of October, and the same physician was again called to prove that on October 24th the girl had a venereal disease or chancroids of about 12 days' standing. In other words, in the Fong Chung Case the act of sexual intercourse was proven to have occurred on the 26th day of September, 1905, and the physician was called to prove that a few days afterwards the girl had chancroids. In the present case the act of sexual intercourse is proven to have occurred with the same girl and this defendant on the 8th day of October, 1905, and the same physician was called to prove that the disease was contracted soon after the act of intercourse with this defendant. It would certainly be a remarkably quick cure if the girl contracted a disease from Fong Chung on the 26th day of September, 1905, and was suffering from it early in October, 1905, and yet was well and cured of it on October 8, 1905, when the intercourse that defendant is claimed to have had took place, and not only this, but that she again contracted it from this defendant.

Other questions were asked of the girl by defendant in cross-examination as to whether or not she had had intercourse with other Chinamen, and as to how many Chinamen she had accused of having raped her. The court sustained objections made by the district attorney to each of such questions.

The girl was also asked by defendant in cross-examination when she first told any one of having had sexual intercourse with the defendant. The court sustained the objection of the district attorney to the question.

Under the defendant's objection the prosecution was permitted to prove by the girl that she had had intercourse with this defendant several times before; that the usual price he paid her was $1.50. The defendant was charged with only one offense, and that one alleged to have occurred on the 8th day of October, 1905. We know of no rule in cases of this class that will permit evidence to be introduced to show other and independent rapes to have been committed by the same defendant upon the same party.

It is useless to discuss the rulings further. Upon the authority of the case of People v. Fong Chung, supra, the judgment and order are reversed.

PEOPLE v. BORREGO. (Cr. 78.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 28, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—ACCUSED'S CREDIBILITY.

Where one accused of murder was a material witness in his own behalf, an instruction directing attention to the manner in which he would be affected by the verdict, and informing the jury that they should consider that in determining the weight to be given his statements and the likelihood of his coloring his testimony, etc., was prejudicial error as invading the jury's province.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1786-1789.]

2. HOMICIDE—APPEAL—FAVORABLE ERROR.

One may not complain of a conviction of manslaughter because the evidence warranted a conviction of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 722.]

3. INDICTMENT — MURDER — CONVICTION OF MANSLAUGHTER.

One accused of murder may be convicted of manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 593.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Rafael V. Borrego was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals from a judgment on the verdict, and from an order denying a new trial. Reversed, and new trial granted.

A. R. Holston, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was charged with murder, in the killing of one Juan Orosco, and upon trial found guilty of manslaughter. He appeals from the judgment on this verdict, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Orosco, who was a deputy constable, gave a dance at a dance hall in Los Alamitos, in the county of Orange, on the night of August 25, 1907. Defendant, who had been drinking wine more or less all day, attended the dance, and while in the ballroom became involved in some trouble with one Arthur Murrietta, who was Orosco's helper or assistant. There was an exchange of opprobrious names and threats between defendant and Murrietta, and the latter grabbed defendant's hands to prevent him from pulling a weapon. Orosco came up, directed Murrietta to turn the defendant loose, and told the latter he was under arrest. Some of the witnesses for defendant testified that Orosco followed the direction to Murrietta with the further remark, "I will fix him"; and another witness testified that Orosco merely said to the defendant: "You are under arrest, and I will make it all right in the morning." Defendant thereupon went out of the room, Murrietta and Orosco remaining in the house. In about five minutes after defendant left the room he fired a pistol shot into the ground a short distance from the dance hall. Thereupon Orosco went out, followed by Murrietta. The former took a step or two from the platform in front of the door, and defendant shot him, death following immediately. Orosco half turned and fell into the arms of Murrietta, and then dropped upon the ground.

Orosco and defendant were friends, and had had no previous quarrels, and no motive for the shooting appears, except that derived from the statement by the defendant that Orosco was advancing toward him with a gun in his hand, and such motive as can be inferred from the foregoing facts. But one other witness testified that Orosco was advancing with a gun in his hand toward defendant when the shooting occurred, although there is evidence that a gun fell upon the ground where Orosco was shot and circumstances tending to corroborate this statement. Defendant was a witness in his own behalf, and one of but two witnesses who saw the gun in Orosco's hand, rendering his testimony of great moment to his defense. If the words "I will fix him" were spoken by Orosco, they were not heard by the defendant, and his justification of self-defense rests largely upon his own testimony as to Orosco's actions.

Under such circumstances the giving of the instruction (No. 30) calling the especial attention of the jury to the situation of the defendant and the manner in which he would be affected by the verdict, and informing them that they should consider this in determining the weight to be given his statements, and the likelihood of his coloring his testimony, etc., was clearly prejudicial error. The criticism of this instruction by the Supreme Court in numerous cases, and its repeated cautioning against the giving of it having gone unheeded, it at last declared in People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 263, 86 Pac. 187, that in all future cases its giving on behalf of the prosecution would be sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment. The instruction is, in effect, an argument against the defendant upon a matter of fact delivered by the court. As said in People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 330, 57 Pac. 1067, the credit to be given to the testimony of the defendant, like that of any other witness, is a matter with which the court has nothing to do. To give such an instruction is to expressly disparage the defendant, "the very thing that a court has no authority to do, in view of our constitutional provision." People v. Ryan (Cal.) 92 Pac. 853.

In so far as they have been presented, we see no error in the refusal of the other instructions asked by the defendant and refused by the court.

No prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in its rulings as to the admission and rejection of testimony complained of, and the assignment of error based upon the misconduct of counsel is withdrawn by appellant in his reply brief.

It is true, as claimed by appellant, that the evidence in the case would have sustained a verdict of murder; but the appellant cannot be heard to complain of a verdict of manslaughter for this reason. Every charge of murder includes manslaughter, and the jury were properly instructed that they might render such a verdict. The doctrine is well settled that the defendant cannot complain because the verdict was more favorable to him than the evidence warranted. People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 305, 47 Pac. 128.

Judgment and order reversed, and new trial granted.

HILL v. CLARK et al. (Civ. 413.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Feb. 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where a nonsuit was erroneously denied, after which sufficient evidence was admitted to supply the omission in plaintiff's proof, the error was cured.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4210.]

2. CONTRACTS—SUBSTANTIAL PERFORMANCE.

Where plaintiff contracted to do certain grading according to specifications, a substantial performance only was required to entitle plaintiff to recover compensation for the work done.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, § 1361.]

3. APPEAL—FINDINGS OF FACT—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a lien for certain grading work, the court's findings in favor of plaintiff were not challenged as unsupported by the evidence, they were conclusive on appeal in favor of plaintiff's good faith and substantial performance of the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1290, 1321.]

4. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT — FINDINGS OF FACT.

While findings of fact are not proper on a motion for a nonsuit, yet, where the motion is denied and uncontested findings are subsequently made, they may be looked to to determine whether any omission in plaintiff's proof prior to the motion for nonsuit was supplied by subsequent testimony.

5. CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — EVIDENCE—CUSTOM.

Where a contract required plaintiff to grade certain land in accordance with a specified grade, evidence was inadmissible to show that the term "grade" as used in the contract had by custom of business no other construction than to require plaintiff to take off the earth from the high places, and with it fill in the low places to the extent of the material within the lines of the work.

6. APPEAL—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in a suit on a contract to grade certain land, the court found that there was sufficient dirt on the ground to bring the land to the precise grade fixed in the contract, defendant was not prejudiced by evidence that the term "grade" as so used only required plaintiff to take off the earth from the high places, and with it fill in the low places to the extent of the material within the lines of the work, and did not require him to haul dirt onto the property from outside.

7. SAME—DAMAGES.

Where, in an action on a grading contract providing a fixed sum as liquidated damages for delay, no issue was presented as to the amount of the liquidated damages or claim on account thereof, and the court found that the contract had been substantially performed, there was no room for an inquiry as to damages, and hence defendant was not prejudiced by the exclusion of a question as to the extent of his injuries by plaintiff's failure to complete the work.

8. MECHANICS' LIENS—FORECLOSURE—ATTORNEY'S FEE.

An attorney's fee cannot be allowed in the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien though provided for by statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 653.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Action by James A. Hill against Stephen A. D. Clark and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

M. W. Conkling and J. L. Fleming, for appellants. H. L. Dunnigan, Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, and Borden & Carhart, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment, the evidence taken at the trial being presented in a bill of exceptions. The action was one brought by plaintiff to foreclose a lien on account of certain work and labor performed in grading a tract of land under a written contract with defendant, the owner. This contract specified the exact lines of grade to which the premises should be brought, and for which work the plaintiff was to receive $1,000 upon completion. Upon the trial the plaintiff did not show that he had complied with the contract in any manner other than as required by his construction thereof, which was that, when he had taken off the earth from the high places, and with it filled in the low places to the extent of the material within the lines of the work, he had done all that was required of him by the contract; and the court permitted plaintiff, under objections, to introduce testimony tending to show that the word "grade," as used in the contract, had by the custom of business no other construction than that given it by plaintiff; that by the use of the word "grade" in the contract it was never intended to require that dirt should be hauled from the outside. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's testimony defendants moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show that the contract set out in the complaint had been substantially fulfilled or completed, which motion was denied, with an exception. Thereupon defendants introduced testimony tending to show the extent to which the work had been done and the amount of labor and expense incident to its entire completion; and plaintiff was permitted to introduce testimony in rebuttal in connection with such question of completion and cost.

At the conclusion of the testimony, the court filed its findings of fact, wherein it found that plaintiff furnished and performed the labor agreed to be furnished and performed, and substantially performed said contract according to its terms; that in the performance of said contract plaintiff failed to grade the property exactly to conform to the lines specified in said contract; that plaintiff endeavored in good faith to perform said contract; that defendants would not permit plaintiff to cut certain high places to the specified grade, which, had he been permitted so to do, would have provided sufficient dirt on the property to bring the entire property to the grade specified in said contract; that plaintiff failed to bring in dirt to fill up the low places on said property; that the defect is one that can be remedied, and the damage caused by the failure of plaintiff to bring in dirt, including the cost of supplying the deficiency, amounts to the sum of $150; that such sum would correct the work done by said contractor to make it conform to the contract aforesaid. And, as a conclusion of law, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to judgment for $650, being the amount of the contract price less a payment of $200 theretofore made and the $150 necessary to an entire completion of the contract, together with $2.45 paid for verifying and recording the claim of lien and $50 for attorney's fees; and a decree for the sale of the property in the ordinary way on default in the payment of such judgment. The findings are not attacked by any specifications of error relating to insufficiency of evidence for their support.

The principal contention of defendant upon this appeal is that the judgment should be reversed because of the action of the court in denying the motion for nonsuit. In a former opinion filed in this case this court reversed the judgment of the trial court upon the ground that such motion for nonsuit should have been granted. Upon a rehearing of the case, however, we are satisfied that we overlooked the effect which should be given the findings of fact. While it is true that the court would have been warranted in granting the motion for nonsuit when made, yet sufficient appears in the record to show that the omission of the requisite proof upon the part of plaintiff in the first instance was supplemented by subsequent evidence properly received upon the trial; and, under the well-established rule, such subsequent proof will have the effect to cure the error in denying the original motion. The rule is well established that in cases of this character the performance of a contract need not in all cases be literal and exact in order to entitle a plaintiff to compensation therefor; that a substantial performance is all that is required. Harlan v. Stufflebeem, 87 Cal. 512, 25 Pac. 636. "Whether the contract has been substantially performed is a question of fact which must be determined by the trial court in each instance from the facts and circumstances in that case, and the finding of the trial court upon that point is as conclusive as is its finding of any other fact." Schindler v. Green, 149 Cal. 755, 87 Pac. 627. The findings not being challenged as unsupported by the evidence, we must, therefore, accept the same as conclusive upon the question of good faith and substantial completion. While findings of fact are not proper on a motion for nonsuit, yet, under the circumstances of this case, in determining whether or not the subsequent proof has supplied any omission in the plaintiff's testimony, we may look into the findings to determine that fact, rather than into the evidence in the bill of exceptions to see whether or not those findings have support, other than to see whether or not there is some evidence tending in that direction. In the light of subsequent events, therefore, there was no prejudicial error in denying the motion for nonsuit.

It is further insisted by appellant that the court erred in admitting the testimony of witnesses as to the construction to be given the word "grade" in a contract where the same specifically states the exact grade to which the property should be brought. We quite agree with appellant in this regard. There was no room for construction. The contract was specific as to the lines to which the grade should be brought; but, looking again into the findings we see that the court finds that there was sufficient dirt on the ground to bring the property to the precise grade fixed in the contract. Hence, the evidence offered as applicable to cases where there was an insufficiency of earth could not prejudice defendant in this case.

We perceive no error in the action of the court sustaining the objection to a question asked defendant, as follows: "Can you state to the court how much and to what extent you have been injured by the failure of the plaintiff to complete this work; the question is, can you tell?" The contract provided for a fixed sum as liquidated damages for delay in the completion of the work beyond the time specified in the contract. No issue was presented as to the amount of the liquidated damages, or claim on account thereof, and the question objected to could have no reference thereto; and the court finding that the contract was substantially completed there was no room for inquiry as to the damages, and no prejudice could result to defendant from such ruling.

The appeal from the judgment, however, presents the question involved in an allowance of attorney's fees. In Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, it is held that an attorney's fee cannot be allowed in the foreclosure of a mechanic's lien, even though provided by statute. The same reasons which impelled that decision are applicable here, and the court erred in awarding an attorney's fee.

The judgment of the superior court is therefore modified by striking therefrom the words "and for the further sum of $50 hereby allowed said plaintiff for attorney's fees in this action"; and, as so modified, is ordered affirmed, appellant to recover costs on appeal.

PEOPLE v. FOSSETTI. (Cr. 82.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 3, 1908.)

1. HOMICIDE—TRIAL—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—PASSION.

In a prosecution for murder, the result of a quarrel, where the evidence showed that deceased had been drinking and had exhibited no weapon, and made no threat toward defendant, and that defendant deliberately left the room after saying that he would "fix" deceased, procured a pistol, returned, and without warning fired the fatal shot, the jury were the exclusive judges of the facts, and it was for them to say whether the killing was the result of malice or premeditation, or whether it occurred during a sudden quarrel or heat of passion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 565.]

2. SAME—MURDER—DELIBERATION AND PRE-MEDITATION.

Where the deceased and defendant were quarreling, and the deceased struck defendant, after which defendant left the room, procured a pistol, returned, and shot the deceased, no definite time was necessary after defendant was struck for his angry passion to cool so as to make the killing a murder, and not manslaughter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 62-64.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW — QUESTIONS OF FACT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—DEGREE OF CRIME.

The question as to the sufficiency of the evidence and as to the degree of a crime, where an inference may be properly drawn from the facts, is peculiarly a question for the jury, with whose determination it is not the province of the appellate court to interfere.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3074-3083.]

4. SAME—OPINION EVIDENCE—FACTS OR CONCLUSIONS.

In a prosecution for murder, a physician was asked by the prosecution to state the course of the bullet from its entrance to where it struck a bone, where it was changed out of the course it had first taken. Held, that the court did not err in permitting the witness to answer the question; its purpose being to show the jury the position of the wound and the course taken by the bullet, and not to secure an opinion with regard to the relative position of the parties.

5. SAME—TRIAL—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—INSTRUCTIONS AS TO DUTIES OF JURY.

In a prosecution for murder, the court did not err in refusing to strike out the district attorney's argument to the effect that instructions were prepared by counsel, and often stated hypothetical circumstances and conditions which made it necessary for the jury to look at them carefully and critically.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1680.]

6. SAME—APPEAL—ASSIGNMENT OF ERRORS.

On appeal from a conviction of murder, defendant assigned as error that an examination of the instructions refused would show that there seemed to have been a steady pressure in the lower court to bar out any verdict of manslaughter or acquittal, and that, if any of such instructions were refused on the ground that they had already been given, that reason should have been stated by the court. Held, that the assignment was not sufficient to justify the appellate court in examining the instructions; it being due to the court that, when counsel rely upon error in the refusal to give an instruction, they should state the instruction, and point out the reason why they think the court erred in refusing to give it, which rule also obtains in regard to the giving of an instruction to which objection is made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Joseph C. Fossetti was convicted of murder in the second degree. From the judgment and the order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. J. Hinds and Thos. D. Ingersoll, for appellant. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The defendant was found guilty of murder in the second degree by the verdict of the jury, and upon the verdict judgment was duly entered. His motion for a new trial having been denied, he prosecutes this appeal from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The main point urged by the defendant is that the evidence shows that the crime was manslaughter, and not murder. It appears from the evidence in the case that the defendant (who is sometimes referred to as Chip Moran), was in charge of a roadside house near Fresno; that one Ollie Leighton was living at the place, and one Hattie Russell, at the invitation of Ollie Leighton, was visiting the roadside house referred to; that Moseley, the deceased, was a friend of Hattie Russell, and called upon her at the roadside house while she was stopping there, and that he with her had partaken of a meal at the house; that on the date of the homicide, about 6 o'clock p. m., defendant and other persons returned to the roadhouse, and soon thereafter defendant went into the kitchen. Deceased went into the room of Hattie Russell. He had been drinking. Defendant was called into the room of Hattie Russell where deceased was, and deceased then stated that defendant had accused Hattie Russell of having been out riding with deceased, and stated to defendant that defendant had told him so and had made said accusation. Angry words ensued, during which time defendant called Moseley a liar, and Moseley struck defendant on the cheek, and knocked him over on the bed. Defendant then went out and procured a revolver, and came back into the room and fired the fatal shot. The transaction is thus stated by the witness Hattie Russell: "There was just one blow struck. There was nothing more happened in the way of their scuffling, striking, kicking, or anything. When I got Barney (referring to Moseley) off, we were at the foot of the bed there. Chip Moran got up from the bed on the side next to the door and went out. I don't remember whether he got up on his feet or his knees, because as soon as I pulled Barney up he got right up and got out. Chip (the defendant) said that he would fix him just as he was going out the door. Nothing happened before he came back. I was just talking with Barney Moseley, trying to keep the peace with him. We were standing by the bureau, and Chip came in, and I heard him coming around, and I shut the door, and he slammed it back and shot. He was down the hall from the back way when I heard him coming. He didn't say a word when he came back to the door and shot. The bureau was where it was shown there [referring to a diagram], and Barney was leaning on it when the shot was fired. Chip was in the door when he fired the shot. From the time Chip Moran went out of the door and says 'I'll fix you' till the shot was fired was inside of a minute. When the shot was fired, Barney fell; just slipping down from the bureau into a cramping position." It is contended that the above testimony, although it does not show that the fatal shot was fired in self-defense, shows that it was fired during a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, and, at most, only constituted the crime of manslaughter. This contention cannot be maintained as a proposition of law. The deceased had been drinking. He had exhibited no weapon, and made no threat toward the defendant. The defendant deliberately left the room, according to the testimony, after saying that he would "fix" deceased. He procured a pistol and returned, and, without warning, fired the shot that caused the death of Moseley. In such case the jury are the exclusive judges of the facts, and it is for the jury to say whether the killing was the result of malice and premeditation, or whether it occurred during a sudden quarrel or heat of passion. No definite time was necessary after defendant was struck for his angry passions to cool. The jury had the right to infer when he left the room to procure his pistol that he did so with the deliberate and willful intention of killing deceased.

The question as to the sufficiency of the evidence and as to the degree of a crime, where the jury have a right to draw an inference from the facts, is peculiarly a question for the jury. With the determination of the jury it is not the province of this court to interfere. People v. Wright, 4 Cal. App. 704, 89 Pac. 364; People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 41, 70 Pac. 1014; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 379, 77 Pac. 169. Dr. T. N. Sample was called as a witness on behalf of the people, and he testified to attending deceased as he was dying, and to the fact that he examined the body and the wound. He was asked by counsel for the prosecution to state the course of the bullet from the entrance to where it struck a bone where it was changed out of the course it had first taken. To this question the defendant objected, and now insists upon the objection. The witness was permitted to answer, and stated: "The bullet struck just on the anterior axillary line—that is, the straight up and down line from the point here—and passed inward and slightly backward and slightly downward, and struck the beginning of the lumbar vertebrae, and then was deflected slightly outward and downward. I got that bullet, and after handed it to the coroner at the coroner's inquest. In striking the arm the bullet made a hole underneath the skin, but not into the muscle. The wounds mentioned are the only ones I found on the body, and I found but one bullet." It was not error for the court to permit the witness to answer the question. The witness was not asked to give his opinion as to the position the person must have been standing in at the time he was shot with relation to the deceased, and therefore the question did not come within the ruling of People v. Smith, 93 Cal. 445, 29 Pac. 64. The object of the question was to show the position of the wound, the course taken by the bullet, and its place of entrance and exit; so as to show the jury the facts.

It is further claimed that it was error in the court to refuse to strike out some remarks made by the district attorney in his argument in regard to the instructions that would be handed to the jury in the case.

The argument of the district attorney upon this point was to the effect that instructions were prepared by counsel, and often stated hypothetical circumstances and conditions, which made it necessary for the jury to look at them carefully and critically. But the district attorney did not state that the jury must disregard the instructions, and we do not think that he went beyond the scope of his right to state, by way of argument and illustration, his views of the case and the manner of instructing the jury. The remarks do not come within the reason of the rule given in the various cases in which remarks of district attorneys have been held to be error.

Defendant finally claims that "an examination of the instructions asked for on behalf of the defendant and refused by the court will convince this court that there seems to be a steady pressure in the lower court to bar out any verdict of manslaughter or acquittal. If any of the instructions asked for by the defendant were refused on the ground that they had already been given, that reason should have been given by the court. The record shows no such compliance with the law by the court, and it is therefore error." This is not a sufficient assignment of error in the giving or refusing of an instruction or of instructions to justify us, under the well-settled rule, in examining the instructions given or refused. It is due to the court that, when counsel rely upon error in the refusal to give an instruction, they should state the instruction, and point out the reasons why they think that the court erred in refusing to give it; and the same rule obtains in regard to the giving of an instruction to which objection is made. People v. Cebulla, 137 Cal. 315, 70 Pac. 181; People v. Monroe, 138 Cal. 99, 70 Pac. 1072; People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 298, 52 Pac. 833.

PEOPLE v. THOMPSON. (Cr. 57.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District. California.
Feb. 28, 1908.)

1. INFORMATION — FORMAL REQUISITES — VENUE.

Pen. Code, § 951, provides that an information shall contain the title of the cause and of the court in which it is filed. The caption of an information was as follows: "In the Superior Court of the County of Tuolumne, State of California, ——" The charging part did not specifically mention the county, the only language indicating the county in which the offense was committed being that accused on a specified date, "at the said county of ——" and before the filing of this information, did then and there ——" etc. Held that, while the caption of the information is no part of the information, viewed solely as a pleading, yet, inasmuch as the statute requires it to be made part of the instrument which constitutes the information, it may be considered in determining the question of venue where the body of the pleading contains no direct allegation thereof, and hence the averment that the crime was committed in "said county of —" should be construed to refer to the county mentioned in the caption.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—FORMAL DEFECTS IN INDICTMENT.

Formal defects or imperfections in indictments or informations which have no tendency to prejudice accused or to deprive him of any substantial rights should be disregarded, Pen. Code, § 1404, expressly providing that neither a departure from the form nor mode prescribed in respect to any pleading, nor an error nor mistake therein, shall render it invalid unless it has actually prejudiced accused, or tended to his prejudice in respect to a substantial right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Ross S. Thompson was prosecuted for assault with intent to commit rape, and from a conviction of assault he appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Curtin, and R. J. White, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Geo. Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The appellant was accused by information of the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, and upon his trial in the superior court of Tuolumne county was convicted of an assault. This appeal is taken from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone. The only point made by the appellant is that the averments of the information fail to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the superior court of Tuolumne county, in that it is not specifically alleged in the charging part thereof that said alleged crime was committed in said county. In other words, the claim is that the information does not affirmatively show the venue, for which reason it is contended, the court did not acquire or have jurisdiction to try the appellant for the offense charged in the information.

The information, including the caption, which states the title of the court and cause, reads as follows: "In the Superior Court of the County of Tuolumne, State of California. The People, Plaintiff, vs. Ross S. Thompson, Defendant. Information for Assault with Intent to Commit Rape. Ross S. Thompson, accused by the district attorney of the said county by this information of the crime of assault with intent to commit rape, committed as follows: The said Ross S. Thompson, on the 10th day of July, one thousand nine hundred and seven, at the said county of — and before the filing of this information did then and there willfully, unlawfully and feloniously in and upon one E. W., a female over the age of sixteen years, and not the wife of said Ross S. Thompson, make an assault with intent then and there to ravish, carnally know and to commit rape upon the said E. W. by force and violence and against her will and against her resistance, contrary," etc. Section 951 of the Penal Code provides that the indictment or information shall contain, among other things, the title of the cause and of the court in which the indictment or information is filed. The charging part of the information here does not, it is to be seen, specifically mention "Tuolumne County," where the cause was tried, and the only language in that part of said information indicating the county in which the offense was committed is to be found in the words "said county of —" and the words "then and there."

It is evident that the failure to insert in the information the name of the county in the blank space immediately following the words "said county of" involves purely a clerical misprision, and, while it is true, as contended by counsel for appellant, that the caption of an information or indictment is no part of the same, viewed solely as a pleading, it is nevertheless required by the statute to be made part of the document or instrument which constitutes such information or indictment; and, we think that, for the purpose of determining the question of venue, as to which the body of the pleading is silent so far as a direct allegation is concerned, the averment in the information or indictment that the crime was committed in "said county of —" should and may reasonably be construed to refer to the county mentioned in the caption as the name or title of the court, and, so construing it, the venue is sufficiently established in the accusatory pleading to invest the court with jurisdiction of the offense and of the person of the accused. Such has been the construction given indictments and informations similarly phrased by the appellate courts of many other states, and in none of the California cases cited by appellant have we been able to find language expressing an opinion in conflict with this conclusion.

In People v. O'Neil, 48 Cal. 259, the charging part of the indictment does not contain the words "said county" or "county aforesaid" or words of similar import. The same is likewise true of the case of People v. Craig, 59 Cal. 370. There it was charged that the defendant "did willfully and unlawfully resist, delay and obstruct" a certain public officer, to wit, "a duly elected, qualified and acting constable of Pajaro township, of the county of Monterey, of the state of California," in the discharge of his duty as such officer. While the name of the county—assuming that Monterey county was where the offense was committed—is mentioned in the information as a part only of the description of the officer's official character and authority, there is no direct averment that the crime was committed in that county, nor are there elsewhere in the information any words or language which could be so construed as to fix the venue. In fact, there does not appear to be any attempt to allege the venue in the information. The case of People v. Wong Wang, 92 Cal. 281, 28 Pac. 270, contains nothing at variance with the views expressed here. The facts of that case are different from those here. It is said among other things, in that case, that "it is a familiar and well-settled principle of law that the indictment must allege that the offense was committed within the jurisdiction of the court." No one would have the hardihood to attempt to dispute that elementary principle of law. And its violation in the case at bar, as we have before said, is not attempted. The statute, as we have seen, authorizes and requires the title of the court to be stated or set forth in the caption, and, although, as we have said, such caption is no part of the pleading proper, it is nevertheless to be considered, if necessary, in arriving at the meaning of the words of reference, "said county," in the charging part of the information, for the purpose of determining the question of venue.

We have been referred to no case in this state which has decided the precise question here; but, as before suggested, many cases directly in point can be found in other jurisdictions, among which may be mentioned the following: State v. Hunn, 34 Ark. 321; U. S. v. Schneider, 21 D. C. 381; Rivers v. State, 144 Ind. 16, 42 N. E. 1021; State v. Muntz, 3 Kan. 383; Anderson v. State, 104 Ind. 467, 4 N. E. 63, 5 N. E. 711; Wright v. Commonwealth, 82 Va. 183; State v. Bell, 25 N. C. 506; State v. Shull, 40 Tenn. 42; Commonwealth v. Edwards, 70 Mass. (4 Gray) 1. In the case of State v. S. A. L., 77 Wis. 467, 46 N. W. 498, the name of the county in which it was claimed the offense was committed appeared in the information only as indicating the county of which the district attorney was the prosecuting officer, as follows (after the caption): "I, J. L. E., district attorney for Dane county, hereby inform the court," etc. The charging part of the information did not after the language quoted contain the words, "said county" or "aforesaid county," but did allege that the defendant "then and there" committed the crime charged. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the words "then and there" had reference to the county named in the caption, and also mentioned in the first part of the information for the purpose of indicating the county of which the accusing officer was district attorney, and that, therefore, the venue was sufficiently laid in the information. We quote from the opinion in that case: " * * * But in the second place, where the words are used that 'M. C. did then and there have carnal knowledge of her body,' they must necessarily refer to Dane county, which is previously mentioned or described. This is the plain, natural meaning and sense of the language used. The words 'then and there,' as used in the indictment, are words of reference, and when time and place have once been named with certainty, it is sufficient to refer to them afterwards by these words; and they have the same effect as if the time and place were actually repeated"—citing Whar. Crim. Law, 74. Of course, if adding the caption to the information or indictment were the mere work of the clerk of the court, without any authorization or requirement of the statute to do so, a different question might be presented; but, as observed, section 951 of the Penal Code prescribes the form of an indictment and of an information by setting out such form, and among the requisites as to form thus set out is the caption setting forth the title of the court and cause. We are not to be understood as holding that an information or indictment, otherwise sufficient, would be fatally defective if the caption were omitted. All we hold is that the caption containing the title of the court and cause, being expressly authorized by the Code when referred to by appropriate words in the charging part of the indictment or information, has the effect, where the charging part thereof fails or omits to specifically allege the county, or fails to allege in some direct manner the venue, of sufficiently laying the venue to give the court jurisdiction to try the accused. "The name of the county being fully set forth in the caption thus returned as attached to the indictment," says the Massachusetts Supreme Court, 4 Gray, 1, "a reference thereto in the indictment, as 'in said county,' may properly be had, to find the county where the offense is alleged to have been committed; and, being thus made certain, the place of the commission of the offense is sufficiently charged."

We can conceive no reason upon principle why the rule as laid down in all the authorities cited herein is not sound and should not be sustained. Defects or imperfections in form in informations or indictments having no tendency to prejudice the accused, or to deprive him of any of his substantial rights, ought to be disregarded, and it seems to be the trend of modern decisions to disregard them. Form is now and for many years has been subordinated to substance in pleadings and practice in civil cases, and the same practice ought to be and can be, with equal reason, made applicable to indictments and informations and other proceedings in criminal cases, without impinging in the least upon the important and material rights of an accused. The Legislature of California has wisely recognized the justice of relaxing to some extent the strictness with which the rules as to form with reference to indictments and informations were formerly administered and enforced, by the enactment of section 1404 of the Penal Code, which reads: "Neither a departure from the form or mode prescribed by this Code in respect to any pleading or proceeding nor an error or mistake therein, renders it invalid, unless it has actually prejudiced the defendant, or tended to his prejudice, in respect to a substantial right." Of course, the offense should be alleged with reasonable certainty, as should also the fact or facts essential to give the court jurisdiction to try the accused under the information or indictment filed or found against him.

We may, however, with propriety, suggest to district attorneys that it is well to bear in mind that it is far the better and safer practice to allege the venue with unquestionable certainty and directness. The venue, it seems to us, ought to be the least of the difficulties in the way of a proper preparation of an indictment or information.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROBINSON v. MUTUAL SAVINGS BANK
OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 411.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied
April 2, 1908.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING — DEPOSITS—OWNER-SHIP—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that plaintiff who deposited money in a bank to the joint account of herself and decedent deposited it as the agent of decedent for decedent's use.

2. GIFTS—GIFTS INTER VIVOS—TIME OF TAKING EFFECT.

A valid gift goes into immediate effect and has no reference to the future; it divests the donor of its title, and requires a renunciation on his part of all claim and interest in the subject of the gift, and hence where a woman placed money of her own in a bank to the joint account of herself and another so that either could draw therefrom, and retained the bank book herself, there was no gift of the account to the other person.

3. JOINT TENANCY—JOINT ACCOUNT IN BANK.

The deposit of money to the joint account of depositor and his agent did not constitute a joint tenancy or ownership with right of survivorship.

4. GIFTS—ASSERTION AFTER DEATH OF DONOR—EVIDENCE.

Where the claim of a gift is not asserted until after the death of the alleged donor, it should be sustained by clear and satisfactory evidence of every element which is requisite to constitute a gift.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Lizzie C. Robinson against the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco to recover a deposit in which Joseph Leggett and Charles H. Robinson, as executors of Amanda M. Scales, interpleaded, claiming the money, and upon the deposit of the amount in court by the bank the interpleaders were substituted as defendants. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, the substituted defendants appeal. Reversed.

Jas. G. Maguire and Devoto & Richardson, for appellants. A. Ruef and F. T. Finch, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought suit against the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco to recover the sum of $4,370.49 as the balance of money alleged to have been deposited by plaintiff with said bank. Upon a showing by the defendant bank that Joseph Leggett and Charles H. Robinson, as executors of the last will of Amanda M. Scales, deceased, made claim to the same money, said defendant bank was allowed to deposit with the court said sum of $4,370, and was thereupon dismissed from the action, and said Leggett and Robinson, as such executors, were substituted as defendants. Leggett and Robinson, as such executors, answered plaintiff's complaint, and set up a claim to said money as part of the estate of Amanda M. Scales, deceased. The findings and judgment were in favor of plaintiff and against the substituted defendants, who have appealed from the judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial. Appellants attack the findings as not being supported by the evidence.

It is alleged in the complaint that prior to the commencement of the action plaintiff deposited with defendant the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, and the said defendant received of and from plaintiff, for the use and benefit of plaintiff, the sum of $5,729.69, which said amount said defendant promised to repay to plaintiff, and that said defendant has repaid to plaintiff the sum of $1,359.20 and no more, thus leaving a balance of $4,370.49.

The substituted defendants, in their answer, deny the allegations of the complaint above set forth, and further allege that prior to the 7th day of July, 1904, Amanda M. Scales deposited said sum of $5,729.69 with said defendant, the Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, and caused said deposit to be made payable by said defendant to "Amanda M. Scales or Lizzie C. Robinson." "That said Amanda M. Scales so directed and made said deposit payable to 'Amanda M. Scales or Lizzie C. Robinson' for the sole purpose of enabling said Lizzie C. Robinson, as the agent of said Amanda M. Scales, to withdraw moneys from said deposit for the use and benefit of said 'Amanda M. Scales' and as the same might be required by said Amanda M. Scales, or to be paid out by her through said Lizzie C. Robinson (the plaintiff herein) as the agent of said Amanda M. Scales." That prior to the 7th day of July, 1904, said Amanda M. Scales withdrew from said deposit the sum of $1,359.20, and no more, leaving a balance on deposit with said defendant bank of $4,370.49. Amanda M. Scales died on the 7th day of July, 1904.

The court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, and also found "That it is not true that prior to the commencement of this action, and prior to the 7th day of July, 1904, or at any other time, Amanda M. Scales deposited with said defendant Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco the sum of $5,729.69, or any sum." "That it is not true that prior to the 7th day of July, 1904, or at any other time, said Amanda M. Scales withdrew from said deposit the sum of $1,359.20, or any sum whatever." From the foregoing statement of the contents of the pleadings and of the findings, it is apparent that the plaintiff's complaint was framed upon the theory that all the money deposited was deposited by plaintiff for her own use and from her own money, and that Mrs. Scales deposited none of it, and had no interest therein, and that the court in its findings fully adopted such theory of the facts. No such theory can be sustained upon the facts disclosed by the record before us.

Mrs. Scales, at the opening of the account in question, was upwards of 80 years of age and totally blind. The plaintiff had been in the habit of attending to business for her for several years before the opening of this account. The account was opened on March 10, 1902, by the deposit of a check for $1,149.05 belonging to Mrs. Scales, and was opened in the name of "Amanda M. Scales or Lizzie C. Robinson." Every item of deposit belonged to Mrs. Scales at the time of its deposit, as is admitted by plaintiff on the witness stand, save, possibly one, which confessedly also did originally belong to Mrs. Scale. This item will be referred to later. Concerning the opening of the account the plaintiff testified in substance that she obtained a check for Mrs. Scales, payable to her, from Bovee, Toy & Sontagg for $1,149.05; that Mrs. Scales indorsed the check and plaintiff deposited it in the bank. In answer to the question "For what purpose did Mrs. Scales tell you at that time that she gave you that check?" the plaintiff said, "She wanted to establish a claim there that I could draw against—an account there that I could draw against, and pay bills for her, because she was constantly demanding such services of me, and she said, at the time, she said, 'I want to open this little account, it will be a joint account; whatever is left after I am gone shall be yours.'" She further said that all the other deposits in the account were from Mrs. Scales, and came from rentals of her property and different sources. Upon cross-examination she testified: "When this first deposit was made on the 10th day of March, 1902, Mrs. Scales told me that she wanted me to pay her bills out of the account, and to open that account for the purpose of enabling me conveniently to do that, and whatever remained after she died was to be mine; or that I could draw against it while she lived if I chose to. I never drew against it for any account, except her own, while she lived."

The evidence shows without conflict that plaintiff, acting for Mrs. Scales, for her use and to pay her bills, drew from the account the sum of $1,359.20. Plaintiff also testified that Mrs. Scales also told her that she might draw from the account for her personal use, but she never did so. The evidence above set forth does not support the finding that the sum of $5,729.69 was deposited with the bank by plaintiff for her use and benefit in the sense and meaning of the finding. In a legal sense the deposits were made by Mrs. Scales for her use and benefit. The plaintiff was acting simply as the agent of Mrs. Scales, and was depositing the money of Mrs. Scales for her use. For the same reason the evidence does not support the finding of the court: "That it is not true that prior to the commencement of this action, and prior to the 7th day of July, 1904, or at any other time, Amanda M. Scales deposited with said defendant, Mutual Savings Bank of San Francisco, the sum of $5,729.69, or any other sum." The money was deposited by Mrs. Scales through her agent, the plaintiff, and likewise, in legal effect, whatever was withdrawn was withdrawn by her through her agent the plaintiff.

The evidence does not show a gift by Mrs. Scales to plaintiff of all the moneys deposited in the account or of the account itself. Although the deposit was in the names of either, and either could draw therefrom as between themselves and the bank, this does not show a gift to plaintiff, nor constitute a joint tenancy or ownership with a right of survivorship. Mrs. Scales at all times retained the right herself to draw the money. She retained dominion over it. She never delivered the bank book to plaintiff. It at all times remained in the possession of the bank at the convenience of both Mrs. Scales and plaintiff. "A valid gift goes into immediate effect, and has no reference to the future. It divests the donor of his title, and requires a renunciation on his part of all claim and interest in the subject of the gift." Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Soc., 127 Cal. 137, 59 Pac. 389; Denigan v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 127 Cal. 142, 59 Pac. 390, 78 Am. St. Rep. 35. In both of the above-cited cases money, the separate property of a wife, was deposited in the names of the husband and wife, "and payable to the order of either of them." It was held that the form of the deposit did not indicate any gift to the husband or any joint interest of both parties with a right of survivorship. In the latter case it was held that the rule that joint interests or estates are such as are created by a single will or transfer in equal shares, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy, applies to personality as well as to realty. The doctrine of the Denigan Cases is supported by the following cases, all of which are reviewed in the second Denigan Case: Taylor v. Henry, 48 Md. 550, 30 Am. Rep. 486; Gorman v. Gorman, 87 Md. 338, 39 Atl. 1038; Schick v. Grote, 42 N. J. Eq. 352, 7 Atl. 852; Noyes v. Newburyport Sav. Inst., 164 Mass. 583, 42 N. E. 103, 49 Am. St. Rep. 484.

The evidence does not bring this case within the doctrine of Booth v. Oakland Bank of Savings, 122 Cal. 19, 54 Pac. 370, where money was deposited in such a way as to constitute the bank a trustee for plaintiffs, nor within Sprague v. Walton, 145 Cal. 228, 78 Pac. 645, where the wife, on the order of her husband, actually drew certain money and deposited it in her own name. In no aspect of the case can it be said that the findings attacked are sustained by the evidence, and for this reason the judgment and order must be reversed.

We have not overlooked the testimony given by plaintiff that one item of the deposit was given to her outright by Mrs. Scales for her own use, before the same was deposited. There was a sharp conflict in the evidence on this point, Mr. Leggett testifying to a statement made to him quite inconsistent with the claim that the item in question had been given to plaintiff. In this connection it is well to revert to what was said in Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Soc., supra: "When the claim of a gift is not asserted until after the death of the alleged donor, it should be sustained by clear and satisfactory evidence of every element which is requisite to constitute a gift."

But whatever the fact may be concerning the claim that this particular item was given to plaintiff, and by her afterwards deposited in the account sued on, the amount of the same is less than the balance sued for and for which judgment was given. If this particular sum of money was therefore the money of plaintiff, and deposited by her for her use in the account, this fact does not sustain the findings as made, nor the judgment rendered.

The judgment and order are reversed.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Delfine Albitre was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

R. C. Coleman, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was convicted of murder in the first degree, and adjudged to suffer death. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. No brief having been filed in support of the appeal, the matter was submitted by the Attorney General upon the transcript, without oral argument, there being no appearance for defendant. The failure of defendant to file a brief or to appear on oral argument constitutes under our law sufficient reason for affirming the judgment and order. Pen. Code, § 1253. We have, however, carefully examined the record. The evidence contained therein amply warranted the verdict, and there is nothing to indicate that any substantial error was committed in the proceedings in the trial court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. ALBITRE. (Cr. 1,411.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—FAILURE TO FILE BRIEF—EFFECT—AFFIRMANCE.

In a criminal prosecution, the failure of appellant on appeal to file a brief or appear on oral argument constitutes sufficient reason for affirming a judgment and order denying a new trial, under Pen. Code, § 1253.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by the widow and the executors of the will of the deceased from an order and decree made by the superior court of Alameda county in probate, directing the executors to pay to the county treasurer of Alameda county the sum of $26,684.50 as the inheritance tax upon the interest of the widow in the community property of herself and her deceased husband.

The inheritance tax law of this state, approved March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 341, c. 314), prescribes that "all property which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state from any person who may die seized or possessed of the same * * * shall be and is subject to a tax hereinafter provided for." The single question presented by this appeal is whether the surviving wife's share of the community property is subject to this inheritance tax.

It is conceded that the determination of the trial court that such property is liable for the payment of this tax finds support in the cases of In re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734, Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, and Sharp v. Loupe, 120 Cal. 89, 52 Pac. 134, 586. But it is earnestly contended that this court should overrule these cases to the extent of holding that as to the community property the widow has such an ownership or estate or title as enables her to take upon the death of the husband, not as his heir, and not by succession, but by a certain right of survivorship; that, in effect, the wife during the existence of the marriage status has always enjoyed an ownership in one-half of the community property; and that by the death of the husband her ownership of this moiety is simply released from the power of disposition over it with which the law during his lifetime and during the existence of the marriage status has clothed him. Reference is made to the language of the Civil Code (section 682), which declares that ownership of property by several persons is either (1) of joint interest; (2) of partnership interest; (3) of interests in common; (4) community interest of husband and wife. We are referred also to expressions in some of the earlier decisions of this court, such as the language of Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 256, 63 Am. Dec. 125, where it is said: "The husband and wife during coverture are jointly seized of the property, with a half interest remaining over to the wife, subject only to the husband's disposal during their joint lives. This is a present, definite, and certain interest, which becomes absolute at his death." All of these Code sections, all of these cases, and all of these arguments were most ably urged upon the attention of the court in the first two cases above cited, and the conclusion then reached was there expressed in the following language: "Courts and counsel have occasionally endeavored to find some property right in the wife, or some respect in which the husband's interest falls short of full property. I think it will be universally admitted that so far there has been a complete failure in this respect. The first attempt shown by our reports of that kind is in De Godey v. De Godey, 39 Cal. 157. In that case it is said that, while no other technical term so well defines the wife's interest as the phrase 'a mere expectancy,' * * * it is at the same time * * * so vested in her that the husband cannot deprive her of it by his will, nor voluntarily alienate it for the mere purpose of divesting her of her claim to it." After painstaking investigation and review, and after the fullest deliberation, this court in Re Burdick determined and held, as it declared in Spreckels v. Spreckels, that upon the death of the husband the wife takes one-half of the community property as heir. Every argument here advanced against that conclusion was urged by learned counsel in the other cases, and was fully met in the opinions above referred to. No useful purpose can be subserved by a repetition of these arguments or of the answers to them. A reading of the opinions of this court in those cases will establish how thoroughly the questions were entered into, and what a complete disposition was made of them.

It is finally urged that as laws imposing inheritance taxes are subject to strict construction, and that as it could not have been in the legislative mind that by this act they were imposing a tax upon the widow's share of the community property, therefore a construction should be sought which will avoid this harsh result. But a familiar and fundamental rule for the interpretation of a legislative statute is that it is presumed to have been enacted in the light of such existing judicial decisions as have a direct bearing upon it. Thus the Legislature is presumed to have enacted it with full knowledge that this court in bank, not once, but repeatedly, had declared that the wife did take her share of the community property upon the death of her husband by succession as his heir. The next and necessary presumption that follows is that the Legislature enacted the inheritance tax law in the light of these decisions and to the end that the widow's share of the community property should bear this tax quite as much as would the portion of the husband's separate estate which might come to her by will or by the laws of succession. In other words, since the Legislature knew that the latest expression from this court upon the subject was an unequivocal declaration that the widow did take her share of the community property as heir of the husband, if it had designed that the widow's share should not be subject to this tax, it would have made provision that it should be excepted from the operation of the law. If, however, the truth be as counsel urge, that it never entered the minds of the men constituting the legislative body that they were imposing this tax upon the community interest of the wife, it can only be said that for their ignorance they, and not the courts, are responsible, and for their omission they, and not the courts, must find the remedy.

The order and decree appealed from are affirmed.

JOHNSON et al. v. WILLIAMS, County Auditor. (Sac. 1,617.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1908.)

1. COUNTIES—APPLICATION OF GENERAL FUND—HIGHWAYS.

The Legislature has power to authorize recourse by a county to its general fund, consisting almost entirely of taxes collected from all property of the county, for work on its public roads lying outside of the limits of municipalities within the county, and there is no double taxation of the owners of property within a municipality caused by such an expenditure.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Counties, § 219.]

2. SAME—POWER TO ISSUE BONDS—CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGES AND HIGHWAYS.

Political Code, § 4088, provides that any county may incur a bonded indebtedness for any purpose for which the board of supervisors are authorized to expend the county funds, or for building or constructing roads, bridges, or highways. Held, that a county may issue bonds payable out of taxes to be levied on all property in the county including that in incorporated cities to construct bridges and highways in the county outside the municipalities.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Counties, § 265.]

3. SAME.

Political Code, § 4088, provides that any county may incur a bonded indebtedness for any purpose for which the board of supervisors are herein authorized to expend the county funds, etc. Section 2712 provides that, whenever it appears to the supervisors that any road district is unreasonably burdened by the expense of constructing or by the maintenance and repair of any bridge, they may cause a portion of the cost to be paid out of the general road fund of the county, or by a two-thirds vote of the board of supervisors they may order a portion of the cost to be paid out of the county general fund. Held that, where proceedings for the issuance of county bonds for the purpose, among others, of repairing bridges, were ordered and instituted by the unanimous vote of the board, the bonds could be issued under section 4088, payable by general taxation.

4. SAME—CONSTITUTIONAL REQUIREMENT OF SINKING FUND—SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE.

Const. art. 11, § 18, provides that no county indebtedness exceeding the income provided for the year shall be incurred unless provision shall be first made for the collection of an annual tax to pay the interest, and also provision for a sinking fund for the payment of the principal. Political Code, § 4088, contains a like provision, and provides that the supervisors before or at the time of issuing bonds shall provide for the levy of an annual tax sufficient to effect the objects of the provision. A board of supervisors, when making the order prescribing the form of county bonds on October 7, 1907, provided by ordinance for the levying of an annual tax commencing with the general tax levy to be made in September, 1908. The ordinance, which was adopted subsequent to the general tax levy for the year 1907, which by law is required to be made in September of each year, fully complied with the constitutional and statutory requirements as to the principal and all interest falling due after the first half of the year 1908; but the proposed bonds were to bear date December 10, 1907, with interest payable semi-annually, and the first interest coupon on each bond would by its terms be due on June 10, 1908, if the bond had been sold and delivered prior to that date. Consequently the tax to be levied to pay interest would not be available when the first installment of interest became due. Held, that the object of the provision was simply to insure provision annually at the time of the general tax levy for the necessary funds to pay interest and principal falling due before the time of the next general levy, and it did not contemplate a levy at any other time, and the procedure of the board was in substantial compliance with the Constitution, though the first payment of interest might be deferred for a short time pending proceedings for the collection of the tax.

McFarland, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Mandamus by Howard K. Johnson and others to compel L. P. Williams, as county auditor of Sacramento county, to attest and sign county bonds. Writ granted.

E. S. Wachhorst, Dist. Atty., W. H. Devlin, and J. B. Devine, for petitioners. H. C. Ross, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is a proceeding instituted in this court to obtain a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the defendant to attest and sign, as auditor of Sacramento county, certain proposed bonds of said county which have been ordered issued by the board of supervisors, after such issuance had been authorized by the electors of the county at a special election held in the manner provided by the Constitution and statutes. The auditor's refusal to perform this official action is based on his claims that the bonds cannot be legally issued, and the matter was submitted for decision upon a demurrer to the petition.

The proposed bonds are of three different kinds: First, bonds to the extent of $660,000 for the purpose of erecting and constructing a new county courthouse, and in connection therewith a new county jail in the said county of Sacramento; second, bonds to the extent of $600,000 for the purpose of building certain specified roads and highways in said county; third, bonds to the extent of $225,000 for the purpose of building and constructing certain specified bridges in said county, the itemized statement in this behalf describing the work as to some of the bridges to be "repairs."

The city of Sacramento is a municipal corporation existing under a freeholders' charter, and having its corporate boundaries within the boundaries of the county of Sacramento. Under the existing laws applicable to all municipalities it is required to construct and maintain its own streets and bridges without aid from any county fund, and is exempt from certain road taxes by reason of the following provision of section 2 of the highway act of February 28, 1883, viz.: "Provided further, that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the levy or collection of a road poll tax, or property road tax, within municipalities existing under the laws of this state, wherein work and improvements upon the streets is done by virtue of any law relating to street work and improvements within such municipality. Nor shall any such incorporated city or town be by the supervisors of the county included or embraced in any road district by them established under this act." St. 1883, p. 20, c. 10. The roads and bridges to be constructed and repaired are all outside of the corporate limits of the city of Sacramento. The proposed bonds of the county and the interest thereon are necessarily to be paid from taxes levied by the county on all the property in the county, including that within the corporate limits of said city.

The principal contention of defendant is that the law does not authorize the issuance of county bonds payable from taxes to be levied on all the property of the county, including that situated in incorporated cities and towns, for the purpose of constructing roads, bridges, and highways, or repairing bridges. It is apparent that no constitutional question is presented by this contention. It is undoubtedly within the power of the legislative department to authorize recourse by a county to its general fund, consisting almost entirely of taxes collected from all parts of the county, for work on its public roads and highways lying outside of the limits of municipalities within the county, and our statutes show several instances of the exercise of this power, the validity of which has never been challenged. Section 2712, Pol. Code, authorizes a portion of the cost of constructing or maintaining or repairing any bridge or the cost of purchasing a toll road, to be paid under certain circumstances by the supervisors from the county general fund. Subdivision 10 of section 2643 authorizes the cost of waterworks, oil tanks, etc., for the sprinkling of roads and the cost of sprinkling to be charged to such fund. The same subdivision authorizes the expense of a road three miles in length, the cost of which is too great to be paid out of the road fund to be paid from the general county fund. Section 2647, Pol. Code, contains a similar provision as to one-half of the cost of fences constructed on certain public highways. There is no double taxation caused by such an expenditure to the owners of property within a municipality. What they are thereby caused to pay for the expense of public highways lying outside of the municipality is nothing more than their proportion of such expense as the legislative power deems should be borne by the whole county. The whole matter is purely one of statutory legislation.

Has the Legislature authorized the issuance of county bonds for the purposes under discussion? The proceedings for the issuance of the bonds in question were had under the provisions of section 4088, Pol. Code, enacted March 18, 1907, St. 1907, p. 382, c. 282. That section provides that "any county may incur * * * a bonded indebtedness for any purpose for which the board of supervisors are herein authorized to expend the funds of said county, or for the purpose of building or constructing roads, bridges, or highways." The portion of this provision which we have italicized is new to our law; the corresponding section of the former county government act (section 13, County Government Act 1897; St. 1897, p. 460, c. 277) providing simply that such a bonded indebtedness might be incurred "for any purpose for which the board of supervisors are herein authorized to expend the funds of said county." Under the law last referred to the cases of Devine v. Board of Supervisors, 121 Cal. 670, 54 Pac. 262, and Wright v. Sacramento County (not officially reported) 54 Pac. 1130, were decided, and it was held therein that the statute did not authorize the issuance of county bonds for the construction of a county highway; the reason given being that the board of supervisors of Sacramento county were not authorized to expend the general fund of the county collected from all parts of the county including municipalities for such purposes. After these decisions the Legislature amended the law on the question by adding the words we have italicized above. It is manifest to us that these words were added for the express purpose of changing the statutes as they had been construed in the Devine and Wright Cases to the end that county bonds payable by means of a tax levied on all the property of the county, including that within municipalities, might be issued by any county for the purpose of "building or constructing roads, bridges, or highways." This is the plain meaning of the words used without regard to prior decisions on the subject; but, when the legislative action is viewed in the light of those decisions, there is no possible escape from the conclusion that we have stated. It is unimportant that there has been no modification or repeal of section 2 of the act of February 28, 1883, hereinbefore quoted.

That section simply prohibits the inclusion of a municipality within a road district of the county, or the collection therein of the county road poll tax or the property tax for county highway purposes levied annually by the board of supervisors (Pol. Code, §§ 2651-2655), and its provisions are in no way affected by the later enactment. We are satisfied that section 4088 of the Political Code authorizes the issuance of the bonds of Sacramento county for the purpose of building or constructing roads, bridges, and highways therein.

The amendment of 1907 does not in terms authorize the issuance of county bonds for the purpose of "repairing" bridges already constructed. As we have seen, a portion of the $225,000 issue for bridge purposes was for such repairs, and it is claimed that the rule of the Devine and Wright Cases is applicable thereto. We may assume, without deciding, that the issuance of bonds for "repairs" of bridges is not authorized by the provision for such issuance for the purpose of "building or constructing" bridges. But the section also authorizes such issuance "for any purposes for which the board of supervisors are herein authorized to expend the funds of said county." Section 2712, Pol. Code, provides: "Whenever it appears to the board of supervisors that any road district is or would be unreasonably burdened by the expense of constructing, or by the maintenance and repair of any bridge, * * * they may, in their discretion, cause a portion of the aggregate cost or expense to be paid out of the general road fund of the county, or by vote of two-thirds of the board of supervisors, said board may, in their discretion, order a portion of the cost of construction and repairs of bridges * * * to be paid out of the county general fund as well as the general road fund." By this section the board of supervisors of Sacramento county are authorized to expend money in the general fund of the county, collected from all parts of the county, including municipalities, for repairing bridges, under the circumstances and in the manner provided by the section. The proceedings for the issuance of these bonds were ordered and instituted by the unanimous vote of such board, and this must be taken as a determination by the whole board of the facts authorizing resort to such general fund for the purpose indicated. Under these circumstances the issuance of bonds for repairing bridges was permitted by that part of section 4088 which authorizes the issuance of bonds for any purpose for which the board are authorized to expend the funds of the county.

The only remaining objection is one made to all the bonds, based on the provisions of section 18, art. 11, of the Constitution. This section provides that no indebtedness or liability exceeding the income or revenue provided for the year shall be incurred, "unless before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also provision to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal," etc. The section of the Political Code under which these proceedings were had (section 4088) provides, following the constitutional provision, for the levy of a tax by the board of supervisors "at the time of making the next general tax levy after incurring the indebtedness," and annually thereafter, for the purposes of paying the bonds and interest, "which must not be less than sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and such portion of the principal, if any, as is to become due before the time for making the next general tax levy." It further provides: "And the board of supervisors, before or at the time of issuing said bonds by ordinance, shall provide for the levy of an annual tax sufficient to effect the objects of this provision." The petition in this proceeding shows that the board of supervisors did, at the time of making the order prescribing the form of bonds and coupons, etc., October 7, 1907, adopt an ordinance providing for the levying of an annual tax commencing with the general tax levy to be made in September, 1908, sufficient for the purposes stated, as well as for the purpose of paying all interest accruing on such bonds. This ordinance was adopted subsequent to the general tax levy for the year, 1907, which by law is required to be made in the month of September of each year, and the provisions therein for an annual tax fully complied with the requirements of the Constitution and the statute as to the principal, and as to all interest falling due after the first half of the year 1908. But the proposed bonds were to bear date December 10, 1907, with interest payable semiannually, and the first interest coupon on each bond would, by its terms, be due and payable on June 10, 1908, if such bond had been sold and delivered prior to that date. The result would be that the tax to be levied for the purpose of paying interest would not be available at the time the first installment of interest became due. It is upon this fact alone, as we understand it, that the claim of the defendant that the constitutional requirement has not been complied with rests. We are of the opinion, however, that there was a substantial compliance with the requirement of the constitutional provision. The provision was adopted in the light of the rule which has always existed in this state for an annual general tax levy. No levy at any other time than that of the general tax levy was contemplated. The object was simply to insure provision annually, at the time of such general tax levy, for such money as would be necessary to pay interest and principal falling due before the time of the next general tax levy, and to place in the sinking fund for the payment of the principal the amount required by law. That the payment of interest might be deferred for a short time pending proceedings for the collection of a tax for that purpose already levied, or that the payment of the first installment of the interest on the bonds might be deferred until a general tax levy and collection thereunder, because it fell due prior to the first general tax levy after the incurring of the indebtedness, were not matters being guarded against by the framers of the Constitution. The important thing was that a tax sufficient to pay the interest and principal falling due, and to make up the necessary sinking fund, should be levied and collected annually, and this we are satisfied was all that was intended by the provision under discussion. Under this construction of such provision, the proceedings for the incurring of the indebtedness were in compliance with the constitutional requirement.

This disposes of all the objections made by the defendant to the proposed bonds. It follows that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought.

Let the peremptory writ of mandate issue in accord with the prayer of the petition, requiring the defendant forthwith to attest and sign, as auditor of Sacramento county, the bonds and interest coupons therein described, and to do and perform such other acts in the premises as are required of him as such auditor.

QUIST v. MICHAEL et al. (S. F. 4,821.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 20, 1908.)

1. APPEAL—PRACTICE—DISMISSAL.

Where the determination of the question whether a party not served with notice of appeal is an adverse party who should have been served, and whether or not as between the parties actually served a judgment could be rendered without affecting the rights of the party not served, necessitates an examination of the record, such examination will not be made in advance of the hearing on the merits, and a motion to dismiss the appeal for failure to serve the notice will be continued to such hearing.

2. SAME.

Though a case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, with a stipulation waiving findings, the trial court had jurisdiction to entertain a motion for a new trial, and on appeal from its order denying the motion the appellate court acquired jurisdiction to review the trial court's action, and a motion to dismiss the appeal would not lie.

3. SAME—FRIVOLOUS APPEAL.

Where an appeal is properly taken, and the appellate court has acquired jurisdiction, it will not, on a motion to dismiss the appeal, examine the record to determine whether or not the appeal was frivolous and taken merely for vexation and delay, though, if such proves to be the case, respondent's rights will be protected by the imposition of a penalty.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Charles Quist against David B. Michael and others wherein certain of defendants filed cross-complaints. From the judgment and from an order denying their motion for new trial, defendants H. H. Hill and another appeal. Respondents' motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment ordered to stand over, to be renewed, heard, and decided when the case is presented on its merits, and their motion to dismiss the appeal from the order denied.

McNab & Hirsch, for appellants. Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas, for respondents. Robert Duncan, for cross-complainants.

HENSHAW, J. The appeals in the above entitled case are from the judgment and from the order denying appellants' motion for a new trial. Respondents move to dismiss the appeals, the first upon the ground that Sandman, a defaulting defendant, was not served with notice of the appeal, and is an adverse party, whose rights will be injuriously affected by a reversal or modification of the judgment; the second upon the ground that the case was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, with a stipulation waiving findings, and that, as a motion for a new trial is a request to the court to re-examine an issue of fact, since here the facts are stipulated, an appeal from the court's order refusing to do so is a vain and useless thing.

As to the appeal from the judgment, it is sufficient to say that the determination of the question whether or not defendant Sandman is an adverse party who should have been served, and whether or not, as between the appellants and the respondents actually served, a judgment could be rendered without affecting the rights of Sandman, necessitates an examination of the record. In accordance with the practice of this court in such cases that examination will not be made in advance of the hearing upon the merits, but may be urged at the time of such hearing. Hibernia S. and L. Soc. v. Behnke, 118 Cal. 498, 50 Pac. 666; Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 24, 52 Pac. 40. It is ordered, therefore, that the motion to dismiss the appeal from the judgment stand over, to be renewed, heard, and decided when the case is presented upon its merits.

As to the motion to dismiss the appeal from the order of the court refusing to grant a new trial, it is manifest that the trial court had jurisdiction to entertain the motion for a new trial, and by appeal from its order this court has acquired jurisdiction to review the action of the trial court. Under these circumstances a motion to dismiss does not lie. If it shall prove, as respondents argue, that the appeal is a vain and useless thing, the result will be an affirmance of the order of the trial court. The appeal having been properly taken, and jurisdiction by this court having been acquired, we will not look into the record to determine the merits of respondents' contention. If it shall appear that the appeal was frivolous and taken merely for vexation and delay, a respondent's right in such a case will always be adequately protected by the imposition of a penalty.

The motion to dismiss the appeal from the order refusing to grant a new trial is therefore denied.

CHAMBERLAIN v. CHAMBERLAIN et al.
(Civ. 439.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
March 4, 1908.)

1. TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—CONVEYANCE OF LAND—"ACTUAL FRAUD."

A person prevailed upon plaintiff to deed his land to her without consideration, falsely pretending that suits were about to be brought which would result in plaintiff's liability for certain indebtedness as a stockholder in a company, and that his land might be taken for the debt, and that she would upon demand reconvey the land which she subsequently refused to do. Held, that she was guilty of actual fraud within Civ. Code, § 1572, subds. 1, 4, 5, providing that actual fraud within the meaning of the chapter relating to contracts consists of the suggestion as a fact of that which is not true by a party to a contract with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract or a promise made by such a person without any intention to perform it, or any other act fitted to deceive, and under section 2224, providing that one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it, she became an involuntary trustee for plaintiff, in the absence of an affirmative showing that his purpose in conveying the land was unlawful or immoral.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, §§ 144-147.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 157, 158.]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—VALIDITY OF TRANSACTION BETWEEN PARTIES.

Even if plaintiff in making the conveyance was induced by a desire to preserve his property from sequestration by the creditors of his corporation, the grantee could not take refuge behind the pretense that in yielding to her solicitations he committed a wrong against others, and thereby deprive him of any redress.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 524-529.]

3. TRUSTS—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH.

In a proceeding to have land which had been conveyed without consideration on an agreement to reconvey on demand adjudged to be held in trust, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that plaintiff had requested the reconveyance of the premises.

4. SAME.

In a proceeding to have land which had been conveyed without consideration on an agreement to reconvey on demand adjudged to be held in trust, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that the husband of the transferee had knowledge that she took and held the title in trust.

5. SAME—NOTICE OF TERMS OF TRUST.

Where a wife is a transferee of property held in trust without consideration under an agreement to reconvey on demand, it is not of decisive significance as affecting the right to a reconveyance that her husband did not have full knowledge of her agreement to reconvey, where he was not a purchaser for value, and the principle of estoppel has no application as in the case of a purchaser or incumbrancer for value in good faith without notice.

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding to have land which had been conveyed without consideration on an agreement to reconvey on demand adjudged to be held in trust, the admission of evidence of defendant's declaration in reference to a former conveyance of the property to him to the effect that if he had the place over again he would not deed it back was of little importance, and not prejudicial.

7. TRUSTS—ACTION TO ESTABLISH—LACHES.

Where defendant was in possession of land which had been conveyed to his wife by plaintiff without consideration, and upon an agreement to reconvey upon demand which had been refused, and defendant had lost nothing by the delay, but had on the contrary benefited by plaintiff's forbearance, the doctrine of laches had no application to the bringing of a suit to enforce a reconveyance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Joel Chamberlain against William M. Chamberlain and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. S. Van Meter, H. K. Harris, and D. E. Perkins, for appellant. F. H. Short and A. M. Drew, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to have certain land in Fresno county consisting of 80 acres adjudged to be held in trust for the use and benefit of plaintiff, and to have it conveyed to him in accordance with the terms of the said trust. In 1895 plaintiff conveyed this land to E. J. Chamberlain, the wife of the defendant, William M. Chamberlain, by deed of grant, bargain, and sale, naming $3,000 as the consideration, though it is admitted that there was in fact no consideration; appellant, however, claiming in his answer that there was a gift of the property to the said E. J. Chamberlain. The parties named, at the time mentioned, for some time prior thereto, and for several years thereafter, resided together on the land in question. Their relations were of a friendly and confidential character. At the same time plaintiff was the owner of certain shares of stock in a corporation known as the Mill Race Ditch Company. This company had become involved in controversies with certain landowners, and suits were pending against the company. Under these circumstances, according to the allegation of the complaint, "on or about the 13th day of April, 1895, the said E. J. Chamberlain, with intent to deceive and defraud this plaintiff, and for the purpose of procuring the legal title to the said premises, did represent, assert, and say to the said plaintiff that certain parties whose true names are to plaintiff unknown were about to commence a suit against the Mill Race Ditch Company for certain indebtedness due from the said corporation to the said parties; that the said E. J. Chamberlain did then and there advise the said plaintiff to convey the said premises to her, and did agree then and there that if the said plaintiff would so convey the said premises that she would upon demand reconvey the said premises to the said plaintiff; * * * that each and all of said statements and representations made by the said E. J. Chamberlain to the plaintiff were false and fraudulent, and made with the intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiff."

This averment of the complaint really presents the vital point in the case. It is contended by appellant that plaintiff relied upon such representations at his peril, and that a conveyance in accordance with the said agreement with E. J. Chamberlain would not create a trust enforceable in a court of equity. It is said that: "Unless there was such fraud practiced by E. J. Chamberlain, or such undue influence exercised by her upon the plaintiff in inducing him to convey the land to her as would make her an involuntary trustee, the relation of trustee could not and would not exist. Her verbal promise to hold it in trust would not make her a trustee"—citing section 852 of the Civil Code; Russ v. Mebius, 16 Cal. 357; Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 Pac. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Hasshagen v. Hasshagen, 80 Cal. 514, 22 Pac. 294.

We understand that respondent agrees with appellant that the case must fail unless the allegations of the complaint and the evidence disclose such fraud or undue influence as to create a constructive trust or one by operation of law, and no fault is found with the authorities cited by appellant, but only with the application of them attempted to be made to the particular facts of this case. The claim is made by respondent in other words that we have here the trust contemplated by subdivision 3 of said section 852 and recognized in said cases cited by appellant. For instance, in the Russ Case, supra, it is held that, "where a son conveys real estate to his father, the only consideration being a verbal agreement by the father to make a will and devise to the son certain property and the father dies without having complied with the agreement, the agreement is void, the conveyance is executed without consideration, express or implied, and a trust results in favor of plaintiff by implication of law, and he may set aside the conveyance and recover the property"; and the doctrine is asserted which must be accepted as well settled that, "unless there be evidence of fraud or mistake, the recitals in a deed are conclusive upon the grantee, and no resulting trust can be raised in his favor in opposition to the express terms of the conveyance." The decision in the Feeney Case is based upon the ground that there was no actual or constructive fraud. The court says: "For all that appears to the contrary, Michael Feeney's deed may have been given and received in entire good faith." In the Hasshagen Case it is held that, "in order to entitle respondent to recover, it was necessary for her to prove that the trust attempted to be established was created or declared in writing or by operation of law," and that nothing was shown to take the case out of the statute; and, besides, that the original intent and purpose of the grantor conveying the property was to hinder and defraud his creditors, and hence there was the strongest reason for the application of the statute of frauds.

But here the allegation is that certain representations were made by the grantee, that they were false, and made with intent to deceive plaintiff, and that he relied upon the representations and promises and therefore executed the conveyance. The case is thus brought within the terms of section 1572 of the Civil Code providing that: "Actual fraud, within the meaning of this chapter, consists in any of the following acts, committed by a party to the contract, or with his connivance with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract. (1) The suggestion, as a fact, of that which is not true by one who does not believe it to be true; * * * (4) a promise made without any intention of performing it; or (5) any other act fitted to deceive." And as to the relation thereafter sustained to the property by the one obtaining such an advantage section 2224 of the Civil Code provides that "one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust, or other wrongful act is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained, for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." The only possible objection, then, to the scheme of the complaint lies in the suggestion that it gives rise to the inference that plaintiff's purpose in conveying the property was unlawful or immoral, and hence that he does not come into court with clean hands, and cannot justly invoke the interposition of equity. We think it is sufficient to say that it does not affirmatively appear from the complaint that plaintiff's purpose was to defraud any creditor. The indebtedness of the corporation, it is true, in which he was a stockholder, is alleged as one of the inducements for the conveyance; but we must indulge the presumption that his intention was consistent with a prudential regard for his own interest as well as with the utmost good faith toward his creditors. Especially should this position be taken in view of the importunities of the grantee and the fact that there is no evidence that any creditor was actually defrauded.

Turning to the proceedings of the trial, we find in the testimony of the plaintiff sufficient support for said allegation and the corresponding finding of the court. The plaintiff testified: "She said: 'You better make the ranch over in my name, for the ditch company was in debt, and they would be liable to come on to it and take the whole ranch, and if I didn't look out I would lose my ranch, and she would make the deed back to me after the indebtedness was settled.' I deeded it to her so that I could have, if the company ever come on to me, that I could have longer time to pay up the indebtedness, but then I never deeded it to put the company out anything." The subsequent conduct of the grantee justifies the inference that she made the statement and promise to the plaintiff with the intent to deceive and mislead him. Hence a case of actual fraud was made out. Again, the age of the plaintiff and the confidence he reposed in the grantee are sufficient in connection with other evidence to justify the charge of constructive fraud. The fact that she was his daughter-in-law is not of itself sufficient to prove the fiduciary relation, but this is an important circumstance, and there is substantial support in the record for the conclusion that she became the involuntary trustee of plaintiff, as she certainly assumed "a relation of personal confidence" with him.

Even conceding that in making the conveyance plaintiff was influenced somewhat by a desire to preserve his property from sequestration by the creditors of the corporation, still giving full credit, as we must, to the evidence favorable to the judgment of the court below, we cannot find in that circumstance alone sufficient reason to disturb the findings. We are bound to accept as true that E. J. Chamberlain importuned plaintiff to convey the property to her upon the assurance that she would reconvey it on demand, that she made the promise with the intent to deceive him, and that he had confidence in her representations and therefore executed the deed. It follows, we think, upon the clearest principles of equity, that she could not take refuge behind the pretense that in yielding to her solicitations he committed a wrong against others, thereby depriving him of any redress for her gross misconduct. The law is more indulgent to human infirmity, and less tolerant of deliberate and obtrusive depravity. A. cannot lay a trap for B., secure his confidence, induce him to make a conveyance of his property in the expectation that it will be returned, and thereafter retain the fruits of his perfidy on the ground that B. too readily yielded to temptation to save himself at the possible expense of creditors. The greater offense of the tempter overshadows and renders innocuous the weakness of the one of whom advantage is taken. For further illustration of the principles herein involved we refer to the following cases: Brown v. Burbank, 64 Cal. 99, 27 Pac. 940; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Broder v. Conklin, 77 Cal. 330, 19 Pac. 513; Adams v. Lombard, 80 Cal. 426, 22 Pac. 180; Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 41, 27 Pac. 521; Hayne v. Hermann, 97

Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171; Crosby v. Clark, 132 Cal. 1, 63 Pac. 1022; More v. More, 133 Cal. 489, 65 Pac. 1044; Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 92, 68 Pac. 482; Nobles v. Hutton (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 289. The views we have thus expressed render it unnecessary to discuss at length the other points made by appellant.

It is claimed that the evidence fails to support that part of finding No. 3 to the effect that plaintiff requested E. J. Chamberlain to reconvey said premises. He so testified substantially when he said: "I wanted my daughter-in-law to make the ranch back to me, and she wouldn't. She turned it off and went away. I think some two or three times I had a talk with her about making it back to me, and she rather put me off, and she wouldn't do it—put me off." The foregoing is obviously sufficient, although the finding itself is immaterial. It would not aid appellant if plaintiff made no demand upon E. J. Chamberlain for a reconveyance.

Again, it is contended that there is insufficient support for the finding that "William Chamberlain had full knowledge of all the facts of the verbal agreement between plaintiff and the said E. J. Chamberlain, and that he knew she took and held the title in trust." William Chamberlain, however, did testify that he knew the circumstances why the deed was made, though denying that he heard anything said about the place being deeded back. But the court was not bound to accept the latter statement. Giving full credit to the testimony of the plaintiff as to the circumstances surrounding the transaction, it would be justified in concluding that the defendant knew that his wife agreed to reconvey. But, again, assuming that the issue is raised by the denial in the answer "that said defendant and William M. Chamberlain on or about the 13th day of April, 1895, or at any other time, had full knowledge of said alleged verbal agreement between plaintiff and said E. J. Chamberlain," it would seem to be without decisive significance in view of the fact that appellant was not a purchaser for value. There is no apparent reason why a voluntary transferee, whether with or without knowledge of the circumstances under which his grantor was clothed with the legal title, should not receive the property charged with the original trust. The principle of estoppel has no application as in case of a purchaser or incumbrancer for value in good faith without notice.

Complaint is made also of the finding that "all the allegations of defendant's answer are untrue." Appellant is right in his contention that the evidence shows an indebtedness of the corporation at the time plaintiff deeded the property to E. J. Chamberlain, but there is testimony that the corporation was perfectly solvent, and there is no showing that any creditor was defrauded. Under the circumstances, if the finding had been that this allegation of the answer is true, the result would not be changed. Even conceding that plaintiff desired to protect his property against seizure by creditors of the corporation, appellant should not be permitted to set this up as a defense, as we have seen, in view of the evidence and finding as to the actual fraud of said E. J. Chamberlain.

Again, it is contended that the court committed error in overruling an objection to the testimony of a witness as to a declaration of appellant in reference to a former conveyance of the property to the effect that if he had the place over again he wouldn't deed it back. This might be some evidence of animus towards the plaintiff, and was probably admissible for that purpose as affecting the credibility of appellant; but if erroneously received it could hardly have been prejudicial, as it is a circumstance of little importance.

Again, it is contended that plaintiff should not have prevailed on account of his long delay in bringing suit, as equity abhors a stale claim, and it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show facts excusing his delay in asserting the fraud. Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 581, 53 Pac. 26; Harrington v. Paterson, 124 Cal. 542, 57 Pac. 476; 2 Pomeroy's Eq. Jur., § 817. In the Truett Case it is doubtful whether there were any fraudulent acts shown. There was an unexplained delay of 14 years, and it was held that the court below properly exercised its discretion in denying the relief claimed. Harrington v. Paterson presents the case of rescission of a contract of purchase, and in accordance with the provisions of the statute it is held that the party who claims to have been defrauded must act promptly after the discovery of the fraud. Pomeroy states the conditions under which acquiescence may prevent the right of equitable relief as follows: "The acquiescence must be with knowledge of the wrongful acts themselves and of their injurious consequences. It must be voluntary, not the result of accident, nor of causes rendering it a physical, legal, or moral necessity, and it must last for an unreasonable length of time, so that it will be inequitable even to the wrongdoer to enforce the peculiar remedies of equity against him after he has been suffered to go on unmolested and his conduct apparently acquiesced in," and he adds that "it follows that what will amount to a sufficient acquiescence in any particular case must largely depend upon its own special circumstances." But there is no reason here for the application of the doctrine of laches. The appellant has lost nothing by plaintiff's delay in bringing the action. It is not a case of rescission, but of forbearance to press a right to demand performance of an agreement, which indulgence has inured to the benefit of appellant, who, longer than he had a right to expect, has enjoyed the bounty of plaintiff.

Upon an examination of the whole record, we find no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

RAISCH v. M. K. & T. OIL CO. et al.
(Civ. 413.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 11, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS—ASSESSMENTS ON CAPITAL STOCK.

An assessment upon the capital stock of a corporation can be levied by the board of directors only at a regular meeting or at a special meeting regularly called, and the right to levy such an assessment can be legally exercised only in the manner provided by law or by the charter of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 654–656.]

2. SAME—FORFEITURE OF SHARES.

The proceedings by which the stock of a shareholder of a corporation is declared forfeited must be strictly pursued.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 396–402.]

3. SAME—DIRECTORS—NOTICE OF MEETINGS.

The law contemplates that the directors of a corporation shall all have notice of each and every meeting. If a meeting is a regular one, the by-laws fix the time and place. If it is an adjourned meeting, they are each in law presumed to know what they have done at a regular meeting, and, if it is a special meeting, notice of the time and place of holding it must be given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 1292–1300.]

4. SAME—QUORUM—ADJOURNMENT.

Civ. Code, § 308, provides that the corporate powers, business, and property of all corporations must be exercised, conducted, and controlled by a board of directors, that a majority of the directors is a sufficient number to form a board for the transaction of business, and that every decision of a majority of the directors made when duly assembled is valid as a corporate act. Section 305 provides that, unless a quorum is present and acting, no business performed or "act done" is valid as against the corporation. Held, that a minority of the board of directors have no power to adjourn the time of holding a regular meeting, and an assessment levied on the capital stock at the adjourned meeting without previous notice to all the directors is void.

5. SAME—ACTIONS BY STOCKHOLDER AGAINST CORPORATION—PLEADING.

In an action by a stockholder and director against the corporation to have an illegal sale of his stock set aside and the stock reissued to him, and to be restored to his rights as a stockholder, it is not necessary for him to allege the value of the stock, or that he has been injured, since it will be assumed that the stock has some value, especially as it entitled the holder to the office of director.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Harry J. Raisch against the M. K. & T. Oil Company and others. Judgment for defendants on demurrer to complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wal. J. Tuska, for appellant. Wm. R. Davis, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. The court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint, and, upon the plaintiff declining further to amend, judgment was entered for defendant. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment, and the plaintiff claims that the complaint states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer thereto.

The facts necessary to an understanding of the question to be decided may be briefly stated as follows: The defendant is a corporation duly organized and having a board of five directors, which, during the times the acts complained of were committed, was composed of this plaintiff, David M. De Long, George D. Metcalf, George Schmidt, and R. A. Jackson. Plaintiff was the owner of 46,900 shares of stock. The by-laws of the corporation provided that the regular meetings of the board of directors should be held on the last Saturday of each month, and that each director should receive a notice, personal or otherwise, of all meetings called for any other time than the regular meeting. On Saturday, April 30, 1904, which was the day of the regular meeting of the directors pursuant to the by-laws, only Metcalf and Jackson were present, and an entry was caused to be made in the minutes as follows: "No quorum. Adjourned to May 7, 1904, at 2 p. m. Attest, R. A. Jackson, Secretary." On said May 7th, at the hour named, Metcalf, Jackson, and Schmidt met in the office of defendant without previous notice, personal or otherwise, of such meeting to plaintiff, or to any other director than the three who were present, and without plaintiff's knowledge or assent levied the assessment of five cents per share on each and every share of the capital stock of the corporation; this being the assessment claimed to be void in this case. Under the said assessment as so made, and not otherwise, the defendant sold the said 46,900 shares of stock belonging to plaintiff, becoming the purchaser itself, and after such sale it refused, and ever since has refused, to recognize the plaintiff as a stockholder or director of the corporation.

The question in the case is as to whether or not the assessment was valid; and this depends upon whether or not the meeting at which the levy was made was a regular meeting. It is not claimed that any special meeting had been called, or that any notice had been given of a special meeting in any manner. An assessment upon the capital stock of a corporation can be levied by a board of directors only at a regular meeting, or at a special meeting regularly called. Thompson v. Williams, 76 Cal. 155, 18 Pac. 153, 9 Am. St. Rep. 187; Harding v. Vandewater, 40 Cal. 78. The proceedings by which the stock of a stockholder of a corporation is declared forfeited must be strictly pursued. The right to levy an assessment can only be legally exercised in the manner provided by law or by the charter of the corporation. Ruck v. Caledonia Silver Mining Co. (Cal. App. filed Sept. 4, 1907) 92 Pac. 194; H. Kraft Co. Bank v. Bank of Orland, 133 Cal. 64, 65 Pac. 143. If a minority of a board of directors can adjourn a regular meeting where no quorum is present to a time and place named, and thus make such adjourned meeting a regular meeting, then the assessment in question was valid; otherwise not. If Metcalf and Jackson could adjourn the regular meeting of April 30, 1904, to May 7th, and procure Schmidt to be present at that time, thus making a quorum, without notice to the other directors, and then pass a valid order of assessment, every other director could have done the same thing; that is, either one of them could have adjourned the meeting. Of course, if a quorum had been present on April 30, 1904, the regular meeting could have been adjourned to any day and hour, and such adjourned meeting would have been a regular meeting, and not a special one; but no quorum was present, and hence the regular meeting could not be adjourned because there was no regular meeting. The time had arrived for the regular meeting, but only a minority of the directors were present. Such minority could not adjourn the meeting for the simple reason that they had nothing before them but the by-laws fixing the time and place for the regular meeting, and the fact that at such time and place there was no meeting and only two directors being present. The law contemplates that the directors shall all have notice of each and every meeting. If it is the regular meeting the by-laws fix the time and place; if it is an adjourned meeting the directors are each in law presumed to know what they have done at a regular meeting; and, if it is a special meeting, the notice of time and place of holding such meeting must be given. If such were not the rule, and if the meeting could be adjourned (as in this case) without notice, serious injury might result. Some unforeseen reason might prevent a quorum of directors from attending. Two of the directors, with improper motives, might adjourn the meeting for one day, and procure one other director, who might be either not well informed or easily influenced, and with the aid of such third director, and with no notice to the other directors, pass upon matters of grave importance to each and every stockholder.

The Code provides that the corporate powers, business, and property of all corporations must be exercised, conducted, and controlled by a board of directors; that a majority of the directors is a sufficient number to form a board for the transaction of business; and that every decision of a majority of the directors forming such board, made when duly assembled, is valid as a corporate act. Civ. Code, § 308. It is provided that, "unless a quorum is present and acting, no business performed or act done is valid as against the corporation." Civ. Code, § 305. The adjournment was an act done, and hence, under the express provisions of the Code, it was not a valid act. It is significant in this connection that there is no provision of the Code to which our attention has been called authorizing a meeting of the directors of a corporation to be adjourned by a minority. In the very chapter in which it is provided that unless a quorum is present and acting no act done is valid as against the corporation we find a provision that, if at a stockholders' meeting there is not present a majority of the subscribed stock or of the members, the meeting may be adjourned from day to day or from time to time, such adjournment and the reasons therefor being recorded in the journal of proceedings of the board of directors. Civ. Code, § 312. Counsel have been unable to cite us to any authority, either in this state or elsewhere, directly in point. We have examined the cases cited, but find nothing to aid us in the solution of the question involved here. We therefore conclude there was no power in the minority of the board of directors to adjourn the time of holding the regular meeting, and that the assessment was levied without authority, and is therefore void.

It was not necessary in this case for the complaint to allege the value of the stock, or that the plaintiff had been injured. We will presume that 46,900 shares of the capital stock of the defendant had some value; at least, it entitled the plaintiff to hold the office of director of the corporation to which he had been elected, and to participate in the meetings of the stockholders. Defendant corporation will not be allowed to acquire the title to plaintiff's entire corporate stock through an illegal sale under a void assessment, and then hold it for the alleged reason that it does not appear to have any value. It is not analogous to a case in which a stockholder is suing for damages for an illegal conversion of his stock. Here the plaintiff is asking to have the illegal sale set aside, 46,900 shares reissued to him; and that he be restored to his rights as a stockholder.

The judgment is reversed.

HUBBELL v. HUBBELL. (Civ. 402.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 11, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court, May 10, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE — GROUNDS — COMPLAINT — "ESPIONAGE."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 426, providing that a complaint must contain a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language, a complaint in a suit for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, which alleges that defendant, since the marriage, has inflicted on plaintiff grievous bodily injury and mental suffering, that continuously during five years preceding the commencement of the suit defendant has maintained over plaintiff an unreasonable espionage, and has manifested unnecessary jealousy of plaintiff, and has repeatedly made to plaintiff false accusations of infidelity, and has taken possession of letters addressed to him by patients, opened the same, and has refused to surrender them, and that defendant instigated a third person to make a violent personal assault on plaintiff, as a result of which plaintiff sustained serious personal injuries, is good as against a general demurrer, though the objection that the complaint does not show how plaintiff sustained any serious injury from the assault is well taken; "espionage" being defined as the practice of spying or secretly watching for the purpose of detecting wrongdoing, excessive or offensive surveillance.

2. SAME — APPEAL — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT.

Whether the evidence in a suit for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty was sufficient to prove the ultimate facts alleged in the complaint, and whether or not the various acts of defendant caused plaintiff grievous mental suffering, were matters for the trial court.

3. SAME — PLEADING — COMPLAINT.

In a suit for divorce, either on the ground of habitual intemperance or on the ground of extreme cruelty, both being defined by the Code, the complaint must allege the ultimate facts, but need not allege the evidence thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, § 293.]

4. PLEADING — CONCLUSIONS.

In a suit for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, the acts and conduct relied on must be stated, and not conclusions of law.

5. APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS ADMISSIONS OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in a suit for divorce tried by the court, the uncontradicted evidence showed that a third person had assaulted plaintiff, who sought to show that the assault had been instigated by defendant, error in permitting a physician to testify to a statement made to him by plaintiff, to the effect that plaintiff had been attacked by the third person, and that plaintiff had received injuries, was not prejudicial to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action for divorce by G. R. Hubbell against Harriet H. Hubbell. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank McGowan, for appellant. Martin Stevens, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to procure a divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty. After a trial lasting three days, the court filed its findings and conclusions of law, upon which judgment was entered for plaintiff as prayed. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. No question is raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings, nor is there any question to the property rights or the custody of children.

The principal point relied upon by appellant is the contention that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It is claimed that the complaint does not state with sufficient particularity and certainty the facts relied upon as constituting extreme cruelty. The complaint alleges as follows: "That since their intermarriage defendant has inflicted upon plaintiff grievous bodily injury and grievous mental suffering, and more particularly as follows: That continuously during the five years last past, and immediately next preceding the commencement of this action, defendant has exercised and maintained over plaintiff and his affairs an unreasonable espionage, and has manifested an improper, unreasonable, and unnecessary jealousy of and concerning plaintiff, and has repeatedly made to plaintiff false accusations of infidelity, well knowing her charges to be false, and has spied upon him in an offensive manner, and pried into his private affairs, and has taken possession of letters addressed to him by patients, opened the same, read them, and refused to surrender them to plaintiff, who was during all of said times and now is a physician and surgeon engaged in the practice of his profession in the city and county of San Francisco. That on the 14th day of July, 1904, at the residence of plaintiff and defendant in the city and county of San Francisco, defendant instigated one Hinckley, her son-in-law, to make a violent personal assault upon plaintiff, as a result of which plaintiff sustained serious personal injury." The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the general ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and upon the special ground that it is uncertain, in this: "That it does not appear therefrom how the plaintiff sustained any serious personal injury from an assault." The demurrer also alleged that the complaint is ambiguous for the reason last stated, and, further, that it is unintelligible for the same reason.

It will thus be seen that the demurrer is general except as to that part of the complaint relating to the assault. As to such part, the objection is that it is not made clear how the plaintiff could have sustained "serious personal injury from an assault." It may be admitted that the complaint does not show how the violent assault could have resulted in serious personal injury, but, if the personal injury portion be eliminated, we still have the clear statement that at the time and place named the defendant instigated Hinckley to make a violent person assault upon the plaintiff. If such an assault did not or could not have caused serious personal injury, still it could have been one of the factors in causing the plaintiff grievous mental suffering, and the complaint states that the defendant has inflicted upon plaintiff grievous mental suffering by all the means stated in the complaint. As to the portion of the complaint to which the general demurrer was pointed, while it is not a model of pleading, we conclude that it is sufficient, at least when tested by general demurrer. It is alleged that defendant has for the five years last past exercised over plaintiff and his affairs an unreasonable espionage. Espionage is defined as "the practice of spying or secretly watching for the purpose of detecting wrongdoing; excessive or offensive surveillance." Standard Dictionary. It may be reasonably inferred that, if a wife has continuously and unreasonably for five years spied upon and secretly watched her husband, it would probably cause him grievous mental suffering, and it is alleged in the complaint that it did cause him such mental suffering. It is further alleged that during all such times defendant has manifested an improper, unnecessary, and unreasonable jealousy of and concerning plaintiff. This language is such that a person of ordinary understanding would know what is intended, and the same may be said as to the "false accusations of infidelity." These accusations are alleged to have been made to plaintiff, and we will not presume that for a wife to falsely accuse her husband of infidelity, and this repeatedly and without cause, would not cause him grievous mental suffering. It is further alleged "that defendant has taken possession of letters addressed to him by patients, opened the same, and refused to surrender them to plaintiff." We do not think it was necessary to state the date of the letters, whom they were written by, or their contents; and, while a pleading should state facts, it is not required that it should state evidence. The ultimate facts must be stated in such manner as to apprise the opposite party of what is relied upon. As to whether the evidence was sufficient to prove the ultimate facts, and as to whether or not the various acts and conduct of defendant caused plaintiff grievous mental suffering, were matters for the trial court. Under our system the complaint is only required to state the facts constituting the cause of action in ordinary and concise language. Code Civ. Proc. § 426. In Smith v. Smith, 124 Cal. 651, 57 Pac. 573, it is said: "Grievous bodily injury, or grievous mental suffering, is the ultimate fact, and should be alleged. There is no attempt whatever to allege bodily injury, and the probative facts alleged in no degree establish grievous mental suffering." In Forney v. Forney, 80 Cal. 528, 22 Pac. 294, the action was brought on the ground of habitual intemperance. The complaint alleged "that for four years and eight months last past said defendant has been and still is guilty of habitual intemperance from the use of intoxicating drinks, to that degree that the intemperance of defendant reasonably inflicts a course of great mental anguish upon said plaintiff." It was claimed that the complaint was insufficient, in that it did not state facts, but conclusions of law. The court, however, held the complaint sufficient, and that it was not necessary to state how often the defendant was intoxicated, to what extent, and upon what occasions, or what he said or did when so intoxicated to cause mental anguish. In Reading v. Reading, 96 Cal. 4, 30 Pac. 803, it was held that it was not necessary to set out the particular acts of intemperance in an action for divorce upon such ground. As the Code makes habitual intemperance a ground for divorce, so it makes "extreme cruelty." It defines habitual intemperance, and so it defines extreme cruelty. In neither case is it necessary to set forth all the evidence, but the ultimate facts must be alleged. Of course, in an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, the acts or conduct relied upon must be stated, and not conclusions of law. Appellant calls our attention to Franklin v. Franklin, 140 Cal. 607, 74 Pac. 155. That case was reversed on account of the insufficiency of the findings. The allegations of cruelty were "that shortly after their marriage, and for a period of nearly 10 years, defendant was abusive to plaintiff, neglected her, failed to provide for her, and compelled her to perform hard and unaccustomed labor to support herself and her minor children, while he spent his time in idleness and dissipation." The question as to the sufficiency of the facts stated in the pleading was not discussed.

It is claimed that it was error to allow the witness Dr. Hirschfelder to testify as to a statement made to him by plaintiff, to the effect that he had been attacked by Hinckley, the son-in-law of defendant, and in a personal encounter with said Hinckley that he had received an injury upon his knee. The statement made by plaintiff was purely hearsay, and should not have been admitted, but we do not think the ruling of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the case. The fight with Hinckley was given in detail by the plaintiff as a witness in his own behalf, and by Hinckley, a witness for defendant, and also by defendant as a witness in her own behalf. There was no conflict as to the fact that an encounter of a violent nature had occurred between plaintiff and Hinckley, and that plaintiff was injured in the fight. The case was tried before the court, and we are of the opinion that the ruling did not injure the defendant. The same may be said as to the refusal of the court to strike out the statement of the plaintiff, as a witness in his own behalf, as to Mrs. Baum denying to him that she had made a remark that defendant had told plaintiff had been made. Whether or not Mrs. Baum made the remark was immaterial.

We have examined the many exceptions to rulings on the admission of evidence grouped under one heading in appellant's brief, but find nothing that would in our opinion justify a reversal of the case. The evidence admitted related to some transactions not set forth in the complaint; but, as we have before stated, the plaintiff was not required to plead minutely each and every detail of the evidence. The evidence was conflicting, but in our opinion amply sufficient to sustain the findings of the court. In fact, the defendant, by her own testimony, shows many little acts tending to establish jealousy on her part, and other acts of improper interference with the plaintiff and his business. She admitted that she opened plaintiff's letters, and she exhibited some of them in evidence. She admits that she upbraided plaintiff at times, and that at least upon one occasion she called him a coward, and that upon another occasion she threw down and broke a stein that belonged to plaintiff and had been painted for him by some one, but that he did not tell her who had given it to him. It is evident that the trial court, after hearing the evidence, and seeing the witnesses, concluded that defendant was at fault, and that the parties could not longer safely live together as husband and wife.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

Where there is evidence to support a conviction, a question of law cannot arise as to the propriety of the conviction on the evidence within the jurisdiction of an appellate court, as declared by Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that jurisdiction in criminal cases shall extend to questions of law alone.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

John F. Caulfield was convicted of rape, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial he appeals. Affirmed.

Frank McGowan and Elmer Westlake, for appellant. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, and sentenced to the penitentiary for 10 years. He appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The chief point relied upon by appellant, and the only one that merits serious consideration, is the claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify or sustain the verdict. In this behalf our attention is directed to a line of cases in this state which hold that in cases of this character the testimony of the complainant alone, if inherently improbable and uncorroborated, will not support a conviction. People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 221, 65 Am. Dec. 506; People v. Hamilton, 46 Cal. 540; People v. Brown, 47 Cal. 447; People v. Ardaga, 51 Cal. 371. In those cases the evidence was so improbable as to warrant the conclusion that the verdicts were the result of passion or prejudice. In our judgment, however, the facts of this case do not bring it within the rule laid down in those cases. Here the testimony of the prosecutrix is neither improbable nor uncorroborated. Much of the evidence is of such a character that we cannot with propriety repeat it in this opinion, but that part of it tending to support the verdict of the jury is as follows: The prosecutrix testified that on September 20, 1906, between 5 and 6 o'clock in the evening, the defendant, accompanied by four other men, entered her room in a lodging house at 3377 Mission street, San Francisco; that on entering the room defendant grabbed her by her arms and threw her upon the bed; that she screamed, whereupon defendant choked her, saying, "If you holler again I'll choke your wind off, you damn bitch;" that the men took all her clothes off with the exception of a small undershirt, and that while she was being held each of the five men, including the defendant, had sexual intercourse with her. Her testimony further shows that while Scobie, one of the men who accompanied defendant to the room, was engaged in an act of sexual intercourse with her, she again screamed and called for help, that some one slipped his hand over her mouth, and that she could not cry out again. She further testified that as the result of her resistance her throat was bruised and showed finger marks; that the same was true of her wrist; that her left eye was discolored; that her legs were scratched and bruised.

Her testimony was corroborated by two police officers as to her physical appearance and condition, and as to the fact that defendant and others were there. The latter fact defendant admitted, but claimed that he had been there but a short time when the officers arrived. When the officers entered her room, which was at about half past 1 o'clock in the morning, she exclaimed, "Thank God, you have come to my aid," and complained, "These men have ravished me, outraged me brutally." The defendant and his associates made no reply to this charge. When the officers entered the room the defendant was on the bed, clad only in his pants and shirt, and others of the men present had on even less.

The testimony of the prosecuting witness was thus not corroborated; and while, when read as a whole, it has its contradictions, inconsistencies, and statements hard to credit, it cannot be said to be inherently improbable. As it was corroborated and not incredible, it follows that the case does not fall within the rule laid down in the cases cited by appellant and to which reference has already been made. In short, there is evidence to support the verdict of the jury, and we cannot therefore say, as a matter of law, that the verdict should be set aside. By the Constitution appellate jurisdiction is conferred upon this court in criminal cases in questions of law alone. Consequently, when there is evidence to sustain the verdict a question of law cannot arise. People v. Kuches, 120 Cal. 569, 52 Pac. 1002; People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 56 Pac. 56; People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 39, 70 Pac. 1014; People v. Heart, 1 Cal. App. 166, 81 Pac. 1018; People v. White (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 471.

In the case of People v. Kuches, supra, the court said: "This court has appellate jurisdiction on questions of law alone (Const. art. 6, § 4), and the propriety of a conviction on the evidence before the jury becomes a question of law within the competence of this court only when there is a clear failure of proof. People v. Smallman, 55 Cal. 185."

On the same subject it is said in People v. Logan, supra: "It is claimed that the evidence is too weak to support the verdict of the jury. If the evidence of the prosecuting witness be true, the verdict has full support therein, and its truth or falsity was a matter essentially for the jury's consideration. In criminal cases this court's appellate jurisdiction is limited to matters of law alone, and the truth or falsity of a witness' statement is essentially a matter of fact. It is possible that evidence might come before this court so incredible, so inherently improbable, so stamped with falsehood upon its face, that the court would deal with it as presenting a matter of law; but such a case would be a most exceptional one, and it is not presented by the record, although it may be said that the circumstances and conditions enveloping and forming the res gestæ of this particular offense are unusual and not entirely convincing."

We perceive no other matter requiring consideration, and for the reasons stated above the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J., HALL, J.

PEOPLE v. SCOBIE. (Cr. 113.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 11, 1908. Rehearing Denied April 8, 1908; Denied by Supreme Court May 10, 1908.)

CRIMINAL LAW — APPEAL — REVIEW — CONSIDERATION OF MATTERS OUTSIDE OF RECORD.

On a claim that the evidence is insufficient to support a conviction, evidence taken on the hearing of a motion to place defendant on probation, and not a part of the evidence in the case, cannot be considered by the Court of Appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, of City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

Gustave Henry Scobie was convicted of rape, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. and Oliver Dibble, for appellant. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of rape, and was sentenced to a term of five years at San Quentin. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. The sole question presented is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

This is a companion case to that of People v. Caulfield (Cr. 112, this day decided) 95 Pac. 666. The charges in both cases sprang out of the same transaction, and in the two cases the evidence is substantially the same, except that here there was direct proof that the prosecutrix was a woman of loose character, and also stronger evidence that she was addicted to drink. For a statement of this case reference is made to People v. Caulfield, supra. The evidence in this case makes a little stronger defense than was presented by the evidence in the Caulfield Case, but after all the record in both cases presented a question of fact for the jury.

Counsel for the appellant, in their brief and in the oral argument, referred to testimony which shows that the prosecutrix died of alcoholism, and that before she died she made statements contradictory of her testimony as to the time appellant with his companions came to her room, and as to the rape itself. Appellant and one Mary McCarthy and one Nettie Richardson all state that she said that Scobie did not rape her. This evidence, however, was taken on the hearing of a motion to place appellant on probation, and is not part of the evidence in the case, and therefore cannot be considered by this court. It may not be out of place, however, to state that the trial court acted upon this showing, and placed appellant on probation; but a few days thereafter, on appellant being brought before the court for a violation of the terms of such probation, he was sentenced to a term of five years in the penitentiary.

For the reasons stated in the case of People v. Caulfield, supra, and upon the authorities there cited, the judgment and order in this case are affirmed.

BLACKBURN v. BUCKSPORT & E. R. R. CO. et al. (Civ. 434.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 5, 1908.)

1. APPEARANCE—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 416, providing that the voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and copy of the complaint upon him, where, in an action against certain named defendants and unknown claimants to quiet title, a claimant voluntarily appears and moves to set aside a default against him as an unknown defendant, which motion was by consent of counsel sustained, and a cross-complaint was filed, the voluntary appearance obviated the necessity of serving the summons, and the jurisdiction of the court on that ground cannot afterwards be questioned.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appearance, §§ 103–153.]

2. QUIETING TITLE—NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—NECESSITY TO JURISDICTION.

The filing of a notice of the pendency of an action to quiet title with the county recorder is not necessary to invest the court with jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 749, requiring the plaintiff in such action to file in the office of the county recorder of the county where the property is situated, the complaint, within 10 days after filing a notice of the pendency of the action, containing the names of the parties, with the object of the action, and the description of the property, etc., and where a claimant appears as defendant, and has the default against him as an unknown claimant set aside, and files a cross-complaint, he is not prejudiced by failure to file a lis pendens, the only effect of which omission could be to release innocent third parties from the operation of a judgment affecting the title or right of possession of the land in dispute.

3. SAME—PARTIES—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 749, providing that, in actions to quiet title, the complaint may include as defendants, in addition to such persons as appear of record, all other persons who are known to plaintiff to have some adverse claim or cloud on the land described, or other persons unknown, claiming any right, etc., does not require a plaintiff to examine the public records and name as defendants all persons having an interest in the land in controversy, in derogation of plaintiff's title, and failure to include such persons as defendants does not render the complaint insufficient to state a cause of action.

4. PARTIES—UNKNOWN PARTIES—PLEADING—FICTITIOUS DESIGNATION OF DEFENDANT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—NECESSITY FOR AMENDMENT—EFFECT OF CROSS-COMPLAINT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 474, provides that, when plaintiff is ignorant of the name of a defendant, he must state that fact in the complaint, and such defendant may be designated in any pleading or proceeding by any name, and, when his true name is discovered, the pleading or proceeding must be amended accordingly. Held that, where a defendant sued by a fictitious name in an action to quiet title appears, answers the complaint, and files a cross-complaint seeking affirmative relief, failure to substitute the true name of the defendant will not authorize reversal; for, even if substitution is necessary at all under such circumstances, the court on appeal may direct the amendment of the complaint by the substitution of the name of the real parties as of a date prior to the judgment; the object of the requirement as to substitution of the true name of the party to bind him by the judgment.

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to quiet title, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding of adverse possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Mary Blackburn, also known as Mary T. Blackburn, against the Bucksport & Elk River Railroad Company, a corporation, and others, in which C. W. Hill appears as the defendant, and files a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, C. W. Hill appeals. Affirmed, with directions as to amendment of complaint.

H. L. Ford and J. S. Burnell, for appellant. Coonan & Kehoe and G. D. Murry, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a suit to quiet title to certain real property situated in Humboldt county, and was brought against the Bucksport & Elk River Railroad Company and certain fictitiously designated defendants, and "all other persons unknown, claiming any right, title, estate, lien or interest in the" said real property adverse to plaintiff's title thereto. The suit was instituted under the provisions of sections 749, 750, and 751 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Summons was duly served upon the corporation, and as to the other defendants the summons was published, under an order of the court, in a newspaper printed and published daily in the city of Eureka, in said Humboldt county. The railroad company appeared and answered the complaint, and, there being no appearance by or on behalf of the fictitious defendants or of any "unknown persons" claiming any interest in the property adversely to plaintiff, a default was entered against them. Subsequently the appellant appeared and moved the court to set aside the default as to him, so that he might be permitted to answer the complaint. By consent of counsel the default against the appellant was set aside, and he thereupon answered the complaint and also filed a cross-complaint, to which answers were interposed by the plaintiff and the railroad company, respectively. Upon the issues of fact thus made up the cause was tried and the plaintiff obtained judgment, from which, upon a bill of exceptions, this appeal is taken.

The only point presented and discussed in the briefs of counsel and upon which the appellant insists upon a reversal of the judgment involves the question of whether the court acquired jurisdiction of the action and of the person of the appellant. The claim is that the summons does not contain all the matters required by the Code provisions to be set forth therein; that the affidavit upon which the court ordered the publication of the summons is insufficient; that the affidavit of the publication of the summons, being made by one Smith, who designated himself as the "Manager" of the newspaper in which the summons was published, is not made by the person required by the law to make such affidavit; that there is nothing in the record showing that a lis pendens was filed in the office of the county recorder, as required by sections 409 and 749 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There is, in fact, no objection which could be urged against the sufficiency of the steps essential, under the statute, to give the court jurisdiction of the action which has been overlooked by counsel for the appellant. But we think appellant has no conceivable reason to complain here that the court was without jurisdiction to try the action and determine the issues involved therein as to him, even if we assume that his contention as to the alleged defectiveness of the summons and the service thereof be well founded. The record, as we have seen, shows that the appellant, after default had been entered against him as one of the "unknown defendants" and the same had been, on his motion and by consent of counsel for respondent, vacated, answered the complaint and filed a cross-complaint. The trial was proceeded with without objection upon his part that the court was without jurisdiction either of the action or of his person. It is immaterial so far as he is concerned whether the summons was regularly issued or defective, in that there were omitted therefrom certain matters required by the statute to be embraced therein, or was not, for any reason, properly served and returned. And it is equally as immaterial, so far as he may be affected thereby, whether or not a lis pendens was recorded. He voluntarily made an appearance in the action, and under the law of this state "the voluntary appearance of a defendant is equivalent to personal service of the summons and copy of the complaint upon him." Code Civ. Proc. § 416; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Cochran, 141 Cal. 654, 75 Pac. 315; Hibernia S. & L. Soc. v. Lewis, 117 Cal. 581, 47 Pac. 602, 49 Pac. 714. In the last-named case the court says: "When defendant William F. Lewis appeared, demurred to the complaint, and filed an answer thereto, the court acquired jurisdiction of his person itself, and whether there was or was not a valid summons in the case was of no moment." The fact that the appellant here appeared and moved to set aside the default, so far as it affected him, against the "unknown defendants," of whom he was one, and the further fact that, the default having been set aside, he not only answered the complaint, but also sought affirmative relief through a cross-complaint, indubitably bear witness to the fact that in some way or by some means he received notice of the institution of the suit, and that he has had "his day in court," and most assuredly it is immaterial now how he obtained such notice. If he were the only defendant, and had, before summons was issued or served upon him, having received actual notice of the filing of the action, appeared by way of answer or otherwise, he certainly could not complain, after judgment against him, because the summons had not been issued and served upon him, or, if issued, because it did not contain all the matters that the statute requires shall be set out therein to make it a valid summons. His voluntary appearance manifestly obviated the necessity of serving the summons, the sole purpose of which is to notify the defendant of the institution of the action, and in general terms, of the nature thereof.

And the question of whether or not a lis pendens was filed for recordation with the county recorder is, as to the appellant, of no significance. The record does not show that such notice was so filed, although the respondent's brief declares that a lis pendens was recorded. But, as we have suggested, even if there was a failure to file a lis pendens, the appellant could not be prejudiced thereby, for the only effect of an omission to so record such notice would be to relieve innocent third parties (purchasers or incumbrancers) from the operation of a judgment affecting the "title or right of possession" of the land in dispute. We know of nothing which would have prevented the appellant himself, after filing his cross-complaint asking for affirmative relief, from filing a lis pendens, or notice of the pendency of the action. Section 409, Code Civ. Proc. But, as we have before stated, it is unimportant whether a lis pendens was or was not recorded, so far as this appellant is concerned. He voluntarily submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the court in the case, and we do not think, as we have already indicated, that the mere omission to file for record the notice of the pendency of the action affects the question of the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the litigation. In other words, we do not think, as counsel's argument upon this point necessarily assumes, that the filing of the notice of the pendency of the action with the county recorder is an essential prerequisite to investing the court with jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit in which the recordation of such a notice is required. A lis pendens, or the filing for record with the recorder a notice of the pendency of a suit involving the title to or right of possession of real property, is the mode substituted by the Legislature for the constructive notice to all the world of the pendency of such an action which formerly arose ipso facto upon the institution of the suit. Thus "a purchaser or incumbrancer of property, instead of being required to examine all the suits pending in the courts to ascertain whether any of them relate to or affect the real estate he is negotiating about, has now only to examine the notices of lis pendens filed in the recorder's office of the county where the real estate is situated." Sampson v. Ohleyer, 22 Cal. 211. The purpose of the Legislature was thus to furnish the most certain means of notifying all persons of the pendency of the action and thereby warning them against attempting to acquire a legal or equitable interest in the property concerning which the suit was brought and to bind such persons as might acquire any interest in the property in controversy after the recording of the notice by any judgment which might be secured affecting said property. This is all that the Legislature intended by the present mode of giving constructive notice of the pendency of such actions, and the legislation does not, as we before observed, nor was it intended that it should, affect in the slightest degree the question of the court's jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit or of the persons of the parties thereto.

The appellant makes the further point that the complaint does not state a cause of action because it omits to include as defendants "all persons as appear of record to have * * * some claim or cloud on the lands described in the complaint adverse to plaintiff's ownership." Section 749 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the complaint may include as defendants such persons, and the appellant seems to think that it was therefore the duty of the plaintiff to have examined the public records and named as defendants all persons having an interest in the land in controversy in derogation of plaintiff's title. We think the claim is destitute of merit. Irving v. Carpentier, 70 Cal. 23, 11 Pac. 391. Under our law, it is true, when the defendant is ignorant of the name of a defendant, he must state that fact in the complaint (the complaint here contains such allegation), and such defendant may be designated in any pleading or proceeding by any name, and, when his true name is discovered the pleading or proceeding must be amended accordingly. Section 474, Code Civ. Proc. But it has been held that in a case where parties are so sued by fictitious names, and appear and answer by their true names, and there is an omission to amend the complaint by substituting the true for the fictitious names, the cause will not be reversed, but the judgment on appeal will direct the lower court to amend the complaint as of date prior to the judgment, in order to support the judgment. Alameda County v. Crocker, 125 Cal. 101, 57 Pac. 766; Baldwin v. Bornheimer, 48 Cal. 434; McKinlay v. Tuttle, 42 Cal. 572. We are not prepared to say that in a case like this, where one of the parties sued by a fictitious name appears, and not only answers the complaint, but also files a cross-complaint in which he seeks affirmative relief, it is absolutely necessary to substitute the true name of the party in the complaint in support of the judgment. The object of the requirement of the statute that the complaint must be amended by inserting therein the true name of a party who has been fictitiously designated as one of the defendants, when such true name has been discovered, is to bind such person by the judgment. In other words, "it is requisite that the record should show that the court had jurisdiction of the person against whom the judgment was rendered, and that the judgment was warranted by the allegations of the pleading of the party in whose favor it was rendered." McKinlay v. Tuttle, supra. The cross-complaint contains the name of the plaintiff as an adversary party, and alleges that "the above-named plaintiff and defendants claim to have some right, title, estate," etc., in the real property described in the cross-complaint (and likewise in the complaint) adverse to the title and ownership of the cross-complainant. The answer of plaintiff to the cross-complaint denies that the cross-complainant is the owner of the property in question, and prays that "she be dismissed therefrom with her costs and such other and further relief as to this court may seem meet and equitable in the premises." Thus it seems reasonable, even if the complaint be disregarded, that the cross-complaint and answer of respondent thereto present a direct issue between the parties to this appeal as to the ownership of the land affected by the judgment, and that such judgment is "warranted by the allegations of the pleading (answer to cross-complaint) of the party in whose favor it was rendered." However, we see no harm in directing, and perhaps it may be the better practice under the circumstances to so order, the court below to cause the complaint to be amended in the respect here referred to.

Among the assignments of error in the record is the claim that the court's findings upon the material points in the case are not sufficiently supported by the evidence. No special reference is, however, made to this point in the briefs of counsel. But there is no substantial ground upon which to found the claim. The plaintiff sets up title by adverse possession. There is evidence showing that she had been in possession of the land in dispute for over 30 consecutive years prior to the commencement of the action; that during nearly, if not quite all of said period, she had the property inclosed by a fence, had paid all the taxes assessed thereon for all those years, and had otherwise exercised acts of ownership thereof. The defendant established a record title; but the court's finding of title by adverse possession in the plaintiff is well supported by the proofs, and cannot be disturbed by this court.

The judgment is affirmed, with directions to the court below to amend the complaint or cause the same to be amended, as of date prior to the judgment entered the 19th day of August, 1905, in said court, by the insertion of the name of C. W. Hill as a party defendant.

BERRYMAN v. GIBSON. (Civ. 426.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 12, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court May 11, 1908.)

1. APPEAL—SCOPE OF REVIEW—APPEAL ON JUDGMENT ROLL ALONE.

Where an appeal is prosecuted from a judgment on the judgment roll alone, neither the sufficiency of evidence to support the findings, nor the rulings of the court in the admission or exclusion of evidence, can be considered.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT — NOTICE OF CHANGE OF RENT—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice of increase in the amount of rent on a monthly tenancy is not insufficient merely because it announces that the rent after a certain date will be $150 per month, instead of the sum of $40, "as heretofore paid," even if the rent under a prior oral lease was $35 per month; for, as the tenant knew the amount of rent theretofore paid, an error in the statement did not tend to mislead or injure him, and he was informed that the terms of his lease were to be changed so that the rent would be $150 per month, which was the object of the notice.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS — REGULARITY OF JUDGMENT.

Where there was nothing in the record to show that the rent of premises alleged to have been unlawfully detained by the tenant had not been $40 per month prior to an increase thereof, instead of $35, as stated in the complaint, it will be presumed in favor of the regularity of the judgment that the complaint erroneously stated the amount, and that it was shown or stipulated on the trial that it was $40 per month.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT—UNLAWFUL DETAINER—NOTICE TO QUIT—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, providing that a tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer when he continues in possession after default in the payment of rent pursuant to the lease or agreement under which the property is held, and three days' notice in writing, requiring its payment, stating the amount which is due, or possession of the property, shall have been served upon him, it is not necessary to notify the tenant that he has three days' time in which to pay the rent, for the statute fixes the period, and must be read in connection with the notice; and, while an action of unlawful detainer cannot be maintained until three days after the notice is given, the notice need not be in any particular form, and if it states the thing required by the section in plain language, so that a person of ordinary understanding would know what is intended, it is sufficient.

5. SAME—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF—LEASE FROM OWNER.

In an action of unlawful detainer brought by one holding a lease from the owner of the premises, it is not necessary to set forth the contents of such lease in the complaint, and, while it is incumbent upon plaintiff to show that he is the successor in interest of the owner, it is sufficient if he states that the owner has executed and delivered to him a written lease of the premises for a term covering the period in question.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by F. M. Berryman against A. Gibson. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Andrew Thorne, for appellant. H. Jones, for appellee.

COOPER, P. J. This is an action of unlawful detainer. The case was tried before the court, and findings were filed, in which judgment was directed to be entered for plaintiff. The defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll alone.

In such case we cannot examine the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, nor the rulings of the court in the admission or exclusion of evidence. It is contended, however, that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the defendant's demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. In appellant's brief the reasons are pointed out why the complaint is claimed to be insufficient.

It is first claimed that the notice served August 10, 1906, changing the terms of the lease so as to make the rent on and after September 1, 1906, $150 per month instead of the sum of $40, "as heretofore paid by you," was not sufficiently certain, because the complaint alleges that the rent under the prior verbal lease was $35 per month. There is no merit in the contention. If the verbal lease was at $35 per month, the defendant knew it, and the error in the statement did not tend to mislead or injure him in any way or in any manner. He was informed by the notice that the terms of his lease were to be changed so that his rent from the time named in the notice would be $150 per month. The object of the notice was to change the amount of monthly rental which defendant had been paying, and the defendant was informed by the notice of such change. Not only this, but there is nothing in this record to show that the prior rent was not $40 per month. The complaint may have erroneously stated that it was $35 per month, and the evidence may have shown, or the parties may have stipulated, on the trial, that it was $40 per month. We must presume that such was the case in favor of the judgment, as all presumptions are in favor of the regularity of the judgment. On September 4, 1906, the plaintiff served a demand in writing upon defendant, demanding payment of the rent for the month of September, stating the amount due, and demanding that defendant pay the same or deliver up possession of the premises; and in October, 1906, a like demand was made for both the September and October rent. It is argued that the above notices were defective for the reason that they did not notify the defendant that he had three days' time in which to pay the rent. The Code provides (Code Civ. Proc. § 1161) that a tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer when he continues in possession "after default in the payment of rent pursuant to the lease or agreement under which the property is held and three days' notice in writing requiring its payment, stating the amount which is due, or possession of the property, shall have been served upon him." This action was not commenced until October 15, 1906; and it is alleged that the defendant neglected and refused for the space of three days after each of said demands to either surrender possession of the said premises, or to pay the rent due. It is not necessary that the notice or demand specify the three days. Demand in writing must be made, the amount of rent due must be stated, and the payment thereof required. Then after such demand, if the tenant, without the permission of his landlord, remains in possession without paying his rent for three days, he has had three days' notice in writing. The statute fixes the period of three days, and it must be read in connection with the notice; and when the period of three days has expired the tenant has had notice for three days, which is in substance three days' notice in writing. While the statutory requirements must be observed, and no one thing required dispensed with, yet the law regards the substance and not the shadow. The notice required by the statute need not be in any particular form. It may be deficient in spelling or in grammatical construction; but, if it states the thing required by the section in plain language so that a person of ordinary understanding would know what is intended, it is sufficient. The case cited by counsel (Martin v. Splivalo, 56 Cal. 128) does not hold that the notice shall state anything about the three days, and we are aware of no case that does so hold.

It was not necessary for the contents of the lease of the premises from the owner to the plaintiff to be set forth in the complaint. The complaint sufficiently states that the owner had made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff a written lease of the premises for the term of two years from the 1st day of August, 1906. This was a conveyance for the purposes set forth in the instrument for the term of two years. It was incumbent upon plaintiff to show that he was the successor in interest of the owner. This he did by alleging that he procured a written lease from the owner for the period of two years. He had the right to change the terms of defendant's monthly tenancy, or to terminate it. He served notice upon defendant 20 days before the expiration of the month. Defendant of his own volition remained in possession, and he must suffer the penalty.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 12, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—JURISDICTION.

Though, after judgment on an order sustaining a demurrer and the denial of a new trial, the court has no jurisdiction to permit amendments to a demurrer, such jurisdiction continues after an order sustaining a demurrer, so long as no judgment is entered thereon.

2. SAME—"ORDERS"—REVOCATION.

A decision overruling a demurrer to an amended complaint, with leave to defendants to answer, was not a judgment of itself, but an order which was subject to vacation for cause under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court may relieve a party from a mistake in an order made during the progress of the proceedings during the term in the furtherance of justice.

3. SAME—"MISTAKES" OF LAW.

Mistakes of law are mistakes within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing the court, in the furtherance of justice, to allow an amendment correcting mistakes in proceedings had during the progress of a trial in the furtherance of justice.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 4539, 4542; vol. 8, p. 7722.]

4. PLEADING — DEMURRER — AMENDMENT — ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where a complaint was demurred to both generally and for misjoinder of causes of action, and an order was entered overruling the demurrer with leave to answer, and before answer defendants moved to compel plaintiff to separately state and number the several causes of action alleged in the complaint, which relief could only be obtained by demurrer, it was within the jurisdiction of the court, and was not an abuse of discretion, to permit defendants to file an amended demurrer setting up as an additional ground that plaintiff's different causes of action were not separately stated and numbered, the effect of which was to revoke the former order overruling the demurrer.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—FINAL JUDGMENT.

Any irregularity or error connected with an order permitting an amendment of a demurrer after the same had been overruled was proper matter for determination on an appeal after final judgment.

6. CERTIORARI—PROCEEDINGS REVIEWABLE—FINALITY OF DETERMINATION.

Petition for writ of review by Henry G. Dent and others against the superior court of Los Angeles county. Application denied.

A. K. Hancock and T. R. Archer, for petitioners.

ALLEN, P. J. On August 12, 1907, petitioners, as plaintiffs, commenced an action in the superior court of Los Angeles county against certain defendants, who, in due time, filed a demurrer to an amended complaint filed in said action, which demurrer was general as well as upon the ground of a misjoinder of causes of action. This demurrer was overruled in December, 1907, with leave given defendants to answer. Thereafter, and before answer filed, a motion was interposed by defendants asking for an order requiring petitioners, as plaintiffs in said action, to separately state the several causes of action set out in the amended complaint. Plaintiffs objected to the hearing of this motion, for the reason that the matters contained in the motion were grounds of demurrer, and could not be taken advantage of by motion. This objection was sustained by the court, but upon the hearing the court granted defendants leave to file an amended demurrer, which was filed in due time, and which demurrer was identical with the original demurrer, except that it contained the additional ground that the several different causes of action claimed by plaintiffs in their amended complaint were and are not separately stated. This demurrer, upon hearing, was sustained, but no judgment thereon has been rendered.

Petitioners in this application contend that the court was without jurisdiction to grant the defendants leave to file the amended demurrer. We think this position not maintainable. While it is true that, after a judgment has been entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer and a new trial denied, the suit is ended and the court has no jurisdiction to permit amendments, but a different rule obtains where no judgment has been entered upon the order. The decision of the court upon the original demurrer was not a judgment of itself, but an order, as defined in McGuire v. Drew, 83 Cal. 232, 23 Pac. 312. Orders made and entered during the progress of proceedings have always been held subject to revocation by the court for good cause during term time, and in our practice, under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court may allow any mistake corrected which is in the furtherance of justice. Mistakes of law are mistakes within this section. Ward v. Clay, 82 Cal. 502, 23 Pac. 50, 227. The application for leave to amend the demurrer was made before any issue of fact was tendered. Nothing is shown suggesting an abuse of discretion in granting leave to amend, and, when so granted, the effect could only be a revocation of the former order overruling the original demurrer. In our opinion the court had jurisdiction to allow the filing of the amended pleading, the effect of which was to revoke the former order, and, even were there any irregularity or error connected therewith, it would be proper matter for determination upon an appeal after final judgment. Our practice does not permit parties through writs of review, or other proceedings of like character, to correct errors pending the proceedings, even where errors are made to appear. The fact that the additional grounds stated in the amended demurrer have only recently been recognized as grounds of demurrer explains the mistake upon the part of defendants' counsel in seeking relief through a motion, which practice prior to 1907 was the correct practice.

We think the court did not exceed its jurisdiction, and the application for a writ of review is denied.

McCUE v. JACKMAN. (Civ. 446.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.

March 16, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—MATERIALMEN'S LIENS—ENFORCEMENT—STATUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, providing that where a contractor abandons the work the portion of the contract price applicable to the liens of others than the contractor shall be fixed so that the balance remaining after deducting from payments due and paid the value of the work and materials done and furnished including materials actually delivered shall be the portion of the contract price applicable to such liens, a materialman, seeking to enforce a mechanic's lien for materials furnished to a contractor who abandoned the work, must allege and prove that the value of the work and materials done and furnished, including the materials delivered at the time of the abandonment, exceeded the amount due and paid to the contractor, for, unless there is such excess, there is no sum applicable to the claim.

2. SAME.

A materialman who has furnished materials to a contractor to be used by him in the construction of a building is only entitled to be paid by the owner when there is something owing and unpaid from the owner to the contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thomas J. Lennon, Judge.

Action by J. S. McCue against W. Jackman. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. McCue, in pro. per. (W. B. Crocker, of counsel), for appellant. Edgar C. Chapman, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. Appellant sought by his action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. The cause was tried, and judgment went for respondent, from which judgment appellant prosecutes this appeal.

The appellant, pursuant to a contract between him and F. J. Owens, the original contractor, furnished and delivered to said Owens, to be used in the construction of six certain houses of respondent, concrete amounting to the sum of $124.40, to be paid for by said Owens on or before the completion of said buildings. In part the court found that the respondent and said Owens entered into the agreement alleged, and in accordance therewith concrete amounting to $124.40 was delivered, for which material no payment has been made, and that the lands described in the complaint are the property of the respondent; but the court also found as follows: "That it is not a fact that the said buildings or any of them were completed under said contract between said F. J. Owens and said defendant Wm. Jackman, but in this behalf the court finds that during the month of July, 1904, said F. J. Owens abandoned the work of construction of said buildings, whereupon on the 10th day of August, 1904, the defendant, William Jackman, at the instance of Dodge & Oliver, who were the architects employed by him to superintend the work of drawing plans and specifications and to superintend the erection of said buildings, filed in the office of the county recorder of Marin county, state of California, a notice, wherein it was stated that for the period of more than 30 days next preceding the 8th day of August no work had been performed upon said buildings or any of them by said F. J. Owens, and that said F. J. Owens had abandoned the work of the construction of said buildings."

By this last finding it appears that the buildings were not finished by Owens, but that the contract was abandoned by him. This finding brings the case within the rule of section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is as follows: "In case the contractor shall fail to perform his contract in full, or shall abandon the same before completion, the portion of the contract price applicable to the liens of other persons than the contractor shall be fixed as follows: From the value of the work and materials already done and furnished at the time of such failure and abandonment, including materials then actually delivered or on the ground, which shall thereupon belong to the owner, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price, shall be deducted the payments then due and actually paid, according to the terms of the contract and the provisions of sections one thousand one hundred and eighty-three and one thousand one hundred and eighty-four, and the remainder shall be deemed the portion of the contract price applicable to such liens."

Appellant, in order to recover, should have alleged and proved that the value of the work and materials done and furnished, including the materials delivered or on the ground, at the time of the abandonment, exceeded the amount due and paid to the original contractor. This he neglected to do. If there was no such balance, there was no sum applicable to plaintiff's claim. In no aspect of the case, however, does the complaint or the findings state a cause of action; for it is not shown in either of them that there was anything owing from the respondent to Owens, the original contractor, when appellant's claim of lien was filed. A materialman who has furnished materials to the original contractor of a building, to be used by him in its construction, is only entitled to be paid by the owner of the building when there is something owing and unpaid from the owner to the original contractor. Turner v. Strenzel, 70 Cal. 28, 11 Pac. 389.

The judgment is affirmed.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—DUTY TO WARN SERVANT OF DANGER.

In the case of a man 32 years old, an experienced carpenter, who, after working about a pile driver 3½ days, was sent aloft for the first time to point the pile and put a ring thereon, and who, after announcing that the ring was on, and after the signal was given by the foreman to the engineer to let the hammer fall shouted, "Hold on," and while the hammer was descending grabbed for the ring to prevent its falling off, the pile having moved slightly, there was no duty of the master to warn him, though when he went aloft the foreman said, "I will take care of you"; the danger to which he was exposed being obvious and apparent.

2. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

A man of mature years, an experienced ship carpenter, who, after working about a pile driver for 3½ days, was sent aloft for the first time to point a pile and put a ring on it, the foreman saying, "I will take care of you," was guilty of contributory negligence, where, after announcing that the ring was on, and after the signal was given by the foreman to the engineer to let the hammer fall, and while it was falling he shouted, "Hold on," and grabbed for the ring to prevent its falling off.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by William Mugford against the Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fitzgerald & Abbott and Campbell, Fitzgerald, Abbott & Fowler, for appellant. S. G. Hinds, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by an employé of the defendant corporation to recover damages for personal injuries received while working on a pile driver of defendant. At the trial below, at the close of plaintiff's case, the court granted a nonsuit. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment following the nonsuit and from an order denying a new trial.

The contention of the appellant is that the court erred in deciding that as a matter of law plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and in taking the case away from the jury. From plaintiff's case, as presented by his bill of exceptions, the following undisputed and uncontradicted facts appear: William Mugford, at the time of the accident, was a thoroughly competent ship carpenter. He had worked at his trade seven or eight years in different places in the United States and elsewhere. He had worked on the pile driver $3\frac{1}{2}$ days, during which time he pulled ropes and poles around the pile driver. Sometimes he was on the deck of the scow on which the pile driver stood, and sometimes in a boat running lines by which to handle the scow. On the morning of the accident, May 22, 1903, plaintiff was sent aloft to act as loftsman by the foreman. The duties of loftsman are to point a pile in the mud, and put it in position upright between the "gins" of the pile driver, which are the straight edges or guides at each side of the hammer, and then to place a ring on the top of the pile. Before directing the plaintiff to act as loftsman the foreman asked him how he was as a loftsman, and plaintiff answered that he did not know what the duties were, but that he would act as such. The foreman replied: "Go ahead, and I'll tell you what to do and take care of you." The plaintiff went aloft, a pile was put in place, and the plaintiff was told to measure the head of the pile to ascertain what size ring would be required. He did so, and replied that a 14-inch ring was necessary. The ring was tied on a rope kept for that purpose. The plaintiff pulled it up and put it on the head of the pile. Then he holloed to the foreman below: "Ring's on." That is the general signal given by loftsman. Plaintiff testified that he did not know that the expression "Ring's on" was the signal to let go the hammer; that after he holloed "Ring's on" he listened for a response, but did not "hear the foreman say anything." The foreman, whose duty it was to give the signal "to let go," told the engineer to "hit the pile." In the meantime the pile moved slightly, and the ring fell off, whereupon the plaintiff holloed, "Hold on," and grabbed for the ring to keep it from falling. Just then the hammer came down and caught plaintiff's hand between the hammer and the head of the pile, and cut off all the fingers of that hand. The evidence showed further that plaintiff was ignorant of the duties of loftsman, and was given no instruction beyond being told to measure the head of the pile, and he was not told that he was going to work in a dangerous place. The evidence also showed that plaintiff did not do his work that morning in the approved fashion.

As the negligence alleged is for the failure to warn and instruct plaintiff as to the dangers incident to his employment, it is proper to set forth the substance of the testimony showing the character of the apparatus on which plaintiff was working. Plaintiff, according to his own testimony, knew how the pile driver was operated. Charles Osberg, the engineer at the time of the accident, who was an experienced pile driver, and who had worked in every capacity in the business, testified that there was nothing about the pile driver as to the lowering or dropping of the hammer and the apparatus for that purpose that an ordinary man could not see. Ernest Downing, the foreman, testified: "There is nothing about the pile driver concealed that I know of. It is open and visible to everybody."

The trial court held that the evidence showed that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and on that ground granted respondent's motion for nonsuit. In so ruling appellant claims that the court committed error, and in support of this claim cites the well-known rule that negligence is a question for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions on the subject can rationally be drawn from the evidence; or, as stated in other words, when the question of negligence is fairly debatable. Fernandes v. Sacramento, etc., R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 45; McKeever v. Market St. R. R. Co., 59 Cal. 294; Chidester v. Consolidated, etc., Co., 59 Cal. 197; House v. Meyer, 100 Cal. 592, 35 Pac. 308; McKune v. Santa Clara, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 Pac. 980; Herbert v. Southern Pac. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651; Wahlgren v. Market St. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 62 Pac. 308, 64 Pac. 993; Liverpool, etc., Co. v. So. Pac. Co., 125 Cal. 434, 58 Pac. 55; Olsen v. Gray, 147 Cal. 112, 81 Pac. 414.

Respondent, on the other hand, claims that the nonsuit was properly granted for the following reasons: (1) There was no evidence from which a reasonable man could find negligence causing the injury on the part of any person except the plaintiff. (2) If negligence other than that of plaintiff caused or contributed to the cause of plaintiff's injury, it was negligence of the foreman, a fellow servant of plaintiff, and such conclusively appears from plaintiff's evidence in the matter. (3) Granting negligence on the part of defendant, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and his negligence was so established by his own evidence that reasonable minds could not differ as to its existence.

These reasons, except the second, are the grounds on which the motion for nonsuit was based in the trial court. The second reason just stated was not specified in the trial court as one of the grounds of the motion, and appellant, therefore, objects to the point being raised in this court. While we think, under the circumstances of this case, that the objection has little if any merit, nevertheless, in view of the conclusion we have reached on the first and third reasons urged by respondent, no discussion of the one objected to will be necessary.

Appellant contends that respondent was guilty of negligence in not warning and instructing him of the dangers incident to his employment as loftsmen. Under the well-settled law in this state and elsewhere it is the duty of an employer to instruct his employes only when the dangers of their employment are concealed. No such duty is imposed on him where the dangers are obvious and apparent. 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 94, and cases cited; 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, p. 522, and cases cited. The rule is stated by Labatt in the following words: "The failure to give instructions, therefore, is not culpable, when the servant might, by the exercise of ordinary care and attention, have known of the danger; or, as the rule is also expressed, where he had all the means necessary for ascertaining the actual conditions, and there was no concealed danger which could not be discovered." The appellant was a man 32 years old, and an experienced ship carpenter. He had worked around this pile driver 3½ days. The work exacted of him as loftsmen required no great amount of skill. The danger to which he was exposed and which resulted in his injury was obvious and apparent; hence, under the circumstances of this case, no duty of warning devolved upon respondent. The statement of the foreman to appellant, "I will take care of you," did not impose on the respondent the duty of cautioning the appellant. The following cases hold that no assurance can take from an employe the duty of guarding against obvious danger: Section 452, Labatt, and cases cited; District of Columbia v. McElligott, 117 U. S. 621, 6 Sup. Ct. 884, 29 L. Ed. 946; Phillips v. Michaels, 11 Ind. App. 672, 39 N. E. 669.

This brings us to the subject of appellant's contributory negligence. We think appellant was negligent in allowing his hand to be hit by the hammer, and that his negligence in this respect was so apparent that reasonable minds could not differ about it. The appellant of course was bound to use such care as an ordinarily prudent man would use under similar circumstances, or men of such intelligence and knowledge as he (the appellant) may be presumed to have had. As we have seen, he was a man of mature years, a thoroughly competent mechanic in his line—that of ship carpenter. He went to work on a pile driver, the operation of which was simple and open, and had worked on and about it for 3½ days when he was sent aloft to point or set a pile in the mud and to place a ring on the top of the pile in order to keep the pile from spreading or splitting. He placed the ring on the pile, knowing why it was placed there, and holloed, "Ring's on," and the foreman then gave the signal to the engineer.

In the meantime the ring fell off, and he holloed, "Hold on," and grabbed for the ring, and in doing so he put his hand on top of the pile, the hammer came down, struck his hand, and he was seriously injured. This certainly was not the act of a reasonably prudent man. Reasonable minds could not differ as to the character of such an act. The trial court, in granting the motion for nonsuit, in apt language expressed itself in part as follows: "* * * The evidence shows that before placing the ring on top of the pile he knew, or must have known, that it was put there in order that the pile might be hit with the hammer without splitting. He informed the foreman below by calling out, 'The ring is on,' and the foreman then gave the signal to the engineer, and the hammer came down. In the meantime, after saying, 'The ring is on,' he called out, 'Hold on,' which showed that he knew that the initiatory signal, as it may be called, had been given to let the hammer fall. He may not have known—he says he did not know—that that was the customary signal. But he knew it had some purpose. He announced that the ring was on for some purpose. Evidently to let the people below know, so far as he was concerned, the thing was ready, and when he had holloed out, 'Hold on,' it shows conclusively that he had given a signal before which would start the sequence of events which would result finally in the dropping of the hammer; yet he put his hand on the top of that pile, an act which a person of any intelligence whatever would have known was fraught with danger to himself."

The rule applicable to this case is stated by Labatt in the following words: "A servant is not in the exercise of ordinary care unless, at each stage of his work, he makes an effective use of his bodily and mental faculties, and observes as attentively as is reasonably possible under the circumstances the condition of the instrumentalities by which his safety may be affected, and the results of their operation by himself or others, in so far as that operation may tend to subject him to danger." Volume 1, § 332.

And, again, in the American and English Encyclopedia of Law the rule is given thus: "One who is working in a place where, or with machinery or appliances by which, he is exposed to danger, must exercise his faculties of sight and hearing for his own protection so far as proper attention to his duties will permit; and, if he fails to do so, and is injured in consequence thereof, he is guilty of such negligence as will preclude a recovery for such injury." See, also, volume 20, p. 144 (2d Ed), citing, among other cases, Kenna's Adm'r v. C. P. R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 26, 35 Pac. 332.

For the reasons stated, the judgment and order are affirmed.

GOLDSTEIN v. WEBSTER. (Civ. 432.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 16, 1908.)

1. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—MEMORANDUM—SIGNATURE—LEASE MADE BY AGENTS—NECESSITY OF WRITTEN AUTHORITY.

A lease for a term to commence in the future, made by agents having no written authority, is void.

2. LICENSES—LICENSES REVOCABLE.

A license by a landlord to a tenant to enter the leased building for the purpose of removing a partition therein prior to beginning the term is a revocable one.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Licenses, §§ 117-120.]

3. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER—NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF FORCIBLE OR OTHER UNLAWFUL DETAINER.

Where agents, having authority only to lease premises subject to the approval of the owner, made an unauthorized lease, giving the tenant the keys to the building and permission to remove a partition therein, the owner, who had other keys to the building, by peaceably taking possession of the premises during the absence of the tenant, and renting them to other parties, was not guilty of forcible entry or forcible detainer.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by J. A. Goldstein against James S. Webster. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Samuel M. Samter, for appellant. Lindley & Eickhoff, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment on nonsuit granted upon motion of defendant at the close of the evidence for plaintiff. The action is for forcible entry and detainer, and the complaint is so drawn as to state a cause of action under both sections 1159 and 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The only ruling presented for review, aside from the order granting the nonsuit, is the action of the court sustaining an objection of defendant to the offer of a receipt dated April 20, 1906, and shown to have been signed and delivered that day by "Baldwin & Howell, Agents." The instrument purported to be a receipt for $25 as a deposit on account of rent of the premises sued for at $60 per month, for the term of one year commencing on the 1st day of May, 1906. The objection was upon the ground, among others, that it was void as against defendant; no written authority to the agents being shown, and the lease being for a term to commence in the future. At the time of the offer no written authority had been shown. Subsequently plaintiff proved that no written authority had ever been given by the defendant to Baldwin & Howell. Treated as a lease, the instrument was void as against defendant. Wickson v. Monarch Cycle Mfg. Co., 128 Cal. 158, 60 Pac. 764, 79 Am. St. Rep. 36. Furthermore, the entry complained of is alleged and claimed to have occurred prior to April 24th, while the receipt did not purport to confer any right upon plaintiff until May 1st. It therefore did not tend to show either a right of possession by plaintiff, or any actual possession by plaintiff, at the time of the entry complained of. The court did not err in sustaining the objection.

Plaintiff in his testimony showed that his only claim of right to the possession of the premises, and his only possession, if any he ever had, of the premises, was as a tenant of defendant. The evidence in the case shows that on April 20, 1906, plaintiff applied to Baldwin & Howell to rent the premises in suit, being two stores, numbered 1109 and 1111 Fillmore street. It was shown that Baldwin & Howell had no written authority from the owner, the defendant, and was only orally authorized to lease the stores subject to the approval of defendant. Baldwin & Howell, as agents, did, however, on the 20th day of April, 1906, through Mr. Baldwin, rent to plaintiff the two stores at a rental of $60 a month for the term of one year, commencing May 1, 1906, and accepted as a deposit on the rental $25. Baldwin then went with plaintiff to the stores, and told plaintiff to get the keys from a billiard parlor, which he did. They went into the stores, and plaintiff tore down the "To Let" signs of Baldwin & Howell. Plaintiff picked up a piece of plaster that was lying on the floor, and wrote on it, "This store will be opened as a first-class clothing and furnishing goods store," and placed it in the window, where it could be seen by the public. He then said to Mr. Baldwin that the plaster would need fixing, and Baldwin replied that that would be done. Plaintiff then said that he would like to take out the partition between the two stores at his own expense, and Baldwin said the landlord will not object to that. They then left the premises. Plaintiff locked the doors and retained the keys, although there was a tag attached to each with the direction, "Lock the doors and return this key to billiard parlor." This was in the morning, and plaintiff again in the afternoon visited and entered each store. The keys remained in his possession, and, we think it may be fairly inferred from the evidence, with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Baldwin. The foregoing is all the evidence tending to show any possession or occupation of the premises by plaintiff. Plaintiff went to the country, where he had been living, and on his return several days later found the stores in the possession of others. He made a demand on defendant for the premises, and tendered to him the rent, but defendant refused to accept the rent and refused to give him possession of the premises. There is no evidence of how defendant entered the stores, or got the doors opened, except what may be inferred from the fact that he gave to the person, to whom he rented the premises on April 24th, keys to the doors, and keys to padlocks which had been placed thereon.

The trial court granted the nonsuit upon the ground that the plaintiff was not in the possession of the premises when the entry complained of occurred. We think the court was correct in thus holding. The lease was by its terms to commence in the future (May 1, 1906), and, having been made by an agent without written authority, was void. Wickson v. Monarch Cycle Co., 128 Cal. 158, 60 Pac. 764, 79 Am. St. Rep. 36. Furthermore, the evidence shows that the only authority of Baldwin & Howell from defendant was to lease the premises subject to the approval of defendant. Defendant never approved the lease, but, on the contrary, leased the premises to one Mr. Wolfe, and put him in possession on April 24, 1906. Plaintiff never in fact occupied the stores, either by himself or by any employé or agent. He never put any of his goods or possessions therein. He simply had possession of keys to the stores, and this was unauthorized by the owner of the stores. The owner of the premises (defendant) seems also to have had possession of keys to the stores, for he delivered to Mr. Wolfe keys to the doors of the stores on April 24th. Under the circumstances above set forth, the mere possession of keys to the stores did not give to plaintiff possession of the stores as against the owner thereof. The permission to remove the partition between the stores, even if it had been authorized, added nothing to the strength of plaintiff's possession. The most that can be claimed for it is that it gave a license to enter for the purpose of removing the partition prior to the beginning of the term, which was never acted upon. Such a license is revocable, even if it had been authorized by the owner. Potter v. Mercer, 53 Cal. 667.

Furthermore, even if it be conceded that plaintiff had a possession of the premises sufficient to warrant an action for forcible entry and detainer, the evidence wholly fails to show that the entry by the defendant was either forcible or unlawful. As before stated, the evidence shows that the lease under which plaintiff claims was void. The evidence also shows that the possession, if he had any, was without authority from the owner (defendant). Defendant therefore had a right of entry, and the possession of plaintiff, if any he had, was unlawful as against defendant. The owner, with a right of entry, of lands unlawfully in the possession of another, may, during the absence of such occupant, peaceably and without force or violence, take possession thereof, and his subsequent refusal to deliver possession to such occupant does not make him guilty of either a forcible entry or forcible detainer. Potter v. Mercer, 53 Cal. 667; Powell v. Lane, 45 Cal. 677. In Powell v. Lane, supra, the action was brought under the forcible entry and detainer act of 1866 (St. 1865-66, p.

768, c. 550), which was substantially identical with sections 1159 and 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Like the case at bar, the complaint was so framed as to state a cause of action under each section of the act. Defendant was the owner of the premises in suit (a dwelling house), but plaintiff had been in possession thereof with her family for over a year. During the absence of plaintiff, defendant went into the house and took possession, removing plaintiff's furniture, without violence, to the other side of the road. On plaintiff's return, she was refused admission, and the next day she made a written demand for possession, so as to bring herself within section 3 of the act (corresponding to subdivision 2 of section 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure), and, being refused, brought her action. It was held that plaintiff could not recover. To the same effect is Potter v. Mercer, supra, which was brought under sections 1159 and 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and in its essential features is much like the case at bar. The plaintiff, pending negotiations with the owners of a certain store for a lease thereof, obtained permission to fit up the store with shelves, etc., and thereupon obtained the key to the store, and immediately employed a carpenter, who, on the same day, took lumber into the building and commenced work. The negotiations for the lease were not consummated, and the license to enter was revoked on the same day. It was held that the owners, after revoking the license to enter, had a right to re-enter if they could do so peaceably and without violence, and, having entered and obtained possession peaceably, they were not guilty of forcible entry or detainer for refusing to permit the plaintiff to enter.

The judgment is affirmed.

March 17, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court, May 14, 1908.)

JUDGMENT—VACATING JUDGMENT—EXCUSABLE NEGLECT—AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS—SUFFICIENCY.

On a motion to set aside a default on the ground of excusable neglect, where the affidavit of merits merely stated that affiant had fully and fairly stated the facts constituting her defense to the action to her counsel, etc., and does not state that affiant had stated all the facts of the case to her counsel, it was insufficient as an affidavit of merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Rose L. Cooper-Power against Elizabeth R. Hanlon, executrix of John D. Hanlon. From an order granting a motion to set aside a default by defendant, plaintiff appeals. Order reversed.

Arthur H. Barendt, for appellant. Coffey & Coffey (Edward C. Harrison, of counsel), for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order granting the motion of defendant to vacate and set aside a default that had been duly entered against her for failure to appear and answer to plaintiff's complaint. The notice of motion was given a few days before the expiration of six months from the entry of the default, and stated that the motion would be made upon the grounds that said default had been taken against defendant through her inadvertence, mistake, and excusable neglect. No answer or proposed answer was served with the notice, but an affidavit of merits sworn to by defendant was served.

This affidavit of merits fails to state that defendant has or had stated all the facts of the case to her counsel, but in that regard simply states "that affiant has fully and fairly stated the facts constituting her defense to the cause of action set out in the complaint in said action, to her counsel," etc. Such an affidavit has repeatedly been held insufficient as an affidavit of merits. Palmer & Rey v. Barclay, 92 Cal. 199, 28 Pac. 226; Morgan v. McDonald, 70 Cal. 32, 11 Pac. 350; People v. Larue, 66 Cal. 235, 5 Pac. 157; Nickerson v. California Raisin Co., 61 Cal. 268.

The order must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

2. EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE—DEATH—ACTION UNDER LAWS OF OTHER JURISDICTION.

At common law there was no right of action for an injury causing death, and, as the courts do not take judicial notice of the laws of foreign jurisdictions, plaintiff, in an action for an injury occurring in the territory of Alaska and resulting in death, must plead and prove the law of that territory to show that in that forum there existed the right of action sued upon, and that the action is brought by the person in whom, under the laws of the foreign jurisdiction, the right is vested.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 51.]

3. APPEAL — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR — PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

In an action for a death resulting from an injury occurring in Alaska, though the court may have erred in sustaining a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, on the ground that the complaint was silent as to the laws of Alaska relating to the right of action, in the absence of proof that the laws of that territory were different than those of California, yet where plaintiff did not ask leave to amend, and does not contend on appeal that an amendment would have obviated the difficulty, the error was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4089-4109.]

4. SAME—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The action of the trial court in granting or denying leave to amend a complaint after the sustaining of a demurrer thereto will not be interfered with on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown by the record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3825-3833.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Death action by Mary J. Ryan against the North Alaska Salmon Company. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Schilling, for appellant. C. H. Wilson, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. The complaint charged that Orion F. Ryan met his death in the territory of Alaska through the negligence of the defendant company by which he was employed. Plaintiff sues to recover damages for the death so occasioned, not as the personal representative, but as his mother and sole surviving heir. Code Civ. Proc. § 377. The complaint was silent as to the laws of the territory of Alaska, and defendant's general demurrer for lack of facts was sustained by the court without leave to amend, and the action was accordingly dismissed.

The demurrer was properly sustained. Where the action as here is transitory in its nature, a right or liability imposed by the statute of another state or of the United States, may in proper cases be asserted and enforced in this state. Such may be taken to be the settled rule since the case of Dennick v. Railway, 103 U. S. 11, 26 L. Ed. 439. But the courts of this state will only entertain such an action for the purpose and upon the terms permitted by the lex loci. In other words, the right to prosecute this action in California is permissible only if permissible under

RYAN v. NORTH ALASKA SALMON CO.
(S. F. 4568.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1908.)

1. COURTS—ACTIONS—TRANSITORY ACTIONS—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

Where an action is transitory in its nature, a right or liability imposed by the statute of another state or of the United States may in proper cases be asserted and enforced in California, but such an action will be entertained only for the purpose and upon the terms permitted by the lex loci.

the laws of Alaska, and only upon such terms as the laws of Alaska prescribe. And as at common law there was no right of action for an injury causing death, and as the courts of this state do not take judicial notice of the laws of foreign states, it is necessary for the plaintiff to plead and prove such law. Thus it is said in Wickersham v. Johnston, 104 Cal. 407, 38 Pac. 89, 43 Am. St. Rep. 118, quoting from Liverpool Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 445, 9 Sup. Ct. 469, 32 L. Ed. 788: "The law of Great Britain since the Declaration of Independence is the law of a foreign country, and, like any other foreign law, is matter of fact, which the courts of this country cannot be presumed to be acquainted with, or to have judicial knowledge of, unless it is pleaded and proved." "There being no right of action at common law for an injury causing death, the plaintiff in such an action must specifically aver and prove that the laws of the state where the injury occurred permit such an action." 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 880; 13 Cyc. 345.

But it is equally well settled that, not only must the law of the foreign state be pleaded to show that in that forum there existed the right of action sued upon, but also it must be pleaded to show that the action is brought by the person in whom, under the laws of the foreign jurisdiction, the right of action is vested, and this because, as is said in Dennick v. Railway, supra, where this subject is considered, the court which renders the judgment can only do so by virtue of the foreign statute. Generally that power is given to the personal representative of the deceased. The laws of this state are broader in this respect, and confer the same right upon the heirs or next of kin of the deceased. But the right conferred by our statute can be exercised only where the cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction of this state, and not in cases such as this, where the measure of the right and the form of procedure are those dictated by a foreign statute. It would follow, therefore, that if the right to prosecute an action such as this is limited by the laws of the territory of Alaska to the personal representative of the deceased alone, such personal representative only could prosecute the action in this state. In the briefs of counsel for respondent the laws of the territory of Alaska are set forth, and it is made to appear that it is the personal representative only who may maintain such an action, and the existence of this law is urged upon this court as a reason in justification of the trial court's ruling dismissing the action. But neither the trial court nor this court takes judicial notice of those laws, and the presentation of them in the brief of counsel cannot be considered the equivalent of a presentation of them in evidence. So far, then, as this court can judicially know, it may be that the laws of the territory of Alaska will permit the prosecution of an action in the form here adopted and countenanced by the Code of this state.

In this view it may be said that technically the trial court fell into error in ordering the action dismissed. But, upon the other hand, plaintiff and appellant did not ask leave to amend, probably for the reason that, in the situation of the law, she could not successfully amend. And upon this appeal her counsel does not contend that by any amendment he could have obviated the difficulty. The most that can be said, then, as to appellant's rights, is that the irregularity was one without injury, and that an appellate court will in every such case sustain the action of the court below, whatever course it may take, unless it is made to appear by the record that there has been an abuse of discretion. Stewart v. Douglass, 148 Cal. 512, 83 Pac. 699.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SIEMSEN. (Cr. 1,417.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1908.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS—COMMITMENT—ORDER—NECESSITY.

Under Pen. Code, § 809, requiring the filing of an information within 30 days after a defendant has been examined and committed, as provided in section 872, and section 872 providing that if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe defendant guilty, the magistrate must make or indorse on the complaint an order signed by him holding defendant to answer the charge, the making of such order, signed by the magistrate, is a prerequisite to the valid filing of an information.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

On motion to set aside an information, because filed before the order had been signed by the magistrate holding defendant to answer the charge, whether the order was signed before or after the filing of the information is a question of fact to be determined by the trial court, and, if there is a substantial conflict of evidence on the point, the conclusion of that court must stand on appeal.

3. EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumptions raised by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15, that an official duty has been regularly performed, and by subdivision 23 that a writing is truly dated, while disputable, are in themselves evidence, and will support a finding made in accordance with them, though there be evidence to the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 105, 109.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW—CONFESSIONS—VOLUNTARY CHARACTER.

A confession, to be admissible, must be free and voluntary; that is, it must not be obtained by any sort of threats or violence, nor by any direct or implied promises, however slight, nor by the exertion of any improper influence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1175-1184.]

5. SAME—DETERMINATION OF QUESTION OF ADMISSIBILITY.

Whether a confession is free and voluntary is a preliminary question addressed to the trial court, and a considerable measure of discretion must be allowed that court in determining it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1219-1221.]

6. SAME.

Defendant, on being brought before the police captain, was asked if he had heard of the confession of his alleged accomplice, to which he replied that he had, and the police captain read the same to him. Defendant stated that parts of it were not true, and specified an entirely unimportant detail. The police captain then brought in the accomplice, and reread the confession in the presence of both. Defendant stated that he preferred to consult a lawyer before making any statement. To this the police officers made no reply, and did not send for an attorney. The police captain turned to the accomplice and said, "Is this true?" to which he replied, "Yes," and, looking at defendant, said, "You know it is true." Defendant hesitated, but finally admitted that it was true, and at the police captain's suggestion signed his name to a statement that the confession was true. While defendant had, up to that time, been kept in close confinement, he had been placed alone at his own request, and had not been subjected to any indignity or unkind treatment. He had been allowed to communicate with his wife, and would, if he had desired, have been allowed to see counsel. Held, that the confession was properly admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1163-1174, 1203-1206.]

7. SAME—CORROBORATION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

On a trial for murder, evidence to show that shortly after the murder defendant and his accomplice had purchased various articles was admissible, where all the items proved corresponded more or less closely with the amounts which, according to the confession of defendant's accomplice, assented to by him, had been paid by them out of the money taken by them, as tending to corroborate the confession in that particular, irrespective of whether, before evidence of the possession of money can be admitted, a foundation must be made by showing that prior to the offense defendant was without funds.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

John Siemsen was convicted of murder in the first degree, and, from the judgment of death pronounced on the verdict and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. P. Wheelan and J. J. Greeley, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and William H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SLOSS, J. John Siemsen and Louis Dabner were, by information filed in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, charged with the murder of M. Munkata. Upon a separate trial, Siemsen was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and he appeals from the judgment of death pronounced pursuant to the verdict, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. Upon being arraigned, the defendant moved to set aside the information. His motion was denied, and this ruling is now assigned as error. The ground of motion was that before the filing of the information the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate, or, more specifically stated, that the information was filed "before any commitment, deposition, or other record showing that said defendant had a preliminary examination had been returned or filed, and that no order of commitment was indorsed upon an alleged paper purporting to be a complaint." Section 809 of the Penal Code provides for the filing of an information within 30 days after a defendant "has been examined and committed, as provided in section 872 of this Code." Section 872 directs that "if it appears from the examination that a public offense has been committed, and there is sufficient cause to believe the defendant guilty thereof, the magistrate must make or indorse on the complaint an order, signed by him," holding the accused to answer the charge. It seems to be settled by the decisions of this court that the making of such order, signed by the magistrate, is a prerequisite to the valid filing of an information. Ex parte Branigan, 19 Cal. 133; People v. Wilson, 93 Cal. 377, 28 Pac. 1061. In so far as the section "provides that the order shall be indorsed upon the deposition, the statute may be regarded as directory; but it is essential that it should be reduced to writing, and entered either upon the official docket of the magistrate or upon the complaint or depositions." People v. Wilson, supra. See, also, People v. Wallace, 94 Cal. 497, 29 Pac. 950. It appears that the information was filed on the 3d day of December, 1906. The complaint which formed the basis of the preliminary examination was produced at the hearing of the motion to set aside the information. Indorsed upon this complaint was a written order, signed by the magistrate, holding the defendants to answer. This order was, on its face, in full compliance with section 872, and bore date of the 1st day of December, 1906, two days prior to the filing of the information. To overthrow the apparent regularity of the proceedings, the defendant called as a witness his counsel, J. J. Greeley, who testified that the information had been filed in the superior court at about five minutes before 10 o'clock, on the morning of December 3d, and that at that time the "commitment," or order holding the defendant to answer, had not been signed; that he had seen the complaint in the police court at about 10:30 o'clock on the same morning; and that the signature of the magistrate had not then been affixed to it. E. P. Shortall, a police judge, who had presided over the preliminary examination, testified that he had no independent recollection of the time when he signed the order, but thought he had signed it on the afternoon of December 1st. "The only thing that calls it to my memory is the date on it." Whether the order holding defendant to answer was signed before or after the filing of the information was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court; and, if there was a substantial conflict of evidence on the point, the conclusion of that court must stand here. We think there was such a conflict. It is true that the testimony of Mr. Greeley was positive, while Judge Shortall expressed only a belief that he had signed the paper on December 1st, and based this belief on the fact that it bore that date. But the court, in determining whether or not to accept Mr. Greeley's testimony, had a right to consider the presumptions raised by law. One of these is that "official duty has been regularly performed"; another that "a writing is truly dated." Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 23. These presumptions, while disputable, are in themselves evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2; People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833; Sarraille v. Calmon, 142 Cal. 651, 76 Pac. 497; Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 77 Pac. 712; Moore v. Gould [Cal.] 91 Pac. 616), and will support a finding made in accordance with them, even though there be evidence to the contrary. It was for the trial judge to determine whether Mr. Greeley's testimony was sufficiently convincing to overcome the presumptions (a) that the district attorney had properly performed his duty by withholding the filing of an information until after an order was signed by the magistrate; and (b) that the order dated the 1st day of December had been signed on that day.

2. The prosecution offered evidence tending to show the following state of facts: M. Munekata was the manager and A. Sasaki the cashier of the Kimmon Ginko Bank, located at 1588 O'Farrell street, in the city of San Francisco. The banking premises contained a private room, separated from the main business office of the bank by a partition of wood and glass. On October 2, 1906, Siemsen entered the bank, made some inquiries of the cashier in the main office, and visited the manager Munekata in the private office. At a few minutes before noon on the 3d of October all of the employés and officers of the bank, with the exception of Munekata and Sasaki, went out for lunch, leaving Munekata in the private office, and Sasaki in the business office. About $2,000 in gold and several hundred dollars in silver were piled in boxes on a table beside the bank counter. At about half-past 12 one of the clerks returned and found Munekata and Sasaki unconscious and covered with blood. All of the money, with the exception of a few cents, had disappeared. On the floor was a piece of gas pipe wrapped in paper. Siemsen and Dabner had been seen coming out of the bank at about 5 or 10 minutes past 12 o'clock. The injured men were removed to the emergency hospital, where Munekata died within two hours. He had sustained an extensive fracture of the skull, which, with the resultant hemorrhage of the brain, was the cause of his death. Sasaki's skull was also fractured, but he finally recovered, and was a witness at the trial. The injuries were such as might have been caused by the piece of pipe found on the floor. They could not have been self-inflicted. Siemsen was arrested on November 3d, and taken to the O'Farrell street police station, where his name was placed on the "detinue book," so-called. He was placed in a cell, but no charge was made against him. On the following day he was taken to the Bush street police station, and placed in a cell with a guard outside to watch him. At his own request, he was confined alone. The public was not permitted to visit him, and the police captain in charge of the station testified that, if an effort had been made, he would not have allowed anyone to communicate with him. "At no time," says this witness, "did he make a request for an attorney to be sent for. If he had asked for a lawyer, I certainly would have complied with his request." He was not threatened or abused in any way, in fact, as stated by the same witness, he was shown more consideration than "an ordinary prisoner." He was allowed to communicate with his wife by telephone.

On the day of the alleged confession Police Captain Duke sent for Siemsen. The chief of police and a detective were present. Capt. Duke said: "Siemsen, I suppose you have heard the boys outside calling out, 'Extra papers! All about the confession of Dabner'"; and he said: "Yes; I have heard it." Prior to that time Siemsen had refused to make any statement unless he received a promise that he would not be hanged, and the police officers had refused to make any promise whatever. The alleged confession of Dabner had been reduced to writing and Duke read it to Siemsen. Siemsen stated that parts of it were not true, and, on being asked what parts were not correct, specified an entirely unimportant detail. Duke then brought the codefendant Dabner and his father into the room and reread the confession in the presence of both defendants. Siemsen stated that he preferred to consult a lawyer before making any statement. The police officers made no reply to this, and did not send for an attorney. Duke turned to Dabner and said, "Dabner, is this true?" and Dabner said, "Yes; it is true"; and, looking at Siemsen, he said: "Jack, you know it is true." Siemsen hesitated for a few seconds, and finally said, "Well, that is the goods, that is true," or words to that effect, and shook hands with the chief of police and with Duke, and thereupon, at Duke's suggestion, signed his name "John Siemsen" to the statement under the words, "This statement is correct throughout," which Duke had first written. Capt. Duke testified that he did not hold out any inducement to Siemsen with reference to what he might state and made no promise of leniency, and made no threats, used no force, and did not put him in any fear. Chief of Police Dinan gave substantially the same testimony as Capt. Duke. He also testified that, after the signing of the confession, newspaper men were admitted, and that in their presence Siemsen stated that the confession was true, and that it was free and voluntary. Upon this showing, the confession was admitted in evidence over defendant's objection. It was in substance as follows: That on the morning of October 3d Siemsen and Dabner left their home together, having planned on the preceding day to rob the Japanese bank. They waited around the bank until they saw the clerks go away, and then went in. Siemsen stopped at the main or front office, and told the Japanese there (Sasaki) that he wanted to see the manager. Siemsen and Dabner went back to the manager's office, and Siemsen struck the manager over the head with a gas pipe which Dabner had wrapped up in a piece of paper. Then Dabner, following out the plan theretofore agreed on by Siemsen and himself, called the other Japanese back to the rear office. When he came back Siemsen struck him over the head several times, and he fell. He then started to get up and Dabner struck him on the head with the pipe and he fell again. The defendants went through the till and got about $2,200, partly in silver and partly in gold, which they put in a hand satchel. They then went to a place where they had left a horse and buggy in waiting and drove to the stable where they kept the horse and buggy. The satchel containing the money was concealed in a sack of oats. In the evening Dabner took it to the room occupied by Siemsen and himself, and counted it. They subsequently spent various sums of this money for clothing and jewelry; the expenditures being stated by Dabner in detail. The objection to the admission of this confession, and of the statements of Siemsen regarding it, was put upon the ground that the prosecution had failed to establish that the confession was free and voluntary on Siemsen's part, and that, on the contrary, the preliminary proof showed that it was made under duress. The objection was overruled and appellant excepted.

Upon the preliminary showing, which we have set forth with some fullness, it cannot be said as matter of law that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the confession of Dabner, together with the statements of Siemsen regarding it. Undoubtedly the rule is elementary, even in the absence of constitutional provisions protecting persons accused of crime, that "a confession, in order to be admissible, must be free and voluntary; that is, must not be extracted by any sort of threats or violence, nor obtained by any direct or implied promises, however slight, nor by the exertion of any improper influence." 3 Russell on Crimes (6th Ed.) 478. As was said by this court in People v. Miller, 135 Cal. 69, 67 Pac. 13: "Before any confession of a defendant can be offered in evidence, it must be shown by the prosecution that it was voluntary, and made without any previous inducement or by reason of any intimidation or threat." The slightest pressure, whether by confession is withheld, is sufficient to require the exclusion of the confession. Thus the confession is not admissible, if made in response to a statement by one in authority to the prisoner that "it will be better for him" to make a full disclosure (People v. Barrie, 49 Cal. 343), or to tell all he knows (People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 598, 24 Pac. 384), or if called forth by a statement of the sheriff that he would do all he could for the prisoner (People v. Gonzales, 136 Cal. 666, 69 Pac. 487). But whether a confession is free and voluntary is a preliminary question addressed to the trial court and to be determined by it (People v. Miller, supra), and a considerable measure of discretion must be allowed that court in determining it. "The admissibility of such evidence so largely depends upon the special circumstances connected with the confession that it is difficult, if not impossible, to formulate a rule that will comprehend all cases. As the question is necessarily addressed, in the first instance, to the judge, and since his discretion must be controlled by all the attendant circumstances, the courts have wisely forbore to mark with absolute precision the limits of admission and exclusion." Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 583, 4 Sup. Ct. 202, 207, 28 L. Ed. 262.

The testimony above recited shows on the part of the officers no express utterance amounting to either a threat or an inducement. The claim is that Siemsen was placed in circumstances which necessarily operated to take from his actions the free and voluntary character which is required by the rule under consideration. Those circumstances are that he was in custody, charged, or to be charged, with a serious crime, and that he was made aware that his co-suspect had made a confession implicating him. It is established law that the mere fact that the confession was made to a police officer, while the accused was under arrest, does not necessarily render the confession involuntary. Hopt v. Utah, supra; Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. Ed. 568; People v. Devine, 46 Cal. 46; People v. Miller, supra; People v. Walker, 140 Cal. 156, 73 Pac. 831. Nor do we think the mere fact that the accused was informed, in the presence of his alleged accomplice, that the latter had confessed, requires the holding that the ensuing confession of this defendant was involuntary. It does not appear that he was, in any way, made to believe that his situation would be better if he confessed, or that it would be worse if he declined to speak. It may well be that a suspect, informed that a co-suspect has confessed, may feel impelled to speak for fear that silence on his part would give rise to inferences against him. Such fear might well be enough to take away from his resulting confession the voluntary character requisite to its admissibility. But it is also possible that he may fully understand that he is not called upon to say anything and that his silence could not be used against him. Here, as was stated by the police officers, the defendant, apparently knowing his rights, declined to say anything without first consulting counsel. Subsequently, without any pressure or suasion, other than a second reading of Dabner's confession, having been brought to bear on him, he decided to admit the truth of Dabner's statement. It cannot be said that the trial court was not justified in finding that this decision on Siemsen's part was voluntary, uninfluenced by either fear or hope induced by word or act of any of the officers. While the defendant had, up to that time, been kept in close confinement, he had been placed alone at his own request, and had not been subjected to any indignity or unkind treatment. He had been allowed to communicate with his wife, and would, if he had desired, have been allowed to see counsel. In this respect the case differs essentially from the Sweat Box Case, 80 Miss. 592, 32 South. 9, 92 Am. St. Rep. 607, and State v. McCullum, 18 Wash. 394, 51 Pac. 1044, relied on by appellant. In each of these cases it was held that a confession induced by means of keeping the prisoner in a dark cell, or "sweat box," under circumstances leading him to believe that he would be kept there until he did confess, could not be used against him. The fact that Siemsen was confronted with Dabner and made to listen in Dabner's presence to the latter's confession is not of itself sufficient to establish the involuntary character of the appellant's admission of the truth of that confession. In Bram v. United States, 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. Ct. 183, 42 L. Ed. 568, the Supreme Court of the United States exhaustively reviewed the authorities on the general subject of the admissibility of extrajudicial confessions by persons accused of crime. In the opinion in that case there are some expressions indicating that a confession made by a prisoner immediately upon a statement by a police officer to the effect that an alleged witness had seen him commit the crime is not voluntary. But the facts of that case were very different from those here presented. It appeared that the police officer had stripped the accused of his clothing, and had said to him: "If you had an accomplice, say so. Do not have the blame of the crime on your own shoulders." That these circumstances were inconsistent with the exercise by the prisoner of a free will, uninfluenced by threat or promise, may well be. The situation is not the same, however, where the prisoner is treated with all the consideration shown to any prisoner, where no word is said to urge him to confess, where by his own declaration he indicates clearly his appreciation of the fact that he is not required to speak, where he has knowledge of his codefendant's confession before he is told of it by the police officers, and where he has, in effect, adopted that confession and admitted its truth in all material respects before being confronted with the codefendant, and before making any request to be allowed to see counsel. The fact that Siemsen said he preferred to consult a lawyer before making a statement, and that the police officers continued the interview without giving him an opportunity to obtain legal advice, would, if there had been no confession up to this point, undoubtedly be a circumstance entitled to considerable weight in determining whether or not the police officers were withholding such advice from him as a means of inducing him, through fear, to assent to Dabner's confession. On the showing here made, however, there was clearly ample ground for the court to conclude that Siemsen's confession was the "spontaneous suggestion of the defendant's own mind, unmoved and uninfluenced by any inducement, promise, threat, or menace by the officer to obtain it." People v. Ramirez, 56 Cal. 536, 38 Am. Rep. 73.

3. After the introduction in evidence of Dabner's confession, assented to by Siemsen, the people offered the testimony of several witnesses to the effect that shortly after the alleged robbery and murder Siemsen and Dabner had purchased various articles of jewelry and clothing, and had paid cash for the same. The sums so shown to have been expended amounted to more than $1,000. In several instances this testimony was objected to on the ground that it had not been shown that the defendant was, prior to the alleged robbery, without means to make these purchases. That the sudden possession of money, immediately after the commission of a larceny, by one who had before that been impecunious, is admissible as a circumstance in the case (People v. Kelly, 132 Cal. 430, 64 Pac. 563), is not disputed. Nor is it questioned that the same rule is applicable here, where, although the charge does not embrace larceny, the proof tends to show that, in the course of committing the crime under investigation, money was taken by the person or persons guilty of the main crime charged. It is urged, however, that before evidence of the possession of money by the defendant can be admitted a foundation must be laid by showing that such defendant was impecunious before the commission of the alleged crime. It may be questioned whether this objection goes to the admissibility, or merely to the weight, of the evidence. This need not be decided here, however, since the evidence was clearly admissible upon another ground. All of the items of expenditure proven over defendant's objection corresponded, more or less closely, with the amounts which, according to the confession, had been paid by the defendants out of money taken by them from the bank. The evidence in question was relevant and proper for the purpose of corroborating the confession in this particular.

4. It is urged that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct, in that, in the course of his opening statement to the jury, he referred to the confession of Dabner and stated its purport. In view of our conclusion, above expressed, that the confession itself was properly admitted as against the appellant, it was, of course, not improper for the prosecuting officer to state that he would prove it.

No other point is made, and we see no reason for disturbing the verdict.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

ZIHN v. ZIHN et al. (S. F. 4,624.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1908.)

1. DEEDS — EVIDENCE — PRESUMPTIONS — DELIVERY.

Where a deed is in possession of the grantee, the presumption is that it was delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 577.]

2. SAME—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action to annul a deed of gift to land, the burden is on plaintiff to rebut a presumption that the deed was delivered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, §§ 574, 575.]

3. APPEAL — REVIEW — FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

In an action to annul a deed of gift, the question of delivery is one of fact for the trial court, and, where the evidence is conflicting, the finding of the trial court is conclusive.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

4. DEEDS — VALIDITY — CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS OF PARTIES—PRESUMPTION OF FRAUD.

The presumption of fraud arising from confidential relations between the parties to a deed of gift goes no further than to throw upon the grantee the burden of showing that the gift was made freely and voluntarily, with full knowledge of all the facts, and with perfect understanding of the effect of the transfer.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

The erroneous admission of evidence is harmless, where the subject-matter of the evidence has been fully covered by other testimony in the case.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by Andreas Zihn against Clara G. Zihn and others. Judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles G. Nagle, for appellant. Edwin L. Forster and William H. Cobb, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to obtain a decree adjudging that the plaintiff is the owner of a lot of land, 43 by about 150 feet, on Twelfth street, in the city and county of San Francisco, and annulling a deed of gift of the same, purporting to have been executed by plaintiff to his three unmarried daughters, defendants herein. Judgment went for defendants, decreeing them to be the owners in fee of said property, subject to a life estate in plaintiff therein, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The complaint proceeds upon the theory that the deed of gift was never delivered by plaintiff to the daughters as a conveyance to them of the property described therein, but was simply given by him into their possession to be kept for him among his other papers, and not recorded, until such time as he was ready to deliver it to them, they promising to so dispose of and keep it, and he, by reason of his trust and confidence in them, relying on their promise to do so. It contains allegations of the confidential relations existing between plaintiff and his unmarried daughters, and the reasons why he was induced to sign and acknowledge the deed and give it to them for safe-keeping; but these allegations all apparently go to the ultimate fact alleged that there was no valid delivery of the deed, and not to the proposition that there was an executed conveyance induced by fraud or undue influence.

The trial court found that on the 4th day of January, 1902, the plaintiff "made, executed, and delivered to the defendants Clara G. Zihn, Emma A. Zihn, and Elizabeth D. Zihn, as grantees, his certain deed of conveyance" of the property, "and that at the same time it was understood and agreed by and between the parties thereto that the plaintiff should have a life estate therein, and that said grantees should become the owners in fee thereof, subject to plaintiff's life estate and right to use and occupy the same for his life," and further that "plaintiff unconditionally delivered said deed to said defendants, and it was not merely delivered to be placed among his papers for safe-keeping and not to be recorded, and it was not agreed that it should be returned to him upon demand." These findings completely negative the allegations of the complaint as to want of delivery of the instrument, and plaintiff is forced to contend that they do not find sufficient support in the evidence given on the trial. There is no warrant in the record for any such claim. The deed was in the possession of the grantees, and therefore presumably had been delivered. Ward v. Dougherty, 75 Cal. 240, 17 Pac. 193, 7 Am. St. Rep. 151; McDougall v. McDougall, 135 Cal. 319, 67 Pac. 778. The burden was on plaintiff to rebut this presumption. This the trial court was fully justified in holding he had not done. Plaintiff was residing with his three unmarried daughters on this property, which had been for a long time the family home. His wife had died a short time before, and the only other heir was a married daughter, who is also a defendant herein, she having been granted an undivided interest in the property by the unmarried daughters. He was 68 or 69 years of age, possessed of other property, and, so far as appears, fully capable of understanding the nature of a transaction of the character under discussion. Great affection had always existed between him and his unmarried daughters, and he was apparently desirous of so arranging the title to this property that they would not be disturbed in their enjoyment thereof after his death. While the daughters suggested and requested that he make them a gift of the home, there is nothing in the record to indicate any undue influence or fraud, or anything inconsistent with the theory that all that he did was done by him freely and voluntarily and for the purpose of giving them a valid claim to the property. He went alone to the office of a notary, and, as alleged in the complaint, "having concluded to arrange said real property," "caused to be written" the deed of gift in question (a deed of gift absolute in terms and without reservation), subscribed and acknowledged the same, carried it to his home, explained it to the grantees therein named, and gave it into their possession. There was some little conflict between the evidence of plaintiff and that of the daughters as to what was said at that time, but the testimony of the daughters was clear to the effect that he gave it into their possession without making any statement inconsistent with the theory that he was making a delivery of a conveyance to the grantees therein named, with the intent to vest in them the title of the property described therein. There was nothing in the relation of the parties or the circumstances surrounding the transaction as disclosed by the record to force a different conclusion. He himself testified that he said: "Here is the paper which you have been whining so much about." He also testified that he told them to take it, keep it for him, put it among his papers, and not record it during his lifetime. But this was expressly denied by the grantees. No question in regard to the matter arose until he subsequently contracted a second marriage in the year 1904. He admitted in his testimony that he told his married daughter, when she suggested that he borrow some money for her on the property, that the property was in the other daughters' names. Immediately after his second marriage, and prior to any question arising as to the deed, and prior to his discovery that it had been recorded, he obtained from the unmarried daughters a written promise and agreement that the property should be their "father's and his wife's and family's home during our father's (Andreas Zihn's) whole lifetime." The testimony quite clearly shows that this writing was prepared under his dictation and given at his suggestion, and was wholly inconsistent with the theory that the deed of gift had not been delivered to the daughters. The question of delivery is one of fact to be determined by the trial court, and, where the evidence is substantially conflicting, the finding of the trial court is conclusive.

It is contended that, even if the deed was delivered, it should be set aside on the ground of fraud. As before stated, this was not the theory of the complaint, but certain facts alleged therein as to the relations of the parties, some of which were admitted by failure to deny in the answer, are relied on. This being simply an appeal from an order denying a new trial, the only question that can be considered in this connection is whether the evidence was sufficient to support the findings made in regard thereto. The trial court found upon this question "that plaintiff was not and is not unaccustomed to or inexperienced in business; * * * that the deed * * * was not executed by reason of any statement made by said defendants, as set forth in his said complaint, nor was it obtained by any threats, coercion, or fraud, but was freely and voluntarily given in consideration of love and affection, and for the better maintenance and support of said defendants." Counsel for plaintiff has not pointed out in his briefs wherein the evidence is insufficient to support these findings, except in so far as he claims that certain admitted facts and other facts shown by evidence without conflict as to the confidential relations of the parties were sufficient to raise the presumption of fraud. Without conceding this, for the purpose of the decision, it may be admitted. The utmost effect of such presumption would merely be to throw upon the donees the burden of showing that the gift was made freely and voluntarily, with full knowledge of all the facts, and with perfect understanding of the effect of the transfer. Soberanes v. Soberanes, 97 Cal. 140, 31 Pac. 910; Arellanes v. Arellanes (Cal.) 90 Pac. 1059. The evidence amply warranted a conclusion that defendants had fully complied with this requirement, and that the case was one of an absolute gift, made freely and voluntarily in the execution of a purpose to so dispose of the property, without the exercise of any fraud on the part of the grantees. Considerable reliance is placed by plaintiff in this connection upon the finding heretofore referred to that at the time of delivery of the deed "it was understood and agreed by and between the parties thereto that the plaintiff should have a life estate therein, and that said grantees should become the owners in fee thereof, subject to plaintiff's life estate and right to use and occupy the same for his life." This finding, which is upon a matter not specifically referred to in any of the pleadings, does not necessarily imply any lack of understanding upon the part of the donor as to the effect of the absolute deed of gift, or that the deed as delivered was not fully in accord with the desire and intention of the grantor, but is entirely consistent with the fact of a separate understanding and agreement then assented to by the grantees, relying on which plaintiff was willing to make and knowingly and voluntarily made delivery of the absolute deed of gift, with full understanding of its legal effect. The finding is apparently based upon the testimony of plaintiff that the understanding was that the place was to be his home as long as he lived, and the writing subsequently executed by the donees to the effect that the property should be their "father's * * * whole lifetime." Although not material on this appeal, it may be noted that the judgment gives the plaintiff all that he can properly claim under such agreement, viz., a life estate in the property.

Certain other findings attacked upon the ground of insufficiency of evidence relate to probative facts, and are of such a nature that a finding in favor of plaintiff thereon could not affect the clear and specific finding of ultimate facts in favor of defendants, as there would be no necessary conflict between such findings. See People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 88 Pac. 899. They are, therefore, immaterial, and need not be here considered.

What we have said in regard to the finding of the understanding and agreement at the time of the delivery of the deed disposes of another contention of plaintiff, viz., that if the deed was delivered, untainted by fraud, nevertheless it should be set aside on the ground that it did not express the intentions of the donor.

The only remaining contention of plaintiff relates to the ruling of the trial court in sustaining an objection to a question asked plaintiff, near the close of his direct examination, as follows: "And you never intended to deliver it to them, you say?" The matter under discussion was the question of the delivery of the deed of gift by plaintiff to the grantees, and the objection made was that it called for the conclusion of the witness. It is unnecessary to consider whether the ruling was technically erroneous, for certainly it was not prejudicial error. The subject-matter of the inquiry had been fully covered by the previous testimony of the witness, as the question itself indicated, the witness having testified substantially that he gave the custody of the deed to his daughters solely that they might keep it for him among the family papers, and he subsequently testified in effect that he did not want to deliver it, and allowed it to go into the possession of his daughters in order that they might put it away among his private papers. It is apparent that an additional statement by him that he never intended to deliver it could not have affected the result.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

SHELL v. GAMBLE et al. (S. F. 4,716.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1908.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — INVALID TRANSACTIONS—INTENT TO DEFRAUD FUTURE CREDITORS.

While a deed of gift may be void because made with intent to enable the grantor to defraud future creditors, to bring a case within that rule the deed must be fraudulent in its inception and made with the specific intent to defraud.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 178-184.]

2. SAME—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proving that a conveyance was made with intent to defraud future creditors is upon the complaining creditor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 806.]

3. APPEAL — REVIEW — CONCLUSIVENESS OF FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Civ. Code, § 3442, providing that the question of fraudulent intent in cases arising under the title relating to fraudulent transfers is one of fact and not of law, the decision of the trial court on an issue of fraudulent conveyance is conclusive where the most that an appellant can establish is a substantial conflict in the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3896-3913.]

4. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to subject certain property standing in the name of a son to the payment of debts of his father, on the ground that part of the property was conveyed directly to the son to defraud creditors, and the remaining portion was taken in the son's name to defraud creditors, though it was in fact the property of the father, evidence held to sustain findings for defendants.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 892-895.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by George W. Schell against A. W. Gamble and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. W. Burchard and R. H. Latimer, for appellant. M. R. Jones, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The action was instituted September 15, 1902, by a judgment creditor of defendant A. W. Gamble, to subject certain real property in Santa Cruz and Contra Costa counties, standing of record in the name of defendant W. H. Gamble, son of defendant A. W. Gamble, to execution upon the judgment of plaintiff, upon the ground, as to the Santa Cruz property, that a conveyance thereof by the father to the son, made July 20, 1893, was made with intent to defraud certain designated creditors and is void, and upon the ground, as to the Contra Costa property, that the same is in fact the property of A. W. Gamble, purchased by him in November, 1898, and that the legal title thereto was at the time of the purchase caused by said A. W. Gamble to be placed in his son, with the intent and for the purpose of defrauding said creditors.

The principal contention of appellant is that the findings of the trial court in favor of defendants upon these matters are not sufficiently supported by the evidence. This contention cannot be upheld.

First, as to the Santa Cruz property: The conveyance of this property was made by A. W. Gamble to his son on July 20, 1893, although the deed was not recorded until July, 1894. At the time of the execution of the conveyance, no one of the designated creditors was a creditor of A. W. Gamble, and the record does not show that he then had any creditor at all. The designated creditors were one Lasserot, J. H. Skirm, and W. D. Storey, attorneys at law, and plaintiff. Lasserot's claim was founded in tort, and none of the acts upon which the claim is based was committed until December 1, 1893. Mr. Skirm's claim was for $50 for legal services, rendered in the year 1894; he having been retained in December, 1893. Mr. Storey's claim was also for legal services; he having been first retained in July, 1894. Plaintiff's claim was for legal services rendered under employment of date March 2, 1898. The record does not show that, at the time of the execution and delivery of the conveyance, there was any probability that any of these parties would ever be a creditor of A. W. Gamble. It is true that a deed of gift, which we may assume this deed to have been, may be void because made with intent to enable the grantor to defraud future creditors. See Bush & Mallett Co. v. Helbing, 134 Cal. 676, 66 Pac. 967, and authorities there cited. But to bring a case within this rule the deed must be fraudulent in its inception, made with the specific intent to defraud future creditors. The question of such fraudulent intent as to such future creditors is one of fact and not of law (Civ. Code, § 3442), and the burden of proof is upon the complaining creditor to show that the conveyance was made with such intent (Bush & Mallett Co. v. Helbing, supra). We have carefully examined the evidence contained in the record, and find no warrant for holding that there is not therein substantial evidence to support the conclusion of the trial court in this matter so far as the conveyance of the Santa Cruz land on July 20, 1893, is concerned. The most that appellant can establish in this regard is that there was a substantial conflict of evidence, and, under the well-settled rule, the decision of the trial court is conclusive.

Second, as to the Contra Costa property: The evidence was ample to sustain the conclusion of the trial court that A. W. Gamble never owned any interest whatever in this property. It was acquired by W. H. Gamble from one Bishop in the year 1898, apparently in exchange for certain property of Mrs. A. W. Gamble, who was the wife of A. W. Gamble and the mother of W. H. Gamble, and the assumption by the grantee of certain existing mortgages on the property. No part of the consideration therefor came from A. W. Gamble. It is claimed that the real property given by Mrs. Gamble in exchange for this property had been fraudulently conveyed to her by W. H. Gamble. She acquired this property in the year 1893 by deed from her husband, and there was substantial evidence to the effect that it was so conveyed to her in payment of a just debt due her from him, and without any intent on his part to defraud anybody.

Other findings attacked are not material in view of our conclusion upon those already discussed. Several alleged errors of law on the part of the trial court in the matter of the admission and rejection of testimony were assigned in the statement on motion for new trial, but they are noticed in appellant's brief only by a general statement that all of them were valid and well taken. We have, however, examined them, and find nothing therein of sufficient importance to warrant a reversal, even if any of them was technically erroneous.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

CRESCENT FEATHER CO. v. UNITED UPHOLSTERERS' UNION, LOCAL NO. 28, et al. (S. F. 4,593.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL—SCOPE OF REVIEW—APPEAL FROM ORDER ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

Upon an appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial, only such matters can be considered as are made grounds upon which the superior court is authorized to grant the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3476-3486.]

2. SAME.

Upon an appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial, the appellate court cannot consider either the sufficiency of the complaint or of the findings to support the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3476-3486.]

3. INJUNCTION—RESTRAINING TRADE UNIONS—ISSUES AND PROOF.

In an action to enjoin a union from interfering with plaintiff's business, it was defendant's right to insist upon proof of every material allegation of the complaint which had been controverted by the answer, and such right was not in the least affected by the court's intimation that a complete case had been made out, which intimation caused plaintiff to refrain from offering further evidence.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the Crescent Feather Company against the United Upholsterers' Union, Local No. 28, and others. Judgment for plaintiff. From an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

F. V. Meyers, for appellants. Bush Finnell, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action brought by a manufacturing corporation against a labor union and some of its officers and members to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff in the conduct of its business by stationing pickets in the neighborhood of plaintiff's place of business, or otherwise molesting or interfering with any person or persons transacting business with plaintiff. The plaintiff recovered judgment as prayed. A motion by defendants for new trial was denied, and the defendants appeal from the order denying their said motion. There is no appeal from the judgment.

The defendants contend that the relief granted to the plaintiff was too broad; the judgment restraining the commission of acts which, it is said, should not, upon the facts as alleged and found, have been enjoined. This question cannot be raised on the record before us. "Upon an appeal from an order granting or denying a new trial, only such matters can be considered as are made grounds upon which the superior court is authorized to grant or deny the motion." Green v. Duvergey, 146 Cal. 379, 80 Pac. 234. Upon such appeal the appellate court cannot consider either the sufficiency of the complaint or of the findings to support the judgment. Martin v. Matfield, 49 Cal. 42; Brisson v. Brisson, 90 Cal. 323, 27 Pac. 186; Bode v. Lee, 102 Cal. 583, 36 Pac. 936; Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 108 Cal. 240, 41 Pac. 299; Rauer v. Fay, 128 Cal. 523, 61 Pac. 90; Hunter v. Milam, 133 Cal. 601, 65 Pac. 1079; Williams v. Long, 139 Cal. 186, 72 Pac. 911; Williams v. Hawley, 144 Cal. 97, 77 Pac. 762; Brownlee v. Reiner, 147 Cal. 641, 82 Pac. 324. The record before us does, however, properly present the question whether the evidence is sufficient to justify the findings, and in our opinion this is the only question which need be considered.

The complaint alleges, in substance, that on October 5, 1904, a representative of the defendant union informed plaintiff, a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling mattresses and bedding, that six men, members of the said union, must quit plaintiff's employ, and that if plaintiff would not discharge all its nonunion mattress makers the said union would call out on a strike the six union members and would declare a boycott against the plaintiff's business. The plaintiff declined to comply with this demand. Thereupon the defendant union inaugurated and declared a boycott upon plaintiff's business, and called out the six men, who quit the employ of plaintiff, although said six men had informed plaintiff that they were willing to re-enter plaintiff's employ, but feared violence at the hands of members of the union if they did so. It is alleged that the defendants "entered into a combination, confederation, and conspiracy for the purpose of coercing the plaintiff and subjecting the control of plaintiff's business" to said union by inaugurating and declaring a boycott on plaintiff's business, and in pursuance of said combination, confederation, and conspiracy, placed pickets in the vicinity of plaintiff's place of business, and that said pickets intercepted, molested, intimidated, and frightened the non-union employes of plaintiff by threats of violence and prevented them from remaining in the employ of plaintiff. In furtherance of the said conspiracy the defendants sent plaintiff's various customers a notice, informing them that a boycott had been placed on plaintiff by the defendant union, and requesting them to withdraw their patronage from plaintiff. A notice stating that plaintiff was so boycotted was similarly posted in many public places. It is averred that the pickets were so placed for the purpose of not only intimidating the plaintiff's employes into quitting its service, but for the purpose of intimidating customers of plaintiff. Plaintiff alleges on information and belief that many persons have been frightened and intimidated from plaintiff's said place of business by the pickets, and by said notices and posters above mentioned. It is alleged that the pickets threaten to continue the acts complained of; that plaintiff has already been damaged in the sum of $1,000, and if said acts continue as threatened plaintiff will suffer irreparable injury; that there is no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law; and that each of the defendants is financially irresponsible.

The defendants filed an answer denying some of the allegations of the complaint and making certain affirmative averments. Upon the trial the court found that "all the allegations contained in the plaintiff's complaint are true and that all the allegations contained in the answer of the defendants are untrue." The bill of exceptions contains specifications questioning the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the finding in favor of each of the foregoing allegations of the complaint. As to some of these no issue is raised by the answer. The defendants did, however, make direct and positive denials that any representatives or pickets of the defendant "interfered or molested or intimidated or frightened non-union employes of plaintiff or any thereof, or any person"; that "any threats of violence or of doing violence to the person have ever been made by any person whatever on behalf of these defendants, or any thereof, to any of the employes of plaintiff or to any one else for any purpose whatever; that any of the defendants have ever placed any pickets in the neighborhood of plaintiff's place of business for the purpose of intimidating patrons or customers of plaintiff, or that any customer of plaintiff has ever been intimidated or frightened from patronizing the plaintiff by anything done or said by defendants, or any one acting upon their behalf, or any picket of said defendant union." It is denied that pickets or representatives of defendant union "were at the time of the filing of the complaint herein, or are now, engaged in any of the acts complained of."

It cannot be questioned that these denials raise material issues. The essence of plaintiff's complaint is the unlawful interference by defendants with the conduct of its business. Such interference is alleged to have been exercised in two ways—by posting or sending out notices, and by stationing pickets about plaintiff's place of business. Of these two methods, the latter was probably the more objectionable, as more likely to have a coercive or intimidating effect. It is alleged that the pickets were intended to, and did in fact, threaten and intimidate prospective customers of plaintiff, and that they sought to frighten workmen from the employ of plaintiff by threats of physical violence. The record is entirely devoid of evidence tending to show that the pickets had come in contact with, or had in any manner whatever influenced, any one who may have desired to deal with plaintiff as a customer. It may be questioned whether there is any competent evidence tending to show, on the part of the pickets, any acts or words amounting to a threat, express or implied, of bodily violence as against the plaintiff's employés. But, if we assume that what was shown in this regard would justify the inference that the conduct of the pickets conveyed such threat to the workmen of plaintiff, it was not made to appear that any pickets were stationed at or near plaintiff's place of business at any time after the 12th of October. The complaint was filed on October 19th. There was no testimony, therefore, to justify the finding that the pickets "are still engaged in the acts * * * complained of." The findings here under discussion form the basis of much of the relief awarded by the decree, and the fact that no support for them is to be found in the evidence requires the reversal of the order appealed from.

In justice to counsel for respondent it should be stated that the meagerness of the evidence offered in support of the complaint was not due to any neglect upon his part. While he was examining a witness, and before he had given any indication of a readiness to close his case, the court interrupted and asked what the defense in the case was. This information having been given, the defendants were directed to put in their defense at once. This colloquy then ensued:

"Mr. Hutton (Attorney for Defendants): Do you close your case, Mr. Finnell?"

"Mr. Finnell (Attorney for Plaintiff): If his honor thinks it is sufficient."

"The Court: Put your defense in."

The defendants thereupon moved for a nonsuit, which was denied, and then rested their case without offering any evidence. Apparently the plaintiff was prepared to offer further evidence, but very naturally hesitated to insist upon his right to present it in the face of the court's intimation that a complete case had been made out. It is unfortunate for the respondent that it may have been thus prevented from fully proving its right to the relief sought. The fact remains, however, that it was the right of the defendants to insist upon proof of every material allegation of the complaint which had been controverted by the answer. The record failing to show such proof the cause must be remanded for a new trial.

The order appealed from is reversed.

O'SULLIVAN v. GRIFFITH. (S. F. 4,621.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1908.

Rehearing Denied May 29, 1908.)

1. STREET RAILROADS — FRANCHISE—USE OF STREETS—NATURE OF RIGHT.

The right to use the streets of a city as a way upon which to operate a street railroad is a right in real property, an incorporeal hereditament.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — ACTIONS FOR PURCHASE PRICE—DEFENSES—DEFECT IN TITLE.

At common law, where the deed contains no covenant of seisin, etc., a purchaser cannot avoid the payment of purchase price of land, on the ground that his vendor did not have good title, unless the sale was procured by fraud or by mistake of such a character that equity would relieve the purchaser from its effect.

3. STREET RAILROADS—SALE OF FRANCHISE—VALIDITY AND EFFECT—ESTOPPEL OF PURCHASER.

Plaintiff transferred to defendant by deed all of his interest in certain franchises for the building of a street railroad, which had been granted to him, the deed containing no covenants of title or seisin, and no fraud or mistake was alleged in making the sale. Held, that the deed transferred, not merely the paper under which plaintiff claimed, but was a transfer of an interest in real property, and amounted to a quitclaim deed; and hence the fact that plaintiff had no title to the franchise sold was not a defense in an action for the purchase price, and evidence that the original grant of the franchise to plaintiff was invalid was properly rejected.

4. COVENANTS—IMPLIED COVENANTS—WORDS OF CONVEYANCE.

A covenant of warranty is never implied from a mere recital, but any words in a deed which show an agreement to do a thing constitute a covenant, and where an agreement is contained in a deed an action will lie for its breach, whether it is contained in a recital or elsewhere.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1691, 1693.]

5. SAME — CONVEYANCE OF FRANCHISE—RECITALS.

Where plaintiff transferred to defendant certain franchises for a street railroad, the conveyance reciting that the franchise was "duly given" by the city council, such recital was merely a description of the thing granted; and, while it might constitute an estoppel against the grantors, it did not amount to an express agreement or covenant that plaintiff had good title to the franchise conveyed.

6. SALES—ACTIONS FOR PRICE—DEFENSES—DEFECT IN TITLE.

Even if a conveyance by plaintiff of certain franchises to defendant was merely a transfer of the instrument by which the franchise was granted, and not of an interest in real property, there being no warranty or title or seisin in plaintiff, in the absence of fraud or mistake, the doctrine of caveat emptor applies; and the fact that the instrument transferred was invalid was not a defense to an action for the purchase price of the franchise.

7. SAME — WARRANTIES OF TITLE—COMMON-LAW DOCTRINE.

The doctrine of the civil law, raising an implied warranty of title upon the sale of personal property, has no application in this state, where the common law on that subject prevails.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 749, 750.]

8. TRIAL — RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF OFFER.

In an action for the purchase price of certain franchises transferred by plaintiff to defendant, an offer by defendant to show that the franchises were wholly void, and were defective under the laws of the state wherein they were granted, cannot be construed as an offer to prove that the laws of such state did not permit the transfer of a franchise without the consent of the state.

9. EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS—LAWS OF OTHER STATES—STATUTES AND COMMON LAW.

In the absence of proof to the contrary, the laws of another state, its statutes as well as the common law, are presumed to be the same as the law of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 101.]

10. STREET RAILROADS—FRANCHISES—SALE OF FRANCHISE—CONSENT OF STATE—NECESSITY.

Civ. Code, § 510, provides that street railways are governed by the provisions of title 3, in so far as they are applicable, unless such railroads are specially excepted. Section 511 provides that, when a street railway is constructed, owned, or operated by a natural person, this title is applicable to such person, as well as to corporations. Section 494 of title 3 provides that any railroad corporation or person owning any railroad in this state may transfer its franchise to any other railroad corporation, whether organized within or without this state, and the transferee may operate the franchise property within the state and exercise all the rights of a domestic corporation. Held, that a street railroad franchise may be transferred in this state, whether held by a corporation or natural person, and the formal or express consent of the state is not necessary.

11. SAME — VALIDITY—PUBLIC POLICY — SALE OF FRANCHISE — ISSUANCE OF CORPORATE BONDS TO PAY PURCHASE PRICE.

Where plaintiff transferred to defendant franchises for a street railroad, defendant agreeing to form a corporation, to build and operate a street railroad, and to cause corporate bonds to be issued to plaintiff in payment for the franchise, such agreement to issue bonds and to construct the road was not contrary to public policy, and was a legitimate and valid undertaking.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by J. B. O'Sullivan against S. N. Griffith. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. C. Caldwell, for appellant. Smith & Ostrander, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from a judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff sued to recover $2,700 alleged to be due as the purchase price of all the right, title, and interest of plaintiff and J. Wiseman MacDonald in certain street railroad franchises in Reno, Nev., sold and conveyed by plaintiff and MacDonald to the defendant. The conveyance to the defendant recited the fact that the franchises had been duly given to the plaintiff and two other persons, who had subsequently transferred their interest to the plaintiff, and then proceeded thus: "Now, it is witnessed that for a valuable consideration the said J. B. O'Sullivan hereby grants, bargains, sells, conveys, and assigns to S. N. Griffith, of Fresno, Cal., all and every his right, title, and interest in and to and under said franchises and each of them." MacDonald had previously obtained from O'Sullivan an option to purchase the franchises, and a clause was added to the effect that he likewise assigned and conveyed to O'Sullivan his interest under the option. A separate instrument of the same date was simultaneously executed, whereby Griffith agreed that he would at once form a corporation to build and operate the roads and cause it to issue bonds secured by a mortgage upon the roads, and would buy said bonds to the amount of $2,700, par value, and deliver the same to MacDonald within six months from the date of the contract, and that "if said bonds are not issued and delivered in said time the said Griffith shall pay to the said MacDonald the sum of $2,700." MacDonald assigned to plaintiff all his interest under the contract. The defendant did not cause said bonds to be issued and delivered to MacDonald within the six months specified, nor at all. The defendant alleged in his answer that the promise to pay the money sued for was without consideration. This claim is based on allegations that, under the laws of Nevada, the proceedings by which the alleged franchises were granted to the original grantees were so defective in several particulars that they were wholly void, and that, in consequence, the grants of the franchises were void, or, in other words, that the grantors of the defendant had no title to the franchises they attempted to convey to Griffith, that he received nothing for the transfer, and hence that there was no consideration. In support of this answer defendant offered in evidence the law of the state of Nevada. An objection that the evidence was immaterial and incompetent was sustained, and this ruling is assigned as error.

Appellant's argument is in part based on the theory that the things granted and forming the consideration of the promise were the papers or documents by which the grant of the franchise was manifested, and not the right to use the streets as a way upon which to construct and operate a street railroad. This is not the effect of the conveyance to Griffith. O'Sullivan and MacDonald did not merely transfer the paper; but, as the instrument itself declares, O'Sullivan and MacDonald each granted "his right, title, and interest in and to and under the franchises." This language purports to transfer the estate or property rights created by the original grant, and not merely the document containing the grant. The right to use the streets of a city as a way upon which to build and operate a street railroad is a right in real property, an incorporeal hereditament. Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin Co., 148 Cal. 319, 83 Pac. 54, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174. The grant to Griffith purports to convey only the right, title, and interest of the grantors, with no covenants of title, and is, in effect, a mere deed of quitclaim. Gee v. Moore, 14 Cal. 472; Allen v. Holton, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 458. The case, therefore, stands upon the same ground as a suit for the price of land granted by quitclaim deed, where the grantor had no title in the premises. "It has long been the settled rule at the common law that, where there are no covenants of seisin, etc., in the deed, the defendant cannot avoid payment of the purchase money on the ground that the title existed elsewhere than in the grantor." Fowler v. Smith, 2 Cal. 44. It is no defense to a note given in consideration of the conveyance to the maker of all the interest of the payee in a tract of land that the payee had no interest in the land, unless the sale was procured by the fraud of the payee, or by reason of mistake of such a character that equity would relieve the maker from its effects. Rawle on Covenants, § 321; Perkins v. Bumford, 3 N. H. 522; Tobin v. Bell, 61 Ala. 125; Owens v. Thompson, 4 Ill. 502; Hulett v. Hamilton, 60 Minn. 21, 61 N. W. 672; Smith v. Winston, 3 Miss. 601; Foy v. Haughton, 85 N. C. 168; Cross v. Noble, 67 Pa. 74. The defendant, by the conveyance, obtained exactly what his contract calls for; that is, all the right, title, and interest of the grantors in and under the franchises. No fraud or mistake is alleged. The grantors did not covenant that they had any interest, but only conveyed such as they had. In such cases the purchaser is deemed to take all the risk of title upon himself. The answer did not show a want of consideration and the evidence was properly rejected.

The appellant assumes, without argument, that from the recital in the instrument transferring the franchises to him that the franchises had been "duly given" the law will imply a covenant or warranty that they were valid. This assumption is not well founded. In Rawle on Covenants, § 280, that author says: "Owing to a misapprehension of one or two old cases, the dangerous doctrine has been more than once broached that covenants for title may be implied from a recital; but this has since been distinctly and decisively repudiated." A covenant or warranty is never implied from a mere recital. The true rule is thus stated in Comyn's Digest, quoted with approval in Hale v. Finch, 104 U. S. 269, 26 L. Ed. 732: "Any words in a deed, which show an agreement to do a thing, make a covenant; but, where words do not amount to an agreement, covenant does not lie." An agreement may be set forth in a deed, as well as in any other writing; and, where it is so expressed, an action will lie for its breach, whether it is contained in a recital or elsewhere in the conveyance. But it must be so drawn as to express a contract, and a mere recital that a fact has transpired, that a franchise has been duly given, cannot be turned into an agreement to be held responsible in the event that it was not legally granted. The recitals in the conveyance that the franchise in the city of Reno was duly given by the city council, and regularly confirmed at a special election, that the franchise in the county of Washoe was duly given, and that both franchises had been duly transferred to O'Sullivan, do not state any contract or agreement on the part of the grantors. They merely declare the chain of title, and serve as a more particular description of the thing granted to Griffith. They might constitute an estoppel against the grantors in the instrument, but they do not express any agreement. Ferguson v. Dent, 8 Mo. 669; Peck v. Hensley, 20 Tex. 678. The same rule would obtain if the grant is regarded merely as a transfer of the instruments by which the franchises were granted. In that event, there being no warranty, fraud, or mistake, the rule is that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies, and the fact that the instrument transferred was void is no defense to an action for the price. Christy v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 337; Sutro v. Rhodes, 92 Cal. 117, 28 Pac. 98; Harvey v. Dale, 96 Cal. 160, 31 Pac. 14. The case of Meyer v. Richards, 163 U. S. 383, 16 Sup. Ct. 1148, 41 L. Ed. 199, was decided according to the rule of the civil law prevailing in Louisiana, whereby a sale or transfer of the thing implies a warranty of title. See Fowler v. Smith, supra. It has no application in this state, where the common-law rule on that subject prevails. We do not think the decision in Amestoy v. Electric R. T. Co., 95 Cal. 311, 30 Pac. 550, announces a doctrine contrary to the common-law rule on this subject as settled by the decisions above cited.

The defendant further answered that under the law of the state of Nevada the franchises in question could not be assigned without the consent of the state. It may be conceded that the allegation on this point is an allegation of fact as to the law, and not a mere conclusion. It is not necessary to decide the question whether or not it is sufficient in form, for there was no offer to prove the laws of Nevada on this point. The offer which counsel for the defendant made to prove certain things by the law of Nevada cannot reasonably be construed as an offer to prove that that law did not permit the transfer of a franchise of this kind without the consent of the state. The defense, therefore, must rest upon the presumption which prevails in this state concerning the law of another state in the absence of proof thereof. Such law in that case is presumed to be the same as the law of this state. Hickman v. Alpaugh, 21 Cal. 225; Hill v. Grigsby, 32 Cal. 60; Marsters v. Lash, 61 Cal. 624; Shumway v. Leake, 67 Cal. 460, 8 Pac. 12; Mortimer v. Marder, 93 Cal. 178, 28 Pac. 814; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674;

Texas, etc., Co., supra. In this state a street railroad franchise may be transferred, whether held by a corporation or natural person, and no formal or express consent of the state is necessary. Civ. Code, §§ 494, 510, 511.

The franchises in question were not personal property, and the provisions of the civil law and the decisions relating to warranties implied from the sale of personalty have no application to this case. As above stated, there is no pleading attempting to show that the sale was made through fraud on the part of the grantors or by the mistake of the defendant. It is not alleged that the defendant was ignorant of the actual facts in regard to the proceedings for the granting of the franchises, nor that he relied on any representations or recitals in the deed, nor that he was not as well informed as to the validity of the franchises, both in law and in fact, as the plaintiff and MacDonald.

We do not perceive any ground on which to hold that the stipulations in the agreement sued on, requiring Griffith to form a corporation to build and operate a street railroad and to cause corporate bonds to be issued to MacDonald in payment for the franchises—that is, the rights of way upon which the road was to be built—are contrary to public policy, or of such effect as to make the entire contract void. It seems to be a perfectly legitimate and valid undertaking.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

SEQUEIRA v. COLLINS et al. (S. F. 3,752.) (Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL — NOTICE—SERVICE AND FILING—FAILURE TO FILE IN TIME.

A notice of appeal from a judgment, served and filed more than six months after the entry of the judgment, confers no jurisdiction on the appellate court to entertain the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1926–1931.]

2. PLEDGES—CREATION—CONTRACT.

Defendant, having possession, under an oral contract for purchase, of land on which he had commenced making brick, executed two written instruments, one of which purported to transfer all his interest in the contract for the purchase of the land and in and to the brick made and to be made thereon to plaintiff; the other instrument, after reciting the transfer, providing that it was made as security for all moneys to become due from defendant to plaintiff, who agreed to advance money for the making of the brick. The agreement further provided that plaintiff was to be and remain the owner of all brick made, and entitled to its possession, until payment of all sums due him. Held that, while the instrument purported to transfer the property, the transfer was made as security and operated to vest in plaintiff only a lien, and, as far as the bricks were concerned, the writings were to be viewed as a contract for the creation of a pledge.

3. SAME—DELIVERY OF PROPERTY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—EVIDENCE.

Civ. Code, § 3440, requires a transfer of personal property, in order to be good against creditors, to be accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property. Held, that the statute by its terms excepts transfers of property not in existence at the time of the transfer from the requirement of immediate delivery, and where, at the time of the transfer of certain brick made and to be made, only the first arch in one kiln had been laid, which arch contained only 18,000 brick, none of which had been burned, no immediate delivery was required to make the transfer valid.

4. SAME.

Under Civ. Code, § 3440, requiring the transfer of personal property, in order to be good against creditors, to be accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession, the possession taken by a pledgee must be actual, and not merely constructive, in order to give him a valid lien, and the mere fact that a pledgee of brick gave some directions to men engaged in making the brick did not show a taking of possession; it not appearing that he ever supplanted the pledgor in the general management of the work, or took the direction thereof out of his hands.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Pledges, §§ 28–40, 47.]

5. SAME.

Where goods sold or transferred are bulky, or require further labor to fit them for use, it is not essential to a change of possession that they should be removed from the land of the transferor, nor does the mere fact that the transferor retains some measure of control over the goods conclusively establish the absence of an actual and continued change of possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Pledges, §§ 28–40.]

6. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence examined, and held insufficient to show that certain personal property ever passed from the possession of the pledgor into that of the pledgee.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Antone George Sequeira against J. D. Collins and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Appeal from judgment dismissed, and order denying new trial reversed.

H. U. Brandenstein and Stanton L. Carter, for appellants. L. L. Cory, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to recover damages for the conversion of 640,000 bricks alleged to be of the value of $4,000. The plaintiff recovered judgment for $3,100, and the defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The notice of appeal from the judgment was served and filed more than six months after the entry of judgment, and therefore conferred no jurisdiction on the appellate court to entertain this appeal.

The brick in question were in two kilns standing upon land in Fresno county. The defendant Weihe commenced an action against one Spinney to recover $4,000, with interest and costs, and in that action caused a writ of attachment to be issued and placed in the hands of defendant Collins, the sheriff of Fresno county, for levy. Pursuant to this writ and to the instructions given by Weihe, Collins attached and took into his possession the two kilns of brick. The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner and entitled to the possession of the attached property, served upon the sheriff a demand for the release of the attachment, and, his demand being refused, he instituted this action.

The main question between the parties is whether certain transactions had between Spinney and the plaintiff prior to the levy of the writ of attachment operated to transfer to the plaintiff an interest in the brick which he could assert as against an attaching creditor. It appears without controversy that the land upon which the kilns were standing had originally belonged to defendant Weihe. In August, 1897, Weihe made an oral agreement with Spinney whereby it was agreed that Spinney should purchase from Weihe the land in question for the sum of $4,000, with interest, payable in annual installments of $1,000 each. Spinney went into possession of the land under this agreement and remained in possession until after the levy of the writ of attachment. In 1901 Spinney commenced the manufacture of the brick in question; the material therefor being taken from the land. In May, 1901, some of the brick in one of the kilns being then in place but not yet burnt, he made an agreement with Sequeira, the plaintiff, whereby the latter agreed to advance the money necessary for the making of the brick. Two written instruments were executed. One of these purported to transfer to Sequeira all his right, title, and interest in and to the contract with Weihe for the purchase of the land, and also his right, title, and interest in and to the brick made and to be made thereon. The other, after reciting the transfer, provided that it "is made as security for the performance on the part of the said first party (Spinney) of the agreements herein mentioned and to secure to said second party (Sequeira) all sums due and in any manner to become due from said first party to second party." By this writing, Sequeira agreed to advance, for the making of the brick, such sums as he might "deem best," and was to receive interest on all sums advanced, and one-half of the net profits realized from the sale of the brick. The agreement in question further provided that Sequeira was to be and remain the owner of all brick made, and entitled to its possession, until payment of all sums due him. There is no room for controversy as to the legal effect of these instruments. While they purport to transfer the property, the transfer is plainly made as security, and operated to vest in the plaintiff only a lien. So far as the bricks are concerned, the writings are to be viewed as a contract for the creation of a pledge. Civ. Code, § 2988.

Sequeira made advances from time to time to pay for the expense of preparing, manufacturing, and burning the brick; his advances amounting in all to $3,270. Spinney completed the moulding and laying of the brick in the first kiln, laid a second kiln, and proceeded to burn both. One of the kilns was finished in August, and the other in September, 1901. The attachment was levied on the 16th day of April, 1902. It is contended by the appellants that there had been no such "immediate delivery" or "actual and continued change of possession" of the property transferred, as is required by section 3440 of the Civil Code, to make the transfer valid as against a creditor of the transferrer. In this connection the court found "that said bricks were not in existence at the time the said agreements were so entered into and executed, and thereafter, and long prior to this action, and since said bricks were manufactured, the plaintiff took possession thereof, and ever since maintained the possession thereof down to the time when the defendant J. D. Collins took possession thereof in pursuance of the writ of attachment herein referred to." Section 3440, above referred to, requires a transfer of personal property to be accompanied by an immediate delivery and followed by an actual and continued change of possession "if made by a person having at the time the possession or control of the property." If the property is not in existence at the time of the transfer, it is obviously impossible that it should be in the possession and control of the transferrer, and the statute by its terms excepts transfers of such property from the requirement of immediate delivery. There is evidence here that at the time of the transfer only the first arch in one kiln had been laid, and that this arch contained only 18,000 brick, none of which had been burned. We think this clearly brings the case within the exception of the statute, and that no immediate delivery was required in order to make the transfer valid. Newell v. Desmond, 74 Cal. 46, 15 Pac. 369. But, apart from the question of an immediate delivery, it was essential, in order to vest in plaintiff an interest in the property which would entitle him to hold it as against a creditor of Spinney, that he should have taken possession and held the bricks. The instruments under which the plaintiff claimed amounted, as has been said, to no more than a pledge of the brick. "A pledge is a deposit of personal property as security (Civ. Code, § 2986), and is dependent on possession, and is not valid until the property is delivered to the pledgee (Civ. Code, § 2988). The delivery must be as complete as is required in case of sales of personal property by section 3440 of the Civil Code, and change of possession must be continuous and open." Lilienthal v. Ballou, 125 Cal. 183, 57 Pac. 897.

The testimony relied upon to support the finding that plaintiff took and maintained possession is, in the main, that of the plaintiff himself. He stated that he took possession of the brick and always remained in possession of them until they were seized by the sheriff; that he went out to the land on which the bricks were being made "right along," sometimes at night, sometimes in the morning; that when there he would look around to see that everything was going along all right; that he went out every day during some weeks, and twice or three times a week at other times, sometimes staying and working on the premises all day; that he was there every night while the second kiln was being burnt, but that sometimes he did not go there for a month; and that he was in charge of the brick. He employed some men to work on the kilns, but this was at the request of Spinney. He instructed the men not to lay the brick too close. It appeared, without controversy, that Spinney was in possession of the land on which the kilns stood, and was conducting some farming operations on the portion of the tract not used in making brick. There was no evidence that Spinney ever did any act or said any word indicating an intent to make an actual or a constructive delivery of the kilns to the plaintiff. We think this testimony was insufficient to justify the finding that the plaintiff took or maintained possession of the brick. No importance is to be attached to his general statements that he had possession or was in charge. These are mere conclusions, and have no value if unsupported by the facts testified to. It clearly appears that Spinney, the man in possession of the land, commenced the manufacture of the bricks on that land, and carried that work to completion with the aid of men employed by him. There is nothing in the testimony of Sequeira to show that the possession of the brick ever passed from Spinney. There is no contention, and no basis for a contention, that Sequeira and Spinney were in joint possession, assuming that such joint possession would be sufficient. The claim that the plaintiff took possession must rest on the assumption that he took it from Spinney, with or without the latter's consent. But the record fails to show that Spinney's possession of the brick was not as full and complete at the date of the levy of the attachment as it had been at any prior time. The character of the possession which must be taken by a pledgee in order to give him a valid lien is, as above stated, the same as that defined in section 3440 of the Civil Code. Lillenthal v. Ballou, supra. That is to say, the change of possession must be actual, not merely constructive. Bunting v. Saltz, 84 Cal. 168, 24 Pac. 167. It must be "open and unequivocal, carrying with it the usual marks and indications of ownership." Stevens v. Irwin, 15 Cal. 503, 76 Am. Dec. 500; George v. Pierce, 123 Cal. 172, 55 Pac. 775, 56 Pac. 53. As was said in McKee Stair Co. v. Martin, 126 Cal. 557, 58 Pac. 1044: "There must be a visible and apparent change of the custody of the property, such as to give evidence to the world of the claims of the new owner." There was nothing in this case to show that Spinney did not at all times retain the full custody and control of the bricks. The mere fact that Sequeira gave some directions to the men engaged in the work cannot be given this effect, for it is not pretended that he ever supplanted Spinney in the general management of the work, or took its direction out of his hands.

We do not overlook the consideration that the acts necessary to constitute a change of possession depend upon the character and situation of the property transferred. "The law recognizes the fact that all species of personal property are not capable of the same kind of possession, and requires only that a purchaser or donee shall take such possession as the character and nature of the property admit of." 14 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 374; Chaffin v. Doub, 14 Cal. 384; Porter v. Bucher, 98 Cal. 454, 33 Pac. 335; Dubois v. Spinks, 114 Cal. 289, 46 Pac. 95. Where the goods sold or transferred are bulky, or require further labor to fit them for use, it is not essential to a change of possession that they should be removed from the land of the transferor. Chaffin v. Doub, supra; Porter v. Bucher, supra; Dubois v. Spinks, supra. Nor can it be said that the mere fact that the transferor retains some measure of control over the goods conclusively establishes the absence of an actual and continued change of possession. Stevens v. Irwin, supra. In Dubois v. Spinks, supra, it was held that a quantity of cord wood had passed into the possession of the transferee, although the wood had not been removed from the place where it had been piled. In Tognini v. Kyle, 17 Nev. 209, 30 Pac. 829, 45 Am. Rep. 442, the same rule was applied to the transfer of a large quantity of charcoal. In each of these cases, the vendor or transferor, by words of delivery, or otherwise, turned over his possession to the vendee. Other cases of similar purport are cited; but it has never been held, at least in this state, that an actual change of possession has taken place, where the transferor, after the transfer, continues to exercise the same control and dominion over the property as before, and has done nothing to indicate any intention of passing that control and dominion from himself to his transferee. Woods v. Bugbey, 29 Cal. 467, was a case, the facts of which were strikingly like those here presented. In holding that there had been no actual change of possession, the court used language which may well be applied to the case at bar: "In no case that we are aware of has the Supreme Court of this state laid down a rule requiring less than that the purchaser must have that possession which places him in the relation to the property which owners usually are to the like kind of property. In Lay v. Neville, 25 Cal. 552, the court, in reference to the subject, say: 'It was intended that the vendee should immediately take and continuously hold the possession of the goods purchased, in the manner and accompanied with such plain and unmistakable acts of possession, control, and ownership, as a prudent bona fide purchaser would do in the exercise of his rights over the property, so that all persons might have notice that he owned and had possession of the property.'” Testing the evidence by this rule, we are satisfied that it fails to show that the kilns ever passed from the possession of Spinney into that of Sequeira. There is nothing in the case tending to raise the slightest doubt as to the good faith of plaintiff in taking the assignment of the brick as security for his advances, but the hardship of a particular case furnishes no reason for disregarding the provision of the statute which makes the lien of the pledgee dependent upon actual possession of the property pledged.

The conclusion reached makes it unnecessary to consider the other points made.

The appeal from the judgment is dismissed. The order denying a new trial is reversed.

KAISER v. BARRON. (L. A. 1,963.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1908.)

1. PAYMENT—VOLUNTARY PAYMENT.

A payment of money made on execution is not a voluntary payment, even though there has been no seizure of the property of the one who makes the payment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Payment, § 264.]

2. COSTS—TAXATION—DUTIES AND PROCEEDINGS OF TAXING OFFICER.

The only judgment for costs which the clerk has authority to enter is for costs which have been taxed, and an entry of costs in the judgment against plaintiff, while a motion to tax them was pending, was without authority, and an execution issued for the collection of such costs should be recalled.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Suit to quiet title by Emil Kaiser against U. M. Barron. From a judgment for defendant, and from certain orders made after judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. C. Spencer, for appellant. Charles S. McKelvey, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to a certain 25 acres of land. Defendant answered, setting forth a contract entered into by himself and plaintiff's predecessor in interest, the substance of which contract was that defendant would plant the northern 15 acres in walnut trees, and would nurture and care for them until the 1st day of January, 1906, at which time defendant having fulfilled the conditions of his contract, plaintiff's predecessor in interest agreed to convey to him the southerly 10 acres. Defendant then averred that Sisson, plaintiff's predecessor in interest, placed him in the actual possession of the 25 acres of land for the purpose of fulfilling the covenants contained in the agreement, and that ever since he has been in such possession under the provisions of their contract. After trial, judgment passed for defendant; the judgment being to the effect that the contract above referred to was valid and subsisting, and that defendant was entitled to possession of the premises and was entitled, upon complying with the provisions thereof, to have a conveyance made to him of the southerly 10 acres. From this judgment plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll. He also appeals from certain orders made after judgment, and which will hereinafter be more particularly specified.

Upon appeal from the judgment the contention is that the findings do not support it. The judgment, as has been said, decrees a rightful possession of the premises in defendant. Defendant pleaded, as above noted, that Sisson placed him in possession of all of the land for the purposes of fulfilling the contract and that such possession, under such license and in accordance with the contract, he has ever since maintained. The findings, however, are silent upon the matter, and while it may be said that it can be gathered from a reading of the contract that defendant, for the purposes of executing it, was entitled to the possession of the northerly 15 acres which he was to set out as an orchard and irrigate, cultivate, and prune, yet the contract is wholly silent as to the possession or right of possession of the southerly 10 acres. Defendant's right of possession of this comes, as he pleads, from the act of Sisson. But the court's failure to find upon this important matter leaves the judgment as to this 10 acres without any support in the findings. The same may be said of another piece of the northerly 15 acres, amounting to 1.92 acres. As to this, the finding of the court is that by executed parol agreement this portion of the 15 acres was excluded, or, in other words, defendant was called upon to put into orchard only 13.08 acres. Nothing in the findings justified the court's judgment awarding a continued possession to defendant of this 1.92 acres. It stands in this regard precisely as does the 10 acres above considered.

Defendant filed his cost bill, and plaintiff gave timely notice to tax the costs. The matter of taxing costs was continued by order of court, and, while so pending and undetermined, the judgment for costs was entered and docketed by the clerk and execution thereon issued. Plaintiff then made his motion to recall the execution, upon the ground that it was improvidently issued, and also to tax the costs, and in so doing to disallow an item of $3.75 for serving a subpoena, and an item of $20 for reporter's charges, and to correct an error of $9.95 in the addition of the items as they appeared upon the face of the bill. In response to this the defendant showed that, after the execution levy for the costs upon the land, plaintiff, desiring to make a sale of his interest therein, paid the amount called for. Upon this showing the court ruled that the costs had been voluntarily paid, and denied these motions. But it is well settled that a payment of money made on execution is not a voluntary payment, even though there has been no seizure of the property of the one who makes the payment. First Nat. Bank v. Watkins, 21 Mich. 483; Knox Co. Bank v. Doty, 9 Ohio St. 506, 75 Am. Dec. 479; Scholey v. Halsey, 72 N. Y. 578; Hiler v. Hiler, 35 Ohio St. 645; Manning v. Poling, 114 Iowa, 20, 83 N. W. 895, 86 N. W. 30. The only judgment for costs which the clerk has authority to enter is for costs which have been taxed. The entry of costs in the judgment, while a motion to tax them was pending, was without authority, and the issuance of an execution for the collection of such costs and the levy upon plaintiff's property was improvident and untimely. The motion to recall the execution should have been granted, as well as the motion to tax costs.

The order refusing to tax costs and the order refusing to recall the execution are reversed. The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. This renders unnecessary a consideration of the appeal from the order refusing to modify the judgment.

PEOPLE v. DABNER. (Cr. 1,418.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—APPEALABLE ORDERS.

An order refusing leave to withdraw a plea of guilty is not appealable, though it may be reviewed on appeal from the judgment.

2. HOMICIDE—MURDER—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that a homicide was murder in the first degree, without mitigating circumstances.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—PLEA OF GUILTY—WITHDRAWAL—JUDICIAL DISCRETION.

A trial court did not abuse the sound discretion expressly vested in it by Pen. Code, § 1018, in refusing to permit one accused of murder to withdraw a plea of guilty after a finding that the homicide was murder in the first degree, without mitigating circumstances, where the plea was made after ample time for deliberation and with full knowledge of law, the facts, and course of procedure to follow such plea, and where there was no serious doubt as to accused's guilt, and it did not appear that evidence could be produced tending to mitigate the offense; that he voluntarily confessed; that his plea was prompted by a hope that he would escape death and be condemned to imprisonment; and that he had previously borne a good reputation not entitling him to withdraw the plea.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 629, 633.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Carroll Cook, Judge.

Louis Dabner was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals from a judgment on the conviction and from an order refusing leave to withdraw his plea of guilty. Affirmed.

G. P. Hall, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Wm. H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant and one John Siemsen were jointly charged with the murder of one M. Munekata. Upon arraignment Dabner pleaded guilty. Thereupon the court heard evidence to enable it to ascertain and determine the degree of the crime, and upon the evidence taken declared it to be murder of the first degree without mitigating circumstances, and punishable with death. When subsequently brought before the court for judgment and sentence upon the said plea, the defendant asked leave to withdraw his plea of guilty and enter a plea of not guilty to the charge. Evidence and affidavits in support of, and in opposition to, this application, were introduced. The court refused to allow the withdrawal of the plea of guilty, and pronounced judgment and sentence of death. The appeal purports to be taken from the judgment and also from the order refusing leave to withdraw the plea. The latter order is not appealable; but, inasmuch as it can be reviewed on appeal from the judgment, the point is immaterial. A bill of exceptions, setting forth the evidence taken and proceedings had upon the inquiry as to the degree of the crime and upon the motion for leave to withdraw the plea, was duly settled and appears in the record on appeal.

The evidence shows that Siemsen and Dabner about noon on November 3, 1906, entered a bank in San Francisco, known as the Japanese Bank, which was then in charge of the deceased Munekata, who was its manager, and an assistant named Sasaki, and asked to see the manager on business. They were admitted to the manager's private office, which was in the rear of the premises, and Siemsen immediately struck Munekata on the head with a piece of gas pipe which Dabner had procured the night before. Munekata was rendered unconscious by the blow, and died therefrom shortly afterwards. Dabner, as soon as the blow was struck and Munekata fell back unconscious, called to Sasaki, the assistant, to come to the manager's office. He came and he also was beaten over the head by Siemsen and rendered unconscious. Siemsen then took from the till some $2,000 or $3,000, and the two defendants went off with it. The entire occurrence occupied but a few minutes and attracted no attention from the outside. The two had visited the bank the day before, for the purpose of observation to ascertain how the robbery could be accomplished, and had carefully planned the affair beforehand, even to the detail that Dabner was to call Sasaki to the manager's office as soon as Siemenzen had stricken down the manager with the gas pipe. There was no fact or circumstance connected with the commission of the murder that tends in the least degree to mitigate it. The only mitigating circumstance concerning the defendant was the fact that he confessed his crime when he was arrested. It was upon his confession that the details of the killing and the robbery were first disclosed. We cannot perceive that his subsequent confession has any bearing upon the question whether or not the crime itself was committed with deliberation and under circumstances which rendered it particularly flagrant and heinous. The court did not err in holding that it was murder of the first degree with no mitigating circumstances.

In support of the application to withdraw the plea of guilty, substitute a plea of not guilty, and go to trial before a jury, it was shown that the defendant was only 18 years old, and that until February, 1906, he had lived in or near the city of Petaluma; that he had there borne a good reputation for honesty, integrity, and good behavior; and that he was not a strong-minded person, but was easily influenced by others. It was also claimed that he was insane. The grounds of his motion were that his plea of guilty was made through inadvertence, without due deliberation, in ignorance of the law and the consequences of such a plea, in obedience to the advice and instruction of his father, and in the belief that, if he made that plea, a jury would be called to fix his punishment, and that he would be sentenced only to imprisonment for life. Evidence was given tending in some degree to support some of these grounds. On the other hand, the record shows that when he was arraigned, an attorney was appointed by the court to represent him; that two days were given him to consider his plea, that at the expiration of the two days other counsel were appointed to act as his attorneys and the case was continued for two more days; that a demurrer was then filed and submitted without argument and overruled by the court; that the attorneys then stated to the court that the defendant wished to plead guilty; that this was against their advice; and that they wanted to withdraw from the case. The court then asked the defendant personally if he wanted to plead guilty, and he said that he did. The court then informed him that he could have other counsel if he desired it, and proceeded to explain to him, clearly and at length, that, if he pleaded guilty, it would be the duty of the judge of the court, and not a jury, to ascertain and determine whether the crime committed was murder of the first or second degree, and that, if it was determined to be of the first degree, the judge also would have to determine whether he was to be hanged, or sentenced only to life imprisonment, but that, if he pleaded not guilty, these questions would be decided by a jury. He was then directed to talk to his attorneys further about the matter, and after such conversation inform the court what he desired to do. He then talked with his attorney, and again signified his desire to plead guilty, his attorney again declaring that he had advised against it. On the hearing of the motion he testified that in this conversation with his attorney he was advised that, if he pleaded guilty, the court would determine the crime to be murder of the first degree and sentence him to death by hanging, and that he fully understood what was said to him by the attorney and by the court, but that he was governed in the matter by the advice of his father. After the last statement by the attorney, the court again asked the defendant if he fully understood what he was doing, and he answered that he did. His plea was then taken and entered of record, his attorneys immediately withdrawing from the case. The case was continued to the following day to take evidence as to the degree of the crime. At that time the evidence was given, the degree of the crime, and punishment was fixed as above stated, and the matter was continued two days for sentence. At the time fixed for sentence a different attorney appeared for the defendant and made the application for leave to withdraw the plea, as above stated.

It thus appears that the defendant was given five days for deliberation as to his plea; that during this time he had the counsel and advice of three attorneys, all urging him to plead not guilty; that he was fully informed by them as to the difference in the procedure if he pleaded guilty from that to be had if he pleaded not guilty; and that the court also explained to him the course of procedure. His own testimony taken in these proceedings indicates that he is a young man of at least ordinary intelligence and quickness of apprehension, while that of others tended to show that he was possessed of considerable shrewdness and cunning. It must be conceded that the court justly concluded that the defendant made his plea after ample time for deliberation and not in ignorance of the law, or facts, nor of the course of procedure to follow, and with full knowledge thereof. Doubtless he was prompted by the hope that he would escape death and be condemned only to imprisonment, and he seems to have been induced to indulge this hope largely by the suggestions and advice of his father. But we do not think this fact of sufficient force to have required the court to permit a withdrawal of this plea after the event had proven that his hope was vain. If this was so, then the punishment upon a plea of guilty must always be something less than the greatest allowed by law, for the defendant in pleading guilty, always hopes for less, and, if his disappointment was sufficient to give the right to withdraw the plea, it would in such a case always be withdrawn. It was not until the court had declared that the penalty would be death, and after a subsequent delay of six days, that the defendant applied to withdraw and change his plea. There was no contention to the effect that there was any serious doubt as to the defendant's guilt, or that evidence could be produced which would tend to prove that the offense was anything less than murder of the first degree, or even to mitigate its atrocity and lay the foundation for a verdict of imprisonment for life, except the claim that the defendant was insane and that prior to his departure from Petaluma, 10 months before the time of sentence, he had borne a good reputation for honesty, integrity, and good behavior. The evidence of his insanity was very slight, but nevertheless the court appointed three physicians to examine him in that respect, and they unanimously pronounced him sane. His previous good character might have some bearing on the fact of his participation in the crime, if that were in doubt, but there is no pretense that he did not aid and assist therein with deliberation and previous knowledge of the character of assault which was to be made. A cold-blooded, cruel, and deliberate murder is not rendered any the less atrocious by the fact that the person committing it was previously of good reputation.

Section 1018 of the Penal Code provides that the court may at any time before judgment permit the withdrawal of a plea of guilty and a substitution of a plea of not guilty. It is a matter within the sound discretion of the court, and its action must be upheld unless an abuse of discretion is shown. The following remarks of the court in People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 16, 45 Pac. 987, are particularly applicable here: "The mere fact that a defendant, knowing his rights and the consequences of his act, hoped or believed, or was led by his counsel to hope or believe, that he would receive a shorter sentence or a milder punishment by pleading guilty than that which would fall to his lot after trial and conviction by jury, presents no ground for the exercise of this liberal discretion, People v. Lennox, 67 Cal. 113, 7 Pac. 260. To hold that it did would be equivalent to saying that a defendant might speculate upon the supposed clemency of a judge, with the right to retract if, at any time before sentence, he began to think that his expectation would not be realized. * * * Only after it is made manifest that defendant is to suffer the extreme penalty, and that no further delay will be permitted, do counsel produce the affidavit, itself made upon the day of the hearing, but not offered until that moment, and asked to be allowed to retrace all these steps thus advisedly taken. What conclusion can be reached except the one that, because the court was about to pronounce sentence of death, defendant and his counsel, knowing that he could not fare worse at the hands of a jury, and might fare better, sought an opportunity to essay the other chance." If we could perceive anything in the evidence which would have called for a lesser punishment than that the trial court was about to impose, some reason might appear why defendant should have been permitted to withdraw his plea and put his fate before a jury. No showing of this kind is made. The record not only fails to show an abuse of discretion, but, to the contrary, from first to last makes manifest that the trial judge, placed in an unusual and trying position, conducted all of the proceedings with a just and even solicitous regard for the defendant's rights, and ruled as alone it was permissible for him to rule under the facts before him. The defendant's acts indicate that he is not so dangerous or vicious as his codefendant Siemsen. His voluntary confession seems to have been full and frank. These facts might have aroused in the mind of the court some degree of sympathy for him, and perhaps, if a jury had considered the case, such sympathy might have been sufficiently potent to have saved him from the death penalty. But the comparison with his partner in crime does not establish the fact that his own acts were not sufficiently atrocious to deserve the severest penalty, but only to show that there were degrees of viciousness to which his disposition and capacity did not carry him. His voluntary confession does not lessen or soften the character of his crime. But, whatever its effect may be, it was addressed to the discretion of the court below, and it is not of sufficient weight to control our action to such an extent as to justify us in declaring that that discretion was abused. The responsibility in such matters rests upon the superior court. This court has no function to perform regarding it, except to see that the discretion of that court is not unreasonably exercised. As a matter of law the action of the superior court is justified by the facts. If an appeal is to be made to sympathy and sentiment, it can only be done on an application for clemency and mercy addressed to the executive department of the state.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

COREA v. HIGUERA et ux. (S. F. 4,674.) (Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1908.)

1. EASEMENTS—WAYS OF NECESSITY—REQUISITES.

No right of way over another's land exists as a way of necessity where claimant's land is bounded by a road connecting with the county roads, though there is no easy access to that road, and no constructed track for teams connecting his land with it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, §§ 50–55.]

2. SAME—EFFECT OF CONVEYANCE OF LAND.

If a right of way over defendants' land was appurtenant to a tract which they conveyed to plaintiff's predecessor, it passed with the conveyance of the tract, under Civ. Code, § 1104, providing that a transfer of land passes all easements attached thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 66.]

3. SAME—"APPURTENANCE."

Under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 662, a thing is deemed to be incidental or "appurtenant" to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, e. g., a way, water course, or passage for light, air, or heat from or across the land of another.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, §§ 8, 9, 10.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 477, 487; vol. 8, p. 7580.]

4. SAME—NATURE.

An easement is real property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, §§ 1, 2.]

5. TRIAL—FINDINGS—NATURE.

A finding or an allegation that plaintiff owned a right of way across defendants' land and that it was appurtenant to his land is a sufficient statement of ultimate facts to be established, and is not a conclusion of law.

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—FINDINGS.

A judgment, based upon allegations and findings of sufficient ultimate facts, cannot be attacked on an appeal on the judgment roll alone, merely because the complaint and the findings contain in addition a showing of probative facts which, taken alone, might not support the judgment.

7. SAME.

Findings of probative facts can be used to overcome an express finding of the ultimate fact only where the probative facts found are inconsistent with the ultimate fact found, or where it appears that the trial court made the alleged finding of ultimate fact simply as a conclusion from the particular facts found.

8. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PLEADING—DEMURRER.

A demurrer to a complaint on the ground that limitations have run is not good unless the complaint shows affirmatively that they have run.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 671.]

9. EASEMENTS—DISUSE—PLEADING.

In an action involving plaintiff's right of way across defendant's land, if the right had been extinguished by disuse, under Civ. Code, § 811, prescribing how servitudes may be extinguished, it was a matter of defense to be pleaded and proved by defendants, and could not be raised by demurrer, where such extinguishment did not appear on the face of the complaint.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Frank Corea against Bernardo Higuera and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles Clark, for appellants. Wm. H. Johnson, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The complaint in this action alleges that on November 2, 1894, the defendant Bernardo Higuera was the owner of lot 7 of the Higuera rancho. On that day the defendants conveyed a portion of said lot to John Freitas, one of the boundaries of the tract conveyed being described as the center of the Higuera ranch road, a road connecting with the county road. Thereafter Freitas died, and in 1897 the executors of his will, pursuant to a probate sale duly authorized and confirmed by the superior court, conveyed the land so acquired by their testator to the plaintiff, who has ever since been the owner and in possession thereof. At all the times mentioned there had been a road leading from the land conveyed to Freitas across the remaining portion of lot 7 to the Higuera ranch road. The road which thus traversed lot 7 was used by defendants prior to their conveyance to Freitas, and at the time of the latter's purchase was open, laid out, and used as a means of ingress and egress to and from the land conveyed, "and was the only road so laid out and open by which said place could be reached by team; and * * * the said road was and had been appurtenant to said lands." The defendants claim to be the exclusive owners of said road and have obstructed it. It is alleged that plaintiff is the owner of and entitled to said right of way. A demurrer to the complaint having been overruled, the defendants answered, denying the allegations of the complaint regarding the existence of the road in question; denying that said alleged road was open, laid out, or used, at the time Freitas' purchase, or that of plaintiff, or that it was the only road by which said place could be reached by team. The answer denies, further, that the road was or is appurtenant to the land of plaintiff, or that plaintiff is the owner of any right of way over defendants' lands. By way of affirmative defense it is alleged that the land conveyed to Freitas and subsequently to plaintiff was at all times bounded on one side by the main Higuera ranch road, by which the plaintiff and his predecessors had access to and from his lands to the county roads. There is a further averment that any use which plaintiff or Freitas may have made of the road over defendants' lands was solely by the permission of the defendants. The court finds that at the times of the conveyances to Freitas and to plaintiff there had been and was, leading from the land so conveyed across the remaining portion of lot 7, a road used by the defendants prior to their conveyance with the lands conveyed to Freitas. This road is found to have been open, laid out, and used as a means of ingress or egress to said lands, and was the only road so laid out and open by which said lands could be reached by team. Said road was, at the time of Freitas' purchase, appurtenant to said lands and passed with the same. It was appurtenant to said lands at the time plaintiff purchased, and passed to him as appurtenant thereto. There is a finding that plaintiff "is the owner of and entitled to said right of way over the lands of defendants to the county road, to pass and repass on foot and with team." The court further finds that the lands of plaintiff are bounded on one side by the Higuera ranch road, which was and is an open traveled road leading to the county road. Said Higuera ranch road was not, prior to the commencement of this action, used by plaintiff, and plaintiff "has not easy access to said Higuera ranch road for any purpose to and from his own lands or at all." It is found "that plaintiff is entitled to the said right of way as appurtenant over the lands of defendants," and there is a finding against the allegation of the answer that the use of said way by plaintiff and his predecessors was by the permission of defendants. Upon these findings the court entered a judgment declaring the plaintiff to be the owner of the roadway described in the complaint, and enjoining the defendants from obstructing said road or interfering with plaintiff's use thereof. The defendants appeal from the judgment. The evidence is not before us, the appeal being taken on the judgment roll alone.

The principal point urged is that neither the complaint nor the findings state a case entitling the plaintiff to relief. Assuming that the plaintiff claims a "way of necessity," the appellants argue that the facts alleged and found do not authorize the assertion of such right. This conclusion is undoubtedly sound. The complaint shows, as do the findings, that the land conveyed to plaintiff's predecessor was at all times bounded on one side by the Higuera ranch road, which connected with the county roads. This circumstance alone is fatal to the existence of a way of necessity. The facts that there was no constructed track for teams connecting plaintiff's land with the Higuera ranch road, as may be inferred from the complaint, or that, as the court finds, plaintiff had not "easy access" to that road, would not entitle him to assert a right of way by necessity. "The right of way from necessity must be in fact what the term naturally imports, and cannot exist except in cases of strict necessity. * * * That the way over his land is too steep or too narrow, or that other and like difficulties exist, does not alter the case, and it is only when there is no way through his own land that a grantee can claim a right over that of his grantor. It must also appear that the grantee has no other way." Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 62, 11 Pac. 879. But, as is pointed out by respondent, his right does not rest upon the claim of a way of necessity. The complaint alleges, and the court finds, that the right of way here in dispute was, at the time of the conveyance to Freitas, appurtenant to the land conveyed. It is also alleged and found that the plaintiff is the owner of said right of way, which is specifically described. If the right of way was appurtenant to the land, it passed with the transfer of that land. Civ. Code, § 1104. What is an appurtenance is defined by section 662 of the Civil Code. The findings that the plaintiff was the owner of the way in question and that it did constitute such appurtenance are findings of fact, and such findings, in the absence of a claim that they are not supported by the evidence, necessarily lead to the conclusion that plaintiff was entitled to judgment. An easement is real property, and an allegation that plaintiff is the owner of specific real property, has always in this state been regarded as an averment of an ultimate fact not of a conclusion of law. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 220; Haight v. Green, 19 Cal. 117; Garwood v. Hastings, 38 Cal. 218; Johnson v. Vance, 86 Cal. 130, 24 Pac. 863; Haggin v. Kelly, 136 Cal. 483, 69 Pac. 140. An averment that a certain road or street is a public highway is a statement of a fact (Bequette v. Patterson, 104 Cal. 282, 37 Pac. 917; People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 88 Pac. 899), and we see no reason why an allegation that the plaintiff is the owner of a described right of way or other easement over defendant's land, and that such easement is appurtenant to plaintiff's land, should not be regarded as a sufficient statement of the ultimate facts to be established. Such allegations have been held to be sufficient in other jurisdictions (Whaley v. Stevens, 27 S. C. 549, 4 S. E. 145; Hall v. Hedrick, 125 Ind. 326, 25 N. E. 350), and we are cited to no authority in support of the contention that they set forth merely conclusions of law.

The appellants argue, however, that the specific facts alleged and found are insufficient to show the existence of a right of way appurtenant to the land conveyed. But, if we assume this to be true, the appellants would not be helped. The facts stated regarding the use of the way prior to the conveyance to Freitas are merely probative facts, and, if not inconsistent with the findings of ultimate facts, cannot affect those findings. This subject was fully considered by this court in People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 88 Pac. 899. Upon a careful review of the authorities, it was there declared that upon an appeal on the judgment roll alone a judgment based upon allegations and findings of sufficient ultimate facts cannot be successfully assailed merely because the complaint and the findings contain in addition a showing of probative facts which, taken alone, might not support the judgment. The findings of probative facts can be used to overcome an express finding of the ultimate fact only where the probative facts found are inconsistent with the ultimate fact found, or where it appears that the trial court made the alleged finding of ultimate fact simply as a conclusion from the particular facts found. These conditions do not exist here. The averments and findings regarding the use of the road prior to the conveyance to Freitas, if they are not sufficient to establish the existence of a right of way as appurtenant, are in no way inconsistent with such right; nor is there anything on the face of the findings to show that the court treated the finding that the right of way was appurtenant, or the further finding that plaintiff was the owner of such way, as mere conclusions following from other facts found. The findings of these ultimate facts are separate and independent.

Appellants urge that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations, and that their demurrer, which specified this ground, should have been sustained. A demurrer on this ground is not good unless the complaint affirmatively shows that the statutory period has run since the accrual of the cause of action. Wise v. Hogan, 77 Cal. 184, 19 Pac. 278; Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877. The complaint here does not show when the defendants first obstructed the road or interfered with plaintiff's use of it. If, as is suggested by appellants, plaintiff's right was extinguished by disuse (Civ. Code, § 811), such extinguishment did not appear on the face of the complaint, and, if it existed, was matter of defense to be averred and proved by the defendants.

There are no other points requiring notice. The judgment is affirmed.

REDWOOD CITY SALT CO. v. WHITNEY et al. (S. F. 4,685.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1908.)

1. SALES—ACTION FOR VALUE OF GOODS—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint against partners and against one of them individually, alleging that plaintiff sold "defendants' goods, etc., alleges clearly and intelligibly a joint purchase by the partnership and an individual.

2. PARTIES—JOINDER—PARTNERSHIP AND INDIVIDUAL.

A complaint against partners and one of them individually for the value of goods sold them does not show a misjoinder of causes of action; all the parties to the joint purchase being necessary parties defendant.

3. PARTNERSHIP—DEBTS—LIABILITY OF PARTNERS.

Under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 2442, partners are liable jointly with their copartners for partnership debts.

4. APPEAL—DISPOSITION—PARTLY ERRONEOUS JUDGMENT.

That judgment for goods sold should have been awarded against partners only, instead of against them and one of them individually, does not require a reversal of the judgment against the partners, since Code Civ. Proc. § 578, formerly Prac. Act, § 145 (St. 1851, p. 73, c. 5), providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several parties, has abrogated the common-law rule that in an action on a joint contract, plaintiff must recover against all or none of the defendants, and the judgment may be set aside on appeal so far as the individual liability of the partner is concerned.

5. SALES—ACTION FOR VALUE OF GOODS—PLEADING—VARIANCE—MATERIALITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 469, providing that no variance between pleading and proof shall be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense, the variance in an action to recover the price of goods sold between an allegation that they were sold to partners and one of them individually and proof that they were sold to the partners was not material.

6. SAME—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in action for the value of goods sold held sufficient to show the value of the goods.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the Redwood City Salt Company against Arthur L. Whitney individually and as a partner and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Hewlett, Bancroft & Ballantine, for appellants. Ross & Ross, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by all the defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff against them for the sum of $2,215.20 for goods sold and delivered.

1. The action was against Arthur L. Whitney and Albion H. Whitney, copartners doing business under the name and style of C. E. Whitney & Co., and said Arthur L. Whitney, individually. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff "at the special instance and request of the defendants sold and delivered to the said defendants goods, wares, and merchandise," the reasonable value of which was $2,410, and that no part of said sum had been paid. A demurrer on the grounds (1) that several causes of action were improperly united, in that a cause of action against Arthur L. Whitney and Albion H. Whitney as copartners was joined with a cause of action against said Arthur L. Whitney, individually; (2) that there was a misjoinder of parties, in that said partners were joined as defendants with said Arthur L. Whitney individually; (3) that the complaint was uncertain in that it did not appear therefrom whether the goods, etc., were sold and delivered to said partners or to Arthur L. Whitney individually; (4) that it was ambiguous for the same reason; and (5) that it was unintelligible for the same reason—was overruled, and complaint is made of this ruling on this appeal. There was no uncertainty, ambiguity, or unintelligibility in the complaint. It is susceptible of but one construction, viz., that the goods were sold and delivered to the partnership, and Arthur L. Whitney as an individual, or, in other words, that Arthur L. Whitney and the firm of C. E. Whitney & Co., of which he was a member, jointly purchased the goods. We know of no reason why a member of a partnership as an individual cannot unite with the partnership in the purchase of property for the joint benefit of the partnership and himself personally. Certainly it would not be contended that property could not be purchased jointly by a partnership and a third person not a member of the firm, and there is no material distinction in this regard between the case of a third person and that of one who is a member of the partnership. The complaint states clearly, unambiguously, and intelligibly the simple case of a joint purchase by a partnership and an individual. There was no misjoinder of causes of action. There was but a single cause of action stated, namely, a cause of action for the reasonable value of goods sold and delivered, to all the defendants, and there was no misjoinder of parties, for all of the parties jointly purchasing were necessary parties defendant. See Harrison v. McCormick, 69 Cal. 616, 620, 11 Pac. 456; Cox v. Gille, etc., Co., 8 Okl. 483, 58 Pac. 645. The demurrer, therefore, was properly overruled.

2. The verdict and judgment must, likewise, be construed as being against Arthur L. Whitney jointly with the partnership. It is contended that the evidence was not sufficient to support a conclusion of any joint purchase by the firm and Arthur L. Whitney individually. We think it is true that there was no substantial evidence to show anything but a purchase by and delivery to the partnership firm of C. E. Whitney & Co. This the evidence amply shows with the result that each of the members of the firm, Arthur L. Whitney and Albion H. Whitney, was, jointly with his copartners, liable to plaintiff for the value of the goods. Civ. Code, § 2442. But there was no liability on the part of defendant Arthur L. Whitney except such as the law imposed upon him as a member of the partnership for a partnership debt. The judgment against him in so far as it may be a judgment for an individual debt as distinguished from a partnership debt is improper. It does not follow, however, as appears to be assumed by appellants, that the judgment against the partners must be reversed. It is established that the common-law rule to the effect that, in an action on a joint contract, the plaintiff must recover against all or none of the defendants has been abrogated in this state, and that in such an action the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against those of the defendants who are shown to be liable on the obligation. This is held to be the effect of section 578 of the Code of Civil Procedure, Code 1906, p. 210, formerly section 145 of the practice act, providing that judgment may be given for or against one or more of several plaintiffs, and for or against one or more of several defendants. Lewis v. Clarkin, 18 Cal. 399; Shain v. Forbes, 82 Cal. 577, 23 Pac. 198; Bailey Loan Co. v. Hall, 110 Cal. 490, 42 Pac. 962. This is undoubtedly the rule in this state, subject perhaps to the qualification that the defendants held liable are entitled to be protected against any material variance between the pleadings and the proof. See Chetwood v. Cal. Nat. Bank, 113 Cal. 424, 45 Pac. 704. The variance here was not material within the definition of that term in our Code of Civil Procedure (section 469), and judgment could properly have been given in the lower court against the partners alone, without any amendment of the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 470). This court may on this appeal vacate the judgment in so far as it purports to impose any liability on Arthur L. Whitney in addition to his liability as a member of the partnership of C. E. Whitney & Co., and leave the judgment in force in all other respects. See Nichols v. Dunphy, 58 Cal. 605. We have discussed this question upon the assumption that it is of some practical importance to Arthur L. Whitney that the judgment should be so changed as to relieve him from any such apparent additional liability. It appears to us that this assumption may be well based, and we are satisfied that he is entitled to have the judgment show clearly that the liability imposed thereby on him is solely one for the debt of a general partnership of which he is a member.

3. The only other point made for reversal is that the evidence was insufficient to show the value of the goods sold and delivered, which consisted of 777½ tons of salt. As already stated, the verdict was for $2,215.20. Of the 777½ tons, 185 tons were what is known as half ground salt, salt that had been run through the crusher, and it is admitted that the reasonable market value of such half ground salt, delivered, as this was, at the works of plaintiff at Redwood City, was $3.10 per ton, or a total for the 185 tons of $573.50. There being an admitted credit to defendants of $156.38 for work done by their employes in sacking the salt, there would be left $1,485.32 of the verdict for the remaining 592½ tons, which would make the price of such salt delivered in sacks at plaintiff's works about $2.50 per ton. We do not think that it can be held that there was not sufficient evidence that such salt so delivered was reasonably worth at least this amount. The original understanding between the parties appears to have been that the salt to be furnished should be half ground salt, but as it was wanted immediately by defendants to fill an order for foreign shipment, and as it was impossible to run it through the crusher in time, Mr. Arthur L. Whitney, after a personal inspection of the salt at plaintiff's plant, authorized and directed the order to be filled by the sacking and delivery of a lot of "drift" salt on hand, which he said was sufficiently fine for the purpose. He himself testified that while in price there was some distinction between drift salt and half ground salt, without stating how much, there was practically none in character, that one is often sold for the other, and that he did not know that any one could tell the difference. The salt delivered, for which recovery is here sought, was in fact used by defendants in filling the contract for half ground salt for foreign shipment. It also appeared that defendants subsequently purchased from plaintiff salt of the same character as that here purchased for $3.50 per ton. There was, it is true, evidence on the part of defendants that some of the salt delivered did not come up to the standard of the drift salt authorized, but there was nothing to indicate how much there was of this. There is enough in the record to support a conclusion that the unground salt delivered was generally the drift salt described by Mr. Whitney, and that such drift salt was reasonably worth in the market nearly, if not quite, as much as half ground salt. In addition to this, there was the positive testimony of Mr. Lovie, the secretary of plaintiff, that the market value of the 777½ tons of salt was $3.10 per ton. Certainly we cannot say that a conclusion that the unground salt delivered was reasonably worth $2.50 per ton does not find sufficient support in the evidence.

It is ordered that the judgment be and the same is hereby modified by adding thereto the following provision, viz.: "This judgment, so far as defendant Arthur L. Whitney is concerned, is one against him solely in his capacity as a member of the partnership of C. E. Whitney & Co., and imposes no individual liability on him other than such as is imposed by reason of his membership in said firm." And, as so modified, said judgment is affirmed.

CURRY et al. (S. F. 4,451.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1908.)

1. VENUE—ACTION AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICER.

Code Civ. Proc. § 393, subd. 2, provides that an action against a public officer or person especially appointed to execute his duties, for an act done by him in virtue of his office or against a person who by his command or in his aid does anything touching the duties of such officer, must be tried in the county where the cause arose, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial. Held, that the subdivision applies only to such affirmative acts of the officer as directly interfere with the personal rights or property of a person, and not to mere omissions or neglect of official duty, and it is not applicable to an action against certain state officers and a firm to whom a contract for the furnishing of paper for use in the state printer's office had been awarded by the state officers in their official capacity, to enjoin further action under the contract on the ground of its illegality because not awarded to the lowest bidder.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Cal.Rep. 95-97 P.—9

Action by Bonestell, Richardson & Co. against Charles F. Curry and others. From an order denying a charge of venue, certain of the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Geo. H. Sturtevant, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellants. M. H. Wascerwitz, Hiram W. Johnson, and C. K. Bonestell, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco denying appellants' motion for a change of place of trial of the above-entitled action from said superior court to the superior court of the county of Sacramento. The action was one instituted in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against appellants, who were respectively Secretary of State, Assistant Attorney General, and state printer of the state of California, and the members of the partnership firm of A. Zellerbach & Sons, to which a contract for the furnishing of certain paper for use in the state printer's office had been awarded by appellants in their official capacity, to enjoin further action in regard to or under said contract, upon the ground that the same was illegal and void. The official acts of appellants in the matter were performed in the county of Sacramento, the place where they had their offices and transacted their official business. The defendants Zellerbach were residents of the city and county of San Francisco. The plaintiff corporation was a taxpayer of the state, and was engaged in the same line of business as A. Zellerbach & Sons, and claimed that it was the lowest bidder for the furnishing of the paper, and was itself entitled to the contract.

Appellants' motion for a change of place of trial was based entirely on the provisions of subdivision 2 of section 393 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, so far as is material here, provides: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county where the cause, or some part thereof, arose, subject to the like power of the court to change the place of trial: * * * (2) Against a public officer, or person especially appointed to execute his duties, for an act done by him in virtue of his office; or against a person who, by his command or in his aid, does anything touching the duties of such officer." This subdivision is not applicable to the case at bar. This action is not one against a public officer "for an act done by him in virtue of his office" within the meaning of those words as the same are used in this law. It was held in McMillan v. Vischer, Sheriff, etc., 9 Cal. 420, 70 Am. Dec. 655, that a similar provision in our practice act was not applicable to a proceeding in mandamus to compel a sheriff to execute a deed, the court saying through Field, J.: "The second subdivision of section nineteen, which provides that actions against a public officer for acts done by him in virtue of his office shall be tried in the county where the cause or some part thereof arose, applies only to affirmative acts of the officer, by which, in the execution of process, or otherwise, he interferes with the property or rights of third persons, and not to mere omissions or neglect of official duty. Elliott v. Cronke's Adm'rs, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 35; Hopkins v. Haywood, Id. 265." The cases cited, construing a practically similar New York statute, fully sustain the text. The provision was subsequently made a part of our Code of Civil Procedure in the light of the construction previously given by the courts, and with the intention, we must assume, that it should continue to be so construed. This construction contemplates only such affirmative acts of an officer as directly interfere with the personal rights or property of the person complaining, such as wrongful arrest, trespass, conversion, etc. The complaint in the case at bar shows no such case. Moreover, the action is not one against public officers for an act done by them, but is an action against them and certain other persons solely to prevent the doing of certain acts by such officers and by the other defendants in the future. It is thoroughly established, both by statute and by the decisions, that in all cases as to which express provision is not made to the contrary the proper county for trial, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial on account of convenience of witnesses, disqualification of judge, and inability to have an impartial trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 397), is the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

The order denying appellants' motion for a change of place of trial is affirmed.

YOUNG v. BLAKEMAN. (S. F. 4,213.)
(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1908.)

1. BOUNDARIES—LOCATION BY PARTIES.

Where adjoining lot owners, being uncertain of the true position of a boundary established by measuring from a fixed object, agree upon its true location, mark it upon the ground, or build up to it, and acquiesce in the location for a period equal to that of the statute of limitations, or under such circumstances that substantial loss would be caused by a change, the line located becomes in law the true line called for by the descriptions of their deeds, regardless of the accuracy of the agreed location as it may appear by subsequent measurements.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Boundaries, §§ 212-226.]

2. SAME—PAROL AGREEMENT OF PARTIES.

The agreement as to the line may be in parol.

3. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—CONVEYANCE OF LAND—ESTABLISHMENT OF BOUNDARY.

The agreement does not operate to convey title to the land which may lie between the agreed line and the true line, and hence is not in violation of the statute of frauds, although it is not in writing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Frauds, Statute of, § 112.]

4. BOUNDARIES—LOCATION BY PARTIES—EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT CONVEYANCE BY ORIGINAL DESCRIPTION—PRESUMPTION.

A conveyance of one of the lots by the original description, executed after the line has been established by the parties, will be presumed to have been intended to refer to the distance as fixed by the agreement and marked by the occupancy in pursuance thereof, unless there is something in the deed or in the attending circumstances to rebut the presumption.

5. ESTOPPEL—EQUITABLE ESTOPPEL—PLEADING—NECESSITY OF PLEADING ESTOPPEL AGAINST DEFENSE IN ANSWER.

Where no reply is allowed in pleading, if plaintiff claims an estoppel against defenses set up in the answer, he is entitled to give evidence concerning it without plea; the rule that estoppels must be pleaded not being applicable.

6. SAME—INCONSISTENT CLAIMS TO REAL PROPERTY.

Defendant held an option on a 20-foot lot, the boundaries on each side of which were in controversy. Former owners of the lot and of the one west had agreed upon a division line running a little west of the line called for by the description in the deeds, and a 20-foot building had been erected bordering on the agreed line. Pending a suit by defendant for specific performance of the contract to convey the lot in accordance with the option, a prospective purchaser of the lot east of defendant's was informed that the building on that lot extended over onto the lot described in the deeds to defendant's lot, and defendant and the opposing parties in the pending suit for specific performance agreed that the party who should prevail in that suit should quitclaim the strip on the east side of defendant's lot as described in the deeds which was covered by the building on the next lot east, for a specified consideration, which was fixed, not as the value of the strip, but as the probable cost of quieting title to the strip occupied by defendant on the west side. Defendant was successful in the specific performance suit, and he, as well as the opposing parties, quitclaimed the strip as agreed. Held, that defendant, by quitclaiming the strip on the east, was not estopped to claim the strip on the west side.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by W. W. Young against T. Z. Blakeman. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Olney & Olney, for appellant. Lindley & Eickhoff and T. Z. Blakeman, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover possession of land, and involves the location of the boundaries between the respective lots of the plaintiff and defendant, situated in San Francisco. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The two principal points urged by the plaintiff are: First, that, where adjoining owners have agreed upon and established a division line, a subsequent deed by one of them, purporting to convey his tract by the original description, will not convey the title to the grantee up to the agreed line, if it turns out that the position of the line, according to the calls of the deed, newly measured, is within the bounds of his possession and includes less territory on his side than the agreed line; second, that the defendant is estopped to claim the strip in controversy.

1. The action was begun in January, 1903. The defendant's predecessor, Miller, owned the lot which, according to his title deeds, was bounded as follows: Beginning 195 feet easterly from the northeasterly corner of Geary and Dupont streets, and running thence easterly, along the line of Geary street, 20 feet; thence northerly at right angles, parallel with Dupont street, 122 feet 6 inches, to Morton street; thence at right angles westerly, along the southerly line of Morton street, 20 feet; thence southerly, at right angles, 122 feet 6 inches, to the place of beginning. The plaintiff's predecessor owned a lot which his deeds described in the same manner, except that the point of beginning was situated 175 feet easterly from the northeasterly corner of Geary and Dupont streets. Each owned a lot fronting 20 feet on Geary street, and by their title deeds the boundary between them was 195 feet westerly from the corner. More than 30 years before the action was begun they agreed upon the location of this division line and established it upon the ground. They and their respective successors have, ever since that time, acquiesced in the location and have erected buildings on their respective lots, with walls on the line, and have occupied the same for many years, without dispute until shortly before the action was begun. The buildings on the defendant's lot were erected in 1874. In 1884 Miller, the owner, made a lease of the lot to one Apel, for a term of 20 years, at a fixed rental, inserting therein a clause giving Apel or his assigns an option to purchase the lot, at any time after 15 years from the date of the agreement, at the price of \$40,000. In pursuance of this lease and option Miller delivered possession of the lot and buildings to Apel. In 1894 Blakeman purchased the lease and option agreement, and was given possession of the lot and buildings accordingly, and has ever since held possession thereof up to the agreed line in question. During all this period Young and his predecessors under the original title deeds have had possession of the lot to the west of the division line. After the expiration of the 15 years Blakeman elected to exercise the option and buy the Miller lot at the price fixed. He made a tender, which was refused, brought suit for specific performance, obtained judgment, and received from the heirs of Miller, who died before the suit was begun, a conveyance of the property. See Blakeman v. Miller, 136 Cal. 138, 68 Pac. 587, 89 Am. St. Rep. 120. In all the conveyances of all parties and their predecessors, and in the said lease, the respective lots were described by metes and bounds in the words above given; the Blakeman lot being described as a lot beginning 195 feet west of Dupont street, and the Young lot as a lot beginning 175 feet west thereof, without mention of any monument at the division line, or of any agreement regarding the same. Dupont street is now known as Grant avenue. After the execution of the deed to Blakeman by the Miller heirs, they set up a claim to a strip of land on the west side of the lot 9 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches wide on Geary street and 13 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches wide on Morton street. This strip they quitclaimed to Young, who thereupon brought this suit for possession thereof. The subjoined plat, though not drawn exactly to scale, illustrates the position of the lots.

When the division line of adjoining owners is designated in their respective deeds as a line beginning at a specified distance from a fixed object, the only method of ascertaining the location of the line on the ground is by measuring the required distance from the object. Experience shows that such measurements, made at different times, by different persons, with different instruments, will usually vary somewhat. The position of the object or monument at which the course begins may also be changed, and the change may not be known to the parties, or there may be no means of ascertaining its original position. If the position of the line always remained to be ascertained by measurement alone, the result would be that it would not be a fixed boundary, but would be subject to change with every new measurement. Such uncertainty and instability in the title to land would be intolerable. For these and other reasons the rule has been established that when such owners, being uncertain of the true position of the boundary so described, agree upon its true location, mark it upon the ground, or build up to it, occupy on each side up to the place thus fixed, and acquiesce in such location for a period equal to the statute of limitations, or under such circumstances that substantial loss would be caused by a change of its position, such line becomes, in law, the true line called for by the respective descriptions, regardless of the accuracy of the agreed location, as it may appear by subsequent measurements. The court found that the line in question had been thus located by the predecessors in interest of the parties more than 30 years before the suit was begun. The evidence of the fact, though entirely circumstantial, is reasonably satisfactory.

It is conceded that such location is binding upon the parties who own the respective lots at the time the agreement is made, while their ownership continues. The plaintiff's theory is that the agreed line is good only between the original parties, and suffices to mark the line called for by the description only with respect to the deeds under which they hold; that if one of these owners transfers his lot by a deed giving only the original description, delivering possession up to the agreed line, the vendee would not take title to the agreed line, but only to the area called for by the metes and bounds of the deed; that the subject is reopened for settlement between him and his grantee, and if, upon a new measurement, it is found that part of the vendor's holding lies outside of the newly measured line and between that and the agreed line, the vendor will remain the owner thereof, and may convey it to another, or recover the possession thereof from the vendee. His argument is that the vendor, in such a case, is the owner of the intervening strip by adverse possession against the adjoining owner, and not by his original title deeds, and that a conveyance by the original description will not carry title to the land acquired by such adverse possession. The object of the rule is to secure repose, to prevent strife and disputes concerning boundaries, and make titles permanent and stable. If it had no greater force than is thus contended for, it would be of little benefit, and would fail to accomplish the purposes which led to its establishment. If the descriptions were not by metes and bounds, but designated the lots solely by their respective numbers, or, as in the case of government lands, by sectional subdivisions, and there had been an agreement of this character between previous owners fixing the common boundary, it would scarcely be contended that the division line thus fixed is not binding on their respective grantees, or between a subsequent grantor and his grantee. The effect, however, is precisely the same in this case. The designation of the land by its number or sectional subdivision is nothing more than a reference to a previous survey which states the distance of the line from some fixed object and an adoption of that statement into the deed by the reference. It will still call for a measurement to ascertain the true position on the ground, unless it has been marked by a monument, and in that case, if the monument is removed and other means of locating its position are not available, as often happens, a measurement must still be resorted to. If a measurement is made, and the line agreed on and acquiesced in as required by this rule, it is binding on and applicable to all parties to the agreement and their successors by subsequent deeds. It is stated by the authorities that the line so agreed on becomes in legal effect the true line; that the agreement as to the line may be in parol, and that it does not operate to convey title to the land which may lie between the agreed line and the true line, but that it fixes the line itself and the description carries title up to the agreed line, regardless of its accuracy; that the agreement as to the line is not in violation of the statute of frauds, because it does not transfer title; that the parties hold up to the agreed line by virtue of their original deeds, and not by virtue of the parol agreement; that "the division line, when thus established, attaches itself to the deeds of the respective parties, and simply defines, not adds to, the lands described in each deed"; and that, if more is thus given to one than the calls of his deed actually requires, he "holds the excess by the same tenure that he holds the main body of his lands." Sneed v. Osborne, 25 Cal. 630; White v. Spreckels, 75 Cal. 616, 17 Pac. 715; 4 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 861; 3 Wash. Real Prop. § 2232; Lewis v. Ogram, 149 Cal. 509, 87 Pac. 60, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 610, 117 Am. St. Rep. 151, and cases there cited; Kellogg v. Smith, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 382; Miles v. Barrows, 122 Mass. 579.

There is as much reason for the application of this rule to a grantor, so as to estop him from withholding from his grantee the possession up to the agreed line, or from asserting title to any part of the granted premises within the agreed line, as for applying it to the respective coterminous owners. Where land is occupied by buildings up to the agreed line, as in this case, the grantee is presumed to have bought the property with a view to the boundaries thus visibly marked, and to have relied thereon and fixed the price according to the value of the property as thus defined and used. There is every reason that the grantor should be estopped to claim the contrary. In 1884, when Miller agreed to sell the property to Apel after 15 years for $40,000, the buildings were on the land in the same position as when this suit was begun, and they served to mark the boundaries. It is to be presumed that it was the land thus built upon, used, and occupied which Miller agreed to sell and Apel agreed to buy. It was this land and building that Miller delivered to Apel in pursuance of the agreement, and of which Blakeman obtained possession in 1894, when he succeeded to Apel's right under that agreement. A boundary line thus fixed and marked has the same effect as a monument erected to mark a point in a survey. The distance does not control, and the course runs to the monument, or to the agreed termination. A conveyance by the original description, executed after the line has been thus established, will be presumed to have been intended to refer to the distance as fixed by the agreement and marked by the occupancy in pursuance thereof, unless there is something in the deed or in the attending circumstances to rebut the presumption, which is not the case here.

It may be remarked that there is no evidence that any subsequent survey has been made by which the true line is located at the exact point claimed by the plaintiff. There is a reference to a recent survey in the testimony of the plaintiff, but he does not give the results disclosed thereby. From the agreement between the heirs of Miller and Blakeman, to be hereinafter noticed, it may be inferred, by the aid of other evidence, that the true east line of the Blakeman lot is about 7 inches east of the east line of his building. But this would not prove that the west line of his lot was an average distance of about 11 inches east of the west line of the building as claimed by plaintiff. The building is exactly 20 feet in width. There is a finding to the effect that a line 195 feet easterly from Grant avenue would fall east of the agreed line the exact distance of the strip in dispute, according to the location of Grant avenue as "established at the time when this action was commenced." No evidence appears corresponding to this finding. But, conceding its truth, it does not follow that the line of Grant avenue was at the same place as that occupied by Dupont street in 1863, when the defendant's lot was first measured and located therefrom, or when the agreed line was established, or in 1884, when Apel received possession from Miller. Our conclusion is that the effect of the deed to Blakeman by the heirs of Miller was to convey title to Blakeman up to the agreed line on the west side of the lot, and that the subsequent deed from them to Young of the strip in controversy carried no title, unless Blakeman is estopped to claim that strip by reason of the transaction now to be considered.

2. The main contention of the appellant is that the defendant is estopped to claim the strip in dispute. It is objected that the estoppel was not pleaded. Under our system of pleading no reply is allowed, and if the plaintiff claims an estoppel against the defenses set up in the answer he is entitled to give evidence concerning the same without plea. The rule that estoppels must be pleaded does not apply in such cases. The question presented for our consideration is whether or not the evidence established the estoppel claimed. While the suit of Blakeman against the Miller heirs for specific performance was pending, one Rosenstock, being about to purchase the lot adjoining Blakeman's lot on the east, was informed that the building on that lot extended over the west line thereof upon the lot described in the deeds to the Blakeman lot, covering a strip of the latter $7\frac{1}{4}$ inches wide at the north end and $6\frac{7}{8}$ inches wide at the south end. Wishing to settle all disputes about his boundary and title before buying, Rosenstock asked Blakeman to make him a quitclaim deed for this strip. This was agreed to, and Rosenstock agreed to pay \$2,000 for the deed. To satisfy his fears Rosenstock required that the Miller heirs should join in quitclaiming to him. Blakeman and the Millers thereupon executed a written agreement, reciting the description of the Blakeman lot as hereinbefore given, the pending suit for specific performance, and, in effect, that the west wall of the Rosenstock building projected over the east line of the lot as thus described and bounded, covering the strip proposed to be quitclaimed to Rosenstock, and providing that the \$2,000 should be deposited with a trust company, to be by it held until the suit for performance was determined, and then paid to the party who should finally prevail in said suit, whereupon both parties should quitclaim to Rosenstock the strip covered by his building. This agreement was carried out, the suit terminated in favor of Blakeman, the \$2,000 was paid to him, and he and the Millers, by separate deeds, quitclaimed to Rosenstock. Thereafter the Millers, as before stated, quitclaimed to Young the strip on the west side of Blakeman's lot, covered by Blakeman's building and described in the complaint, claiming as it now appears, that by reason of the conduct of Blakeman in asserting title to the strip on the east side and receiving the \$2,000 from Rosenstock he is estopped to claim title to the strip on the west side, even if their deed to him did have the effect of transferring the title up to the agreed line and beyond the true theoretical line. The evidence shows that Blakeman, in making the arrangement with Rosenstock for the payment of the \$2,000, did not fix that sum as the value of the strip to be conveyed to Rosenstock, but only as the amount which he estimated it might cost him to quiet his title to the land claimed and occupied by him on the west side of his lot.

We are of the opinion that the circumstances under which this agreement was made and executed did not create an estoppel as claimed. As we have seen, the subsequent instruments concerning the lot operated to convey title to the agreed line. Hence the option agreement with Apel bound the Millers to convey title to Blakeman, the assignee thereof, up to that line, and their deed in pursuance thereof transferred that title to Blakeman. The result of the suit for performance showed that the Millers had no legal defense to the suit and that they were bound to convey as agreed. It is clearly apparent from the whole case that neither the Millers nor Blakeman had ever previously claimed title to the land under the Rosenstock building, and that Rosenstock's vendor had a good title thereto by adverse possession, if not by his title deeds. Blakeman did not in any manner impose on the Millers, or conceal anything from them. It does not appear that the Millers were then claiming that they were not bound to convey to Blakeman the strip on the west side of the Blakeman lot, if they were bound to convey at all. Their defense to the suit for performance made no reference to any mistake in the boundary on either side of the lot, but was founded on other circumstances having no relation to the boundary lines. There is nothing to indicate that either party contemplated or claimed that, if Blakeman won the suit and the $2,000, it would in any manner affect his right to a conveyance of all the land included in the Apel option up to the agreed line, or would give the Millers, after executing the conveyance, any right to a strip including the greater part of the Blakeman west wall. The respective values of the two strips are not shown. But as the east side strip was in the adverse possession of Rosenstock, and was only an average of 7 inches wide, while the west side strip was in Blakeman's possession, was of an average width of 11 inches, and the Miller deed would give him title thereto, and as it included part of his wall, so that, if he had to relinquish it, he would be compelled to take down his west wall and reconstruct it again at a point 11 inches further east, it is reasonably certain that the strip on the west side was worth far more, and probably twice as much, as the strip deeded to Rosenstock. If Blakeman had understood that he was required to elect whether he would take one or the other, and could not have both, as against the Millers, if he prevailed in the pending suit, it is not improbable that he would have refused to make any agreement with them, or with Rosenstock, to accept $2,000 in lieu of his rights, and that he would have chosen to retain his rights in the strip on the west side. His relations with the Millers, however, were not of a character to put him to such election, and he was entitled by his contract to a conveyance of all their rights in the premises. The most reasonable conclusion from the entire transaction as shown by the evidence is that both the Millers and Blakeman considered the $2,000 as equivalent to the expense of quieting the title to the strip on the west side of the lot, and that it was to go for that purpose to the party who succeeded in gaining title to the lot in the suit for performance. This would not give the losing party any right whatever, either to the $2,000 or to any part of the land. The plaintiff is claiming by virtue of what is usually designated as an "equitable estoppel." If the defendant were held to be estopped, under the circumstances, it would clearly be an unjust and inequitable estoppel. The court was fully justified in refusing to make any finding on the subject of estoppel, on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to establish any estoppel.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

McFARLAND, J., expresses no opinion.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent. Blakeman, after demanding and receiving the $2,000 paid by Rosenstock for the strip on the east of the Miller building, in my opinion, is estopped to claim the strip on the west under his conveyance from the Miller heirs. They were bound by their father's agreement to convey to Blakeman, as assignee of Apel, a 20-foot lot, and no more. Conceding that a conveyance according to the description in that contract might have been claimed by Blakeman to effect a transfer of the 20 feet covered by the building, he could not claim at the same time that it would transfer the strip east of the building which Rosenstock was desiring to acquire. Blakeman must be held to have known what he was seeking by his suit for specific performance, and to have known that if he took the strip on one side he must relinquish that on the other. He made his election when he claimed the price of the strip on the east, and the decree and conveyance by which he got the legal title accurately described the particular 20 feet which he elected to take. The strip in controversy is not included in that description, and remained to the Miller heirs, who conveyed it to plaintiff. He had the title, legal and equitable, and should have prevailed.

BARTHEL v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF SAN JOSÉ et al. (S. F. 4,643.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1908.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—PUBLIC SCHOOLS—TEACHERS—REMOVAL.

A teacher holding a city certificate and employed for an indefinite term is, by Pol. Code, § 1793, protected from removal, except for insubordination or when the board of examination recommend the revocation of his certificate for immorality, unprofessional conduct, profanity, intemperance, or unfitness for teaching, as provided by section 1791.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Schools and School Districts, § 302.]

2. SAME.

The election and dismissal of teachers in the public schools are not "municipal affairs" which may by a freeholders' charter be regulated in a manner in conflict with that provided by the general law.

3. SAME—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—VALIDITY.

It is valid to limit the term of a teacher's employment to one year.

4. SAME—REMOVAL.

Section 5, art. 9, San José Charter, gives the board of education power to employ, pay, and dismiss teachers, and provided that no election of a teacher should be construed as a contract as to duration of time or amount of wages. Section 13 provides that teachers in their first or second year shall be classed as probationary teachers, and may be dropped on the adverse report of the classification committee by a majority of the board. Held, that a teacher duly elected for the year ending June 30, 1903, could not be legally removed, except upon such adverse report by the classification committee.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS — FINDINGS — CONSTRUCTION TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT.

Findings of the trial court will be given such a construction on appeal as will support the judgment of the court below.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3762-3771.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Mandamus by F. K. Barthel against the board of education of the city of San José and other to readmit plaintiff as a teacher in the city schools, and to draw its order for three months' salary. From a judgment ordering drawing of the order, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John E. Richards, F. B. Brown, and F. H. Benson, City Attys., for appellants. Partridge & Jacobs, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff in November, 1902, applied to the superior court of Santa Clara county for a writ of mandate requiring the board of education of the city of San José and its members to admit plaintiff to the position of principal of the Washington school in said city, or an equivalent position, and to draw its order upon the proper officer directing the payment to plaintiff of three months' salary as such teacher. Plaintiff's claim was that he had in July, 1902, been elected and employed as a teacher in the San José school department, and that the defendants had prevented him from performing his duties as such teacher. The salary claimed was at the rate of $100 per month for the months of July, August, and September, 1902. An alternative writ issued, and, the defendants answering, the matter came on for hearing. The court made findings, upon which it entered judgment awarding plaintiff a peremptory writ of mandate as prayed. This judgment was entered in November, 1903. In the meanwhile the plaintiff had, at the expiration of the school year, been duly removed by the board of education. These facts were shown to the court by the defendants, and, upon their motion, an order was made limiting the writ of mandate so that it omitted any direction requiring the reinstatement of plaintiff, but merely directed the board to draw its order upon the proper officer for the payment to plaintiff of the three months' salary claimed by him. The defendants appeal from the judgment. There is no bill of exceptions, and the sole question is whether, upon the facts alleged and found, the plaintiff was entitled to the writ directing the payment of the salary in question.

That the findings are responsive to the issues made by the pleadings is not questioned, and it will be sufficient, therefore, to briefly state the facts as found. On July 2, 1902, the board of education of the city of San José duly granted to plaintiff a city grammar grade certificate, authorizing him to teach in any of the common public schools of said city. On the same day, and after the granting of said city certificate, plaintiff was by said city board of education duly elected and employed as a teacher in the schools of said city, "without any term specified." He had on the 30th day of June, 1902, and again on the 2d day of July, 1902, prior to the granting of his city certificate, by separate orders of the board, been elected and employed as a teacher in the school department for the school year ending June 30, 1903, and had been assigned to the position of principal of the Washington school. The salary attached to such position was $1,200 per year, payable in equal monthly installments. On July 30, 1902, the board passed an order purporting to remove and dismiss plaintiff, and to set aside the election of June 30, 1902. On August 5, 1902, said board adopted a resolution purporting to remove and dismiss all teachers (including plaintiff) elected on July 2, 1902. Plaintiff did not receive any notice prior to either attempted removal. No charges of any kind have ever been filed or made against him. On September 10, 1902, the schools in the city of San José were opened for the ensuing school year. Plaintiff presented himself at the Washington school, ready, able, and willing to perform his duties as principal, and has ever since been willing to perform these duties or those of a similar position, but the defendants have prevented him from so doing. His demand that he be permitted to perform such duties and for the payment of his salary have been refused.

The contention of the appellants is that the plaintiff was rightfully removed by virtue of certain provisions of the charter of the city of San José. In so far as plaintiff's rights are based on his election of July 2, 1902, for an indefinite term, it is difficult to see how this contention can be maintained, in view of the fact that at the time of such election the plaintiff was the holder of a city certificate, and as such was, by section 1793 of the Political Code, protected from removal except for causes mentioned in that section and in section 1791. Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 Pac. 1042; Fairchild v. Board of Education, 107 Cal. 92, 40 Pac. 26. It is not, and cannot be, claimed that the election and dismissal of teachers in the public schools are "municipal affairs," which may, by a freeholders' charter, be regulated in a manner in conflict with that provided by the general law. See Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 Pac. 558; Mitchell v. Board of Education, 137 Cal. 372, 70 Pac. 180. It may be argued, however, that plaintiff's assignment to the particular position carrying the salary claimed took place before his receipt of a city certificate, and that his right to recover such salary must rest on his election antedating such certificate. For the purposes of the present case we may assume this view to be correct.

Neither section 1793 of the Political Code nor any other provision of the general state law precludes a city board of education from removing at pleasure a teacher who does not hold a city certificate. Stockton v. Board of Education, 145 Cal. 247, 78 Pac. 730. We must look, then, to the charter of San José to see whether plaintiff, viewed as a teacher appointed without holding a city certificate, was removed pursuant to the provisions of that instrument. The two elections of plaintiff taking place prior to his receipt of a city certificate in terms limited his employment to the school year ending June 30, 1903. Such limitation was valid. Marion v. Board of Education, 97 Cal. 607, 32 Pac. 643, 20 L. R. A. 197. Here, however, the board sought to dismiss the plaintiff from the department before the expiration of the school year. The charter provisions relied on to sustain its action are found in article 9 of the charter. Section 5 of this article gives to the board of education power to employ, pay, and dismiss teachers, janitors, school census marshals, and such other persons as may be necessary to carry into effect the powers and duties of the board. " * * * provided, that no election of a teacher or other person employed by the board shall be construed as a contract, either as to the duration of time or amount of wages of such person." St. 1897, p. 621, c. 15. This section, standing alone, would probably authorize the board to dismiss teachers or other employés at will, but it is limited by section 13, reading as follows: "Teachers during their first and second years of service in the department, and all special teachers, shall be classed as probationary teachers, and may be dropped from the department on the adverse report of the classification committee by a vote of a majority of the board. Teachers who have been assigned to duty for more than two years, other than special teachers, shall be classed as permanent teachers, and shall hold their positions without re-election until removed in the manner hereinafter provided. No teacher shall be removed save at the close of the school year, who has not had at least one month's notice of such contemplated action, nor shall any teacher's salary be reduced, except when there is a corresponding reduction made in all the salaries in the same grade. A permanent teacher may be removed for cause by a majority vote of the board of education or upon the recommendation of the city superintendent and a vote of a majority of the board, or by a vote of four members of the board; a vote for removal shall be taken by ayes and noes, and the vote recorded in the minutes." St. 1901, p. 957, c. 37. Section 13 of article 9 of the San José charter, as originally adopted, was construed in Stockton v. Board of Education, supra, but the section there considered was amended in 1901, and now reads as above set forth.

Under this section the plaintiff, who was in the first year of his service, is to be classed as a probationary teacher. While there does not appear to be any great difference between "dropping" a teacher from the department, and "removing" him, so far as the effect on the teacher is concerned, the section does apply the latter term only to permanent teachers, and it is reasonable to infer that the clause protecting teachers from removal without prior notice, except at the end of the school year, was intended to refer only to permanent teachers. The purpose of the section, as regards teachers newly appointed, is to provide a period during which they are on trial or probation, to be retained if their work is satisfactory or dismissed if they fail to show their fitness to the satisfaction of the board. During this period of probation their tenure must necessarily be uncertain. They may, long before the expiration of a year, prove their inability to do the work required of them. To hold that, in such case, they must have a month's notice of the contemplated dismissal, would bring about a result which is not required by the language of the section and seems at variance with its purposes. The facts that no charges had been made against plaintiff and that he had received no prior notice of a contemplated removal did not, therefore, prevent his being dropped from the department. But, under any construction that can be given to section 13, the power to "drop" a probationary teacher is not absolute. Authority to take such action is given to the board, or a majority of its members, only "on the adverse report of the classification committee." During the year for which plaintiff was appointed by the orders antedating his certificate an adverse report of this committee was the condition upon which depended the power of the board to dismiss him. One of the issues raised by the pleadings was whether or not every step necessary to give the board jurisdiction to remove plaintiff had been taken. While there is no finding dealing specifically with the matter of an adverse report by the classification committee, the findings, read as a whole, may fairly be said to show that no such report had been adopted. This construction should be given to the findings, in order that they may support the judgment. People v. McCue, 150 Cal. 195, 88 Pac. 899.

It follows that, regardless of the effect of the city certificate, the plaintiff, who had been duly elected for the year ending June 30, 1903, was not legally removed from his position, and was therefore entitled to an order for the payment of the salary demanded.

The judgment is affirmed.

PAYNE v. BAEHR. (S. F. 4,843.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 28, 1908.)

1. COUNTIES—OFFICERS—LIABILITIES—COUNTY AUDITOR—FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH STATUTE—GARNISHMENT OF MONEY DUE FROM COUNTY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 710, providing that when a transcript of a judgment for money against a defendant, accompanied by an affidavit stating the exact amount at the time due on the judgment, and that the claimant desires to avail himself of the provisions of the section, is filed with the auditor of any county, etc., from which money is owing to the judgment debtor, such official shall draw a warrant in favor of the court wherein the judgment is docketed for so much of the money owing the judgment debtor as will satisfy the judgment, prescribes an official ministerial duty the failure or refusal to perform which by the auditor would render him liable to the creditor for any actual damages caused him by such official's refusal.

2. OFFICERS—LIABILITIES—NEGLIGENCE OR REFUSAL TO ACT.

A public officer is liable to respond in damages to one specially injured by his negligence or refusal to perform a ministerial duty to the extent of such special injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Officers, § 193.]

3. SAME—LIABILITY ON OFFICIAL BOND—MANDAMUS—CUMULATIVE REMEDIES.

Pol. Code, § 4332 (County Government Act, St. 1897, p. 574, c. 277, § 222), providing that for every failure or refusal to perform an official duty, where the fees are tendered, the officer is liable on his official bond, gives the injured party a remedy independent of his right to compel a performance of the duty by mandamus.

4. COUNTIES—OFFICERS—LIABILITIES—COUNTY AUDITOR—GARNISHMENT OF MONEY DUE FROM COUNTY—PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 710, provides that when a transcript of a judgment for money, accompanied by an affidavit stating the amount due on a judgment and that the claimant desires to avail himself of the provisions of the section, is filed with the auditor, etc., of any county, etc., from which money is owing to the judgment debtor, such official shall draw his warrant in favor of the court wherein the judgment is docketed for so much of the money owing the judgment debtor as will satisfy the judgment. In an action against defendant, as county auditor, to recover for his failure to pay over money garnished under the statute, the complaint alleged that defendant was at all times named the auditor of the county and city; that V. was a stenographer of the police court, and during certain months performed the duties pertaining to his position and all conditions to entitle him to have his demands against the treasury of the county for a certain sum audited by defendant; that defendant had audited each of the demands, but did not deliver any of the demands to V.; that a judgment was given for plaintiff against V. which was wholly unpaid, and a duly authenticated transcript of such judgment accompanied by the affidavit prescribed by the statute was filed with defendant; and that during a certain month V. performed the official duties and all conditions to entitle him to have his demand for a certain sum audited, and the auditor audited the demands to V., and, after the filing of the transcript and judgment, delivered to him the demand so audited, and when the affidavit and transcript were filed there was unpaid to him a certain sum due him from the county, and defendant had refused to draw his warrant to satisfy plaintiff's judgment to his damages, etc. Held, that the complaint stated a prima facie case, as against a general demurrer, and was not defective on demurrer in not alleging that the demands of V. had been approved by the police judge, it being alleged that he had performed all conditions necessary to entitle his demands to be audited, and the complaint sufficiently alleged that the money was owing to the judgment debtor from the county when the affidavit and transcript were filed.

5. SAME—TIME OF FILING TRANSCRIPT.

It was unnecessary that the transcript be filed after the debtor's demands had been audited; it being sufficient within the statute if the claim of the judgment debtor had fully accrued when the transcript was filed, and that nothing remained to entitle the debtor to the money except to present his demand therefor and its approval by the auditor.

6. SAME—EXEMPTION OF MONEY GARNISHED—NECESSITY OF ALLEGING EXEMPTION.

It was not necessary for plaintiff to allege that none of the money owing to the debtor was exempt from execution, since, if any of the money was exempt, so that plaintiff would not have been able to obtain the amount due on the judgment had defendant drawn the warrant, that was a matter for defendant to show on the issue of damages.

7. SAME—APPROVAL OF CREDITOR'S CLAIM BY POLICE JUDGE—NECESSITY.

Even though it was necessary that the judgment debtor's demand against the county be approved by the police judge in whose employment the judgment debtor was, before it could be audited, it was not necessary that plaintiff's claim be approved by the police judge.

8. SAME—DEMAND BY JUDGMENT CREDITOR.

It was not essential, to entitle a judgment creditor to recover damages against a county auditor for his failure to draw a warrant to satisfy a judgment, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 710, providing that if a transcript of a judgment against a person to whom money is owing from the county, etc., accompanied by the affidavit stating the amount, is filed with the auditor, he shall draw a warrant sufficient to satisfy the judgment, that the judgment creditor make a demand on the auditor other than the filing of the transcript and affidavit.

9. PLEADING—DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT—OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND.

Unless a defective complaint cannot be amended so as to obviate the objections thereto on demurrer, plaintiff should be allowed a reasonable opportunity to amend, if he desires to do so.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Clyde S. Payne against Harry Baehr. From a judgment dismissing the complaint on demurrer thereto, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

John Hubert Mee, for appellant. W. H. Cobb and A. L. Weil, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's action upon sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint. The action was one for the recovery of damages for the failure of defendant, as auditor of the city and county of San Francisco, to draw his warrants in favor of the justices' and superior courts of said city and county for sufficient to pay certain judgments recovered in said courts by plaintiff against one Howard Vernon, a creditor of said county. The complaint was in two counts in substantially the same form; the first alleging a judgment of the justice's court given and made on October 9, 1901, for $325.86, and the second alleging a judgment of the superior court given and made on June 22, 1904, for $395.49, being apparently a judgment recovered on the justice's court judgment. The demurrer attacked each count, both for want of facts, and for uncertainty, ambiguity, and unintelligibility.

The action is based on the provisions of section 710, Code Civ. Proc., enacted March 20, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 362, c. 263), providing for the garnishment of moneys owing a judgment debtor from any county, city and county, city, or other municipal or public corporation. That section has been held constitutional by this court, and applicable to the salaries of public employes, at least to all except officers whose salaries are fixed by a provision of the Constitution, and in a proceeding for a writ of mandate instituted by a salaried employe to compel the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco to audit and allow a demand in favor of petitioner for his salary, the writ was denied on the ground that such auditor had been served by a creditor of the petitioner with a certified copy of a judgment for $98 in his favor against the petitioner, accompanied by the affidavit prescribed by said section. It was held that it was the duty of the auditor, under this section, to deliver the demand, when audited, allowed, and indorsed, to the court rendering the judgment, or its authorized officer. Ruperich v. Baehr, 142 Cal. 190, 75 Pac. 782. Section 710, Code Civ. Proc., provides that when a duly authenticated transcript of a judgment, for money, against a defendant, rendered by any court in this state, accompanied by an affidavit stating the exact amount at the time due on such judgment, and that the claimant desires to avail himself of the provisions of the section, is filed with the auditor of any county, city and county, etc., from which money "is owing to the judgment debtor in such action," "it shall be the duty of any such official * * * to draw his warrant in favor of or to pay into the court from the docket of which the transcript was taken," so much of the money owing to the judgment debtor as shall be necessary under the judgment, so that the court may properly apply the same. The law thus prescribes an official duty, ministerial in nature, to be performed by the auditor for the benefit of the judgment creditor, when properly requested, somewhat analogous to the duty of a sheriff to whom a writ of attachment or execution is delivered with directions to levy the same. It cannot reasonably be claimed that he would not be liable to the creditor properly demanding the performance of such duty, for any actual damage caused such creditor by his refusal to perform the same. It is elementary that a public officer is liable to respond in damages to one specially injured by his neglect or refusal to perform an official ministerial duty to the extent of such special injury (see Mock v. Santa Rosa et al., 126 Cal. 330, 344, 58 Pac. 826), and our statutes provide that for every failure or refusal to perform official duty where the fees are tendered the officer is liable on his official bond (Pol. Code, § 4332; County Government Act, St. 1897, p. 574, c. 277, § 222). This remedy to the injured party necessarily exists independently of the right of a party beneficially interested in the performance of an official duty to compel the performance of the same by a resort to the proceeding of mandamus. We are of the opinion that, as against a general demurrer for want of facts, the complaint sufficiently stated a cause of action for damages specially caused plaintiff by the failure and refusal of defendant to perform a ministerial duty which he was called upon to perform for the benefit of plaintiff.

It is substantially alleged in the second count of the complaint that the defendant was at all the times named the auditor of the city and county of San Francisco; that ever since January 2, 1901, one Howard Vernon was a stenographer of the police court of said city and county under appointment by the judges thereof; that during the months of May, June, July, and August, 1903, said Vernon performed all duties pertaining to his said position, and "all conditions on his part to be performed to entitle him to have his demand against the treasury of said city and county" for $200 for each of said months "audited by said auditor"; that said auditor has "audited" each of said demands, but did not deliver and has not delivered any of said demands to said Vernon; that on June 22, 1904, in the superior court of said city and county, a judgment was duly given and made, in favor of plaintiff and against said Vernon for $395.49, which judgment remains wholly unpaid; that on September 1, 1904, a duly authenticated transcript of such judgment, accompanied by the affidavit prescribed by section 710, was filed with defendant as auditor; that during the month of August, 1904, said Vernon performed all the duties pertaining to his said position and "all conditions on his part to be performed to entitle him to have his demand against the treasury * * * for the sum of two hundred ($200) dollars audited by said auditor"; that the auditor audited the same for said amount, "and after the filing of the authenticated transcript of judgment and affidavit" hereinbefore referred to, delivered the demand so audited to said Vernon; that at the time said affidavit and said transcript of judgment were filed with the auditor "there was unpaid to said Howard Vernon by said city and county of San Francisco" the sum of $1,000 for services rendered by him as such stenographer for the months of May, June, July, and August, 1903, and August, 1904; that said defendant has refused and failed to comply with the demand of plaintiff and to draw his warrant in favor of said superior court for so much of said money as would satisfy said judgment; and that "by reason of the premises plaintiff was damaged in the sum of" $400.79, the amount due on said judgment. These allegations sufficiently make a prima facie case as against the general demurrer.

In regard to the objection that it was not alleged that the demands of Vernon had been approved in writing by the police judges, it was alleged that Vernon had performed all conditions on his part to be performed "to entitle him to have his demand against the treasury * * * audited by said auditor," which sufficiently implied, as against the general demurrer, the presentation of a demand in proper form to be audited by the auditor. The objection that it does not appear in the complaint that the authenticated transcript was filed subsequent to the auditing by the auditor is immaterial. It is undoubtedly true that the judgment creditor can obtain under section 710, Code Civ. Proc., only such money as "is owing to the judgment debtor" at the time of the filing of the authenticated transcript of judgment and affidavit, but money may be so "owing" although the demand therefor has not been audited. It is sufficient for all the purposes of this section that the claim of the judgment debtor against the city and county has fully accrued at the time of the filing of the transcript, etc., and that nothing remains to be done to entitle him to the money except the presentation of a proper demand therefor and the approval of the same by the auditor. The auditor is, of course, not required to do anything in the way of drawing his warrant until after audit, but when finally the demand is audited and ready for payment, the transcript of judgment previously filed is sufficient to cover the audited claim to the extent that it had accrued at the time of such filing. The delivery of the audited claim to the person entitled thereto may, and generally does, immediately follow the auditing, and a construction of section 710 which would require the transcript of judgment to be filed after audit and before delivery would practically nullify the remedy sought to be granted judgment creditors thereby. The allegations sufficiently showed as against the general demurrer that there was $1,000 "owing to the judgment debtor" from the city and county at the time of the filing of the transcript of judgment and affidavit. It was not necessary, in order to show damage to plaintiff, that the complaint should allege that the moneys owing to Vernon from the city and county were in whole or in part not exempt from execution. It was alleged in terms that plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $400.79 by the failure of the auditor to perform the duty incumbent on him in the matter of plaintiff's claim, which sufficiently tendered an issue as to damage and the amount thereof. If the circumstances were such as to exempt all or any portion of this money from execution, so that plaintiff would not have been able to obtain the amount due him on the judgment from the money that would have come into the possession of the court if the auditor had done his duty, that was, at most, a matter for the defendant to show on the issue of damage.

We have now discussed all the objections urged by defendants under the general demurrer for want of facts, which are applicable to the second count. There is an additional objection applicable only to the first count. The judgment upon which the claim set forth in that count was based was rendered in the year 1901, which was prior to the enactment of section 710, Code Civ. Proc., and it is claimed that the section has no application to judgments rendered prior to its enactment. It is not necessary to consider this contention for the purposes of this appeal, for, if the demurrer was improperly sustained as to the second count, the judgment must be reversed, and as the second count is apparently based on a later judgment obtained in an action given in 1901, the question may be immaterial in any further proceedings in this case.

The demurrer on the ground of uncertainty was not well taken in so far as the second count was concerned. Conceding that it was necessary that the demand of Vernon against the city and county should have been approved by the police judges of the city and county before it could be audited by the auditor, it was not necessary that the demand of plaintiff, Payne, should be approved by said police judges, and a specification of uncertainty in this regard is immaterial. It was not essential to a cause of action in favor of plaintiff against the auditor for damages that he should have made any demand on the auditor, other than the demand embraced in the filing of the authenticated transcript of judgment and affidavit provided for by section 710, Code Civ. Proc., which affidavit in terms stated that the creditor desired to avail himself of the provisions of this section. As we have seen, such a demand will cover moneys "owing" to the judgment debtor at the time of the filing, although the claim therefor has not as yet been audited. It does clearly appear in the complaint that the demand of Vernon was audited prior to the commencement of the action. This disposes of all objections on the ground of uncertainty which were applicable to the second count. Specifications of ambiguity and unintelligibility were the same as those of uncertainty, and none of them was well taken.

It thus appears that the demurrer should have been overruled, at least so far as the second count is concerned. It is therefore unnecessary to consider the contention of appellant that, even if the demurrer was good, the trial court erred in sustaining it without leave to plaintiff to amend. It is proper, however, to state that, unless it be clear to a trial court that a defective complaint cannot be amended so as to obviate the objections made thereto, a plaintiff desiring it should be allowed reasonable opportunity to so amend. See Schaaake v. Eagle, etc., Can Co., 135 Cal. 480, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

HERZOG et al. v. ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO. (S. F. 4,575.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1908.)

1. ACTION—NATURE AND FORM—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE OR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A complaint alleged that, in consideration of a conveyance to a railroad company of a right of way over plaintiffs' land, the railroad agreed to establish a station at a certain place, that thereafter the company laid tracks and operated trains on the right of way, and that subsequently another railroad company purchased the right of way and continued the operation of the trains. It further alleged that neither of the companies established the station at the place specified by the contract, on account of which plaintiffs were irreparably damaged, and prayed for a decree compelling the railroad purchasing the right of way to establish a station, as agreed. Held, that the action was for specific performance of a contract, and not to recover for its breach.

2. RAILROADS—LOCATION OF STATIONS—CONTRACTS RELATING TO—VALIDITY—ENFORCEMENT.

The rule that it is the duty of railroad corporations which are performing functions partaking of a public character to locate their stations where they will best serve the public needs and convenience, and that a court of equity will not, in order to subserve mere private interests, compel the location of stations so as to hamper the company in the performance of its duties to the public, does not apply so as to preclude a party contracting with a railroad from specifically enforcing a contract by which the railroad agreed to establish a station at a certain place, where the contract does not debar the company from establishing stations at any other place, or from fully complying with all its duties to others entitled to its service.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 133.]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—GROUNDS FOR REFUSING—RATIO OF BENEFIT TO INJURY.

Specific performance of a contract will be denied where to enforce it will impose a great burden upon defendant, with a slight or no corresponding benefit to the plaintiff, and where the performance of the contract will be detrimental to the interests of the public.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 35.]

4. SAME—COMPLAINT—REQUISITES.

A complaint for specific performance must, in order to be good against a general demurrer, state facts from which the court may determine that the consideration is adequate, and that the contract is, as to the defendant, just and reasonable, and that it would not be inequitable to enforce it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 35, 356-372.]

5. SAME.

A complaint, in a suit against a railroad company to compel specific performance of a contract of the railroad's predecessor in interest to establish a station at a certain place, in consideration for the conveyance of a right of way to it, did not state the value of the right of way conveyed, did not allege the costs to the defendant of compliance with the contract, nor any facts indicating the adequacy of the consideration or the fitness of the contract, and did not contain even a general allegation that the contract was just and fair as between the parties, or that plaintiffs owned land adjoining the right of way, at any time after its conveyance to the defendant's predecessor. Held that, so far as appeared from the complaint, the plaintiffs were endeavoring to enforce a bare legal right to have defendant comply with the contract of its predecessor, without showing that such compliance would in any way add to plaintiffs' convenience or to the value of any property owned by them at the time of the suit, and hence the complaint did not show that the contract as originally made was fair and just as between the parties, or that it would be equitable to enforce it.

6. SAME—DEFENSES—REMEDY AT LAW—PLEADING.

A complaint in a suit for specific performance must show that a recovery for breach of the contract would not be an adequate remedy, a condition which is essential to obtaining the relief prayed for, as well as for obtaining other forms of equitable relief for the infringement of legal rights.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 356-372.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry A. Melvin, Judge.

Action by J. Herzog and another against the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company. From a judgment sustaining defendant's demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. J. Scrivner and Alfred H. Cohen, for appellants. T. J. Norton, H. D. Pillsbury, and E. E. Milliken, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. To plaintiffs' complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer for want of facts constituting a cause of action. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appeal from the ensuing judgment in favor of defendant.

The complaint states these facts: On September 20, 1881, and long prior thereto, the plaintiffs were the owners and in possession of a tract of land in Alameda county containing some 65 acres. On September 30, 1881, the California & Nevada Railroad Company executed and delivered to plaintiffs a writing, whereby, in consideration of plaintiffs "signing for" a right of way for said railroad over their land, the railroad company agreed to "establish and maintain a permanent station to deliver and take passengers and freight at each passing train, said station to be situated at the north side of said Alcatraz avenue and on the west side of Lowell street, and to receive and discharge passengers from all but express trains upon proper signal." At the same time, and in consideration of the execution and delivery of this instrument, the plaintiffs signed and delivered to the railroad company the right of way over their lands referred to in the instrument. Subsequently, the California & Nevada Railroad Company laid down railroad tracks over such right of way and operated passenger and freight trains thereon. In 1893 the defendant, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company, purchased of the California & Nevada Railroad Company the right of way granted by plaintiffs, and has ever since been in possession of the same, and has been operating passenger and freight trains thereon. At the time of its purchase, the defendant had notice of its predecessor's agreement with plaintiff and assumed the obligation to perform the same. Neither the defendant nor its predecessor in interest has ever established or maintained a permanent or any station at the place or for the purposes specified in the agreement, nor has either of them stopped any train at such place. On June 2, 1904, plaintiffs requested the defendant to comply with the terms and conditions of said agreement, but the defendant has failed and refused to perform any of such terms and conditions. Plaintiffs have, upon their part, performed all the terms and conditions required of them to be performed. On account of the failure and refusal of the defendant to so comply, plaintiffs "have suffered great and irreparable damage, and, if said terms and conditions, as aforesaid, are not carried out and performed by defendant, these plaintiffs will continue to suffer great and irreparable damage." The complaint concludes with a prayer for a decree compelling the defendant to establish a station as agreed, to deliver, receive, and discharge passengers thereat, and to stop all trains except express trains, at such station for these purposes.

The action is clearly one for specific performance of a contract, not to recover damages for its breach (Pittsburgh Coal Co. v. Greenwood, 39 Cal. 71; Bohall v. Diller, 41 Cal. 532; Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 130, 60 Pac. 689), and the sole question is whether the complaint alleges facts entitling the plaintiff to the equitable relief sought. It is argued by the respondent that it is the duty of railroad corporations, which are performing functions partaking of a public character, to locate their stations at places where they will best serve the public needs and convenience, and that, accordingly, a court of equity will not, in order to subserve mere private interests, compel the location of stations for the stopping of trains in such manner as to hamper the company in the performance of its duties to the public. The rule thus invoked has been applied to cases more or less similar to the present one. Texas & P. R. Co. v. City of Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 34 L. Ed. 385; Beasley v. Texas & P. R. Co., 191 U. S. 492, 24 Sup. Ct. 164, 48 L. Ed. 274; Marsh v. Fairbury, etc., R. Co., 64 Ill. 414, 16 Am. Rep. 564; Mobile, etc., R. R. Co. v. People, 132 Ill. 559, 24 N. E. 643, 22 Am. St. Rep. 556; St. Joseph, etc., R. Co. v. Ryan, 11

Kan. 602, 15 Am. Rep. 357; Pac. R. Co. v. Seely, 45 Mo. 212, 100 Am. Dec. 369; Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177; Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Scott, 77 Fed. 726, 23 C. C. A. 424, 37 L. R. A. 94. Nearly all of these cases, however, involved contracts which undertook to bind the railroad company, not merely to locate a station at a particular place, but to establish no other station within a given distance of such places. In such cases, it was the exclusive character of the accommodation contracted for that was thought by the courts to involve an attempt to interfere with the companies in the performance of their duty to the public. In other words, the common carrier could not be permitted to bind itself not to furnish accommodations wherever they might be needed. This consideration does not apply to the case of a contract which merely binds the company affirmatively to furnish certain accommodations to the plaintiff, without in any way debarring it from fully complying with all its duties to others entitled to its service. The contract here alleged did not bind the company to limit in any degree the facilities to be furnished to the public. It required the establishment and maintenance of a station at a place named, but left the company free to establish additional stations as they might be needed, without limitation of number or location. Contracts similar to the one here in question have been specifically enforced. Hood v. N. E. Ry. Co., L. R. 8 Eq. 661; Lawrence v. Saratoga Lake Ry. Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 468, cited with approval in P. P. & C. I. R. R. Co. v. C. I. & B. R. R. Co., 144 N. Y. 153, 39 N. E. 17, 26 L. R. A. 610; Murray v. N. W. R. R. Co., 64 S. C. 520, 42 S. E. 617. Where such contracts are limited to the creation of a right to a certain station or train service at given points, without in any way making the right exclusive or infringing upon the company's obligation to furnish proper service at any other place where it may be needed we are not prepared to hold that their enforcement would necessarily be violative of public policy. Texas & St. L. R. R. Co. v. Robards, 60 Tex. 545, 48 Am. Rep. 268; Int. & G. N. R. R. Co. v. Dawson, 62 Tex. 260; Greene v. West Cheshire Ry. Co., L. R. 13 Eq. 44. A different question is presented where, upon the trial, or from the allegations of the bill, it appears that the enforcement of the contract would impose a great burden upon the defendant, with a slight or no corresponding benefit to the plaintiff, or that such enforcement would be detrimental to the interests of the public. Such circumstances, showing that the performance sought would be oppressive or inequitable, will warrant the denial of specific relief. 6 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 796; Conger v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 120 N. Y. 29, 23 N. E. 983; Murdfeldt v. N. Y., etc., R. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 703, 7 N. E. 404; Clarke v. Rochester R. R. Co., 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 350.

The consideration last suggested points directly to a fatal objection to the complaint under discussion. It is thoroughly settled in this state that a complaint for specific performance must in order to make out a case good as against general demurrer, state facts from which the court may determine that the consideration is adequate, and that the contract is as to the defendant just and reasonable. Civ. Code, § 3391. In Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 302, the court says: "Another well-established rule of courts of equity is that, in a suit for specific performance, it must be affirmatively shown that the contract is fair and just, and that it would not be inequitable to enforce it. The court will not lend its aid to enforce a contract which is in any respect unfair or savors of oppression, but in such cases will leave the party to his remedy at law. It is incumbent upon the plaintiff therefore to state such facts as will enable the court to decide whether the contract is of such a character that it would not be inequitable to enforce it." This court has frequently restated its adherence to this rule. Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 352; Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 608, 12 Pac. 778; Morrill v. Everson, 77 Cal. 114, 19 Pac. 190; Windsor v. Miner, 124 Cal. 492, 57 Pac. 386; Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 120, 60 Pac. 689; Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 170, 66 Pac. 231; Flood v. Templeton, 148 Cal. 374, 83 Pac. 148; White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 87 Pac. 193.

The complaint in this case is entirely devoid of any showing of this character. The value of the right of way conveyed is not stated, nor is there any allegation of the cost to the defendant of compliance with its contract. No attempt is made to state any facts indicating the adequacy of the consideration or the fairness of the contract. There is not even an allegation in general terms of the conclusion that the contract is just and fair as between the parties. As bearing upon the question whether the granting of the relief sought would be equitable, it is to be observed that the complaint does not aver that the plaintiffs, at any time since 1881, have been the owners of any land in the neighborhood of the proposed station, or that they live near it. The allegation that they owned land adjoining the right of way in 1881 is not an allegation that they owned it at any later date. The presumption of the continuance of facts once shown to exist (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 32) declares merely a rule of evidence and has no application to the statement of facts in a pleading (Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750). So far as appears from their complaint, the plaintiffs are endeavoring to enforce a bare legal right to have the defendant comply with the contract of its predecessor, without showing that such compliance would in any way add to their convenience or to the value of any property owned by them. The complaint therefore fails to show that the contract as originally made was fair and just as between the parties or that it would be equitable to enforce it. Furthermore, it fails to show that the recovery of damages for a breach of the contract would not be an adequate remedy, a condition which is as essential to the obtaining of specific performance as of other forms of equitable relief for the infringement of legal rights. Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450; Flood v. Templeton, supra.

Respondent urges some additional points in support of the rulings sustaining the demurrer, but these need not be discussed in view of the conclusions above expressed.

The judgment is affirmed.

ALDRICH v. BARTON et al. (GREIG et al. Interveners). (S. F. 4,702.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 30, 1908.)

1. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—TERMINATION OF TRUST.

Testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees to pay out the net income derived from one-fourth thereof for the maintenance and support of plaintiff so long as he should be incompetent to hold and properly manage his affairs and property, and, on his restoration to capacity, to turn over one-fourth of the residue with all accumulations to him and his heirs forever; but, if he should be permanently of unsound mind up to the time of his death, his share should pass to and be distributed among testator's heirs at law then living according to the laws of descent. Held, that the event on which testator intended to make plaintiff's right to possession of one-fourth of the residue depend was his actual recovery in fact from his mental incapacity, and not on the mere making of an order purporting to declare such recovery.

2. INSANE PERSONS—RESTORATION TO CAPACITY—PROCEEDINGS.

The proceeding for the restoration of an insane person to capacity defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 1766, is not applicable to the case of one who was confined in an insane asylum without having been put under guardianship.

3. SAME—DISCHARGE BY ASYLUM AUTHORITIES.

The discharge of an insane person not under guardianship confined in an insane asylum by the asylum authorities prior to St. 1903, p. 485, c. 364, regulating the care of insane persons, while an adjudication that the person committed and discharged had recovered from his insanity, was nevertheless only prima facie evidence of legal capacity in the person so discharged, under Civ. Code, § 40, declaring that such a certificate shall establish the presumption of legal capacity in the person discharged from the time of such discharge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Insane Persons, § 42.]

4. SAME—PROCEEDING—NATURE AND EFFECT—JUDGMENT.

The proceeding defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 1766, for the determination of whether an insane person has been restored to capacity, is judicial in its nature, and the judgment rendered is conclusive on the condition or relation of the person, as expressly provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1908.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Insane Persons, § 42.]

5. JUDGMENT—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JURISDICTION.

A judgment of a court of general jurisdiction cannot be collaterally attacked even for want of jurisdiction, unless it appears on the face of the record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 924, 940.]

6. INSANE PERSONS—DISCHARGE—CERTIFICATE OF CAPACITY—EFFECT.

Pol. Code, § 2189, subd. 6, declares that, when a person is discharged as recovered from the state hospital for the insane, a copy of the certificate of discharge may be filed with the clerk of the superior court of the county from which the person was committed, which record shall have the same legal effect as a judgment of restoration to capacity made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1766. Held, that such a certificate of restoration to capacity was not effective to deprive a party against whom such certificate was offered to show that it was in fact issued in a case in which the superintendent of the asylum issuing it had no power to act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Insane Persons, § 42.]

7. SAME—INMATES OF HOSPITAL.

Where plaintiff was released from an insane asylum on parol in 1892, after which from time to time, until 1900, he went to the asylum occasionally to visit the physicians, but from that time until 1905, when he applied for and received a certificate of discharge, he had not been in the asylum at all, he was not an inmate at the time such certificate was issued.

8. SAME—CERTIFICATE OF DISCHARGE—JURISDICTION TO ISSUE.

Under Pol. Code, § 2189, authorizing the superintendent of a state hospital for the insane to discharge a patient who in his judgment has recovered, such superintendent had no jurisdiction to issue a certificate of discharge to a person who was not a patient in the sense of having been committed to the asylum and having remained there for care and treatment except in case of temporary absence at the time of such discharge.

9. SAME—CERTIFICATE UNDER FORMER ACTS.

A certificate of capacity, granted by the superintendent of an insane asylum under St. 1897, p. 331, c. 227, covering the commitment and care of insane persons, or under St. 1901, p. 639, c. 211, providing for the discharge of persons who have been committed to a hospital for the insane but are not confined in such hospital, constitutes only prima facie proof of sanity.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by George Albert Aldrich against Annie Aldrich Barton and another; Helen H. Greig and others, interveners. A decree was entered denying plaintiff the relief asked, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Aldrich & Gentry, for appellant. Drown, Leicester & Drown, for respondents. A. Everett Ball, for interveners.

SLOSS, J. William A. Aldrich, the father of plaintiff, died on February 25, 1892, leaving a will dated the 29th day of October, 1891. In May, 1888, the plaintiff, George Albert Aldrich, had been duly committed to the Napa State Asylum for the Insane by a judge of the superior court of Alameda county, and he remained a patient in said asylum until after his father's death. By said will the testator gave the residue of his estate to trustees, in trust, among other things, to appropriate and pay out of the net income derived from one-fourth of such residue "so much thereof as may be required for the proper and comfortable maintenance, support and care of my son George Albert Aldrich, now at the State Asylum for the Insane in Napa county, California, so long as he shall be incompetent to hold and properly manage his affairs and property. Upon the restoration of my said son George Albert Aldrich to mental soundness and capacity to turn over and pay and deliver to him the said one-fourth of such residue of my estate, with all increment and accumulations thereof, to have and to hold the same to him and his heirs forever. If, however, my said son George Albert Aldrich shall prove to be permanently of unsound mind and shall so continue up to the time of his death, the said one-fourth of such residue of my estate shall, upon his death, pass to and be thereupon paid and delivered to and distributed among my heirs at law then living, according to the laws of the state of California then in force relating to the succession to the property of the estate of those dying intestate." The will was duly admitted to probate, and on the 31st day of May, 1893, at the close of the administration of the estate, a decree of distribution was made, whereby the residue of the estate was distributed to the trustees named in the will upon the trusts therein declared. The defendants Annie Aldrich Barton and Helen Aldrich Dunning are the sole remaining trustees.

This action was brought by plaintiff against such trustees to obtain a decree terminating the trust and requiring the defendants to account for and turn over to plaintiff one-fourth of the residue of the estate. The complaint alleges that on or about January 30, 1905, the medical superintendent of the Napa State Hospital for the Insane filed with the secretary of the board of managers of said Napa State Hospital his certificate of discharge of plaintiff, and that on the 1st day of February, 1905, a copy of said certificate, certified by the secretary of the board of managers of said Napa State Hospital, was filed with the county clerk of Alameda county and entered by said county clerk in a book kept by him for that purpose. It is further alleged that plaintiff was, prior to the commencement of this action, discharged from said asylum and restored to mental soundness and capacity. The defendant trustees answered, admitting the filing and recording of the discharge in question, but averring on information and belief that said certificate of discharge is void and of no legal effect, and that the medical superintendent of the Napa State Hospital for the Insane did not, when he signed, made, or filed said certificate of discharge, have any jurisdiction over or concerning the person of the plaintiff or the subject-matter of the discharge of the plaintiff from the said hospital. They further alleged that at the time of said discharge, and at all times since the 1st day of January, 1905, the plaintiff was not in said hospital, nor a patient at said hospital, nor an inmate thereof, nor within the control nor under the jurisdiction of said hospital, or of the medical superintendent thereof or any of the officers of the same, nor within said county of Napa. The answer further denied that the plaintiff was, prior to the commencement of this action, or that he has been at any time, restored to mental soundness or capacity. Other matters are set up in the answer, but the statement here made is sufficient to make clear every point which need be considered in disposing of this appeal. There was also a complaint in intervention, filed by persons claiming to be heirs at law of the testator, and as such entitled to an interest in the trust fund upon the death of plaintiff, if he should remain incompetent until his death. The interveners joined with the defendants in opposing plaintiff's prayer for relief. The court found in favor of the foregoing allegations and denials of the answer. With reference to the mental condition of the plaintiff, there is a finding numbered 11, as follows: "That said plaintiff George Albert Aldrich was not, at the date of the death of his said father, William A. Aldrich, to wit, on the 25th day of February, 1902, and that he was not on the 12th day of November, 1902, or on the said 30th day of January, 1905, and that he has not been at any time since the date of the death of his said father, and is not now of sound mind or competent to hold and properly manage his affairs and property, or restored to mental soundness or capacity; but that ever since the date of the death of his said father he has been, and he is now, of unsound mind and incompetent to hold and properly manage his affairs." As conclusions of law the court found that the discharge of plaintiff from the said asylum did not terminate or extinguish the said trust, but that the same still continues. A decree, denying the plaintiff any relief and declaring the right of the defendants to hold the property upon such trust, followed. The plaintiff appeals and brings up the evidence by a bill of exceptions.

While the record contains numerous exceptions, but a single question is presented. The plaintiff relies exclusively upon the certificate of discharge given by the superintendent of the state asylum, or hospital, as it is now called, on January 31, 1905. By an act of March 26, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 485, c. 364), chapter 1 of title 5 of part 3 of the Political Code was repealed, and there was substituted therefor a new chapter, comprising sections 2136 to 2199, inclusive, of that Code, and dealing with the care and custody of insane persons, etc. Section 2189 deals with the discharge of patients from state hospitals. Subdivision 1 of that section authorizes the superintendent of a state hospital to discharge "a patient who, in his judgment, has recovered," and subdivision 6 provides that: "When any person is discharged as recovered from a state hospital, a copy of the certificate of discharge, duly certified by the secretary of the board of managers, may be filed for record with the clerk of the superior court of the county from which said person was committed. * * * Such certified copy of such certificate and the record of the same shall have the same legal effect as the original, and if no guardian has been appointed for such person, as provided by sections 1763 and 1764 of the Code of Civil Procedure, such certificate and duly certified copies thereof and such record thereof shall have the same legal force and effect as a judgment of restoration to capacity made under the provisions of section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure." The contention of the plaintiff is that, by this provision, the certificate of discharge of the superintendent is made final and conclusive upon all parties. It is expressly conceded that if the court was authorized to go behind the certificate and inquire into the question of whether, as a matter of fact, the plaintiff had ever become competent, the evidence is ample to sustain finding 11 above quoted, to the effect that he had not at any time since the date of his father's death been of sound mind or competent to hold and properly manage his affairs and property, or restored to mental soundness or capacity.

There is no discussion in the briefs regarding the proper construction of the trust clause; both parties apparently assuming that the event upon which the testator intended to make the plaintiff's right to the principal of one-fourth of the residue depend was his actual recovery, in fact, from mental derangement or incompetency, rather than the mere making of an order purporting to declare such recovery. And this, we think, is the proper interpretation of the clause. The testator provided that the trust should continue so long as the plaintiff should be incompetent. Upon his "restoration to mental soundness and capacity," he was to receive the corpus of the trust. The phrase "restoration to capacity," standing alone, might be construed to mean a judicial or other adjudication of restoration, regardless of the actual fact. But the only proceeding known to our law which, at the date of testator's will, could with propriety be designated as a "restoration to capacity" was the proceeding defined in section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that proceeding was not applicable to the case of one who was confined in an insane asylum without having been put under guardianship. Kellogg v. Cochran, 87 Cal. 192, 25 Pac. 677, 12 L. R. A. 104. Leaving out of consideration such relief as might be afforded by a court on habeas corpus, the asylum authorities alone had power to affect the status of such person, and while a discharge by such authorities was an adjudication that the person committed has recovered from insanity (Kellogg v. Cochran, supra), it afforded, prior to the enactments of 1903, only prima facie evidence of legal capacity in the person so discharged (Civ. Code, § 40). Such order of discharge is not fairly within the meaning of the phrase "restoration to mental soundness and capacity," as used by the testator. What effect it may have as evidence of such restoration is another question.

The appellant, as has been stated, takes the position that a certificate of discharge which formerly only raised a presumption of capacity is, if issued under section 2189 of the Political Code, as that section now reads, conclusive evidence of restoration to capacity of the person discharged. This contention is based upon the provision of the statute that such certificate shall have "the same legal force and effect" as a judgment of restoration under section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The proceeding defined in section 1766 is, in its nature, a judicial proceeding. In it a court, upon application by petition on behalf of a person declared incompetent, and after notice to adverse parties and a hearing, is authorized to "judicially determine" the fact of the restoration to capacity of such person. The judgment rendered in such case is one "in respect to the personal, political, or legal condition or relation of a particular person," and, when rendered by a court having jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment or order, is "conclusive upon the condition or relation of the person." Code Civ. Proc. § 1908. The decision in Kellogg v. Cochran, supra, established the proposition that this proceeding had no application to the case of a person who had been committed to an insane asylum, but had not been put under guardianship by virtue of sections 1763 and 1764 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Legislature, in enacting section 2189 of the Political Code, doubtless intended to afford to persons who, upon recovery should be discharged from insane asylums, some record proof, which should operate to establish their recovery in the same way that the judgment of restoration under section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure, operated in the case of persons who had been declared incompetent, and for whom guardians had been appointed; that is to say, the certificate when made by an official having jurisdiction to make it, was made evidence of an adjudication of the fact that the person discharged had recovered. But the argument of the appellant goes, and, as will appear, necessarily goes, further than this. He contends that the certificate of discharge, in and of itself, conclusively proves the jurisdiction of the superintendent to make it; that is to say, that it cannot be collaterally attacked even for want of jurisdiction, unless such want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the record. This is, no doubt, the rule applicable to judgments of courts of general jurisdiction. Carpentier v. Oakland, 30 Cal. 439; Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 402, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 464; Lyon v. Petty, 65 Cal. 325, 4 Pac. 103; Bennett v. Wil- son, 133 Cal. 379, 65 Pac. 880, 85 Am. St. Rep. 207. We need not here decide whether the superior court, acting under the provisions of section 1766 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is to be regarded as a court of general or one of limited jurisdiction. In any view, we are satisfied that the statute giving to the certificate of discharge the same legal force and effect possessed by a judgment under Code Civ. Proc., § 1766, is not to be construed as putting it beyond the power of a party against whom such certificate is offered to show that in fact it was issued in a case in which the superintendent of the asylum had no power to act. It is not to be supposed that the Legislature intended to give to an executive officer, acting ex parte, the power to determine conclusively, even as against collateral attack, that he had jurisdiction, when in fact he had none. It is not necessary to decide whether the effect contended for could, under fundamental constitutional restrictions, be given to a certificate such as the one here relied on. Nor need we consider whether, even if issued in a case within the jurisdiction of the superintendent, such certificate can constitutionally be made conclusive evidence of restoration to capacity. It is enough, for the purposes of this case, to say that the reasonable interpretation of section 2189 of the Political Code is that it purports to make a certificate conclusive as against collateral attack, if issued by one having authority, in the particular case, to make it, but that such certificate always remains open to attack for want of such authority. The purpose of the section was to give to a certificate of discharge the effect of a judgment, as an adjudication of a fact, not to confer upon it any evidentiary value as conclusive proof of jurisdiction to make such adjudication.

The court found that, at the time of said discharge, the plaintiff was not in the Napa State Hospital for the Insane, nor a patient at said hospital, nor an inmate thereof, nor within the control of the hospital or the medical superintendent thereof. These findings are fully sustained by the evidence, which shows that plaintiff was released from the asylum on parole in 1892. Between that time and 1900 he went to the asylum occasionally to visit the physicians. Since 1900 he has not been to the asylum at all. In 1902 there was granted to plaintiff, at his request, a certificate of discharge. The discharge of 1902, whether valid or not, was treated as effectual by the asylum authorities and by the plaintiff. Plaintiff had no communication thereafter with any official of the asylum until 1905, when he applied for the certificate now relied on. This certificate was issued by Dr. Stone, whose incumbency of the office of medical superintendent began after plaintiff left the asylum. The certificate was issued after an examination of plaintiff made by Dr. Stone at San Francisco. There can be no doubt that the jurisdiction of the superintendent of an insane asylum to discharge a person as recovered from insanity exists, under Pol. Code, § 2189, only where such person is a patient in the asylum. The only authority given to the superintendent by the statute is to discharge a "patient," and that by such "patient" is meant one who has been committed to the asylum and has remained there (except in case of a temporary absence as on parole) for care and treatment, is clear from a reading of the entire chapter of the Political Code dealing with the commitment and care of insane persons. One who has for many years been away from the asylum, claiming, without opposition, to have been discharged by virtue of an order purporting to have that effect, and over whom the asylum authorities do not exercise, or claim the right to exercise any power of restraint whatever, cannot be said to be a "patient" within the meaning of the law. Such was the condition of the plaintiff, as is found by the court on ample evidence. Nor would plaintiff's situation be improved if the discharge of 1902 could be regarded as valid, either under the act of 1897 covering the commitment and care of insane persons (St. 1897, p. 331, c. 227), or under the act of 1901, providing for the discharge of persons who have been committed to a hospital for the insane, but are not confined in such hospital (St. 1901, p. 639, c. 211). A certificate granted under either act would afford no more than prima facie proof of sanity.

The certificate of 1905, having been issued without authority, was ineffectual for any purpose, and the plaintiff's right to recover depended upon his establishing that he had in fact been restored to a condition of competency. On this issue, the finding was against him, and, as is conceded, there was sufficient evidence to support the finding. Since every point made by appellant is based on the claim that the certificate was conclusive in his favor, it follows that the court below rightly gave judgment for the defendants.

The judgment is affirmed.

GERTH v. GERTII. (Civ. 421.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 23, 1908.)

1. REPLEVIN—PARTIES—PARTIES DEFENDANT—PARTIES CLAIMING INTEREST.

In an action in claim and delivery to recover certain promissory notes payable to plaintiff, executed by a person of whom defendant was formerly guardian, defendant alleged that while guardian of such person and in possession of the notes she applied the money belonging to her ward on certain of the notes payable by him, and that she had filed her accounts as guardian, and that the ward had objected thereto, and the accounts and objections were then pending, but did not claim that she had accounted to plaintiff for the money which she claimed to have applied on the notes. Held, that it was not error to refuse to make defendant's ward a party to the action, since he claimed no interest in the notes or right to their possession, his only claim being against defendant for the money which she claimed to have applied to their payment.

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR NOT AFFECTING RESULT.

A judgment will not be reversed for failure to find upon a material issue, if the omitted finding must have been adverse to appellant.

3. SAME—FINDINGS ON IMMATERIAL MATTER.

In an action to recover possession of promissory notes, where defendant had deposited all the notes with the trial court for delivery to plaintiff if the judgment for him should be affirmed, it was immaterial whether or not the trial court may have found the value of the notes to be greater than the evidence warranted, and the question will not be reviewed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Henry Gerth against Annie Gerth. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, for appellant. Samuel G. Tompkins, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment rendered against her for the possession of certain promissory notes, and from the order denying her motion for a new trial.

The point principally relied upon by appellant concerns the action of the trial court in denying a motion made by defendant to have one Andrew Gerth, the maker of some of the notes sued for, made a party to the action. The action is in claim and delivery, wherein plaintiff prays for judgment for the possession of five certain promissory notes, or, in the event that possession thereof cannot be given, for the value thereof. Three of the notes sued for were executed by the said Andrew Gerth, and all are in terms payable to plaintiff. Defendant set forth in her affidavit used on her said motion the fact that she had been the guardian of said Andrew Gerth during a time that he was incompetent, and while such guardian, and while she had possession of the said notes, certain moneys belonging to said Andrew Gerth had come into her possession, which she had applied on certain of the said notes payable by him; that she had filed her accounts as such guardian showing such application of said moneys, and that said Andrew Gerth had filed objections thereto, which said accounts and objections were pending in the superior court of Santa Clara county, unsettled and yet unheard. She did not claim that she had accounted to plaintiff for any of the money of Andrew Gerth which she claimed to have applied on the said notes. Under the circumstances the court did not err in refusing to make Andrew Gerth a party to the action. The action was brought by plaintiff, the payee of the notes, to recover the possession thereof from defendant. Andrew Gerth claimed no interest in the notes, or any right to the possession of them or of any of them. His only claim was that defendant had no right to apply any of his money in payment of said notes, or had not in fact made any such application. This was a matter to be settled between him and her in the court having jurisdiction of the guardianship proceeding. No matter how it should be settled, its proper settlement could not affect plaintiff's right to recover possession of the notes from defendant. At the outset of the oral argument upon this appeal appellant conceded that the evidence supported the finding as to the ownership and right of possession of the notes being in plaintiff. Upon delivery of the notes to plaintiff and payment of the costs the judgment in this case against her will be fully satisfied. It was admitted at the oral argument that the notes not only can be delivered, but that they had been placed in possession of the court to be delivered to plaintiff if the judgment be affirmed. Neither in her affidavit nor in her evidence does she claim to have ever accounted to plaintiff for any money that she may have received or applied on the Andrew Gerth notes, and plaintiff in this action is not seeking to recover of her any money that she may have received on the Henry Gerth notes. We think the court properly denied appellant's motion to have Andrew Gerth made a party to this action.

Appellant also makes the point that the court erred in not finding upon the issues presented by the allegations in her answer that the consideration for which the notes were given consisted in part of separate property of defendant, and that there was an agreement between plaintiff and defendant and that she should hold, manage, and control said notes. We are not pointed to any evidence in the record that would have sustained any finding upon either of these issues favorable to appellant. Upon the contrary, all the evidence in the record is the other way. It is not pretended that the findings as made do not support the judgment. A judgment will not be reversed for failure to find upon a material issue, if the omitted finding must have been adverse to appellant. People v. Center, 66 Cal. 551, 5 Pac. 263, 6 Pac. 481; Hutchings v. Castle, 48 Cal. 152. See also Hihn Company v. Fleckner, 106 Cal. 95, 39 Pac. 214; Rogers v. Duff, 97 Cal. 67, 31 Pac. 836; Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504.

We do not think it necessary to examine the evidence for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the court may have found the value of the notes to be greater than the evidence warrants. It was admitted at the oral argument that appellant has deposited all the notes with the clerk of the trial court for delivery to plaintiff if the judgment shall be affirmed. It is therefore of no consequence to either plaintiff or defendant as to what the value of the notes may be. The question of value has become a moot question.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BADEN BRICK CO. v. CHUBBUCK et al.
(Civ. 460.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 18, 1908.)

CORPORATIONS—SALES—ACTIONS FOR PRICE—EVIDENCE.

A corporation operating a brickyard contracted to sell brick therefrom to a buyer. The contract was signed by the corporation per its president. Thereafter a bill of sale of brick at another yard was executed by the president individually. The president testified that, while the lease of the latter yard was in his name, it was the yard of the corporation, and that he signed the bill of sale personally because he was president and manager of the corporation and generally made its contracts in his own name. Brick from both yards was delivered to the buyer, and his books showed that the corporation was credited for all the brick received. He testified that the books were so kept for convenience only. Held, to authorize a verdict in favor of the corporation for all brick delivered.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Baden Brick Company against C. I. Chubbuck and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry G. W. Dinkelspiel, for appellants.
Roger Johnson, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was commenced to recover a balance of an account for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendants. Judgment went for plaintiff. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

The ground chiefly relied upon by appellants is the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision. It appears from the record that the respondent owned and operated a brickyard near Baden, in San Mateo county; that on March 3, 1906, it entered into a contract with appellants for the sale of brick. The contract was signed by Thomas Butler, the president of the respondent, as follows: "The Baden Brick Company, per Thos. Butler." Two days later a bill of sale was executed of certain brick at a brickyard in San Francisco at Sixth and Berry streets by Thomas Butler individually to the appellants. The appellants expressly admit the indebtedness alleged, but claim it is due, not to the respondent, but to Thomas Butler. This claim is without merit.

The amount sued for covers brick delivered in March, 1906, from both the yards in San Francisco and in Baden; and appellants' own ledger, which was introduced in evidence by respondent, shows that the Baden Brick Company was credited by them for all the brick received during that month. C. I. Chubbuck, one of the appellants who kept the books for his firm, in explanation of the entries in their books just referred to, said: "In keeping our ledger account, for convenience sake I put into one account the transactions with the Baden Brick Company and with Thomas Butler." Thomas Butler, a witness for respondent, testified that while the lease of the brickyard at Sixth and Berry streets stood in his name at the date of the contract of March 3, 1906, nevertheless the respondent owned that yard and everything there, including the brick mentioned in the bill of sale of March 5, 1906; that he signed the bill of sale of March 5, 1906, personally because he was president and manager of respondent, and generally made its contracts in his own name.

It is true, as contended by appellants, that the testimony on cross-examination of Butler revealed some inconsistencies. It is also true that appellants introduced testimony to show that the sale of the brick at Sixth and Berry streets was by Butler personally, and not for the respondent. But we are satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to support the findings of the court.

There are other points urged in appellants' brief which we have carefully examined, and which we think do not merit discussion.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

JERRUE et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.
(Civ. 327.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
March 17, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALE OF DECEDENT'S PROPERTY—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—JURISDICTION.

An order confirming an administratrix's sale of personal assets being one within the power of the superior court in a proper case, its authority to act will be presumed unless the absence thereof is clearly made to appear.

2. SAME — SALES — CONTINUOUS BID — EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify a presumption that a bid made by petitioners to an administratrix for the sale of saloon fixtures was an open and continuous one, subject only to petitioners being successful in their efforts to secure a transfer of the license.

3. CERTIORARI — SCOPE OF WRIT — ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Since want of jurisdiction alone will not justify the issuance of certiorari, the writ would not lie to review an order confirming an administratrix's sale of certain personal property belonging to the estate on the ground that there was no bid by petitioners which the administratrix could accept at the time the order was made, as in such case the bidder had an adequate remedy at law by defense to a suit for the purchase price.

4. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—SALE—CONFIRMATION—EFFECT.

An order confirming an administratrix's sale of assets pursuant to an order of sale is not an adjudication against the purchaser, but is only sufficient to constitute a prima facie case in an action against the bidder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 1535.]

Petition for a writ of certiorari by D. B. Jerrue and others to review an order entered by the superior court of Los Angeles county confirming an alleged sale of the stock of a saloon, fixtures, etc., by an administratrix. Writ refused.

E. F. Wehrle and Frank James, for petitioners. C. W. Pendleton, E. A. Meserve, R. J. Dillon, and Mott & Dillon, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Petition for writ of certiorari. By an order made on April 14, 1906, the administratrix of the estate of Charles A. Robb, deceased, was authorized to sell at private sale certain personal property, consisting of the stock, fixtures, license to sell liquor at retail, lease, and good will of a certain retail liquor business, all of which belonged to said estate. The petitioners bid $7,000 for said property, which bid, however, was made subject to their obtaining from the board of police commissioners of the city of Los Angeles a transfer of the license to conduct the business described in said order of sale. The administratrix accepted said bid and sold the property to petitioners, and on April 30, 1906, made due return of said sale to the court, asking that the same be confirmed. At the hearing upon the return and petition for confirmation one Kutzmann in open court made a bid in writing whereby he offered the sum of $7,025 for the property, provided the said police commission would grant or assent to the transfer to him of the said liquor license. By the terms of said bid the amount thereof, less 10 per cent., accompanying the same, was payable upon confirmation of sale and the making of the transfer of said liquor license, and in case of failure to obtain said transfer the bid was by its terms to be null and void. On the same day, April 30th, the court made its order reciting the return made by the administratrix, the bid in open court made by Kutzmann, the acceptance of which it found was for the best interest of the estate, and ordered that his bid be accepted and the sale to him confirmed. Thereafter the administratrix filed a petition reciting the foregoing facts, and stating that said police commission had refused to transfer said license to Kutzmann, by reason whereof she was unable to comply with the terms of his bid; that the license had been transferred to Jerrue & Co.; and that she had sold all of said personal property to Jerrue & Co., who had paid her the sum of $3,759.50 as a partial payment therefor. She further asked that the order confirming the sale to Kutzmann be vacated and an order made confirming the sale to Jerrue & Co. On June 6, 1906, the court made the order as prayed for.

The order being one within the power of the court to make in a proper case, its authority to act will be presumed unless the want of such authority is clearly made to appear. It appears that both bids were conditional upon the success of the bidder in securing a transfer of the license to himself. The order confirming the sale to Kutzmann contained a like condition which could not be fulfilled by reason of the fact that Jerrue & Co. secured the transfer. These facts, together with the further fact that the administratrix had sold the property to Jerrue & Co., who had made a partial payment of $3,759.50 upon the purchase price, was set forth in her supplementary report in the matter made to the court on June 6, 1906. The fact that petitioners did secure the transfer of the license and paid the sum of $3,759.50 as a partial payment for the property, it not appearing that he had paid anything thereon at the time of the making of the order confirming the sale to Kutzmann, justifies the presumption that they made their bid an open and continuous one, subject only to their being successful in their efforts to secure a transfer of the license. Additional color at least is given to this presumption by reason of the fact that on July 14, 1906, and after the making of the order complained of, petitioners in writing gave notice to the administratrix that they withdrew their bid made on April 14, 1906, and rescinded the same. This action on the part of petitioners is indicative of the fact that up to the time of the giving of such notice they regarded their bid on file as an existing, open, and standing bid for the purchase of the property as made to the administratrix.

Want of jurisdiction alone, however, will not justify the issuance of a writ of review. Conceding that no presumption of jurisdiction arises in this case, and admitting a want of jurisdiction in the court making the order confirming the sale to petitioners, nevertheless it seems clear that they have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in due course of law. Auzerais v. Superior Court, 101 Cal. 542, 36 Pac. 6. If, in fact, at the time of making the order confirming the sale there was no existing bid whereby petitioners were legally bound to complete the purchase upon a transfer of the license in accordance with their proposal as set forth in the return of the sale and report of the administratrix, then such fact would constitute a complete defense to any action brought to enforce payment or otherwise compel performance of the alleged contract. The fact that the court confirms a sale upon the return thereof made by an administrator pursuant to an order of sale is not an adjudication against the alleged purchaser. He may not have bid at all, or, if he did bid, he may have been, by timely withdrawal or otherwise, legally released from any obligation thereon. In an action to enforce the alleged contract of purchase against him the proceedings at most could constitute evidence only of a prima facie case.

The order, in so far as its effect is to vacate and set aside the order confirming the sale to Kutzmann, whether properly or erroneously made, is not a subject wherein petitioners are concerned. Since they are not affected by such action, they are in no wise interested therein.

The demurrer interposed by respondents is sustained, and the proceeding dismissed.

LUNNUN v. MORRIS et al. (Civ. 389.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 24, 1907. On Rehearing,
March 17, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—OPENING—MISTAKE—MATTERS FOR CONSIDERATION.

On application for relief from the consequences of the mistake and inadvertence of counsel, all the circumstances surrounding the parties and the litigation, as shown by the papers, are proper matters to be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 265-268.]

2. SAME.

Whether acts of counsel amount to a mistake is to be ascertained by the court from the facts before it, and not from the conclusion of counsel or party that there was a mistake.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—OPENING DEFAULT.

Whether or not the circumstances of a particular case are such that a mistake or inadvertence should be excused rests largely in the discretion of the court to which application is made, and the exercise of its discretion will not be disturbed, except where a clear abuse of discretion is apparent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3577-3579.]

4. JUDGMENT—OPENING DEFAULT—VERIFIED ANSWER AS AFFIDAVIT OF MERITS—SUFFICIENCY.

A verified answer, which denies every material allegation of the complaint, is sufficient as an affidavit of merits.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 312, 314-316.]

5. SAME—PLEADING BEFORE DEFAULT ENTERED—POWER TO ENTER DEFAULT WHILE PLEA STANDS.

As a general rule in ordinary civil actions, where a party pleads before his default is entered, though out of time or without leave, if the plea be good in form and substance, his default cannot be entered while the plea stands, but the proper practice is to move to strike the plea from the files.

6. SAME—ENTRY OF DEFAULT.

The entry of a defendant's default is not a step in acquiring jurisdiction, but is an act done after jurisdiction has been acquired for the purpose of limiting the time during which he may file his answer.

7. SAME—ENTRY—AUTHORITY TO ENTER—JURISDICTION.

The power to enter judgment depends solely upon the court having acquired jurisdiction by proper service of process on defendant, or by his appearance, and the failure of its ministerial officer to enter up a default, like the failure to make a proper return of service of process, in no way affects the court's power to act.

8. PLEADING — ANSWER FILED AFTER TIME—EFFECT—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Not only is an answer filed after time not a nullity, but plaintiff is not as a matter of right entitled to have it stricken from the files; but the court in its discretion may retain the answer or permit another to be filed, or may pursue whatever course justice may require.

On Rehearing.

9. APPEAL—RECORD—JUDGMENT ROLL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

A bill of exceptions, when duly settled, becomes a part of the judgment roll on appeal from a final judgment, and is presumed to contain all evidence material to the rulings, to which exceptions are reserved and specified therein, under Code Civ. Proc. § 950, providing that any bill of exceptions settled as provided by statute may be used on appeal from a final judgment equally as upon appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by A. Lunnun against J. E. Morris and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded on rehearing.

H. C. Millsap, for appellants. Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action of forcible entry under section 1159, Code Civ. Proc., and the appeal is by defendants from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

Complaint was filed December 20, 1906, and summons thereupon issued directing the defendants to appear and answer on or before December 26, 1906. On the latter date attorneys for defendants served plaintiff's attorneys and filed with the clerk notice of their appearance for defendants. On the same day an order of court was made giving them three days in addition to the time fixed in the summons in which to plead. On the 31st day of December, 1906, and prior to any other or further proceedings in the case, defendants filed with the clerk of the court their verified answer. At the time of such filing no default had been taken against defendants or either of them. Thereafter, and on the same day, and when plaintiff's attorneys were in court and about to proceed with the introduction of testimony in said action, they were served with a copy of the said answer so filed as above stated. Attorneys for defendants thereupon called the attention of the court to the filing of the answer and objected to the introduction of any testimony for the reason that the case was at issue, and had not been regularly set for trial, and that they had no notice of trial under section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff asked that the default of defendants be entered, and that the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses be heard, upon the ground that the time for the filing and serving of said answer had expired before the same had been filed. Defendants then asked leave of the court to prepare motion, affidavits, etc., upon an application to be relieved from the failure to serve and file their answer within the time allowed by law, on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, and excusable neglect of defendants' counsel. By consent, the attorney for defendants made a statement in open court of the facts upon which he based said motion for relief and introduced the verified answer as an affidavit of merits. His statement was accepted as true for the purpose of the motion, and, together with said answer, appears in the bill of exceptions in the record. The evidence on behalf of plaintiff in the cause was then heard and the objection and motion of defendants taken under submission, and thereafter, on the 2d day of January, 1907, the objection was overruled and the motion denied. Judgment by default in favor of plaintiff for the recovery of the premises was filed January 5, 1907, and the recital in this judgment shows that it was made upon a hearing had on December 31, 1906, at which time evidence was introduced on behalf of plaintiff. The above-mentioned appearance of defendants, the extension of time to plead, and their failure to answer within said time are recited in the judgment.

In the consideration of the application for relief from the consequences of the mistake and inadvertence of counsel, all the circumstances surrounding the parties and the litigation as shown by the papers were before the court and were proper matters for it to weigh in reaching a conclusion. Lakeshore v. Modoc, 108 Cal. 263, 41 Pac. 472; Montijo v. Sherer & Co. (Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 261. It does not clearly appear from the bill of exceptions whether or not evidence on the part of plaintiff was heard on the motion. If there was, it is not stated. The language of the bill in this respect is as follows: "The verified answer of the defendants was read and used as and for an affidavit of merit. Whereupon the court stated that the evidence of plaintiff would be heard, and the objection and motion would be submitted." The real inadvertence or mistake of counsel consisted of having on Friday, December 28, 1906, informed his associate, who was to prepare, serve, and file the answer in the case, that the answer must be filed December 31, 1906, instead of December 29, 1906. His reason given for doing this is that when telephoning to plaintiff's attorneys for an extension of time to plead, on December 26, he made the entry of his office diary under the date of December 28, "Last day to plead in case of Lunnun v. Morris et al.," and, when asked by his associate when the answer was due, looked at his office diary and computed the time allowed by the order of the court (three days) from December 28th instead of December 26th. There is nothing in the statement from which the court could determine that this information was not given by counsel with full knowledge that the three days terminated December 29th, and not December 31st, except his characterization of it as a mistake in the statement. This the court might well regard as not sufficient. The character of the mistake is to be ascertained by the court from the facts before it, and not from the conclusion of counsel or party that the act was a mistake. Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 484, 39 Pac. 863. Even if there was no showing upon plaintiff's part, which does not seem clear from the record, we cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion. Whether or not the circumstances of a particular case are such that the mistake or inadvertence should be excused is a question the determination of which must of necessity be left largely to the court to which application is made, and it is well settled that an appellate court will not interfere with the exercise of the discretion of that tribunal, except in a case where a clear abuse of discretion is apparent. Freeman v. Brown (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 970; Vinson v. L. A. P. R. Co., 147 Cal. 483, 82 Pac. 53. While this discretion is best exercised when it tends to bring about a judgment on the merits, it would cease to be a discretion if it could only be exercised to this end.

The answer denies every material allegation of the complaint and is a sufficient affidavit of merits. Montijo v. Sherer & Co., supra; Melde v. Reynolds, 129 Cal. 314, 61 Pac. 932. The application was not made for leave to file the answer. That had already been filed by the clerk when the default was entered. While there are jurisdictions in which it has been held that an answer filed after the time limited by the statute, without leave of the court, may be disregarded as a nullity (6 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. p. 86), the general rule, and that adopted by the Supreme Court of this state in ordinary civil actions, appears to be that, where a party pleads before default entered, though out of time or without leave, if the plea be good in form and substance, his default cannot be entered while the plea stands. The proper practice in such case is to move to strike the plea from the files. 6 Enc. of Pl. & Pr. pp. 82, 85; Bowers v. Dickerson, 18 Cal. 420; Acock v. Halsey, 90 Cal. 216, 27 Pac. 193.

The entry of the default is not a step in acquiring jurisdiction, but an act done after jurisdiction has been acquired by the court. Siehler v. Look, 93 Cal. 608, 29 Pac. 220. The purpose of the entry of default is to limit the time during which the defendant may file his answer (Drake v. Duvenick, 45 Cal. 463), but such entry is not necessary in order that the court may enter a judgment against the defaulting party. The power to enter judgment depends solely upon the court having acquired jurisdiction by proper service of process, on the defendant, or his appearance, and, the failure of its ministerial officer to enter up a default, like such failure to make proper return of service of process, in no way affects the power of the court to act. Iiibernia Saving Soc. v. Matthai, 116 Cal. 426, 48 Pac.

370; Herman v. Santee, 103 Cal. 523, 37 Pac. 509, 42 Am. St. Rep. 145. Not only is the answer filed after time not a nullity, but the plaintiff is not as a matter of right entitled to have it stricken from the files. The discretion to do this is lodged in the court, which has absolute power either to retain the answer or permit another to be filed, or pursue whatever course in that respect the justice of the case may require. Bowers v. Dickerson, supra.

There is nothing in the bill of exceptions to show that any motion was made to have the answer stricken from the files, nor does it appear that the court of its own motion did this. Neither is there anything in the record to negative this; that is, to show that no such motion was made or that such action was not taken. The bill of exceptions contains merely the recital that "the following proceedings were had therein." It nowhere appears that the proceedings displayed and the action taken were all the proceedings had or acts done. In the absence of such showing, the presumption must be in favor of the court having done every act necessary to sustain the judgment. In support of the judgment all proceedings necessary to its validity will be presumed to have been regularly taken, and any matters which might have been presented to the court below, which would have authorized the judgment, will be presumed to have been thus presented, if the record shows nothing to the contrary. Von Schmidt v. Von Schmidt, 104 Cal. 547, 38 Pac. 361.

This holding renders it unnecessary for us to determine whether any distinction is to be drawn in this respect between the rules of practice in ordinary civil actions and summary proceedings in forcible entry. Presuming, then, in support of the judgment that the answer filed was stricken from the files before the default judgment was rendered, the record shows no reversible error, and the judgment should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

On Rehearing.

TAGGART, J. An action in forcible entry. The statement of facts in this case will be found in the decision rendered by this court September 24, 1907. We are satisfied with the views expressed in that opinion, except what is said as to the intendment declared to exist in support of the judgment.

The bill of exceptions contained in the record was treated as if entitled to be considered only in connection with the motion of appellant for relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the ground of mistake. In this we overlooked the fact that it was a part of the judgment roll, and the presumption which, under such circumstances, attached to it, to wit, that it contained all the evidence material to the rulings to which exceptions were reserved and specified therein. This presumption rendered it unnecessary that it should negative the introduction of other evidence bearing upon the point to be considered. Hidden v. Jordan, 28 Cal. 301; Bedan v. Turney, 99 Cal. 652, 34 Pac. 442. The bill of exceptions when settled became a part of the judgment roll (section 950, Code Civ. Proc.), and the court's record of its own acts, and an appellate court could no more assume that error appearing therein was cured by some matter which is not contained in the bill, than it could consider matters outside of the roll for the purpose of impeaching the correctness of the judgment. The oversight mentioned resulted in an erroneous conclusion and the entry of an improper order by this court.

Respondent, upon the rehearing, again urges that a distinction should be drawn between an action of forcible entry and an ordinary civil action in considering the question presented by the appeal. The question is one of practice, and, unless otherwise provided in the chapter relating to forcible entry and unlawful detainer, must be determined by the general rules of practice in civil actions. Section 1177, Code Civ. Proc. The particular question here involved is not covered by a statutory rule relating to either class of cases. An answer was filed after the expiration of the time provided by law. It was not stricken out before default was entered. The power to enter judgment does not depend in either case upon the entry of the default. Jurisdiction to enter the judgment is acquired by service of process in both cases, and the defendant in either may at the discretion of the court be relieved from a default and permitted to answer after the expiration of the time given by statute for that purpose. A reason from which a distinction might be drawn on account of the summary character of the action is apparent, but the statute provides that the general rule shall be followed in all instances for which express provisions are not made in the chapter relating to the special proceeding. In the absence of the special provision, we must be governed by the general rule declared in ordinary civil action, which is that the default should not be entered until the answer shall have first been stricken from the files. Bowers v. Dickerson, 18 Cal. 420; Acocck v. Halsey, 90 Cal. 216, 27 Pac. 193; 6 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. pp. 82, 85. A note under the last citation distinguishes the rule in the state of New York (from which cases are cited by appellant), as not being in accord with this; but the New York rule is stated as the exception. No decision in this state has been called to our attention which modifies the effect of Bowers v. Dickerson, supra, as an authority on this question.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

1. APPEAL—ORDER DENYING NEW TRIAL—REVIEW OF EVIDENCE.

The appellate court will not disturb an order refusing a new trial where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, and will not review the evidence as though the motion were presented directly to it, though it was denied by a judge of the trial court who did not hear the evidence at the trial.

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where the testimony was conflicting in all material points, an instruction that if the jury should find that the evidence was conflicting and that any witness had testified falsely as to any material fact the jury was at liberty to disregard and discard the whole testimony of the witness from further consideration, while objectionable, because limiting the rule to conflicting evidence alone, was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4219-4228.]

3. TRIAL—WITNESSES—FALSE TESTIMONY—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction that if any witness had willfully testified falsely in regard to any material fact the jury was at liberty to "disregard and discard his entire testimony" was not objectionable because of the use of the words "disregard" and "discard" instead of "distrust"; Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 3, providing that when a witness is false in one part of his testimony he is to be "distrusted" in the others.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. E. Greene, Judge.

Action by Clarence Whitaker, a minor, by his guardian, James A. Whitaker, against the California Door Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Myrick, Deering & Gibbons, for appellant. Charles E. Naylor, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The action was brought to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff, a boy 15 years of age, while operating a grooving machine in the defendant's mill. As there is a conflict in the evidence on the question involved, a statement of the facts of the case or even a summary of them is unnecessary. Appellant concedes, as indeed he must, that there is a conflict in the evidence; but he contends that the rule applied by appellate courts in such cases is inapplicable here under the peculiar circumstances of this case.

It appears from the record that the case was tried before the Honorable W. E. Greene, sitting with a jury; that before the motion for a new trial was made Judge Greene died, and the motion was submitted to another judge of the same court, the Honorable John Ellsworth. Appellant contends that the judge who heard and denied the motion for a new trial, not having seen the witnesses nor observed their manner of testifying, was in no better position to weigh the testimony than is this court, and that therefore the rule which prevents appellate courts from examining the testimony when there is a conflict does not apply. In other words, appellant desires that we should examine and weigh the evidence as though the motion for a new trial were presented directly to us. Appellate courts will not disturb an order of a trial court in granting or refusing a new trial when there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, and the circumstance that the motion was decided by a judge of the trial court who did not hear the evidence at the trial makes no difference in the application of the rule.

In Reay v. Butler, 95 Cal. 214, 30 Pac. 208, the Supreme Court holds that the rule just stated is not adopted merely because courts of review do not have, as do trial courts, the advantage of observing the appearance and bearing of witnesses; but it is also founded on the essential distinction between trial and appellate courts, and grows out of a consideration of jurisdiction, that it is the province of the trial courts to decide questions of law and fact, and of the appellate courts to decide questions of law, and that appellate courts can rightfully set aside a finding for want of evidence only when there is no evidence to support it, or when the supporting evidence is so slight as to show an abuse of discretion. The court further says: "It has been held directly in several cases that the rule as to conflicting evidence applies to a case where the trial was before one judge and the motion for a new trial passed upon by his successor, and where the latter saw none of the witnesses, or where the trial was before the old district court and the motion before the succeeding superior court." See, also, Garton v. Stern, 121 Cal. 349, 53 Pac. 904. The rule is the same in all cases, whether the evidence is given orally or by deposition or affidavit (Sheehan v. Osborn, 138 Cal. 515, 71 Pac. 622; Parrott v. Floyd, 54 Cal. 535), or upon testimony in other cases (Knox v. Moses, 104 Cal. 505, 38 Pac. 318).

The judge who presided at the trial gave the following instructions: "If in this case the consideration of it you shall find that the testimony is conflicting, and if you shall find from the evidence that it is so conflicting, and that any witness who has testified in it has willfully testified falsely in regard to any fact material to the issue in the case, you are at liberty to disregard and discard the whole testimony of such witness from your further consideration in coming to a verdict."

Appellant objects to the part of the instruction in italics, because it does not apply the rule that a witness, false in one part of his testimony, is to be distrusted in others to the whole testimony, but confines and limits the rule to conflicting testimony. We do not approve of this instruction, but as the testimony was contradictory in all the material points in the case the instruction, even considering it apart from the others, was entirely harmless. Subdivision 3 of section 2061 provides that, when a witness is false in one part of his testimony, he is to be distrusted in others. The foregoing instruction, it will be noted, uses the words "disregard" and "discard" instead of the word "distrust," and appellant says that disregard and discard do not mean the same as distrust; that distrust means suspicion, not disbelief; and that therefore, so he contends, the court erred in giving this instruction. Code Civ. Proc.

This matter has been passed on adversely to appellant's views in the case of People v. Soto, 59 Cal. 367, in which case the same judge who tried this case gave an instruction almost word for word like the one under consideration. There as here the words "disregard" and "discard" were employed. The instruction read: "If you believe that the defendant or any other witness in this case who has testified has willfully testified falsely in regard to any fact material to the issue, you are at liberty to disregard and entirely discard the whole testimony of such witness in coming to your verdict." And the Supreme Court, in sustaining the lower court, says (pages 369-370): "The court did not tell the jury that they ought to reject, or that they must reject, the entire evidence of the witness, but simply instructed them that they were at liberty to disregard and discard the whole evidence of a witness who had willfully testified falsely to a material fact in the case. We are at a loss to see how the court, by leaving the matter entirely within the discretion of the jury, in any manner invaded its province, and we think the instruction was a correct and proper one."

The judgment is affirmed.

PAJARO VALLEY BANK v. SCURICH et al.
(Civ. 418.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 23, 1908.)

1. ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVITS—AMENDMENTS—FATALLY DEFECTIVE AFFIDAVIT.

A fatally defective affidavit on which a writ of attachment was issued cannot be amended so as to meet a motion to discharge the writ [Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig vol. 5, Attachment, §§ 323-334.]

2. SAME.

Code Civ. Proc. § 556, permits a defendant, either before or after the release of the attached property, to move that the attachment be discharged as improperly or irregularly issued. Section 538 provides that an affidavit for attachment shall show that "the attachment is not sought, and the action is not prosecuted, to hinder, delay or defraud any creditor of the defendant." In an action on a note against the maker and four indorsers, etc., the writ directed a levy on any property of defendants, or either of them, and the affidavit upon which the writ was issued stated that "the attachment is not sought and the action is not prosecuted to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor or creditors of the said defendants." Held, that the statute required the affidavit to negative an intention to hinder, etc., any creditor of any defendant against whom the writ ran, and the affidavit filed did not negative a purpose to hinder, etc., any creditor of any number less than all of them, and was fatally defective.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by the Pajaro Valley Bank, a corporation, against Stephen Scurich and others, upon a note. From an order denying a motion to discharge a writ of attachment, one of defendants appeals. Reversed, with direction to discharge the attachment as against appellant.

Chas. B. Younger, for appellant. Dickerman and Torchiana, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by defendant Stephen Scurich from an order of the trial court refusing to discharge a writ of attachment as to said defendant that had been issued in the above-entitled action, and been levied upon property of said defendant as well as upon property of the defendant corporation.

The motion was made under section 556, Code Civ. Proc., upon the ground that the writ was improperly and irregularly issued as to appellant, in this, that the complaint fails to state a cause of action against appellant, and that the affidavit for attachment is insufficient, in that it fails to show "that the said attachment is not sought, and the action is not prosecuted to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of defendant Scurich." The action is one upon a promissory note, and is against the defendant corporation as the maker thereof, and against the other defendants, including appellant, as indorsers thereof. By its terms the note is payable one day after date, and the complaint fails to allege that any demand was made on the maker on said day, or any notice of dishonor served at that time; the first demand and notice alleged being made and given about 20 months after the date of the note.

Whether or not the court should have granted the motion for this reason it is not necessary for us to decide in this case. It has been held that a motion of this kind cannot be made to take the place of a demurrer, and that, if the complaint can be amended so as to state a cause of action upon which an attachment will lie, the motion should be denied. But whether the amendment should be made before the determination of the motion may not be perfectly clear. See Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 142 Cal. 137, 75 Pac. 653; Hathaway v. Davis, 33 Cal. 161; Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741. A fatally defective affidavit cannot be amended so as to meet a motion to discharge the writ. Winters v. Pearson, 72 Cal. 553, 14 Pac. 304. And as we are of the opinion that the affidavit in this case is fatally defective, the court should have granted the motion. The statute requires that the affidavit shall show "that the attachment is not sought, and the action is not prosecuted, to hinder, delay or defraud any creditor of the defendant." Section 538, Code Civ. Proc. The manifest object and purpose of the statute is to require the affidavit to show that the attachment is not sought, and the action is not prosecuted, to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of any defendant against whom the writ may run. In the case at bar there are five defendants, and the writ directs a levy upon any property of the said defendants, "or either of them," and the writ was in fact levied upon the property of the corporation defendant and also upon property of appellant. The affidavit upon which the writ issued stated that "the attachment is not sought and the action is not prosecuted to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor or creditors of the said defendants." This statement would be perfectly true, and perjury could not be assigned thereon unless the attachment was sought or the action prosecuted to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor of all the defendants. The purpose to hinder, delay, or defraud a creditor of the defendants, or any number less than all, is not negated by the affidavit. The affidavit should have stated that the attachment is not sought and the action is not prosecuted to hinder, delay, or defraud any creditor of the said defendants, or any creditor of either of said defendants.

We have not been cited to any case where the defect existing in this affidavit has been before the appellate courts of this state, or where the provision of our statute in this regard has been construed. But a similar provision of the attachment law of Texas has been construed by the courts of that state. The statute of that state requires that "the affidavit shall further state that the attachment is not sued out for the purpose of injuring or harassing the defendant." In Lumber Co. v. Bank, 91 Tex. 95, 41 S. W. 64, upon an appeal from an order refusing to quash an attachment, it was pointed out that an affidavit that "the attachment now applied for is not sued out for the purpose of injuring or harassing the said defendants," there being two defendants, was not a sufficient compliance with the statute, in that it did not negative a purpose to harass or injure "the defendants or either of them." In the Texas case the court reversed the order of the trial court for another reason, but took pains to clearly lay down the proper form of the affidavit where several defendants joined in an attachment suit. The defendants were the drawer and acceptor of a bill of exchange.

The order is reversed, and the court is directed to discharge the writ of attachment as against appellant.

COON v. BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 435.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 24, 1908. Rehearing Denied April 22, 1908.)

1. NUISANCE—PUBLIC NUISANCES—LIVERY STABLE.

The business of running a livery stable is not a nuisance per se, for whether a stable is a nuisance depends upon the manner in which it is conducted.

2 MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—BUILDING ORDINANCE—VALIDITY—CONSENT OF OTHER PROPERTY OWNERS.

An ordinance requiring the consent of owners of property within 200 feet of a proposed stable for more than six horses as a prerequisite to the issuance of a permit is unreasonable and void as vesting in private individuals the arbitrary power to determine whether the owner of real property may use it in pursuit of a lawful occupation.

3. MANDAMUS—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

The building law of a city provided that when a proposed building was to cost more than $1,000 plans and specifications should be filed, and if it was to cost less than $1,000 a written statement of the character of the improvement should be filed. The complaint for a writ of mandate for the issuance of a permit did not show the estimated cost of the building, but averred that the permit was refused because consent of adjoining property owners had not been obtained. It was admitted that the complaint was sufficient if the building was to cost more than $1,000. Held, that a general demurrer was properly overruled, especially where the record indicated a cost exceeding $1,000, since the defect in the complaint could have been remedied had it been pointed out or relied on in the trial court, and the permit was refused on other grounds.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Application by J. R. Coon for a writ of mandate to compel the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco to issue a permit for the construction of a stable. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James A. Devoto, for appellants. Van Ness and Denman, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment granting a writ of mandate compelling appellants, as the board of public works of the city and county of San Francisco, to issue a permit for the construction of a certain one-story frame building in said city and county to be used as a stable.

Respondent set forth in his complaint, among other provisions of the building law of the city and county of San Francisco, section 320, which reads as follows: "Permits for public livery and boarding stables, or for stables to accommodate more than six (6) horses, will be granted upon the presentation of the written consent of the owners of property within two hundred (200) feet of the stable. Buildings for stabling animals above the first or ground floor, unless fire-proof, shall not be erected nor altered."

It is also alleged in the complaint that respondent filed and submitted to the said board of public works an application in writing for a permit to erect a certain one-story building; that said building was to be used as a stable in said city and county to accommodate more than six horses; that said appellants refused to take any action looking to the granting of said permit unless the respondent should present to said board the written consent of the owners of the property within 200 feet of said stable proposed to be erected. The complaint further shows that respondent refused to comply with this demand of the board, and prays for a writ of mandate that appellants be required to receive and to examine the plans and specifications in the complaint described, and, if found to embody all the requirements applicable to such cases, to issue the permit demanded. Preliminarily it should be stated that the business of running a livery stable is not a nuisance per se. Whether a stable is a nuisance depends upon the manner in which it is conducted. City of St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 22 S. W. 470, 20 L. R. A. 721. See, also, Ruffin, C. J., in Dargan v. Waddill, 31 N. C. 244, 49 Am. Dec. 421; Kirkman v. Handy, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 406, 54 Am. Dec. 45; Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 935, note. In our judgment section 320 of the ordinance is unreasonable and void, because it vests in private individuals the arbitrary power to determine whether the owner of real property may use it in the pursuit of a lawful occupation.

In the case of Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 354, 31 Pac. 245, 24 L. R. A. 195, 31 Am. St. Rep. 218, a similar ordinance passed by the city of Chico was considered and held unreasonable and invalid. In that ordinance it was provided that no permit should be granted to maintain or carry on the business of a public laundry, unless the applicant should have first obtained the written consent of a majority of the property owners within the block in which it was proposed to carry on the laundry, and also the four blocks immediately surrounding that block. The court said: "The business of conducting a laundry is a lawful occupation precisely as much so as is that of the carpenter, blacksmith, or merchant, and is not of itself, and irrespective of the manner in which it is conducted, offensive or dangerous to the health of those living within its vicinity, and no municipal corporation has the power to make the right of a person to follow this business at any place he may select for that purpose dependent upon the will of any number of citizens or property owners within its limits, as it attempted in the ordinance under review. A town or city may, when deemed necessary for the public health or safety, adopt reasonable regulations as to the manner in which such a business shall be conducted. * * * But the ordinance which the petitioner here is charged with violating is not of this character, and the restrictions which it imposes upon the right to carry on a public laundry have no tendency to promote the public health, or in any way to secure the public comfort or safety. The sections of the ordinance above quoted bear no kind of relation to such objects, and do not attempt to regulate the business mentioned with the view of accomplishing such ends; but they commit the right to carry on such business at all in all but two blocks of the town to the unrestricted will and caprice of a majority of the real property owners within the block upon which it is proposed to establish such laundry, and of the four blocks immediately surrounding such block. Such a condition upon the right of a person to maintain a public laundry is not only an unauthorized interference with the inalienable right of such person to engage in a lawful occupation, but also with the right of the owner of property to devote it to a lawful purpose. The personal liberty of the citizen and his rights of property cannot be thus invaded under the guise of a police regulation."

The court in the same opinion quotes from the case of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 373, 6 Sup. Ct. 1070 (30 L. Ed. 220), which involved the validity of an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco declaring it unlawful for a person to conduct a laundry within the corporate limits without first having obtained the consent of the board of supervisors, except the same be located in a building constructed either of brick or stone. The Supreme Court of the United States held this provision of the ordinance void, saying in the opinion therein filed: "It does not prescribe a rule and conditions for the regulation of the use of property for laundry purposes to which all similarly situated may conform. It allows without restriction the use for such purposes of buildings of brick or stone; but as to wooden buildings, constituting nearly all those in previous use, it divides the owners or occupants into two classes, not having respect to their personal character and qualifications for the business, nor the situation and nature and adaptation of the buildings themselves, but merely by an arbitrary line, on one side of which are those who are permitted to pursue their industry by the mere will and consent of the supervisors, and on the other those from whom this consent is withheld, at their mere will and pleasure. And both classes are alike only in this that they are tenants at will under the supervisors of their means of living."

The case of City of St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 22 S. W. 470, 20 L. R. A. 721, involved the validity of an ordinance of the city of St. Louis, which provided that no livery stable should be located in any block of ground in St. Louis without the written consent of owners of one-half of the ground of that block; and it was held that the city had no right to delegate to the owners of one-half the ground in any block in which a livery stable was proposed to be erected the power to say whether it should be done or not, or to require any person desiring to construct such stable, before a building permit would be granted him for its erection, to obtain the consent in writing of the owners of one-half the ground of such block.

The building law of San Francisco provides that when the proposed building is to cost more than $1,000 plans and specifications shall be filed; that when the building is to cost less than $1,000 a written statement of the character of the improvement shall be filed. The averments of the complaint do not show whether the estimated cost of the building was over or under $1,000; but the complaint does aver that the permit was refused solely on the ground that the consent of the adjoining property owners had not been obtained. It is virtually conceded that if the building was to cost more than $1,000 the complaint is sufficient, but it is claimed that as the estimated cost of the building may have been less than $1,000 the complaint is defective. The demurrer was general only, and the defect is one that could easily have been remedied had it been pointed out or relied upon in the trial court. The record indicates quite clearly that the building was to cost in excess of $1,000. The permit was refused, as stated, on the single ground of want of consent of adjoining property owners, and the case was heard and submitted on this theory only. Under these circumstances, we think the point is wholly without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

LEUSCHNER v. DUFF. (Civ. 461.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
March 17, 1908.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

A unilateral contract, though evidenced by a writing sufficient under the statute of frauds, is not necessarily a contract which may be specifically enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 89-98.]

2. SAME.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3386, 3388, providing that neither party to an obligation can be compelled to perform it unless the other party has performed or can be compelled to specifically perform, and that a party who has signed a written contract may be compelled specifically to perform it, though the other party has not signed, where the latter has performed or offers to perform it, the mutuality of remedy necessary to specific performance is supplied by an offer to perform or the filing of a bill for specific performance; but one executing a unilateral agreement to execute a contract for the sale of realty may withdraw his offer before acceptance thereof by the other party, in which case the latter is not entitled to a decree for specific performance, but is left to his action at law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 11.]

3. SAME—OTHER RELIEF—RETENTION OF JURISDICTION.

The court, in a suit for the specific performance of a unilateral agreement, may, on determining that plaintiff is not entitled to the relief demanded, retain jurisdiction and award him the relief he is entitled to.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 412-419.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Oscar Leuschner against Christina J. Duff. From a judgment for defendant and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edw. F. Wehrle and C. H. Bretherton, for appellant. Galbreth & Bryson, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to compel specific performance of a unilateral agreement to execute and deliver a contract of sale of real estate. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The writing relied upon to satisfy the requirements of the statute of frauds is set out in the complaint, and is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 13, 1905.

"Received from Oscar Leuschner ten dollars on part payment lot 30, block E, of West Los Angeles Tract, lot on N. W. corner Figueroa St. and 39th. 65 or more by 130. Price $800.00; $190 more on contract delivery; $25.00 per month, interest 6 p. c.

"$10. Christina J. Duff."

The sufficiency of the writing to satisfy the statute is not questioned by respondent, and although this matter is presented by appellant as if the judgment of the court rested upon the theory that the writing was not sufficient for this purpose, we find nothing in the findings to justify this assumption. Accepting it as sufficient for this purpose, it does not follow necessarily that it is a contract the specific performance of which can be compelled. It is not an option for which a valuable consideration was paid, and it is not a contract by its terms binding both parties to it. The $10 received was accepted as a part of the purchase price, and the contract of sale to which plaintiff was entitled was dependent upon the payment of "$190 more," and his obligating himself to pay the further sum of $600, payable $25 per month, being the residue of the price fixed, $800. The court found in plaintiff's favor upon the defenses of inadequacy of consideration and unfair advantage alleged to have been taken of defendant in procuring the execution of the contract. It also found that the writing was the only agreement between the parties; that the $10 mentioned therein was in the form of plaintiff's personal check, which was never cashed; that the same day it was received by defendant she offered to return it to plaintiff, and notified him that she withdrew and revoked the offer contained in the contract; that there was no further act or offer of performance by plaintiff until 10 days after such revocation, when he demanded of defendant that she carry out the agreement, which she refused to do; and that no tender of the "$190 more" was made by plaintiff until August 31, 1906.

A party to an obligation cannot be compelled to perform it unless the other party, claiming the right to enforce, has performed or can under the terms of the agreement be compelled to specifically perform. Civ. Code, § 3386. The exception to this rule is that: "A party who has signed a written contract may be compelled specifically to perform it, though the other party has not signed it (is not bound to perform), if the latter has performed (as in section 3386), or offers to perform it on his part, and the case is otherwise proper for enforcing specific performance." Section 3388. The mutuality of remedy necessary to specific performance in the latter case is said to be supplied by the offer to perform or the filing of the bill for the purpose of procuring the decree. Vassault v. Edwards, 43 Cal. 458; Sayward v. Houghton, 119 Cal. 549, 51 Pac. 853, 52 Pac. 44. This is upon the theory that the want of mutuality of obligation which obtained at first is overcome by the acts mentioned; they being held sufficient to bind the party not originally obligated. Spire v. Urbahn, 124 Cal. 110, 56 Pac. 794; Bird v. Potter, 146 Cal. 286, 79 Pac. 970.

We are not aware of any rule which requires the signer of a unilateral agreement to maintain the status of the property affected in order that the other party thereto may offer to perform at his pleasure and thereby compel specific performance. A construction of section 3388 which would bring about this result would work a repeal of section 3386, and neither mutuality of remedy nor mutuality of obligation be a prerequisite to the specific performance of a contract. The offer having been withdrawn by the defendant before the offer of performance by plaintiff, the latter was not entitled to a decree compelling defendant to execute the contract and was left to his action at law for any relief to which he was entitled. Pacific Electric Co. v. Campbell-Johnston (Cal.) 94 Pac. 623. The trial court, applying the rule that a court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction of the cause, would grant any relief to which the parties were entitled, ascertained that the property had not appreciated in value since the contract was executed, and decreed that the restoration to plaintiff of the $10 check was all the relief he was entitled to.

The evidence is sufficient to sustain the findings against the attacks made upon them, and they in turn support the judgment.

Judgment and order affirmed.

CONNELL v. HARRON, RICKARD & McCONE. (Civ. 432.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 23, 1908.)

1. DAMAGES—EXPENSES INCURRED—BREACH OF CONTRACT.

A contract for the manufacture and sale of a machine contemplated that it should be manufactured in Ohio and shipped to California, and as a part of the contract the buyer guaranteed that the freight rate should not exceed $1.25 per hundred, the rate for transportation of like machinery in car-load lots. The machine delivered did not comply with the contract. It was shipped to New York, and the buyer loaded it with a car of his goods and shipped it to California at the rate of $1.25 per hundred. The buyer paid $35 for freight. Held, that the buyer, in an action for damages for breach of contract, was not entitled to recover freight charges on the theory that the transportation charges would have been $4.50 per hundred if the machine had been shipped separately, but his recovery was limited to the actual amount paid.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, §§ 92-99.]

2. APPEAL—REVERSAL—AMOUNT OF RECOVERY—TRIVIAL ERROR.

In an action for damages for breach of contract to manufacture and deliver a machine in accordance with specifications, the failure to award the buyer $7.85 freight charges paid by him on a machine delivered by the seller, which did not comply with the specifications, was within Civ. Code, § 3533, declaring that the law disregards trifles, and did not warrant a reversal of the judgment.

3. SALES—REMEDIES OF BUYER—ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—DAMAGES.

In an action for breach of contract to manufacture and deliver a machine in accordance with specifications, it appeared that the contract contemplated that the machine should be manufactured in Ohio and shipped to California, and that the machine which was shipped did not comply with the specifications. The buyer offered no evidence to prove the price for which he could have bought a machine constructed in accordance with the specifications in the market in California, but offered to prove the price at which he could have bought a machine similar in character and just as good. None of the witnesses pretended to give the price at which a machine of the pattern and make called for could be bought at any place. Held, that the damages were not controlled by Civ. Code, § 3354, providing that in estimating damages the value of property to the buyer deprived of its possession is deemed to be the price at which he might have bought an equivalent in the market nearest to the place where the property ought to have been put into his possession, and the damages must be limited as provided by section 3308, providing that the damage caused by the breach of a seller's agreement to deliver personally the price of which has not been fully paid is deemed to be the excess of the value of the property to the buyer over the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract if it had been fulfilled.

4. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

In an action for breach of contract to manufacture and deliver a machine according to specifications, where the machine delivered did not comply with the specifications, a witness for the buyer having stated that he could tell what such machines of the same size were worth, and having been asked to do so, the question was objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, if the witness referred to machines of another make. The objection was overruled; the court stating that the measure of damages was the market price at which an equivalent could be purchased in the market, and that that did not mean necessarily the same thing. Held, that the admission of the testimony, with the statement that an equivalent article was not necessarily the same thing, could not be construed into a meaning that would justify the buyer in believing that the court regarded the evidence as other than one link in the chain of proof, and he was not entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise from having been misled by such statement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by J. F. Connell against the Harron, Rickard & McCone Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for an amount less than that claimed, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Earle & Creede, for appellant. Charles T. Howland, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action for damages for breach of contract. At an agreed price of $655, defendant sold and agreed to furnish to plaintiff, f. o. b. Los Angeles, Cal., a piece of machinery, known and designated as a lathe of Lodge & Shipley pattern, supplied with a Bullock motor; all of which machinery should be constructed in accordance with and conform to certain specifications designated in the contract. At the time of making the contract of purchase, plaintiff paid to defendant $25 upon the purchase price thereof. The contract contemplated that the lathe and machinery should be manufactured in Ohio and shipped to Los Angeles, and as a part of the contract plaintiff guaranteed the freight rate should not exceed $1.25 per hundred, which was the rate for transportation of like machinery in car-load lots. The contract called for a lathe 18 feet in length, but the lathe shipped, owing to an error of defendant's, was only 8 feet in length. The lathe was shipped from Ohio to a point in New York, where it was loaded with a car of goods of plaintiff's and shipped through to Los Angeles at a rate of $1.25 per hundredweight; whereas, if it had been shipped alone, the transportation charges would have been $4.50 per hundred on 2,800 pounds. The cost of shipping from Ohio to New York, where plaintiff's car was being loaded, was $7.85, and this sum, as well as the $1.25 per hundred on 2,800 pounds, was paid by plaintiff; but as the lathe shipped was not the one ordered by plaintiff, he, by separate cause of action, claims a freight charge of $4.50 per hundred thereon, basing such claim upon the fact that had defendant shipped the lathe separately, rather than in a car-load lot, it would have cost defendant such sum, and that he (plaintiff) did not guarantee the $1.25 freight rate upon this lathe.

1. As to the amount of $150.42, which plaintiff claimed to have paid on account of transportation charges, the court found that he was entitled to $35, and no more. This finding is attacked as being unsupported by the evidence. According to appellant's contention, the charge of $150.42 consists of $7.85, freight from Ohio to New York, which he paid, and $126, freight from New York to Los Angeles, $35 only of which he paid, and $16.55 for cartage, none of which he paid. As plaintiff only paid $35 for transportation of the lathe from New York to Los Angeles, it is difficult to conceive of any theory upon which he could be entitled to any amount in excess of said sum. Under the circumstances of this case, there is no merit in the contention of appellant that he is entitled to a charge based upon quantum meruit. For transportation from New York to Los Angeles he paid $35, and he is entitled to nothing more than reimbursement for such expenditure. As to the item of $16.55 on account of cartage charges, we have been unable to find any evidence in the record bearing in the remotest degree upon the subject. Plaintiff paid out the sum of $7.85, freight charges from Cincinnati to North Tonawanda, N. Y., where the machine was loaded upon a car with other freight consigned to plaintiff at Los Angeles. The evidence shows that plaintiff paid this sum solely for defendant's benefit, and, while he was entitled to be reimbursed for the outlay, we are nevertheless of the opinion that the case justifies the application of the doctrine of de minimis non curat lex. Section 3533, Civ. Code.

2. The court found that defendant neglected and failed to carry out the terms of the contract, in that it failed to deliver the lathe described in the contract, and that by reason of such breach plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $25, and no more. For the purpose of ascertaining the amount of damages sustained, plaintiff introduced evidence which he claims tended to prove the price at which he might have bought an equivalent thing in the market nearest to the place where the property ought to have been put into his possession, as provided by section 3354 of the Civil Code. Unless the evidence fixes the damages in accordance with this rule, then the amount of damages must be ascertained in accordance with the rule prescribed in section 3308 of the Civil Code, under which plaintiff would be entitled to "the excess, if any, of the value of the property to the buyer over the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract if it had been fulfilled." Applying this latter rule, there is no evidence which would entitle plaintiff to damages other than the $25 paid on account of the purchase price of the machine, as to which the court found in his favor. The lathe called for by the contract was described as being, "a Lodge & Shipley make and pattern, to be and have a 16-inch swing and to be 18 feet long, also to be what is known and designated as the 'tool room lathe,' with cabinet legs, 18 feet in length as aforesaid, supplied with what is known and designated as 'the Bullock motor,' connected directly to the spindle of said lathe; said motor to be built for 110 volts direct current. Also to be supplied with compound rests, taper attachments, two modern and latest pattern chucks, and also to be fitted with all proper attachments, so that said lathe may be run and operated at varying speeds and with reverse attachment." While plaintiff offered no evidence tending to prove the price at which he could have bought a lathe constructed in accordance with these specifications in the market nearest Los Angeles, where under the contract it should have been placed in his possession, he did offer evidence tending to prove the price at which he could have bought lathes similar in character and "just as good"; the price thereof varying from $1,000 to $1,100, f. o. b. Los Angeles. None of the witnesses, however, pretended to give the price at which a lathe of this particular pattern and make and constructed in accordance with the specifications called for in the contract could be bought at any place. The evidence touching lathes of other pattern and specifications, even though similar in character and equally good, cannot be held to be the equivalent of this particular piece of machinery. The rule is usually applied to marketable commodities where the different grades of such articles are well recognized in the commercial world. Bullard v. Stone, 67 Cal. 477, 8 Pac. 17. In Bateman Brothers v. Mapel & American Surety Co., 145 Cal. 241, 78 Pac. 734, suit grew out of a failure to deliver terra cotta and ornamental pressed brick of a certain pattern, and the measure of damage was held to be the cost of buying terra cotta and ornamental pressed brick of the specified quality and pattern. So, in the case at bar the equivalent of this lathe would be a duplicate thereof constructed of material of like quality. The evidence offered failed to bring the case within the rule prescribed by section 3354 for ascertaining the amount of damages. This being true, it follows that in ascertaining the amount of damages sustained by reason of the breach of the contract recourse must be had to the rule prescribed by section 3308 of the Civil Code, under which the court was justified by the evidence in fixing the damages in the sum of $25; there being no evidence of any special damages.

3. Appellant contends that he was misled by the rulings of the court in admitting testimony, and insists that the order denying his motion for a new trial should be reversed on the ground of surprise. Upon the trial a witness for plaintiff stated (with reference to 18-foot lathes), "I could tell you what the lathes would be worth to-day of that particular size," and to the question, "You may do so, then," an objection was interposed upon the ground that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, if the witness refers to the American Tool Company lathe and not the Lodge & Shipley lathe." "The Court: The measure of damages is the price at which an equivalent could be purchased in the market. I am not holding that that means necessarily the same thing. Objection overruled." The witness then answered: "About $760 for a lathe 16-inch swing and 18-foot bed, without a motor. The motor would cost extra." The question at issue was the price of an equivalent article. The size of the machine was an important factor in determining that question. Evidence of the price of an 18-foot lathe, followed by evidence that this lathe complied in other respects with the lathe described in the contract, would have tended to prove an equivalent article. Standing alone, however, it wholly failed of its purpose. Admitting this testimony, with the statement that an equivalent article was not necessarily the same thing, cannot be construed into a meaning that would justify appellant in believing that the court regarded the evidence as other than one link in the chain of proof. Standing alone, it did not even tend in the remotest degree to prove an equivalent article. The facts of this case do not bring it within the rule laid down in the authorities cited by appellant.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

IN re MOFFITT'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,896.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1908.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—VESTED RIGHTS—ESTATES AND INTERESTS IN PROPERTY.

The inheritance tax law, declaring that all property, which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws, shall be subject to the tax therein prescribed, is not, where applied to tax the surviving wife's share of the community property, in violation of any provision of the Constitution of 1849 or 1879, or of Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10, or the Fourteenth amendment, since under Const. Cal. 1849, art. 11, § 14, requiring the Legislature to pass laws defining the wife's right in the community property, and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, the interest of the wife is a mere expectancy, like the interest of an heir in the property of his ancestor.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 95 Pac. 653.

PER CURIAM. Upon petition for rehearing it is urged that the decision in this case fails to dispose of the federal question, which appellant presented in argument. To the decision rendered the following is therefore added and made a part thereof:

Appellant further shows that the community property here under consideration was acquired under the Constitution of 1849, and the laws referable thereto. That Constitution, after defining the separate property of the wife, declared (article 11, § 14): "Laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife in relation, as well to her separate property, as to that held in common with her husband." Upon these facts appellant argues that the Constitution of 1849, together with the laws passed in conformity with its direction, "conferred upon the wife an equal interest with her husband in the common property," and it is said that while the Constitution of 1879 is silent upon the matter of the community property, nevertheless, neither that Constitution nor any new laws passed under it can deprive the wife of her interest in the community property, guaranteed and secured to her by the Constitution of 1849, and the question is asked: "Shall this court do what the Legislature cannot do and take from her a vested right?" Appellant's counsel answer this question to their own satisfaction by invoking the aid of article 1, § 10, and amendment 14, § 1, of the Constitution of the United States.

It cannot be doubted, indeed it is conceded, that the Constitution of 1849, in speaking of property "held in common with her husband," does not refer to tenancies in common, as known to the common law, but does mean property of the character, now universally designated "community property." Thus the declaration of the Constitution of 1849, above quoted, amounts to no more than a mandate to the Legislature to define and prescribe the rights of the wife in the property of the community. The Spanish-Mexican civil law was, of course, the law in force in California at the time of its cession by Mexico to the United States, and it was the design of the Constitution of 1849 to preserve, so far as might be, to the wives of the inhabitants of the new state (most of whom were at that time former citizens of Spain or Mexico) the rights to the community property which they had enjoyed under the Mexican rule. But even under the Spanish-Mexican civil law the wife had no vested estate in the community property. She had rights which may be loosely described as "vested," in the sense that the person to whom the rights belonged was not doubtful or uncertain, but positive and known. In this sense her rights were vested, but those rights never amounted to an estate. She became vested with an estate only (under certain contingencies) upon the dissolution of the marriage, or upon the death of the husband, otherwise, as sums up Ballinger, after review of the system, "her interest seems to be a mere expectancy during coverture, similar to that under the French system." Ballinger on Community Property, p. 29. And, says the Supreme Court of Louisiana (Boyer's Succession, 36 La. Ann. 506): "The wife has, during the marriage, no vested proprietary interest in any property composing the community, but only on inchoate right which entitles her to the hope or expectation that, if she survives her husband, she can receive or own one-half of the property that may be left after payment of the community debts." And, again, says Platt (Property Rights of Married Women; see Fallbrook Ir. Dist. v. Abila, 106 Cal. 362, 39 Pac. 794): "The wife has no voice in the management of these affairs, nor has she any vested or tangible interest in the community property. The title to such property vests in the husband, and for all practical purposes he is regarded by law as the sole owner." But passing from the enunciations of these writers, learned in the law on the subject, we may come directly to the declarations and adjudications of our own court under the Constitution of 1849 and the laws passed in accordance with its mandate, and we find Chief Justice Field, whose study of this Spanish-Mexican system was as profound as his mastery over it was complete, declaring "the interest of the wife is a mere expectancy, like the interest which an heir may possess in the property of his ancestor." Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 308. Soon thereafter Mr. Justice Cope, speaking for the court in Packard v. Arellanes, 17 Cal. 525, says: "So long as the community exists her interest is a mere expectancy, and possesses none of the attributes of an estate, either at law or in equity. This was held in Van Maren v. Johnson, before referred to, where the interest of the wife was compared to that which an heir may possess in the property of his ancestor. This same doctrine prevails in Louisiana, and appears to be an established principle of the civil and Spanish law." And, again, Mr. Justice Thornton, speaking for the court in Greiner v. Greiner, 58 Cal. 119, says: "The interest of the wife during the same period [coverture] was a mere expectancy, like the interest which an heir may possess in the property of his ancestor."

It is thus apparent that the construction put upon the Constitution of 1849, and the laws passed thereunder, is identical with that declared in Estate of Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734, and Spreckels v. Spreckels.

kels, 116 Cal. 339, 48 Pac. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170. The Constitution of 1879 does not, as did the Constitution of 1849, command the Legislature to pass laws defining the wife's rights in the community property because, as for 30 years those laws had been upon the statute books, and as the rights under those laws had been from a very early date judicially determined and settled, no need existed in the new Constitution to call for legislative action upon the matter. For these reasons it is impossible to perceive where or how the inheritance law under consideration does violence to any provision of the Constitutions of California of 1849 or 1879, or to any provision of the Constitution of the United States.

Rehearing denied.

CASTRO v. ADAMS et al. (S. F. 4,722.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1908.

Rehearing Denied May 27, 1908.)

1. ADVERSE POSSESSION—ACTUAL POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title to land, it appeared that in November, 1853, plaintiff conveyed the land by deed, at which time he lived in his "adobe house," and that at the time of the trial in September, 1891, he lived in the same house, and that besides himself and his brother there were in 1853 other persons "in possession of a portion of this ranch." There was given in evidence a petition of plaintiff and another filed with the board of land commissioners in May, 1852, which alleged that they were in 1852 in possession of the ranch, and a decree of the land commission of July 3, 1855, confirming the claim of the petitioners under a Mexican grant. The ranch comprised some 20,000 acres, and there was nothing to show that the house was situated on the ranch, or, if it was, that plaintiff ever occupied any of the land outside the house. Held, that the evidence was insufficient to show title to the ranch by adverse possession at the time of the trial.

2. QUIETING TITLE—ACTIONS—LACHES.

A mortgage for the purchase price of property provided that the price was to be paid as soon as it should be realized by sales of the land made by the mortgagors, and that they should pay to the mortgagees the proceeds of sales until the whole sum was paid. No time was prescribed within which sales were to be made. Held, that the law implied an understanding that it should be within a time that would be reasonable under the circumstances, and in an action by the holder of the mortgage to recover the land after a delay of over 35 years, where it is alleged that the land was sold to about 200 persons, some of whom are unknown, but it does not appear from the pleadings or evidence when the sales were made, and no explanation is made of the inability to be more explicit as to the conveyances, their dates, parties, prices realized, and the disposition of the purchase money, or any circumstances excusing the delay in bringing suit, equity will refuse to grant relief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Quieting Title, § 63.]

3. TRUSTS—VIOLATION OF TRUST.

Where owners of land conveyed it and received a mortgage for the purchase money, which was to be repaid as the mortgagors realized from sales of the land, if a constructive trust in the land was established in favor of the mortgagees, it arose because of the existence of confidential relations among the parties and the violation of the agreement to carry out an express parol trust to sell the land and pay part of the proceeds to the mortgagees, and the breach of the agreement would start the statute of limitations as to the constructive trust, which would begin to run against its enforcement after the expiration of a reasonable time for the sale of the land.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Action by Victor Castro against Edson Adams and others, in which Clinton C. Tripp filed a cross-complaint. Judgment of nonsuit against plaintiff and cross-complainant, and they appeal separately. Pending appeal, plaintiff died, and his executrix was substituted. Affirmed.

Richard P. Henshall and Galpin, Elkins & Frost, for appellants. Charles E. Wilson and W. S. Tinning, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This action was begun on August 8, 1888. The amended complaint states a cause of action against a large number of persons, to quiet title to a tract of land, comprising a Mexican grant known as "Rancho el Sobrante." It alleges that the plaintiff is in possession and is the owner in fee of the lands. Clinton C. Tripp filed a cross-complaint, alleging that he is the owner and holder of a mortgage upon the land for $40,000, executed by former owners in November, 1853, which is due and unpaid, and asking for a foreclosure thereof. The complaint and cross-complaint were each unverified, and the respective adverse parties thereto answered by a general denial and also set up the several statutes of limitations which the respective defendants deemed a bar to the action. The cause came on for trial. The plaintiff and cross-complainant each introduced evidence and rested, whereupon, on motion of the adverse parties, the court gave judgment of nonsuit against both the plaintiff Castro and the cross-complainant Tripp. The appeals from this judgment are taken by Tripp and Castro separately. The judgment was rendered on September 25, 1891, but for some unexplained reason it was not entered until March 21, 1906. Victor Castro had died in the meantime, and the appeals in his behalf are taken by Julia B. Galpin, as executrix of his will and as his successor in interest. A bill of exceptions showing the evidence taken at the trial was settled and filed on September 12, 1893.

The plaintiff offered evidence tending to show that prior to November, 1853, he and one Juan Jose Castro were the owners of the land, under a grant of the Mexican government made in 1841, and that proceedings were pending before the United States land commissioners, in 1853, to have their grant confirmed and obtain a patent for the land from the United States. He then introduced a deed executed on November 23, 1853, by himself and Juan Jose Castro, whereby they conveyed the lands to John B. Frisbie and Ramon De Zaldo. He also introduced another instrument, executed on the same day as the deed, by Frisbie and De Zaldo to the two Castros, purporting to mortgage to the Castros the same land to secure the payment of the sum of $40,000 by them to the Castros as soon as that sum should be realized from sales of the land to be made by the said mortgagors. Tripp claims as the holder of this instrument.

The motion for nonsuit as to the plaintiff was upon the ground that the evidence was insufficient to establish title in him. The only title he ever had was conveyed to Frisbie and De Zaldo by the deed above mentioned. The instrument executed on the same day by Frisbie and De Zaldo to him and Juan Jose Castro was merely a mortgage and vested no title or interest in the land in the mortgagees. This proposition was settled by the decision in the case of Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 32, 77 Pac. 712, a case to which the present appellants were parties and in which they asserted the same rights in this land under the same instruments. There is no evidence sufficient to show that any title or interest in the land ever thereafter became vested in the plaintiff.

In the briefs it is asserted that there was evidence that he was in possession at the time the action was begun, and it is suggested that this possession is prima facie evidence of title. The plaintiff testified that in November, 1853, at the time the deed was executed, he lived in a house on the San Pablo Road in Contra Costa county, which he described as "my adobe house," and that, at the time of the trial, in September, 1891, he lived in the same house, and that "besides myself and my brother, Juan Jose Castro, there were in 1853 other parties in possession of a portion of this ranch." There was also given in evidence a petition of plaintiff and Juan Jose Castro, filed with the board of land commissioners in May, 1852, which alleged that they were then in possession of the ranch, and a decree of the land commission, made July 3, 1855, confirming the claim of the petitioners under the Mexican grant. This was all the evidence tending to show title by possession. The statement of Castro as to present possession was a mere incidental remark, and referred only to a house in which he lived on the San Pablo Road. The ranch comprised some 20,000 acres, and there is nothing to show that the house was situated on the ranch, or, if it is situated thereon, that he ever occupied a foot of the land outside of the house. The petition to the land commissioners and the decree of that board were introduced to show a confirmation of the title under the Mexican grant, and not to establish possession. It is not shown who were parties to the proceeding, and the decree would not be evidence of possession against persons who were not parties. The statements in the petition refer only to the possession in 1852, and not afterward. The trial took place nearly 40 years after that date. There is no presumption that he continued in possession after making the deed of November 23, 1853. It is clearly apparent from all these circumstances, and from the entire case as presented by the record, that there was no real attempt in the court below to show title by proof of possession. The evidence on the subject is much too vague and shadowy to justify a reversal of the judgment of nonsuit. The nonsuit was properly granted as to the plaintiff.

The nonsuit as to Tripp was granted on the ground that the evidence showed no title in him, that his right to foreclose the mortgage of Frisbie and De Zaldo, conceding him to be the holder thereof, was barred by the statute of limitations, and that the evidence showed that he was not the owner or holder of the mortgage. The mortgage set forth in the cross-complaint provided that the $40,000 was to be paid "as soon as the same shall be realized from sales made by" the mortgagors of the ranch lands, and that the mortgagors should pay over to the Castros the proceeds of sales from the ranch, until the whole sum was paid. Any sum of money received upon a sale of any part thereof was due to the Castros as soon as it was received by Frisbie and De Zaldo. No time was prescribed wherein sales were to be made by them. The law would imply an understanding that it should be within a time that would be reasonable under all the circumstances. The cross-complaint alleges that Frisbie and De Zaldo "subsequently" made conveyances whereby they conveyed the property to the numerous defendants, some 200 in all, some of whose names were unknown, and it does not state when these conveyances were made, whether in separate tracts to the respective defendants, or jointly to all by several conveyances of different interests; nor does it give any explanation of the cross-complainant's inability to make more explicit statements as to the conveyances and parties, the dates when they were made, the prices realized and the disposition of the purchase money, or any circumstances which would excuse the delay in bringing the action. The evidence is also devoid of any such explanation. There was a delay of over 35 years. If it is conceded, or assumed, in the absence of such explanations, that a reasonable time might have extended to a period as long as five years after the execution of the instrument, the statute would begin to run at the end of that time, and the action would have been barred seven times over by the statute of limitations. Both the cross-complaint and the case as established on the trial indicate that the suit is a stale demand upon which equity should refuse to grant any relief.

It is argued that the transaction, as explained by Castro, was of such a nature that a constructive trust in the land was established in his favor. This, if true, would not avoid the bar of the statute nor remove the laches. If a constructive trust arose at all by virtue of that transaction, it was because Frisbie and De Zalido occupied fiduciary or confidential relations toward Castro and violated an agreement to execute an express parol trust to sell the land and pay a part of the proceeds to Castro. Equity might raise a constructive trust in favor of Castro, upon the failure of the grantees in the deed to perform the void parol trust, if confidential relations did exist as claimed. But, in such case, the breach of the parol agreement would at once set in motion the statute of limitations as to the constructive trust. They would be required to sell the land within a reasonable time. Their conceded failure to pay over the money within the extreme period of 35 years, with no showing of any reason for the delay, in connection with the averment that they sold all the property at some indefinite time after the inception of the trust, furnished at least presumptive evidence that the constructive trust and the obligation to pay had arisen, and that the bar of the statute of limitations and of the equitable doctrine of laches began to run against the enforcement of it many years before the period prescribed by the statute and the rules of equity.

There is no evidence in the record that the patent for the ranch from the United States was ever issued in pursuance of the decree of confirmation. The case is therefore to be decided upon the basis of the equitable rights and titles of the appellants, without regard to the issuance of such patent. The arguments based upon the fact that the patent was of recent issue are without foundation and must be dismissed without further consideration.

All the rights involved and asserted by the appellants here were asserted by them in an action in the same court, to which they were parties, for the partition of the same land, entitled Adams v. Hopkins. The complaint in that action was filed in 1888, a few days before the beginning of this action. That action was tried and an interlocutory decree of partition was made and entered therein denying any relief to the appellants in this action. They appealed from that decree to this court. The same points and questions that are presented upon these appeals were presented upon the appeals in that case, were elaborately argued, and were given prolonged consideration by this court; a rehearing having been twice granted in the case. It was finally decided adversely to Castro and Tripp on all points, and the judgment was finally affirmed on July 1, 1904. Adams v. Hopkins, supra.

The judgments of nonsuit are affirmed.

WENDLING LUMBER CO. v. GLENWOOD LUMBER CO. (S. F. 4,607.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 27, 1908. On Rehearing, May 27, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—SCOPE OF REVIEW—GROUNDS OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—EXCEPTIONS TO RULE.

If an order granting a new trial is warranted on any ground on which the motion was based, it will be affirmed on appeal, notwithstanding the order was not based on that ground, except when the trial court expressly excludes the ground of insufficiency of evidence as a basis for its action, in which case, if the evidence is conflicting, that ground cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3409-3413.]

2. SALES—VALIDITY—FRAUD—EFFECT.

Where a sale of personal property is procured by fraud, the ownership of the property is not changed, no title passes to the buyer, and the seller retains his right to the property, unless, after discovering the fraud, he assents and ratifies the act of sale, either positively, or by such delay as would authorize the inference of assent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 65-85, 115-117.]

3. SAME—REMEDIES—FORM.

Where property is purchased by fraud, the defrauded party has a remedy, either by trover, replevin in the detinet, trespass, or replevin in the cepit, at his election.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 890.]

4. SAME—RESALE BY FRAUDULENT PURCHASER—EFFECT.

One acquiring property from a fraudulent purchaser, under circumstances preventing him from being a purchaser in good faith for a valuable consideration, is in no better position than the original fraudulent purchaser, and the defrauded party has the same remedy against him as against the original purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 607, 608.]

5. TROVER AND CONVERSION—PLEADING—NECESSARY ALLEGATIONS.

In actions for the conversion of personal property procured by fraud, it is unnecessary to allege the fraud, but it is sufficient to declare generally, and if the action is brought on the theory that the seller is the owner and entitled to possession, and that defendant unlawfully withholds possession, or has converted it to his own use, the general allegations of ownership and right to possession and unlawfully withholding or conversion are sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trover and Conversion, §§ 197, 198.]

6. REPLEVIN — PLEADING—ISSUES—FRAUDULENT PURCHASE.

A plaintiff is not required to anticipate any defense, and the fact that defendant holds property because of a valid sale, or because acquired through a bona fide purchase from a fraudulent vendee, is a matter of defense in an action of replevin, and may be met by proof that the sale was void because of fraud, without any allegation of fraud in the complaint.

7. TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—ORDER OF PROOF.

Where plaintiff in an action of replevin alleges his ownership and right to possession of property, which defendant claims to own, through a valid sale or a bona fide purchase from a fraudulent purchaser, though proof of fraud in the illegal sale is not a part of plaintiff's prima facie case, and is available only in reply, it is a mere matter of order of proof, and admission of evidence of fraud in the sale in support of plaintiff's case is not error.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR—MOTIONS FOR NEW TRIAL—INSUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

To justify the Supreme Court in interfering with an order granting a new trial, on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, the case must be such as to require a holding that a verdict for the moving party would not have found sufficient legal support in the evidence; for if the evidence would have supported such a verdict, the trial court has absolute discretion, and it is his duty to grant a new trial if he is not satisfied with the verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3860-3876.]

9. SAME—MOTION GRANTED BY OTHER THAN TRIAL JUDGE.

The fact that the judge who heard and granted a motion for a new trial was not the one who presided at the trial does not affect the power of the Supreme Court, in relation to an order granting a new trial, in the case of insufficiency of evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3860-3876.]

10. SALES—FRAUDULENT PURCHASE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In replevin by a seller, the burden of proving fraud in procuring the purchase is upon plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 122.]

11. FRAUD—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION.

Except where confidential relations are involved, the presumption of law is in favor of honesty and fair dealing, and the evidence in support of a claim of fraud must do more than to create a suspicion thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Fraud, §§ 46, 56.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; Hiram D. Tuttle, Judge.

Action by the Wendling Lumber Company, a corporation, against the Glenwood Lumber Company, a corporation. From an order granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Louis H. Brownstone and B. A. Herrington, for appellant. Jackson Hatch and Walter H. Linforth, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, in an action for damages for the alleged conversion of certain lumber. The order granting the new trial was made by the successor of the judge who presided at the trial of the cause, and was expressly made upon the grounds that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict, and that the jury did not follow the instructions of the court. Defendant claims that the order granting a new trial was correctly made, for a reason not specified therein, viz., that the trial court erred in admitting certain evidence. It is true, as claimed by counsel, that in our review of the order we are not confined to the grounds specified therein by the court granting the motion, but will affirm the order, if it was correctly made, upon any ground upon which the motion was based (see Weisser v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 148 Cal. 428, 83 Pac. 439, and cases there cited), the only limitation being that where the trial court has in its order expressly excluded the ground of insufficiency of evidence as a basis for its action, we will not consider that ground, if the evidence was conflicting. We are therefore called upon to determine whether the trial court erred in admitting the evidence referred to. The complaint was in the form ordinarily used in an action for the conversion of personal property, simply alleging the ownership and right to possession by plaintiff of the property on a day named, the wrongful deprival and conversion to its own use of said property by defendant on that day, the market value of said property, a demand for the return of the property, and a refusal by defendant to comply therewith, the consequent damage, and nonpayment of any part thereof. By its answer defendant simply denied each of the allegations of the complaint, except the one as to the value of the property, which it admitted, to the extent of $4,856.40, which was the amount of the verdict.

The theory of plaintiff's case was that one J. H. Routt, not a party to this action, had obtained such property from plaintiff, by means of certain false representations, willfully made for that purpose, relying upon which plaintiff sold and delivered the property to Routt, that defendant received the property from Routt without giving any valuable consideration therefor, and with full knowledge of the fraud by means of which the same had been obtained, and that plaintiff, upon discovering the fraud, at once repudiated the sale, and, treating it as void because of the fraud, commenced this action for the wrongful conversion of the property. Over the objection of defendant plaintiff was permitted to introduce evidence in support of this theory. It is the admission of this evidence that is alleged to have been erroneous. The objection urged is that, no fraud being alleged in the complaint, the evidence of fraud was incompetent under the pleadings, defendant resting upon the general rule that where fraud is relied on by a party, he must allege it. We are satisfied that this rule is not applicable here. It appears to be thoroughly established that, where a sale of personal property is procured by fraud, the ownership of the property is not changed, and no title passes to the vendee, and the vendor retains his right in the property, unless, after discovering the fraud, he assents to and ratifies the act of sale, either positively or by such delay as would authorize the inference of assent. See Butler v. Collins, 12 Cal. 457, and Amer v. Hightower, 70 Cal. 440, 11 Pac. 697, and authorities therein cited. As was said in Butler v. Collins, supra, and approvingly quoted in Amer v. Hightower, supra, "the civil remedies of the party defrauded are clear, viz., trover or replevin in the detinet, or trespass or replevin in the cepit, at his election." One who acquires the property from the fraudulent vendee under such circumstances that he cannot be held to be a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration is in no better position than the fraudulent vendee, and the defrauded party has the same remedies against him that he had against such fraudulent vendee. See Sargent v. Sturm, 23 Cal. 359, 83 Am. Dec. 118. It seems clear that in an action brought upon the theory that the vendor is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property, and that the defendant unlawfully withholds possession thereof, or has converted the same to his own use, the general allegations of ownership and right to possession, and unlawful withholding or conversion are sufficient, and will render admissible proof of any facts sustaining such claim. It is elementary that a plaintiff is not required to anticipate in his complaint any defense that may be made by the defendant. See Canfield v. Tobias, 21 Cal. 349. The fact that a defendant owns and holds the property claimed because of a valid sale, or because he acquired the same from a fraudulent vendee, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, is purely a matter of defense, and when in such an action a defendant asserts any such claim, plaintiff can meet it by proof that such sale was void because of fraud, without having made any allegation of fraud in the complaint. This is illustrated by the case of Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630, an action to quiet title to land, where the defendant set up in defense an agreement of sale, and plaintiff was allowed to introduce evidence in rebuttal, showing that such instrument was obtained by fraud, without having alleged fraud in the complaint. The court, after saying that plaintiff could not know, when filing the complaint, that the defendant would answer, nor that, if he did, he would claim under the instrument in question, said that the principle governing the case was that stated in Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. 343, 32 Pac. 320, as follows: "No doubt, when a cause of action rests upon fraud, the facts constituting the fraud must be set up in the complaint; but such was not the case here, for the necessity of proving fraud appeared only after the answer of the defendant. And a plaintiff is in that position with respect to all new matters set up in the answer." The same is, of course, true as to the matters disclosed by evidence, in behalf of a defendant, properly given under denials contained in the answer. It is not correct to say, in a case of the character before us, that the plaintiff's cause of action rests upon fraud. It rests upon his ownership of the property, and the conversion thereof by defendant, and fraud comes in only in reply to the defense that defendant is the owner by reason of an alleged sale by the plaintiff. Technically, proof of fraud as to such sale was not a part of plaintiff's prima facie case, and was available only in reply to any claim of defendant based on the sale, but this was a mere matter of order of proof. It is the general rule that, in actions for the conversion of personal property, where the property has been procured by fraud, it is not necessary to allege the fraud, but it is sufficient to declare generally that the property was wrongfully converted. See 21 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 1087; Salisbury v. Barton, 63 Kan. 552, 66 Pac. 618; Pekin Plow Co. v. Wilson, 66 Neb. 115, 92 N. W. 176; Hunter v. Hudson River Co., 20 Barb (N. Y.) 493; Bliss v. Cottle, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 323; Benesch v. Waggener, 12 Colo. 534, 21 Pac. 706, 13 Am. St. Rep. 254. In our own case of Amer v. Hightower, supra, which was an action in replevin, the complaint was apparently destitute of allegation of fraud, and the judgment for defendant was reversed, because of the rejection, by the lower court, of evidence offered by the plaintiff tending to show fraud on the part of defendant in obtaining a bill of sale for and possession of the property. See, also, Nudd v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 39; Summerville v. Stockton Mill Co., 142 Cal. 547, 76 Pac. 243; Conner v. Bludworth, 54 Cal. 635. If Burris v. Adams, 96 Cal. 664, 31 Pac. 565, and Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 331, 41 Pac. 458, are at all inconsistent with the views herein expressed, in so far as they are so inconsistent they have been modified by Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630. The other cases relied on, with the exception of Virginia Timber, etc., Co. v. Glenwood Lumber Co. (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 48, were clearly cases where the plaintiff's causes of action or the defendant's defense strictly rested on fraud, and the general rule requiring the allegation of the facts constituting the fraud was applicable. Albertoli v. Branham, 80 Cal. 631, 22 Pac. 404, 13 Am. St. Rep. 200, and Wetherby v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045, are fair examples of this class of cases, each being a case where the claim of the defendant conceded the validity and completeness of a transfer as between the parties thereto, and it was sought to set the transfer aside or have it declared void in favor of creditors, on the ground that it was made with fraudulent intent. An action brought for the purpose of having a specified conveyance annulled on the ground of fraud would doubtless fall in the same class, but this is not such a case. The decision of the District Court of Appeal in Virginia, etc., Co. v. Glenwood, etc., Co., supra, is precisely in point, but we are unable to accede to the views of the learned District Court of Appeal therein expressed.

We cannot hold, however, that the trial court was not warranted in granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict. To justify any interference of this court with an order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence, the case must be such as to compel us to hold that a verdict in favor of the moving party would not have found sufficient legal support in the evidence given on the trial

If the case be one where a verdict in favor of such moving party would have had such support, the judge of the trial court is vested with absolute discretion in the matter, and, as has been heretofore said by this court, it was his duty to grant a new trial if he is not satisfied with the verdict (Condee v. Gyger, 126 Cal. 546, 59 Pac. 261); and this court will not interfere with the action of the trial court in such cases, even if it believes that the weight of the evidence was the other way. The fact that the judge who heard and granted the motion was not the judge who presided at the trial in no degree extends our power in the matter (Churchill v. Flournoy, 127 Cal. 355, 362, 59 Pac. 791). The burden was on plaintiff, of course, to establish the fraud on the part of Routt in the purchase of the lumber. The presumption of the law, except where confidential relations are involved, is in favor of honesty and fair dealing, and the evidence in support of the claim of fraud must do more than to create a mere suspicion thereof. See Levy v. Scott, 115 Cal. 42, 46 Pac. 892; Casey v. Leggett, 125 Cal. 671, 58 Pac. 264. The fraud in this case consisted of various alleged misrepresentations of fact, said to have been material, and upon the faith of which plaintiff claims to have acted in parting with the lumber. We have examined the evidence in regard to these alleged representations; and, so far as they may reasonably be held under the evidence to have been material, we find no reason to doubt that a verdict acquitting Routt of fraud would have had sufficient legal support. It would serve no useful purpose to here enter into an analysis of the evidence, and it is sufficient to say, as has been clearly stated in other cases, that the most that can be said for plaintiff's claim in this regard is that the case presented was one where the evidence on the subject of fraud was conflicting, and the decision of the trial court in the matter is conclusive upon us.

The order granting a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In denying a rehearing it is proper to state that what is said in the opinion relative to want of title in the vendee, where a sale of personal property is obtained by fraud, was said entirely with relation to the respective rights of the vendor and vendee. That title passes in such a case, in the sense that the vendee, in good faith, and for a valuable consideration of the fraudulent vendee, takes a good title, cannot be disputed. But as between the vendor and fraudulent vendee, or any person taking from such fraudulent vendee with notice of the fraud or without consideration, the sale may, at the election of the vendor, promptly made, be treated as an absolute nullity.

PEOPLE v. EMMONS. (Cr. 52.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
March 12, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court May 11, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

To be reviewable on appeal any exception taken in a criminal case must be properly authenticated in the bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2807.]

2. SAME—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS—FAILURE TO EXCEPT.

By failing to except to a ruling accused is deemed to waive any objection thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2656.]

3. BRIBERY—FACTS CONSTITUTING OFFENSE—STATE SENATOR.

An indictment for bribery alleging that accused asked and received a bribe as a member of a state senate committee, promising that his official action, vote, and opinion as state senator should be influenced thereby in connection with an investigation by such committee of building and loan associations, shows a public offense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Bribery, §§ 1-3, 5-8.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—ORDER OF PROOF.

In a trial for bribery, wherein it was the people's theory that accused and others conspired to extort money from associations for immunity from investigation, declarations by a co-conspirator were admissible against accused, though the conspiracy was not shown until later; the order of proof being within the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1012, 1013, 1611.]

5. SAME—EVIDENCE—WRITTEN STATEMENT OF WITNESS—COMPELLING PRODUCTION BY ADVERSE PARTY.

It was not an abuse of discretion in a criminal trial to refuse to require the district attorney to produce a writing containing oral statements made by a witness for the people, where it had only been partly read to the witness, he had not sworn to it, and did not know in whose possession it was, though the writing might have assisted accused in cross-examining witness and in attempting to lay a foundation for his impeachment, especially since no prejudice to accused is shown.

6. SAME—APPEAL—OBJECTION NOT URGED BELOW.

Accused having failed to move to strike out the unresponsive part of an answer, may not complain thereof on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2672-2674.]

7. BRIBERY—EVIDENCE—CONSPIRACY.

In a trial for asking and receiving a bribe as a state senator, wherein it was the people's theory that accused and others conspired to extort money from associations for immunity from investigation, witnesses for the people could testify what they did after conversations with a co-conspirator; the testimony not being improper as self-serving or hearsay, but being admissible on the issue whether the witnesses were real or feigned accomplices and to trace the money received as a bribe; the people contending that the witnesses were not accomplices, but that they were engaged in a scheme to expose the conspirators, while accused claimed they had a motive in discouraging an investigation of the associations, and were actual participants in the bribery.

8. CRIMINAL LAW—FEIGNED ACCOMPLICES.

One who feigns to be an accomplice in the commission of an offense to detect the offender need not take an officer of the law into his confidence to avoid an imputation of criminal intent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 71, 79.]

9. SAME—CRIMINAL INTENT—NECESSITY.

Where persons did not suggest nor encourage a conspiracy by state senators to extort a bribe, but laid a trap to apprehend and punish the conspirators on learning of the conspiracy, they were guilty of no offense in feigning to be accomplices.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 21, 79.]

10. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—CREDIBILITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a trial for asking and receiving a bribe to secure to certain associations immunity from legislative investigation, accused could not show what an association's books showed respecting dealings of one of its officers with it as affecting the credibility of witnesses for the people; the officer not testifying, and not appearing to have influenced any witness, and no witness appearing to have a motive to prevent a disclosure of the association's affairs.

11. SAME—FOUNDATION.

If accused sought to discredit the people's witnesses on the ground of their interest or bias, he should have laid a foundation by suitable cross-examination.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1200.]

12. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—SEPARATION OF JURY—EFFECT.

A conviction of bribery should not be set aside because, after the court had made an order requiring the jury to be kept together, as expressly authorized by Pen. Code, § 1121, the jury were allowed to separate during the trial, on accused's showing that a juror was seen talking to an outsider and was heard to say, "Well, ask him," that a deputy sheriff and another juror were seen in a store together, and afterwards drove away together, and that another juror was seen in a crowd at a park separated from the other jurors, where counter affidavits showed that the separations were for innocent purposes, and that the jurors did not discuss the case with outsiders.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2257-2262.]

13. SAME—PREJUDICE—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where a jury separates without leave of court after a criminal case has been submitted to them, the burden is upon the prosecution to show that accused has not been prejudiced thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2385.]

14. SAME—USE OF INTOXICANTS.

Evidence held insufficient to show that jurors in a criminal case were guilty of misconduct by excessive drinking of intoxicants during the trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2386.]

15. SAME—APPEAL—ESTOPPEL TO ASSERT ERROR.

One may not complain of error in an instruction given at his request.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3007-3009.]

16. SAME—INSTRUCTION NOT SUSTAINED BY EVIDENCE—REFUSAL PROPER.

An instruction not sustained by evidence is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1985.]

17. SAME—PROMINENCE TO SPECIFIC TESTIMONY.

An instruction that, if a certain witness for the people was induced to testify by any promise of immunity from prosecution, etc., the jury should consider such facts in determining the weight to be given to his testimony, was properly refused as calling attention to particular testimony, especially since the court fully and clearly directed the jury as to its duty in determining the credibility of the witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1969-1973.]

18. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN.

Instructions are properly refused where they are covered by those given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

19. SAME—NEW TRIAL—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR.

Pen. Code, § 1181, subd. 3, authorizes a new trial after conviction for misconduct of the jury preventing a fair trial. A juror stated on his voir dire that he never discussed the case on trial, excepting with his family, and that he had no opinion as to accused's guilt. Held that, on motion for a new trial, accused could not show that the juror, before being sworn as a juror, had stated that accused was guilty and ought to be punished, since the proof was addressed to the juror's qualifications, and not to any misconduct within such statute, which relates only to one's conduct while acting as a juror, and since disqualification of a juror is not a ground for new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2226, 2238-2247.]

20. SAME—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

In support of the trial court's action in denying a new trial on the ground of a juror's disqualification by having expressed an opinion to witness before the trial that accused was guilty, the District Court of Appeal must presume in the absence of a contrary showing that when accused examined the juror on his voir dire he knew what he could show by witness, and that by failing to present the facts before the trial he waived them.

21. SAME—GROUNDS FOR SUSTAINING DECISION NOT CONSIDERED.

The District Court of Appeal must sustain a ruling of a court of record, if proper, regardless of the form of the objection.

22. SAME.

On reviewing the denial of a new trial asked because of the disqualification of a juror, the District Court of Appeal cannot consider an affidavit filed upon suggestion of diminution of the record, stating that accused did not learn of the disqualification until after verdict, where it is not authenticated in any manner by the trial judge, and does not appear to have been used on the motion for new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; E. C. Hart, Judge.

E. J. Emmons was convicted of asking and receiving a bribe, and he appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Grove L. Johnson, Rowen Irwin, and H. L. Partridge, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. By an indictment found by the grand jury of Sacramento county defendant was charged with the crime of "asking and receiving a bribe," committed in January, 1905, while he was a state senator of the Thirty-Second senatorial district and a member of the senate committee on commissions and retrenchment. The money was sought and received by appellant, so it is alleged, under a promise and agreement that his official action, vote, and opinion as such senator should be influenced thereby in connection with an investigation by said committee of certain building and loan associations. Defendant was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary for the term of five years. He appeals from the judgment and the order denying his motion for a new trial.

For the reason that the record discloses no exception to the ruling of the court we are precluded from considering the question involved in the motion to set aside the indictment and the challenge to the panel of the grand jury. Any exception taken, in order to be reviewed, must be properly authenticated in the bill of exceptions, and, if the defendant does not save an exception to the ruling of the court, the objection is deemed to have been waived. McCartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 185; Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 580; Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 51 Pac. 549, 955; People v. Trask (Cal.) 93 Pac. 891. In the last case it is said: "Defendant having reserved no objection to the action of the court above set forth, we are not called upon to determine whether the course adopted by the court was erroneous or not." That an exception is required to the ruling of the court in disallowing a challenge to the panel and in denying the motion to set aside the indictment is provided in sections 1170 and 1172 of the Penal Code. The point was made by the Attorney General in his brief, and it is passed by without notice in appellant's closing brief for the reason, we assume, that its conclusiveness is recognized by defendant and his learned counsel. At any rate we must presume in favor of the action of the court below that no exception was taken, and we are not at liberty to follow the interesting discussion of the method by which the grand jury was selected, and of the qualification of certain of its members in which counsel have indulged.

No authority is cited in support of appellant's contention that the demurrer to the indictment should have been sustained. It is declared simply that "an inspection of the indictment, together with the demurrer, will serve to call the attention of the court to the faults of said indictment better than any argument in this brief." We do not agree with appellant that the court committed error in overruling the demurrer, but we do not deem it necessary to elaborate our views, as the question has been virtually foreclosed by the decision of this court in the case of People v. Bunkers, 2 Cal. App. 197, 84 Pac. 364, 370, in which the Supreme Court denied a rehearing, wherein it is said: "It is unnecessary to insert a copy of the indictment, or to consider its sufficiency in this opinion, for such sufficiency was carefully considered in another proceeding, and a copy of the indictment is contained in the decision therein filed. Application of Bunkers, 1 Cal. App. 61, 81 Pac. 751." In the latter decision it is said: "We think the indictment here is sufficient to charge bribery, as defined in subdivision 6 of section 7 and section 86 of the Penal Code. Nor can we see how the district attorney could have well stated with greater particularity the acts of which the crime alleged is predicated." The two indictments are in the same language. In fact the prosecution is based upon the theory of a conspiracy on the part of Bunkers, appellant, and two other senators to use their official positions to extort money from certain building and loan associations for immunity from investigation, said conspiracy culminating in the receipt by each of the conspirators of the sum of $350 upon a common understanding and agreement as to said investigation. In each case the demurrer was properly overruled.

That there may be no misunderstanding of the position of appellant as to certain rulings of the court during the trial, we quote from his brief as follows: "The defense at the trial was based upon the falsity of the testimony that was offered for the prosecution, and the further fact that the testimony so offered was the result of a conspiracy on the part of Grange, Corbin, and others to evade a thorough examination of the Continental Building & Loan Association because of the fact that the affairs of said association had been theretofore conducted in a manner detrimental to the stockholders of that institution, and that Corbin had been in the past using the funds of the association for his own private purposes. The evidence was offered for the purpose of showing, first, the animus of the witnesses against the defendant; and, second, for the purpose of affecting their credibility before the jury. * * * The further defense was made that there was no conspiracy as alleged by the prosecution and attempted to be shown by them." With the foregoing statement in view, we proceed to notice all the exceptions of appellant argued by him, which we consider worthy of specific attention. The first of these is based upon the order overruling an objection to the following question addressed to the witness Bunkers: "Now, then, what was the conversation between you and Jordan on the train?" The contention is that no conspiracy had been shown, and hence that the evidence sought to be elicited was within the rule excluding hearsay testimony; but the answer is that the order of proof is within the discretion of the court, and that subsequently other evidence was received that Jordan was a co-conspirator.

No error was committed by the court in refusing to direct the district attorney to produce a certain writing containing a statement of the witness Bunkers. The statement was not signed by Bunkers. It had not been read over to him. He had heard read only a portion of it. He had not sworn to it, and did not know in whose possession it was. What is said in People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 157, 72 Pac. 966, is in point here: "The statement could not have been used in evidence except for the purpose of impeaching the witness by showing thereby that he had made statements out of court inconsistent with the testimony given by him in the trial. The only statements that can be used for that purpose, if in writing, are statements made by the witness himself, either directly in his handwriting or over his signature, or indirectly by his adoption or admission of the correctness of a written report of his statements made by some other person. He cannot be held responsible for a statement taken down by another purporting to be a report of his oral declarations, unless he has been made acquainted with the contents of such statement, and directly or indirectly admitted that it was correct. Unless it is shown that there is good reason to believe that the document when produced would be admissible in evidence for some purpose in the case, the court need not compel its production." It may be that the statement would have been of assistance to defendant in his cross-examination of the witness Bunkers in an effort to lay a foundation for the latter's impeachment, but that is not a sufficient reason for interfering with the discretion of the trial court exercised in denying the request, especially as there is no showing that defendant suffered prejudice thereby.

Appellant complains of the action of the court in allowing witness Grange to testify to a declaration made by Jordan to the effect that defendant was trying to get evidence to enable him to have a warrant issued for the arrest of Gavin McNab and Washington Dodge. But it is apparent that the objection to the question, "State the conversation that took place at that time between you and him in regards to this matter, if anything," was properly overruled for reasons already stated. The court could not anticipate what the answer would be, and a portion of it was certainly responsive and material. The appellant should have moved to have the objectionable portion stricken out, if he so desired, but, having failed to do so, it is too late now to complain. People v. Lawrence, 143 Cal. 155, 76 Pac. 893, 68 L. R. A. 193.

Certain witnesses were allowed to testify as to what they did after conversations with Jordan, and it is insisted that this was error, "for the reason that all of this was done without the knowledge of the defendant, and in such a manner that the defendant could not have known anything about it, and it was not in furtherance of any conspiracy that the defendant was alleged to be engaged in." This testimony, however, was admissible on the question of whether these witnesses were real or feigned accomplices, and also to trace the money that was received as a bribe. People v. Northey, 77 Cal. 632, 19 Pac. 865, 20 Pac. 129, and People v. Bunkers, supra. It was contended by the prosecution that these witnesses did not suggest, advise, or encourage the commission of the crime, and had no criminal intent, but were engaged merely in a scheme to detect, expose, and punish the senators. On the other hand, defendant insisted that they had a motive in discouraging the investigation of the building and loan associations, and were actual participants in the bribery. Their acts and declarations during the pendency of the negotiations were therefore important as throwing light upon this issue, and were not self-serving or hearsay, as they are justly considered by the decisions to be within the rule of res gestæ. We do not understand that it is necessary for a feigned accomplice to take into his confidence an officer of the law, or suffer the imputation of criminal intent. If he did consult an officer, it would be a circumstance in favor of innocence, but it is not the exclusive method by which he may show his freedom from participation in the crime. We think the evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion that these witnesses were not accomplices, and that they did not suggest nor encourage the commission of the crime, but that, after being informed of the purpose of the conspirators, they laid a trap for their apprehension and punishment. In this they did nothing against the law, and their conduct was not opposed to sound public policy. Nor does it follow, as contended by appellant, that no crime was committed by him, even if he received the money with a felonious intent. Some decisions are cited apparently to that effect, but the question has been set at rest here by the Bunkers Case, supra.

Among the points to which most importance seems to be attached by appellant is that growing out of the testimony of one W. J. Palethorpe, a witness for the defense. It is contended that his examination was confined within limits too narrow; it being restricted to the time of the examination by him of the books of the Continental Building & Loan Association during the months of November and December preceding the holding of the alleged investigation by the committee of which the defendant was a member. The particular question to which the objection was sustained, and of which ruling appellant complains, is as follows: "What, if anything, did the books of the Continental Building & Loan Association show with reference to the dealing of William Corbin with the association, and with reference to the condition of his accounts with that association in the year 1902?" The general objection was made, and also that it was too remote and not redirect examination. The last ground was undoubtedly well taken, but we think also the court's action was right for other reasons. The evidence was offered to show a motive for opposition to an investigation of the association on the part of certain persons who occupied prominent positions therein, or, in the language of appellant's counsel, "it necessarily would affect the minds of these people, and cause them to oppose an inquiry, to oppose an investigation, and to form a conspiracy and a plot to prevent an investigation." The purpose, then, was to affect the credibility and impeach the testimony of witnesses for the prosecution, and thereby reduce the effect of the evidence against defendant. It would make no difference how anxious certain persons were to prevent an investigation if that anxiety did not affect the evidence in the case on trial. Any reason for opposing said investigation would be entirely immaterial unless it could be seen that it might be of importance in determining whether any witness told the truth. How could any transaction of Mr. Corbin in 1902 with the association affect the credibility of any witness against the defendant? If Mr. Corbin had testified, there might be some ground for appellant's contention; but Mr. Corbin was not a witness in the case, nor was there any effort made to show that he had influenced any witness to testify, nor that any witness had a motive for preventing a disclosure of the affairs of the association. In the argument in favor of the admissibility of the evidence it was not claimed even that evidence would be offered to show how Mr. Corbin's interest in the investigation would be connected with the interest that any witness might have in coloring his testimony. There was indeed some intimation by counsel that Mr. McNab was concerned in concealing the said transactions of Mr. Corbin, but no evidence was offered to that effect, and it finds no support in the record. As far as disclosed by the proceedings the testimony sought to be elicited might relate as well to any other stockholder as to Mr. Corbin or to a stockholder in any other corporation. The contention really amounts to this: Mr. Corbin had certain transactions with the corporation in 1902 which he did not care to have made public; therefore he was interested in preventing an investigation. Hence we must assume that he entered into a conspiracy with some of the witnesses to commit a crime in order that a disclosure might not be made, and also that the testimony in the case has been affected by such conspiracy, or at least by Mr. Corbin's concern about the investigation. We cannot indulge in any such speculation.

Again, if it was sought, as claimed by appellant, to discredit any witness by showing his interest or bias, there is authority for holding that the proper foundation should have been laid by suitable cross-examination of said witness. The rule is so stated in People v. Delbos, 146 Cal. 734, 81 Pac. 131, as follows: "It was proper to impeach the motives of the prosecuting witness by proof that she had instituted the prosecution for the purpose of extorting money from the defendant; but, in order to lay the foundation for such impeachment, the prosecuting witness should first be directly asked if she had not begun the prosecution for that purpose." But aside from the foregoing, assuming that it was proper to show Mr. Corbin's interest in the investigation, the line of inquiry was indulgently permitted by the court to be pursued sufficiently for that purpose. The fact sought to be shown would have been simply cumulative. It is due the witness, however, to say that in cross-examination he declared: "I told Mr. Corbin on several occasions that the Continental was an enormously large corporation, and, from what I could see, was financially sound."

The claim is made that the verdict should have been set aside on account of the separation of the jury during the trial. The court had made an order requiring the jury to be kept together, as provided in section 1121 of the Penal Code. The affidavits introduced by appellant upon this ground are to the effect that one of the jurors was seen talking with some one not a juror in the hallway of the courthouse, and that he was heard to say: "Well, ask him." And again, a deputy sheriff in company with one of the jurors was seen in a store on K street. After a time the officer came out alone and got into a buggy. The juror shortly after came out of the store unattended and got into the buggy, and they drove away together. Again, one of the jurors was seen standing in a crowd of people at Oak Park for some little time separated from the other jurors. The counter affidavits show that a deputy sheriff took one of the jurors to said store on K street to enable him to make a purchase; that they remained together while in the store; that said deputy sheriff walked out a few feet ahead of the juror to untie the horse; that no word was spoken about the case, and said juror had no communication whatever with any one except in reference to his purchase; furthermore, that the jurors were not allowed to separate at Oak Park, and not one of them had any communication about any matter connected with the case. The affidavits of the prosecution indeed are to the effect that whatever separation occurred was only for a few minutes, was for an innocent purpose, and was not the occasion for any communication at all concerning the case on trial.

Appellant cites People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 253, 86 Pac. 187, as authority for his claim that the separation was fatal to the verdict. That case, however, is not in point. The difference between that and this is clearly seen in the following statement by Mr. Justice Henshaw: "After the jury had been impaneled and sworn and had been placed in charge of the sheriff, and the sheriff had been sworn to take charge of the jury under section 1121 of the Penal Code, the court allowed eight of the jurors to separate and go to their homes, while the remaining four were retained in the sheriff's custody." It is properly said that "there is absolutely no warrant in the law for the course adopted, and the order permitting the jury to separate was error—indeed, error of such nature that the brief of the state offers no word in extenuation or justification of it." But even in that case it is not intimated that the error would have been prejudicial if the evidence had shown that during the separation the jurors had no communication whatever with any one concerning the case.

But there are decisions of our Supreme Court directly upholding the ruling of the trial court that the alleged separation did not demand a new trial. In People v. Symonds, 22 Cal. 349, it is held that: "The mere fact that the jury in a criminal case separate without permission of the court does not require that a new trial should be granted. The presumption that the jury may have been subject to improper influences which attaches to the fact of such separation may be removed by an affirmative showing that no injury to the defendant resulted therefrom." In People v. Bemmerly, 98 Cal. 301, 33 Pac. 264, the facts are stated as follows: "It appears that after an adjournment upon one of the days while the cause was on trial certain of the jurors, while upon the street in company with the sheriff, joined a crowd of people who were listening to the utterances of a street fakir, and were for a few minutes out of the sight or custody of the sheriff; that on a Sunday which intervened during the trial eight of the jurors, in company with a deputy sheriff, attended church separately from the remaining four, and that some of the other four listened to the singing and preaching of the Salvation Army in the streets of Woodland; that one of the jurors, in the company of a deputy sheriff, visited his place of business without being accompanied by the others; that individual jurors were several times during the trial separated from the body of jurors for a few minutes at a time, and occasionally were out of sight of the officer who had them in charge and at times engaged in conversation with other persons." It is apparent from the foregoing statement that the appellant there made a much stronger showing than the appellant here. But the court declared: "We cannot hold that these facts constituted such misconduct as to justify setting aside the verdict. The direction to the sheriff to keep the jury together * * * was for the purpose of having the trial conducted in an orderly and discreet manner, and was evincive of the desire of the court to prevent the jury from being affected by any improper influences. The ultimate object of these instructions was not to keep the jury together, but to prevent them from improper intercourse with others, and their being kept together was merely a means of accomplishing the ultimate purpose. * * * The mere fact that the direction of the court was violated does not give to the defendant the right to have the verdict set aside. He must show as fully as if the direction had not been given that one or more of the jurors was influenced in his verdict by some outside influence during or in consequence of such separation." We are not required in the case at bar to hold that the burden was upon defendant to show that the jurors were improperly influenced, because the prosecution assumed the burden of showing that the defendant was not prejudiced by the separation of the jury, and offered sufficient evidence to justify a finding to that effect. In People v. Adams, 143 Cal. 209, 76 Pac. 954, 66 L. R. A. 247, 101 Am. St. Rep. 92, the distinction is shown between a separation during the progress of the trial and one after the cause is submitted to the jury. It is there said: "As to the former there is no law requiring the jury to be kept together, although the court may order them to be so kept; and it is not necessary in the case at bar to consider the significance of a violation of such an order. But it is provided in the Penal Code (section 1128) that after the jury have finally retired for deliberation they must be kept together; and one of the express grounds for a new trial is 'when the jury has separated without leave of the court after retiring to deliberate upon their verdict' (section 1181)." The distinction is an important one, and it has been overlooked in some of the decisions. Whatever may be the rule in the former case, whenever the jury separates without leave of court after the case is submitted the burden should be cast upon the prosecution to show that the defendant has not been injured thereby. But as we have seen, the separation of which complaint is made here occurred before the case was submitted, and the showing by the appellant was exceedingly meager, and its effect was entirely overcome by the evidence for the people.

Appellant inveighs especially against the conduct of the majority of the jurors in partaking too freely of intoxicating liquors during the trial of the case. If the affidavits for appellant were not controverted, we should be constrained to hold that some of the jurors drank to excess, and more than is consistent with that clarity of judgment and equipoise of conscience essential to a proper discharge of the important duties of a juror. But the counter showing was amply sufficient to justify the court in finding that not one of the jurors was under the influence of liquor at any time, and no intoxicants at all were consumed after the jury had retired to deliberate upon a verdict. The character of the showing made by the people is illustrated by the following quotation from the affidavit of Mr. Chambers, the deputy sheriff who had charge of the jury: "Dr. G. C. Simmons instructed affiant that all of said jury who had been accustomed to the use of alcoholic liquors must, during the progress of said trial, and while they were in charge of said sheriff, be permitted to have their usual rations of liquor, or that said jurors would suffer severe illness." He then details the times and occasions when liquor was consumed, and states that at no time did any of said jurors take more than one drink, and that of a very moderate quantity; that at no time did any member of the jury show in the slightest the effects of liquor; "that affiant was constantly in attendance upon said jury during the time of their deliberation on a verdict; that at no time from the time said jury retired from the courtroom to deliberate upon their verdict up to the time that they returned their verdict into court and were discharged was any member of said jury permitted to have any liquor of any kind, and during said time none of said jurors indulged in any liquor." There is not a particle of evidence that the trial judge or the attorneys noticed any evidence of intoxication on the part of any of the jurors at any time, and, unless we are prepared to hold that the consumption of any quantity of liquor by a juror disqualifies him, we must uphold the ruling of the court below. Indeed said ruling, under the showing made, is in strict accord with decisions of the Supreme Court. People v. Deegan, 88 Cal. 602, 26 Pac. 500; People v. Benmerly, supra; People v. Van Horn, 119 Cal. 333, 51 Pac. 538; People v. Sullivan, 129 Cal. 557, 62 Pac. 101.

The court committed no error in giving the instruction as to the corroboration of an accomplice. Appellant selects one sentence therefrom, and makes it the basis of the criticism that "it is not the law that proving the identity of the defendant, namely, that he is the man charged with the offense, is sufficient. Much more than that is needed." The instruction treats of the two phases of the question separately, to wit, the commission of the offense and the identity of the one committing it, and it is neither "misleading" nor "improper"; and besides it appears to have been given at the request of appellant, and hence he cannot complain.

The court was justified in refusing the following instruction: "If the jury believe from the evidence herein that the witness Harry Bunkers was induced or influenced to become a witness and testify in the case by any promise of immunity from prosecution or punishment, or by any hope held out to him that if he testified against the defendant he would not be prosecuted for any perjury committed by him, then the jury should take such facts into consideration in determining the weight which ought to be given to such testimony thus obtained. Such testimony should only be received by the jury with caution, and scrutinized with care." There is no evidence in the record that any promise was made to the witness that he would not be prosecuted for perjury if he would testify in the case. Hence the instruction was properly refused for that reason. It is true that there is some evidence that Bunkers was promised immunity from prosecution for perjury—obviously referring to the testimony he gave at the trial of his own case—if he would make a statement to the district attorney, but that is entirely different from the hypothesis assumed in the instruction. Again, the practice by specific instructions of calling the attention of the jury to the testimony of a particular witness should not be encouraged. It is better, as was done here, to instruct the jury as to the principles of law involved, and leave their application to the facts—where it belongs under our system—to the jurors themselves.

The court fully and clearly directed the jury as to its duty and power of judging the evidence and determining the credibility of witnesses; for example: "You will weigh carefully the testimony of each and all of the witnesses in the case, and give to the same just such credit as you conscientiously believe it entitled to; and, in considering what weight you will give to the testimony of any and all the witnesses in the case, you will consider the character and appearance of the witnesses upon the stand, the consistency and reasonableness of their statements, their apparent interest and desire to tell the truth, their feelings, motives, and conduct so far as made known to you by the evidence during the course of the trial of this case." After hearing that and the other instructions given, if any juror would not understand that it was his duty to consider any promise of immunity made to a witness as affecting his credibility he would be incapable of enlightenment.

As to the other criticisms of the action of the court in reference to instructions, we deem it sufficient to say, in the language of People v. Bunkers: "The instructions requested by the defendant and refused by the court were either erroneous or inapplicable, or were fully covered by other instructions. The charge read as a whole was full, fair, and comprehensive, and the appellant certainly has no cause to complain that the law was not fully and clearly stated to the jury." The only other matter that we deem worthy of notice arises from the ruling of the court upon the following question addressed to one Patrick Kelly in support of the motion for a new trial: "State whether or not you had a conversation with him (Mr. Amariah Johnson, one of the jurors) last February, 1905, in this city concerning the charge against the defendant?" The general objection was made to the question, and the district attorney urged that, "if offered for the purpose of showing bias or prejudice on the part of juror Johnson, they are precluded from showing such fact at this time; that the bias or prejudice of any juror who may be sworn to try a criminal case cannot be shown for the first time on motion for a new trial." The defendant offered to prove by the witness that he had a conversation with the said Johnson before he was sworn as a juror in which the latter stated that he had attended the examination before the senate committee which investigated the charge, and that all these senators, including the defendant, were guilty and ought to be punished, and that every one of them should be convicted, and that he was certain of their guilt." The said juror had stated on his voir dire that all he knew about the case was what he read in the Sacramento Union; that he attended the meeting of said senate committee one night, but that he was up in the gallery and could not hear anything that was said; that he had never discussed the matter with any one except the members of his own family; and that he had no opinion about the case.

The attack of appellant is really addressed to the qualification of the juror, although it is claimed that his declarations under oath, in view of his alleged statements to the witness Kelly, amount to such misconduct as to entitle appellant to a new trial. But it is clear that such misconduct, as far as the rights of appellant are concerned, is unimportant, except as it relates to the qualification of Johnson as a fair, unbiased juror. It is clear that the "misconduct" of a juror which is a ground for a new trial is misconduct while he is such juror, and has no reference to what he does before he is sworn to try the cause. Subdivision 3 of section 1181 of the Penal Code makes that plain as follows: "When the jury * * * has been guilty of any misconduct by which a fair and due consideration of the case has been prevented." Hence, if appellant's objection to juror Johnson amounts to anything, it goes to his qualification, and not to his misconduct as a juror.

But, whatever may be the rule in other jurisdictions, it has been decided in this state that the qualification of a juror is not a ground for a motion for a new trial. In People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 635, 39 Pac. 61, it is said: "If public policy prohibits the jury from impeaching their verdict by their affidavits, it must follow that the same policy will prevent its being done by statements made by the jurors." To the same effect are People v. Soap, 127 Cal. 411, 59 Pac. 771; People v. Dobbins, 138 Cal. 694, 72 Pac. 339. In People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137, the question is elaborately discussed, and it is held that: "The fact that a juror had formed and expressed an unqualified opinion of the guilt of the accused is not, under our practice, ground for a new trial, when the objection is taken for the first time after the trial, upon affidavits showing disqualification." In People v. Boren, 139 Cal. 215, 72 Pac. 901, it is said: "Another ground upon which it is contended a new trial should have been granted is that an uncle by marriage of the district attorney was a member of the trial jury, that this fact was unknown to the defendant or his counsel until after the trial, that defendant's peremptory challenges had not been exhausted, and that, if these facts had been known, defendant would have challenged him peremptorily. These facts appear by affidavit, but constitute no ground for a new trial. Section 1181 of the Penal Code specifies the only grounds upon which a new trial may be granted, and this objection is not included in the grounds there stated. An objection to a juror must be taken before the juror is sworn to try the cause; but the court may for cause permit it to be taken after the juror is sworn and before the jury is completed."

Again, if the practice for which appellant contends should be tolerated, as it tends strongly to jeopardize the practical administration of justice and open wide the door to fraud and perjury, it should be permitted only after a satisfactory showing of diligence and good faith on the part of appellant. Even if it were a ground for a new trial, the court would not be justified in considering it unless it was shown that at the time of the examination of the juror the fact concerning the disqualification was not known to defendant nor his counsel. We must infer, of course, in support of the action of the court, that appellant knew at the time he examined the juror Johnson of what he proposed to show by the witness Kelly, and that, by his failure to present the facts before the trial, he waived them. People v. Staples, 149 Cal. 405, 86 Pac. 886. It is of no concern that the district attorney did not make this specific objection, as we are required to sustain the ruling of a court of record, if proper, regardless of the form of the objection. Spotswood v. Spotswood, 4 Cal. App. 711, 89 Pac. 362.

Appellant, upon suggestion of diminution of the record, was permitted to file in this court his affidavit, which appears to have been filed in the office of the county clerk of Sacramento county October 24, 1905, in which he sets out that he "did not learn of the alleged misconduct of the juror A. Johnson until after the trial ended and the verdict had been rendered in the above-entitled action." It is obvious that this is an attempt to amend the bill of exceptions; but, admitting that we could consider the said affidavit, it is not authenticated in any manner by the trial judge, nor is there anything to indicate that it was used upon the said motion for a new trial.

We have given all the points made by appellant careful consideration but we are entirely satisfied that the record discloses no prejudicial error.

The defendant was fairly tried and justly convicted, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

7 Cal. App. 738

BRISTOL v. HERSHEY. (Civ. 458.)

4Court of Appeals, Second District, California.
March 23, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 14, 1908.)

1. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE BY ACTION—CERTIFICATE OF SALE—RECORDING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 400, providing simply that a duplicate of a certificate of sale on mortgage foreclosure shall be filed, and not requiring it to be recorded, where such a certificate is defective, in that the premises sold are incorrectly described, it may be corrected, and the original defective certificate filed need not be altered, but a corrected certificate may be refiled.

2. SAME—REDEMPTION—PERSONS ENTITLED TO REDEEM—JUNIOR MORTGAGEE.

A junior mortgagee, not having asked or received any affirmative relief in an action to foreclose a first mortgage, may, before the time of redemption expires, institute an action in foreclosure and obtain an appropriate decree and a sale thereunder, and having exercised this right and received a certificate of sale, as the holder of such certificate, becomes a successor in interest of the mortgagor, and entitled to redeem.

3. SAME—EFFECT OF REDEMPTION—SUBROGATION TO RIGHTS OF MORTGAGEE.

Where a junior mortgagee, as holder of a certificate of sale issued on a foreclosure of her own mortgage, exercised her right to redeem from the foreclosure sale on a first mortgage, she became subrogated to all of the first mortgagee's rights, to whom a certificate of sale had been issued on the sale under her first mortgage, to the same effect as though the first mortgagee had assigned to her the certificate of sale.

4. SAME—ASSIGNMENT OF CERTIFICATE OF REDEMPTION—EFFECT.

Where a first mortgagee took an assignment of a certificate of redemption issued to a junior mortgagee on redemption from the sale to the first mortgagee under such first mortgage, the first mortgagee acquired all rights held by the junior mortgagee thereunder, including the rights to which the junior mortgagee was subrogated on redemption from the sale under the first mortgage.

5. SAME—EFFECT OF REDEMPTION BY JUNIOR MORTGAGEE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 703, making the effect of a redemption from a mortgage foreclosure sale by a successor in interest holding the legal and equitable title an extinguishment of the sale, does not apply to extinguish the sale on a first mortgage on redemption by a junior mortgagee holding but the equitable title under a certificate issued on a second sale under such junior mortgage, since in such case the junior mortgagee redeems from the previous sale in his own interest and adversely to the mortgagor.

6. SAME—ORAL AGREEMENT TO EXTEND TIME OF REDEMPTION—VALIDITY.

An oral agreement to extend the time of redemption from a mortgage foreclosure sale is valid, and needs no consideration in its support, if the debtor is lulled into a false security, and thereby permits the time for redemption to expire.

7. SAME.

A mortgagee agreed to extend the time of redemption beyond the statutory period, on condition that the mortgagor pay a specified amount per month, or a sum equal to interest on all sums due the mortgagee under the sale. The mortgagor did not claim to have paid the monthly installments, or to have tendered payment thereof; the nearest approach to an allegation in reference thereto being a statement that she was prepared to make the first payment, which fact did not appear to have been communicated to the mortgagee, nor any tender to have been made in connection therewith. During the ensuuing 22 months, there was no offer or tender to pay any of these monthly payments, between which dates there was a great increase in the value of the property; nor was there any allegation of any fact which would excuse performance on the mortgagor's part. Civ. Code, § 1439, requires one who seeks to enforce a contract to show that he has complied with the conditions on his part to be performed. Held, that the mortgagor was not entitled to enforce the agreement to extend the time for redemption.

8. SAME.

The fact that, long after the mortgagor's default, the mortgagee paid the mortgagor a thousand dollars, with a statement that the property "was growing more valuable and in time I shall doubtless dispose of it, and I am willing that you should share in advance in what it may produce," in no event would have any effect to change or alter the rights of the parties theretofore attaching.

9. SAME.

The receipt of a sheriff's deed by the mortgagee could not be construed as a notification on the mortgagee's part that she would not carry out her agreement with the mortgagor to extend the time of redemption from the mortgage sale, so as to excuse performance by the mortgagor of her agreement to make payments of interest.

10. SAME.

Taking possession of a part of the mortgaged premises by the mortgagee did not have the effect to excuse performance by the mortgagor of her agreement to make payments of interest, if the time for redemption from the sale under the mortgage was extended, where at the time the mortgagee took possession the mortgagor was already in default.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Jennie Bristol against Mira Hershey. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Noleman & Smyser, for appellant. Lynn Helm, and E. S. Williams, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county in favor of defendant rendered upon a hearing sustaining the demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend.

It appears from the second amended complaint that on August 1, 1902, defendant, Hershey, obtained a decree foreclosing a first mortgage executed by plaintiff on certain real estate, in which proceeding one Wills, the holder of a junior mortgage was made a party, but to whom no affirmative relief was granted by the decree; that under this decree, on September 24, 1902, the premises were sold to Hershey for the full amount found due, together with accrued interest and costs; that the certificate of sale issued to Hershey was defective in that the premises sold were incorrectly described; that in such form the certificate was recorded in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county, but not indexed; that subsequently the certificate was corrected, but the record thereof was not altered; that afterwards, in December, 1902, Wills, the holder of the junior mortgage, brought an independent action against plaintiff in foreclosure, and such proceedings were had that on February 12, 1903, the premises were sold under the Wills decree and a certificate in due form issued to her; that thereafter, on March 3, 1903, Wills redeemed the premises from the previous sale to Hershey by paying to the sheriff the full amount due Hershey; that in such redemption the said Wills presented with the other instruments required by law the certificate so issued to Hershey as altered and corrected; that a certificate of redemption in due form was issued by the sheriff to Wills, but not filed for record or recorded; that defendant, Hershey, on August 24, 1903, acquired by purchase from Wills the certificate so issued to her; that thereafter, on September 20, 1903, four days before the time for redemption had expired under the sale to Hershey, plaintiff entered into an oral agreement with Hershey, whereby it was agreed that plaintiff was to pay to Hershey $50 per month, or a sum equal to interest upon all sums due Hershey under the sale, such payments to be made monthly, commencing January 1, 1904, in consideration of the prompt payment of which Hershey agreed that plaintiff might retain possession of the premises, and the right of redemption and the right to pay the full amount of the decree was to be extended two or three years; that if said monthly payments were promptly made plaintiff could pay to Hershey the full amount of all indebtedness, and all liens, decrees, and obligations in favor of Hershey and against said real estate would thereby be canceled and discharged; that plaintiff, relying upon said agreement, made no effort to redeem within such intervening four days; that afterwards, in December, 1903, defendant Hershey notified plaintiff to vacate the premises, and on or about January 1, 1904, took possession of a part thereof, but plaintiff has retained possession of the remainder; that on December 30, 1903, Hershey took out a sheriff's deed; that on November 2, 1905, plaintiff offered to pay Hershey the full amount of all claims due her, which she refused to accept, but thereafter, in 1906, paid into a bank for plaintiff's use a thousand dollars, upon a written statement that she was willing that plaintiff should share in the advance in the value of the property.

There is nothing in the point that the record of the original defective certificate was not altered, or that a correct certificate was not recorded. The statute does not require that the certificate issued by the sheriff shall be recorded, but simply that it be filed. Section 700, Code Civ. Proc. No reason is suggested why the clerical error of the sheriff in the issuance of the certificate might not be corrected, and a correct certificate refiled. The complaint does not negative the refileing of a corrected certificate. Wills, being a junior mortgagee, and having asked and received no affirmative relief in the original action, was at liberty before the time of redemption expired to institute her original action in foreclosure and obtain an appropriate decree and a sale thereunder. Having exercised this right and having received a certificate of sale regularly issued to her on account thereof, as the holder and owner of such certificate, she became a successor in interest of plaintiff and entitled to redeem. Pollard v. Harlow, 138 Cal. 392, 71 Pac. 454, 648. When she as such holder of the certificate so exercised this right of redemption from the Hershey sale, she became subrogated to all of Hershey's rights to the same effect as though Hershey had assigned to her the certificate of sale. White v. Costigan, 134 Cal. 38, 66 Pac. 78. When Hershey took an assignment of the Wills certificate, she acquired all rights held by Wills thereunder, including the subrogated rights. Had a stranger purchased this certificate from Wills, no one would question the extent of the interest acquired by an assignment of the Wills certificate. No reason suggests itself why Hershey by a purchase of such certificate could not and did not acquire the same rights guaranteed to any other purchaser.

The contention that the redemption by Wills extinguished the sale theretofore made to Hershey cannot be maintained. The effect of a redemption by a successor in interest, holding the legal and equitable title, is a restoration to the original estate (section 703, Code Civ. Proc.), but this does not apply to one holding, but the equitable title under a certificate issued upon a second sale. In such cases the holder of the junior certificate redeems from the previous sale in his own interest and adverse to the debtor and holder of the legal title, and it is not a redemption in the interest of the judgment debtor or for the judgment debtor, and the effect of which is not to restore the estate to the judgment debtor, nor to extinguish the original sale from which the redemption is had. There being no extinguishment of the Hershey sale, it follows that at the expiration of 12 months from the date thereof, as against the judgment debtor, the complete legal and equitable title vested in Hershey as the owner and holder of the Wills certificate with its subrogated rights, unless her oral agreement was such as to estop her to claim the same. The oral contract to extend the time for redemption was valid, and needed no consideration in its support, if the debtor was lulled into a false security and thereby permitted the time for redemption to expire. Schroeder v. Young, 161 U. S. 342, 16 Sup. Ct. 512, 40 L. Ed. 721. This oral agreement conferred the right and privilege of redemption beyond the statutory period upon a condition precedent, namely, that the judgment debtor should pay the interest on all sums due Hershey, in any event to the extent of $50 per month. Plaintiff does not claim to have paid or tendered payment thereof. The nearest approach to an allegation in reference thereto is a statement that on January 1, 1904, she was prepared to make the first payment. This fact does not seem to have been communicated to defendant, nor any tender or offer to pay made in connection therewith. During the ensuing 22 months intervening between January 1, 1904, and November 2, 1905, there was no offer or tender to pay any of these monthly payments, between which dates a great increase in the value of the property ensued. Nor is there any allegation in the complaint of any fact which would excuse performance upon plaintiff's part. The receipt of a sheriff's deed cannot be construed as a notification upon defendant's part that she would not carry out her agreement. There was nothing in the agreement which prohibited her from taking out the deed at any time after the time redemption had expired. No new title was conveyed by the deed. It is evidentiary purely in its character, and whatever of title was acquired by Hershey was the result of failure to redeem within the statutory or agreed period, and not because of the issuance of the deed.

Construing the pleading most strongly against the pleader, as is our duty, she retained possession of all the premises until after January 1, 1904, after which date she was in default under her agreement in the payment of interest, and being thus in default the taking of possession by defendant of a portion thereof would not have the effect to excuse performance on plaintiff's part of her contract. While the tenor of all decisions, wherein has been involved the right of redemption after the statutory period based upon an agreement, has been extremely liberal in protecting the redemptioner's rights, yet in no case called to our attention has it been held that a redemptioner may violate the agreement under which he claims and still have a decree giving effect to the violated agreement. He who seeks to enforce a contract must show that he has complied with the agreements and conditions of the contract on his part to be performed. Section 1439, Civ. Code.; Cameron v. Burnham, 146 Cal. 534, 80 Pac. 929. This proceeding being one in equity to enforce a right under an agreement violated by the plaintiff, we do not think that she is entitled to any relief under the allegations of the complaint.

We attach no importance to the fact that in July, 1906, long after the plaintiff's default, the defendant paid to plaintiff a thousand dollars, upon the statement that the property "was growing more valuable, and in time I shall doubtless dispose of it, and I am willing that you should share in advance in what it may produce." The only proper construction to be given to such statement is to the effect that this thousand dollars represented the amount which the defendant was willing that the other party might share in the transaction, and its receipt and retention by the plaintiff, under the circumstances, would indicate plaintiff's acquiescence in the equitable character of defendant's offer. In no event, however, could it have any effect to change or alter the rights of the parties theretofore attaching. Judgment affirmed.

OCCIDENTAL REAL ESTATE CO. v. GANTNER & MATTERN et al. (Civ. 443.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 18, 1908. Rehearing Denied April 15, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—RECORD—SETTLED STATEMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A settled statement, on appeal from an order vacating a verdict and granting a new trial, which, after reciting the rendition of the verdict, states that the same was vacated and a new trial granted by the court on its own motion, is conclusive that the order was made by the court on its own motion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 2850-2855.]

2. NEW TRIAL—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—MOTION.

A colloquy between an attorney and the court immediately on the return of the verdict, wherein the attorney asked the court to vacate the verdict and grant a new trial and called its attention to Code Civ. Proc. § 662, authorizing the court, on its own motion, to vacate a verdict and grant a new trial where there has been a plain disregard of the instructions or of the evidence, cannot be taken as a formal motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 250-253.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—GROUNDS OF DECISION—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

Where an order by the court, on its own motion, vacating a verdict and granting a new trial, can be sustained on either ground allowed under Code Civ. Proc. § 662, authorizing the court, on its own motion, to vacate a verdict and grant a new trial where there has been a plain disregard of the instructions or a plain disregard of the evidence, the order must be upheld on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3408-3430.]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT—RENT—PAYMENT—WHAT CONSTITUTES—"UNLAWFUL DETAINER."

The fact that a tenant each month tendered one month's rent, which was refused, there being no pretense that the tenant deposited the rent in any bank for the landlord, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1500, did not entitle him to refuse payment and to retain possession of the premises after the landlord served him with the notice authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1161, subd. 2, providing that a tenant is guilty of unlawful detainer where he continues in possession, after default in payment of rent, and three days' notice requiring its payment or possession of the property shall have been served on him.

5. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—PASSION OR PREJUDICE OF JURORS.

Where plaintiff, in unlawful detainer, on the undisputed facts was entitled to a verdict for the possession of the premises and for rent, and the court might properly have directed a verdict for plaintiff, and a verdict for defendant could only be rendered in plain disregard of the evidence, the court was justified in assuming that a verdict for defendant was rendered under the influence of prejudice within Code Civ. Proc. § 662, authorizing the court, on its own motion, to vacate a verdict and grant a new trial where there has been such a plain disregard of the evidence as to satisfy the court that the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Occidental Real Estate Company against Morris Levy and Gantner & Mattern. From an order vacating a verdict for defendants and granting a new trial, Levy appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto & Richardson, for appellant. Hiller, Mann & O'Brien, for respondent Real Estate Company. Edmund Tauszky, for respondent Gantner & Mattern.

HALL, J. This is an action for unlawful detainer, brought against defendant Morris Levy after default in the payment of rent and three days' notice in writing demanding its payment and possession of the premises, under subdivision 2, § 1161, Code Civ. Proc. Gantner & Mattern (a corporation) was made defendant because in possession of a portion of the premises as a subtenant of defendant Levy. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant and against plaintiff, which the court at once upon its own motion vacated, and granted a new trial, and from this order defendant Levy has appealed to this court.

We say the court upon its own motion vacated the verdict and granted a new trial advisedly, for although the statement of the case upon appeal shows that the attorney for the plaintiff asked the court to make such order, and called its attention to the provisions of section 662, Code Civ. Proc., under which such power is granted to the court, the settled statement, after reciting the fact of the rendition of the verdict by the jury in favor of defendant and against plaintiff, concludes as follows: "Thereupon the court vacated the verdict and granted a new trial, on its own motion, on the ground that there had been such a plain disregard by the jury of the instructions of the court and the evidence in the case, as to satisfy the court that the verdict was ordered [rendered] under a misapprehension of such instructions under the premises of section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this state." This is conclusive upon us that the order was made by the court upon its own motion, and the contention of appellant that the order was made upon the motion of plaintiff cannot be sustained. The colloquy that took place between the attorney for the plaintiff and the court immediately upon the return of the verdict cannot be regarded as a formal motion for a new trial on the part of plaintiff, but was simply the calling of the court's attention to its power under section 662, Code Civ. Proc. Anglo-Nevada Assurance Corporation v. Ross, 123 Cal. 520, 56 Pac. 335.

It is also contended by appellant that the court erred in vacating the verdict upon its own motion. The facts of the case as shown by admissions and uncontradicted evidence are as follows: On the 1st day of November, 1905, appellant leased the premises in suit from one Dana for a period of two years from said date at a rental of $100 per month, payable in advance each month, and took possession under said lease. Dana subsequently granted the premises to plaintiff. For each of the ten months beginning May, 1906, and ending with February, 1907, defendant sent a check for the sum of $100 to the landlord or his or its agent, which was in each instance refused and returned to defendant. On the 21st day of February, 1907, there being ten months' rent due and unpaid, plaintiff gave three days' notice in writing to defendant, requiring its payment or possession of the premises, and served a copy thereof on the subtenant as well. This notice was in all respects correct in form and correctly stated the amount then due and unpaid. Defendant did not pay such rent or any part thereof, or surrender possession, and on the 26th day of February, 1907, this action was brought. Upon this state of the case the court might properly have directed the jury to find a verdict in favor of plaintiff for the possession of the premises and the sum of $1,000, unpaid rent. The court, however, submitted the case to the jury under some general instructions, and, upon the return of a verdict against plaintiff and in favor of defendant, on its own motion vacated the verdict. In this the court committed no error. Section 662 of the Code of Civil Procedure gives power to the court on its own motion to vacate a verdict and grant a new trial "where there has been such a plain disregard by the jury of the instructions of the court, or the evidence in the case, as to satisfy the court that the verdict was rendered under a misapprehension of such instructions, or under the influence of passion or prejudice." In other words, there are two sets of circumstances under which the court of its own motion may vacate a verdict: (1) Where there has been a plain and palpable disregard of the instructions; and (2) where there has been a plain and palpable disregard of the evidence. Townley v. Adams, 118 Cal. 382, 50 Pac. 550; Mizener v. Bradbury, 128 Cal. 340, 60 Pac. 928; Eades v. Trowbridge, 143 Cal. 25, 76 Pac. 714. By the terms of the order entered by the court it would seem that the learned judge of the trial court based the order upon the theory that the jury had plainly disregarded the instructions of the court. But because of the vagueness of the instructions it is very doubtful if it can be said that the jury was guilty of a "plain disregard of the instructions." The court simply read a portion of subdivision 2, § 1161, Code Civ. Proc., erroneously omitting the part requiring a three days' notice in writing to pay the rent or to surrender possession, and section 1500, Civ. Code, relating to the extinguishing of a pecuniary obligation where an offer of payment is not accepted. The court did not, however, clearly tell the jury under what circumstances or conditions the plaintiff would be entitled to recover.

Nevertheless, if the order of the court can be sustained upon either ground allowed under section 662, the order of the court must be upheld. Townley v. Adams, supra. See, also, Miller v. Wade, 87 Cal. 412, 25 Pac. 487; Estate of Yoakam, 103 Cal. 503, 37 Pac. 485. The jury brought in a general verdict for the defendant. This necessarily carried with it an implied finding that some fact essential to plaintiff's recovery did not exist. Yet upon the record before us every fact essential to a recovery by plaintiff was admitted or proven without contradiction. Indeed, the only contention of defendant seems to be that because he had each month tendered the rent for that month this action will not lie. But the tender each month did not pay the rent. There is no pretense that defendant deposited the rent in any bank for plaintiff as provided in section 1500, Civ. Code. On the 21st day of February, 1907, defendant was in possession of the premises in suit as a tenant of plaintiff, and there was then due and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff for the rental of said premises the sum of $1,000. It was admitted that on this day plaintiff made written demand on defendant, requiring him within three days to pay such $1,000, or to surrender possession of the premises. This demand was in all respects sufficient in form, and was duly served, both on defendant and his subtenant, on the 21st day of February, 1907. Defendant in no respect complied with the demand, but without the consent of the plaintiff retained the possession of the premises, and five days later this action was brought. About the foregoing facts there is no dispute or contradiction. Upon the facts above stated plaintiff was clearly entitled to a verdict for the possession of the premises and for $1,000 as rent money. The court might properly have directed the jury to find such a verdict. A verdict for the defendant could only be rendered in plain and palpable disregard of the evidence. The fact that defendant each month tendered one month's rent did not entitle him to refuse payment and to retain possession of the premises after plaintiff served him with the written notice authorized by subdivision 2, § 1161, Code Civ. Proc. "Notwithstanding the refusal of a valid tender, if the creditor subsequently demands payment, and the debtor fails to pay, the tender has not been kept good, and the debtor loses the benefit of the tender." 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 41, citing many cases.

The jury plainly and palpably disregarded the evidence, and the court for this reason was justified in assuming that the verdict was rendered under the influence of prejudice.

The order is affirmed.

SWANSTON et al. v. CLARK. (Sac. 1,505.)
(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1908.
On Rehearing, April 27, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT — ALLOWANCE OF AMENDMENTS TO PLEADINGS—REVIEW.

The propriety of allowing amendments to pleadings is for the trial court, and its rulings will not be disturbed, except for an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3825-3833.]

2. SAME — REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON DEMURRER.

Where plaintiff amends his complaint, rulings as to its sufficiency before amendment become immaterial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4104.]

3. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE.

A complaint in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract, which alleges the execution of the contract as set out, consisting of a lease and an option to the lessee to purchase during the term at a fixed price, and which avers that the lessee elected to purchase, that the contract was fair and reasonable, that the price agreed on was in fair proportion to the value of the property, and prays for the reformation of the contract relating to the rights of the parties in the event the lessee does not purchase under the option, shows a contract sufficiently certain on its face to support a suit for performance, especially after the contract has been reformed as prayed for.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 61-85, 357-360.]

4. SAME.

Where, in a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract, consisting of a lease for a specified term, and of an option to the lessee to purchase during the term at a fixed price, the complaint alleges the making of valuable improvements by the lessee on the faith of the option to purchase, an answer attempting to allege a rescission by the lessor of the contract, prior to the election by the lessee to purchase, which does not offer to repay the lessee the moneys expended by him in improvements on the land, but only to repay the moneys "paid" the lessor by the lessee, and "to restore everything received" by the lessor under the agreement, is insufficient on demurrer.

5. CONTRACTS—RESCISSION—GROUNDS.

A party to a contract cannot rescind at his pleasure, but only for some one or more of the causes enumerated in Civ. Code, § 1689, authorizing a party to rescind a contract for enumerated grounds.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 1152-1180.]

6. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS—CROSS-COMPLAINT.

The rule that one, seeking to rescind a contract, or to enforce a rescission, which he claims he has effected in the manner provided by Civ. Code, § 1691, prescribing how a rescission may be effected, must allege facts showing that he had good right to rescind, and for what cause a rescission had taken place, or that a rescission had been made by consent, controls, where a rescission is averred as a defense; and a defense, not averring any facts in regard to defendant's right to rescind, and not showing a rescission by consent, is insufficient.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — CONTRACTS — PERFORMANCE.

Where a contract bound a lessor to convey the premises to the lessee, on exercise of his option to purchase at a fixed price, free from all liens and incumbrances, "except such as may be created by" the lease, a conveyance in fee to the lessee, on his electing to purchase, effected a merger of the two estates, and the lease was not an incumbrance.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR—ORDERS—REVIEW.

An order denying a motion to amend a judgment awarding specific performance of a contract is an order made after a final judgment, and is not reviewable on appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3522.]

9. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—IMMATERIAL ISSUES.

Where there was no ground for rescinding a contract, erroneous rulings, on the admission of evidence relating to service of notice of rescission, were immaterial.

10. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—DEFENSES.

The attempt of a party to a contract to rescind the contract without having any grounds therefor did not affect the right of the adverse party to specifically enforce the contract.

11. LANDLORD AND TENANT—LESSEE'S OPTION TO PURCHASE—EXERCISE—TIME.

A lessee was in possession of the premises under a lease expiring January 1, 1903. A new lease, for a term of five years, from October 1, 1902, which gave the lessee the option to purchase the premises at a fixed price at any time during the term, was executed. No cause for a rescission of the contract, contained in the new lease, existed. The new lease provided that the lessee should have immediate possession, and could make any use of the land he saw fit, while the prior lease prohibited any waste or alterations without the consent of the lessor. Held, that the lessee had the right, under the new lease, to exercise his option to purchase at any time during the term thereof, and the question whether he was in possession of the premises under the new lease immediately on its execution, or whether he continued to hold under the old lease until the new term began, was immaterial.

12. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS — CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where a lessee has an option to purchase the premises at a fixed price during the term, and the right to make any use of the premises he sees fit, made improvements in reliance on the contract, the lessor, if he would rescind, must compensate the lessee for the improvements made.

13. PLEADING—EVIDENCE—ISSUES.

It is not error to exclude evidence relating to issues not made by the pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 1237-1251.]

14. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—CONSIDERATION.

A lease gave the lessee an option to purchase the premises for a fixed price at any time during the term. The lessee agreed to pay a higher rent than he considered the premises worth, because he was obtaining an option. The rent was paid for one year in advance, the rent under a prior lease accruing after the beginning of the new lease was canceled, and rent accruing under the prior lease, prior to the new term, was paid in advance. Held, that the option to purchase was supported by a sufficient consideration, and the lessee, on electing to purchase, could compel specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 140-152.]

On Rehearing.

15. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—RELIEF.

A lessee, having the right to purchase the premises during the term at a fixed price, elected to purchase, and tendered the price, but the lessor refused to convey. The lessee remained in possession of the premises, and sued for specific performance. Held, that since the lessee received the use of the premises after the tender, and was not liable for rent, it would be inequitable to compel the lessor to pay taxes and other incumbrances thereafter created, and not made or suffered by him or at his instance, or for his benefit.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Action by Charles Swanston and another against Anna E. Clark. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

William M. Sims, Albert M. Johnson, and Hiram W. Johnson, for appellant. L. T. Hatfield and A. L. Shinn, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The record presents appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The action is to enforce specific performance of a written contract to sell real estate. The complaint was amended four times, and there were subsequently two specific amendments allowed to the fourth amended complaint. There is some contention by appellant that the court erred in allowing these amendments, and that there was error in overruling demurrers to the several complaints as they existed prior to the last amendment. The propriety of allowing amendments is a question for the trial court, and its ruling can be attacked on appeal only for an abuse of discretion. No abuse of discretion appears. The result is that the sufficiency of the several complaints, before it was finally perfected by the last amendment, is immaterial.

The complaint, as finally amended, states facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. It alleges the execution of the contract, which is set out in full. The contract consists of a lease for five years, beginning October 1, 1902, and of an option allowing the lessees to purchase at any time during the term of the lease at a fixed price per acre. It further shows that the plaintiffs, being the lessees, had elected to buy the land in pursuance of the option, had made due tender of the price, and demanded the execution of a deed, which the defendant refused; that the contract was just, fair, and reasonable as to the defendant, and that the price agreed upon was in fair proportion to the value of the property; that two clauses, to which the parties had agreed, to the effect that the plaintiffs were to allow improvements made by them during their possession to remain on the premises, in case they failed to exercise the option and buy, and that plaintiffs should pay the rent for the five years, if they did not sooner exercise the option, were, by mutual mistake, omitted from the contract, and that by like mistake a clause was inserted, giving plaintiffs the right to remove such improvements if they did not purchase. The prayer was for the reformation of the contract, and the enforcement of the defendant's agreement to sell. The mistakes alleged related entirely to the rights of the parties in the event that the plaintiffs did not buy under the option, but chose to occupy for the five-year term under the lease. If material to the case at all, it was only for the purpose of showing that the real contract made was fair, just, and reasonable, and, so far as the option was concerned, supported by a valuable consideration. The facts alleged show the occurrence of a mutual mistake. We do not think there is any ambiguity or uncertainty in the complaint as amended. The contract, as written, was sufficiently certain on its face to support a suit for performance. The ambiguity as to the two repugnant clauses, the one allowing the removal of the improvements, the other requiring that they remain if the option was not exercised, did not make the contract uncertain as an agreement to sell. Furthermore, if it was uncertain in the condition in which it stood as originally executed, the uncertainties were all removed by the reformation which the court directed. The defendant, in her answer, attempted to allege that the contract had been rescinded by her prior to the tender by the plaintiffs. The demurrer was properly sustained to this part of the answer. It did not aver an offer to repay the plaintiffs the moneys expended by them in improvements on the land, but only to repay the moneys "paid her by them" and "to restore everything received by her under that agreement." The complaint alleges the making of valuable improvements by the plaintiffs, on the faith of the option to purchase. This special answer did not deny the making of these improvements, and it cannot be said that the improvements had been "received" by the defendant. Hence the offer to restore, as alleged in the answer, did not include an offer to compensate the plaintiffs for the moneys expended by them in improving the property, and was insufficient to accomplish a rescission. Again, a party to a contract cannot rescind at his pleasure, but only for some one or more of the causes enumerated in section 1689 of the Civil Code. One seeking to rescind a contract, or to enforce a rescission, which he claims he has effected in the manner provided in section 1691 of the Civil Code, must allege facts showing that he had good right to rescind, and for what cause a rescission had taken place, or that a rescission had been made by consent. 18 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 802, 803, 804. The same rule controls where a rescission is averred as a defense. 18 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 844; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 353; Miller v. Fulton, 47 Cal. 146; Dorris v. Sullivan, 90 Cal. 286, 27 Pac. 216; Kentfield v. Hayes, 57 Cal. 411; Arguello v. Bours, 67 Cal. 450, 8 Pac. 449; Swasey v. Adair, 88 Cal. 182, 25 Pac. 1119. The special defense does not aver any facts in regard to defendant's right to rescind, and does not show a rescission by consent. It is therefore insufficient.

The court did not err in adjudging that the defendant should convey the land free from all liens and incumbrances. The contract provided that she should convey it free from all liens and incumbrances, "except such as may be created by the terms of this instrument as a lease of said premises." The conveyance of the property to the plaintiffs in fee would effect a complete merger of the two estates, and the lease would not thereafter be an incumbrance. The execution of the deed by the defendant would be a complete performance so far as the lease was concerned. The contract, as reformed, did not contemplate or provide that she should retain any right or interest under the lease after she had conveyed in pursuance of the option, even if it did not have that effect before reformation. The lease, therefore, did not constitute an incumbrance within the scope of the covenants in a grant deed. We cannot, upon these appeals, take notice of any liens for reclamation district taxes that may have accrued after the trial. The defendant, it may be observed, could have escaped that liability at any time by performing before the liens accrued. The statement in the record relating to the motion made by defendant to amend the judgment, so as to except such liens and the order denying the same, show that the judgment was entered before the motion and order were made. It was therefore an order made after final judgment, and it cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment itself. The defendant did not appeal from the order. As to the liens for ordinary taxes, which may be presumed to have accrued between the time of plaintiffs' tender in January, 1903, and the date of the entry of the judgment in January, 1905, it is sufficient to say that the defendant, having refused to accept the money and make the deed as the judgment declares she should have done, is in no position to complain of the consequence of her own breach of contract.

After the last amendment of the complaint defendant filed a cross-complaint to rescind and cancel the contract as signed, on the ground that it was executed under a mistake as to its contents, induced by fraudulent representations of the plaintiffs. The mistakes so alleged were not the same as those alleged in the amended complaint. Certain other conditions, it was alleged, were intended to have been inserted in the contract, but were omitted because of the fraudulent misrepresentations of the plaintiffs, and the mistake of the defendant caused thereby. The court found that these allegations of the cross-complaint as to fraud and mistake were untrue, and the finding is sustained by the evidence. As it thus appears that there was no just ground for the rescission asked for, it is immaterial whether the court was right or wrong in its rulings concerning the admission of evidence relating to the circumstances attending the service of the notice of rescission. The notice itself was introduced in evidence, and the time of its service was shown, without conflict. This also disposes of the objection that the plaintiffs' offer of performance was made after the notice of rescission was served. As the cause of rescission as alleged did not exist, the defendant had no right to rescind, and her attempt to do so did not affect the right of the plaintiffs to have specific performance.

Prior to the execution of the contract the plaintiffs were occupying the lands under a previous lease which, by its terms, did not expire until January 1, 1903. Inasmuch as there was no cause shown for a rescission, the plaintiffs had the whole of the term in which to exercise their option, and the question whether they were technically in possession of the premises under the new lease immediately upon its execution, or whether they continued to hold under the old lease until October 1, 1902, when the new term was to begin, is entirely immaterial. The new lease provided that the plaintiffs should have immediate possession, and could make any use of the land they saw fit. The prior lease forbids any waste or alterations without the lessor's consent. The plaintiffs, immediately after the execution of the new lease, and because of their having procured the option to purchase, began certain improvements, which they would not have made under the old lease. They had the right to do this in reliance on the contract, and if the defendant desired to rescind the contract, and had the right to do so, she would have been required to compensate them for the improvements thus made.

In October, 1903, while the case was on trial, and before the last amendment to the complaint was proposed or filed, the court refused to allow the defendant to introduce evidence relating to a mistake in the terms of the agreement. This was not error. At that time, so far as the record shows, there was no issue upon the subject of mistake, and the evidence was irrelevant.

The claim that there was no sufficient consideration to support the option as a contract is not sustainable. There was evidence to the effect that the plaintiffs agreed to pay rent at a higher rate than they considered it worth, because of the fact that they were obtaining an option. This rent was paid for one year in advance, the rent for the last three months of the old lease was canceled, and the rent accruing under the old lease from July to October 1, 1902, although not due until January 1, 1903, was paid at the time of the execution of the new lease. All this constituted a sufficient consideration for the option.

Many other assignments of error are made by the appellant, which are included in and disposed of by the foregoing conclusions. Other errors are urged, but they are of so trivial a nature that we do not think it necessary to discuss them. They could not, under any circumstances, have been injurious to the defendant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Upon further consideration of this cause, pending an application for rehearing, we are of the opinion that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs, ever since January 14, 1903, have been in possession of the land, receiving all income, use, and profit thereof, and being under no obligation to pay rent to the defendant after that date, it would not be equitable to compel the defendant to pay the taxes and other incumbrances created since that date, and not made or suffered by her, or at her instance, or for her benefit. See Miller v. Corey, 15 Iowa, 166; Farber v. Purdy, 69 Mo. 601; Hall v. Denckla, 28 Ark. 515; Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 635, 50 Pac. 683; Miller v. Waddingham, 91 Cal. 381, 27 Pac. 750, 13 L. R. A. 680. The opinion hereinbefore rendered, so far as it is contrary to this conclusion, is, to that extent, modified.

The judgment of the court below is modified by altering the clause providing for the execution of a deed by the defendant so that said clause shall read as follows: "Within fifteen days after notice of the entry of this decree make, execute and deliver to the plaintiffs, or to the clerk of the superior court for the plaintiffs, a deed conveying to the plaintiffs, their heirs and assigns, the premises hereinafter described, free from all liens and incumbrances existing upon or against the same on January 14, 1903, or created thereafter by the defendant, or at her instance, or for her benefit." As thus modified, and in all other respects, the judgment is affirmed. The appellant shall not recover costs of appeal herein.

DIEPENBROCK v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY. (S. F. 4,929.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1908.
Rehearing Denied June 11, 1908.)

1. HOLIDAYS—JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Const. art. 6, § 5, declaring that the superior courts shall always be open, legal holidays and nonjudicial days excepted, but that injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued and served on such days, does not prohibit all business in the superior courts on a legal holiday or nonjudicial day except the issuance of injunctions and writs of prohibition, but leaves the Legislature at liberty to allow or disallow the transaction of all judicial business on such days.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CLASS LEGISLATION.

Act Nov. 27, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 561, c. 287), amends Code Civ. Proc. § 10, declaring what days shall be deemed holidays, by adding thereto that holidays besides those enumerated shall be such days as the Governor may declare such, and provides that the Governor may declare special holidays on which no public duty shall be suspended or prohibited except such as affects the administration of justice in the courts of the state, as prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 135, which section is amended by adding thereto that on all special holidays the courts shall be open for the transaction of all judicial business, except the trial of an action based on a contract for the direct payment of money. Held, that such exception is special legislation, in violation of the Constitution, and void, since such class does not owe its existence to any constitutional, rational, legal distinctions, which alone justify such classification.

3. STATUTES—EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Act Nov. 27, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 561, c. 287), amends Code Civ. Proc. § 10, declaring what days shall be deemed holidays, and providing that the Governor may declare special holidays on which the courts shall be open for the transaction of all judicial business, except the trial of an action based on a contract for the direct payment of money. Held, that the exception of the trial of an action based on such contracts was so integral a part of the act that, being void because special legislation, the whole act must fall.

In Bank. Application by M. H. Diepenbrock for a writ of prohibition against the superior court of the county of Sacramento and Hon. Peter J. Shields, judge thereof. Writ denied.

L. T. Hatfield, V. L. Hatfield, and W. H. Hatfield, amici curiæ. R. Platnauer (Grove L. Johnson, of counsel), for petitioner. C. E. McLaughlin, A. L. Shinn, C. B. Harris, and C. O. Busick, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an application for a writ of prohibition, the purpose of which is to have determined the validity of section 135 of the Code of Civil Procedure as amended on November 27, 1907. Laws 1907, p. 681, c. 358.

Article 6, § 5, of the Constitution, declares that the superior courts of this state "shall be always open (legal holidays and nonjudicial days excepted)," but "injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued and served on legal holidays and nonjudicial days." Holidays were defined by the Codes, and were declared, besides certain enumerated days, to be "every day appointed by the President of the United States or by the Governor of this state for a public fast, thanksgiving or holiday." It was then declared by section 133, Code Civ. Proc., that courts of justice may be held and judicial business transacted on any day excepting as provided in the next section. Section 134, Code Civ. Proc., then provided as follows: "No court, other than the Supreme Court, must be open for the transaction of judicial business on any of the holidays mentioned in section ten, except for the following purposes: (1) To give, upon their request, instructions to jury when deliberating on their verdict; (2) to receive a verdict or discharge a jury; (3) for the exercise of the powers of a magistrate in a criminal action, or in a proceeding of a criminal nature. Injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued and served on any day."

It will be noted that the language above quoted empowers the courts to transact business other than that designated by the Constitution. But, to the objection that the Constitution prohibited all business in the superior court on a legal holiday or nonjudicial day, except the issuance of injunctions and writs of prohibition, this court long since answered that the Constitution did not contemplate such a result, but "leaves the Legislature at liberty to allow or disallow the transaction of all or any class of judicial business upon legal holidays." People v. Soto, 65 Cal. 621, 4 Pac. 664; Ex parte Smith (Cal. Sup.) 93 Pac. 191.

Such was the condition of the law when the Legislature was called together in extraordinary session in the autumn of 1907. The Legislature was convened principally for the purpose of devising some measure of relief from the effects of the financial panic which the state was then undergoing. A year and a half previously, in the spring of 1906, following the San Francisco disaster, it had seemed necessary to the Governor to declare holidays until such time as affairs again resumed something of their normal condition. Necessary and beneficial upon the whole, it was universally recognized that the state at large suffered no little inconvenience from the interruption to judicial business enforced under the law by the declaration of these holidays. Again, in the autumn of 1907, owing to the financial crisis through which the state was passing, it had been deemed necessary by the Governor to declare a series of holidays. And, again, as against the compensating good, it was recognized that hardship resulted from the general suspension of the judicial business of the superior courts. It was under these circumstances that the Legislature undertook the commendable task of preserving the benefits and advantages of such holidays, while minimizing their evils. To accomplish this result, it amended section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to holidays, adding to the language of section 10 above quoted that holidays, besides those enumerated in the section as it originally stood, should be "such days as the Governor may declare as special holidays." Then proceeding with the consideration of these special holidays, the section declared "that the Governor of the state may declare special holidays, and he may in one proclamation designate one or any number of consecutive days as special holidays, and during any such special holidays no public duty shall be suspended or prohibited except such as affect the administration of justice in the courts of this state as prescribed by section 135 of this Code for the control of such courts." Section 135 of the Code of Civil Procedure was then amended by adding to it this new matter: "On all special holidays the courts of this state shall be open for the transaction of any and all judicial business except the trial of an action or the rendition of a judgment based upon a contract, expressed or implied, for the direct payment of money."

In the briefs of counsel much consideration is paid to the question as to whether or not it is within the power of the Legislature, by calling a holiday a "special" holiday, to clothe it with characteristics, privileges, and immunities which do not pertain to a "general" holiday. It is argued that to permit this is to permit an evasion of the Constitution which speaks of holidays, and which, so speaking, must mean all holidays, special as well as general; that the essential distinction, and the only essential distinction, which can exist between a special holiday and a general holiday, is found in the nature of their creation, but that when once created both stand upon the same plane with equal footing. A general holiday, it is thus said, is a day set apart and declared to be such by the Legislature itself, notice being carried to all the world by the statute that such particular day has been set apart for rest, recreation, fasting, thanksgiving, public rejoicing, public mourning, or any of the other legitimate purposes for which such a day may be decreed; upon the other hand, that a special holiday is special only in the sense that it is not a recurring anniversary, but is created from time to time by the declaration of the chief executive when occasion seems to call for it. But we need not here determine this question upon the broad lines of its presentation, for we think that, conceding that the Legislature has the power to make a distinction in some of their attributes and characteristics between a general holiday and that which they have designated a special holiday, nevertheless the particular difference, distinction, and limitation which they have here made affecting the courts of justice and the administration of justice is special legislation which cannot be upheld. When this court in People v. Soto, supra, declared that the Legislature was at liberty to allow or disallow the transaction of all or any class of judicial business upon legal holidays, it meant no more, and could have meant no more, than that the Legislature could authorize the transaction of any class of business which was not in itself obnoxious to the dictates of the Constitution. Up to that time the exceptions as to writs of prohibition and injunctions, while special in their nature, were classes designated by the Constitution itself, and therefore not to be questioned. In all other respects the purposes enumerated in section 134, Code Civ. Proc., for which judicial business could be transacted upon a holiday, were purposes which, while falling into classes, fell into classes carrying, from the very reading of their designation, the reason for their existence and the generality and uniformity of their operations. To give instructions to a jury when deliberating on their verdict meant instructions to any jury so deliberating to facilitate their deliberations and bring their labors to a close. To receive a verdict or discharge a jury was to receive the verdict of and discharge any jury that the members composing it might not be unnecessarily and unduly restrained and confined. To exercise the powers of a magistrate in a criminal action or proceeding of a criminal nature are general provisions tending to the speedy administration of the criminal laws in the interest of the commonwealth.

But for the first time by the amendment of section 135 is the effort made to designate one class of litigants, and to say to them that, "While the courts of this state are open to all other suitors, its doors are closed to you." It matters not whether the Legislature should attempt to do this directly by virtue of its own statutory enactment, or indirectly by empowering the chief executive to accomplish the same result through the medium of special holidays. If the Legislature could not do this directly, it certainly could not accomplish the same result by indirection, and the proposition thus stated is: Can the Legislature say that the courts of justice, for 30 days or 60 days, or for any other period of time, while open to every other litigant in every kind and class of litigation, shall be closed to him who seeks the collection of money due upon a contract, or to him who seeks to recover damages for tort, or to him who seeks equitable as distinguished from legal relief, or, indeed, to any class as distinguished from another? Assuredly it will not be said that this may be done, unless there be some valid, legal reason for the class distinction and for the putting of the class so distinguished under this prohibitory ban. As to the exception under consideration it is of course apparent, recognized, and admitted that the law was designed to protect the debtor class in times of great financial stringency. But can such extraordinary privilege to a debtor be justified under our law? It is to be noted that in thus favoring the debtor from the legal enforcement of his creditor's demand, read from the other and equally important point of view, it is a denial to the creditor of the right to enforce such demand. It cannot be a favor to one class without inflicting a corresponding injury upon the rights of another. The creditor of one man is frequently the debtor of another. In the multiplicity of the transactions of modern business the creditor of a debtor residing in San Francisco may himself be the debtor of a resident of New York. Unable to enforce his collections from the local debtor, he stands liable to business disaster at the hands of his New York creditor. The class thus created by law is not a class owing its existence to any constitutional, rational, legal distinctions, which alone justify such classification, but the reason for its creation is personal as distinguished from governmental, and the plain object of the law is unduly to favor the debtor to the hardship of the creditor in times of financial stringency. Commendable as was the motive which prompted such legislation, it cannot be upheld.

We have stated that it is unnecessary to determine whether or not the Legislature has the power to make a distinction in characteristics between a legal holiday and a special holiday; but we are brought to the question as to whether this determination which forbids closing the courts to the trial of an action based on contract for the direct payment of money does or does not render the whole amendment void. In other words, is the exception so integral a part of the statute as to lead to the conclusion that, if the Legislature had known it was void, it would not have enacted the amendment, or is it to be concluded that the exception may fall and the amendment stand, to the effect that the Legislature has declared that upon special holidays the courts of the state shall be open for the transaction of any and all judicial business? Clearly the first view must obtain. The purpose of the enactment was to allow the judicial business of the state to proceed in all matters saving one. In deciding that that one may not be excluded, if it should be held that the section may still stand, is to declare that the Legislature had enacted that on all special holidays the courts of this state shall be open for the transaction of any and all judicial business without exception, an interpretation of a statute which it did not enact, and which is in irreconcilable variance with the result which it attempted to accomplish. For which reasons it is held that the amendment to section 135 of the Code of Civil Procedure, approved November 23, 1907, is void.

In conclusion, then, we repeat that it is not decided that the Legislature may not make certain distinctions between general holidays and special holidays; but the distinction which here they sought to make being abortive and void, the law for the creation of special holidays itself fails. By this failure the days designated as special holidays were not transformed into general holidays, and were not holidays at all, with the result that they became judicial days, upon which the functions of the courts of the state were in no respect suspended. Risser v. Superior Court (Cal. Sup.) 93 Pac. 85.

It follows from the foregoing that petitioner is not entitled to his writ of prohibition, and his application therefor is denied.

ROUSSIN v. KIRKPATRICK et al.

(Civ. 393.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
March 27, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—BRIEFS—INCORPORATION OF PORTION OF RECORD INVOLVED—PHONOGRAPHIC REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS INSTEAD OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 941a, 941b, 941c (St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410), providing an alternative method of taking appeals, and sections 953a, 953b, 953c (St. 1907, p. 750, c. 408), providing an alternative method of preparing records on appeals by making and filing in lieu of a bill of exceptions a transcript of the phonographic report of the proceedings, which need not be printed, but requiring in said section 953c that the parties print in their briefs or in a supplement thereto such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court, it is not sufficient to indicate in the briefs the portions of the record relied on by simply citing the page of the transcript where such portions may be found, since such transcript was not intended as a substitute for the printed record previously required.

2. SAME—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF COURT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

In an action for services as a school teacher, plaintiff, who was discharged after the fall term of four months, contending that he had been employed to teach the school year of eight months, where there was evidence from which the court could have inferred that the engagement was for the fall term, and that plaintiff so understood it, although he testified otherwise, the court's finding that plaintiff was employed for the fall term only cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

3. TRIAL—TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS.

Where the allegations set forth in certain paragraphs of a verified complaint were admitted by insufficient denials, no finding was necessary thereon.

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—TEACHERS—ACTION FOR COMPENSATION—TRIAL—FINDINGS.

In an action for services as a school teacher, the complaint alleged employment for the period of nine months. The allegation was denied by the answer, which alleged that plaintiff was employed to teach for only four months. The court found that plaintiff was employed to teach for four months only, and also that the contract for four months had been paid in full. Held, that this was a sufficient finding on that issue.

5. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS.

In an action for services as a school teacher, plaintiff, who was discharged after the fall term of four months, contending that he was employed to teach the school year of nine months, testimony relating to certain declarations made by plaintiff in the presence of witness which tended to dispute plaintiff's testimony as to the period for which he had been employed was admissible for that purpose.

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; John L. Childs, Judge.

Action by A. C. Roussin against O. D. Kirkpatrick and others, as trustees of Redwood school district, Del Norte county. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank W. Taft, for appellant. G. W. Howe, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action for services alleged to have been performed by plaintiff for defendants as a school teacher. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and defendants had judgment, from which and from the order denying his motion for a new trial plaintiff appeals.

The record purports to have been made up under new sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. St. 1907, p. 750, c. 408. The appeal is taken under new sections 941a, 941b, and 941c. St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410. Some interesting questions of practice arising under these sections are presented by respondents in their objections to the review of alleged errors, which we prefer not at this time to take up. We invite attention, however, to the closing paragraph of section 953c, which reads: "In filing briefs on said appeal the parties must, however, print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." Whatever motive of utility or economy suggested these new sections to the Codes, it is quite clear to our minds that the Legislature did not intend to require the reviewing court to grope through an unprinted transcription of the phonographic report of the trial to find the testimony and documents relied upon by the parties, or that it would be sufficient compliance with the statute for the parties to indicate in their briefs the portions of the record relied on by simply citing the page of this transcription where such portions may be found. If the Legislature had intended to substitute such a record for the printed record hitherto required, no such provision as we have quoted would have been placed in the section. Appellant has in a measure complied with the statute, but respondents not at all, and we might with propriety refuse to examine the transcript in aid of respondents. As the record is not of much length, and the issues are by no means complicated, we have in this instance undertaken to follow the directions of the briefs to find the evidence relied upon.

The court made the following findings: (1) That in the month of July, 1906, defendants employed plaintiff to teach the grammar school in Redwood district for the period of four months of the school year ending December 21, 1906, at the agreed price of $60 per month; (2) that plaintiff received $240 "as payment for said teaching for said four months of school in said district"; (3) that plaintiff has not been damaged in any sum. As conclusion of law the court found that defendants are entitled to judgment.

Plaintiff claimed in his complaint that he was employed to teach "for the period of nine months, the school year ending June 30 1907," and his contention now is that the evidence "discloses a contract * * * whereby plaintiff was employed to teach Redwood school for a period of eight months." He further contends that the court failed to find upon all the material issues. The principal question is whether plaintiff was employed for a period of four months or of eight months. Plaintiff testified that in July, 1906, defendant trustee Kirkpatrick called upon him and stated that he was directed by the trustees to find some one to teach their school, and thought he would come and talk with plaintiff about it. Plaintiff was at the time temporarily disabled physically. He testified: "Well, he said, supposing you agree to teach our school, and if you can't take—open the school early enough you can get some one in your place to start it. * * * I asked him how long a term of school there would be in that district. He said 8½ months last year, and we had a little money left over, and we thought that we would put it nine months this year. Well, I said, under these conditions I will undertake it, although I am pretty sure I will have to get a substitute for a while, but for a short time I will not accept it, for I might not be able to teach until after Christmas time, so if we can put in four months this fall and finish up in the spring all right. Then he said very well, if that suit you, it will suit me, or us rather. Try to get along as fast as you can do so, and in the meantime I will be down again or send some one to see you." It appeared that plaintiff hired a substitute to open the school and she taught for two months in his place, and following her plaintiff taught for two months, closing what was understood to be the fall term of the school on December 21, 1906, and was fully paid for this time. He testified that he was to take up the spring term in the February following. On February 9th plaintiff called upon trustee Watkins, "ready to open school on the 11th," and was informed that another teacher had been employed for the spring term. There was evidence that Kirkpatrick was not directed to employ a teacher for any definite time; that no records of the proceedings of the trustees were kept showing the employment of plaintiff; that the trustees other than Kirkpatrick understood plaintiff's employment to have been for the fall term; that plaintiff had made statements to the effect that he was hired to teach the fall term, to teach the school for four months; and that he had stated that he would not teach the spring term unless his wages were increased and the trustees and children of the school desired it. A witness testified: "He told me that he was only hired for four months, and that he should not teach unless the children and trustees wanted him." During the vacation plaintiff had taken a private class, and early in February returned to learn as to the spring term of the school. There had meantime been a change in the personnel of the board of trustees, one having died, and his successor having been appointed. Another witness met plaintiff just before the spring term of the school opened. She was asked what plaintiff said to her at that time, and answered: "I asked Mr. Roussin if he was going to take the school for the spring term for four months, and I thought he said he was not sure he would take it or not. They offered him a raise of wages to take the school, but he didn't know whether he would or not. He said he hated to refuse to take it, because Mr. Watkins and Mr. Kirkpatrick had been so good to him." There was some evidence tending to show that the teachers had previously been hired for the term, and that there were two terms, fall and spring terms. The evidence showed that there was a difference of understanding among the trustees as to the time for which plaintiff was engaged, Kirkpatrick holding that it was for the school year, and the others that it was for a single term as they understood the meaning of a term. There was evidence from which the court could have inferred that the engagement was for the fall term, and that plaintiff so understood it though he testified that the fact was otherwise, and hence the finding of the court cannot be disturbed.

Appellant complains that the court failed to find upon the issues stated in paragraphs 1, 2, 4, and 5 of the verified complaint. The allegations set forth in paragraphs 1, 4, and 5 were admitted by insufficient denials, and no finding was necessary thereon. Paragraph 2 alleged employment for the period of nine months. This was denied by the answer, which alleged as the fact that plaintiff was employed to teach for the period of four months and no longer. The court not only found that plaintiff was employed to teach for the period only of four months ending December 21, 1906, but it found that the only contract entered into between plaintiff and defendants "has been paid in full, for teaching the Redwood school for the term of four months ending December 21, 1906." This was sufficient.

Appellant claims error "in overruling the objections of plaintiff to the introduction of the testimony of the witness Margaret Watkins as shown on page 30 of the transcript." The objection is not directed to any particular portion of the testimony, some of which was undoubtedly admissible, and was not objected to. The testimony objected to related to certain declarations made by plaintiff in the presence of witness which tended to dispute plaintiff's testimony as to the period for which he had been employed, and was admissible for that purpose. The same may be said of the testimony of the witness Alice Hussey.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WOODS v. POTTER, Auditor of City of San Diego. (Civ. 467.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 3, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 2, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CITY COUNCILS —DUTIES OF MEMBERS.

Members of city councils occupy a position of trust, and are bound to the same measure of good faith towards their constituents that a trustee is to his cestui que trust, and the mere fact that a member of such a body acts as such in connection with any matter in which he is interested vitiates the transaction.

2. OFFICERS—PUBLIC OFFICERS—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

No contractual relations arise between an officer and the state by reason of the election or appointment of the former. There is no implied obligation to pay him for his services, and to recover he must show a right by law to compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Officers, § 132.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CHARTER OFFICERS—RIGHT TO COMPENSATION.

In order that a charter officer shall be entitled to compensation for his services, the burden is on him to show that either the charter which created the office, or the legislative or constitutional authority under which the charter was framed, attached to that office the right to receive pay for his services.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 357.]

4. SAME—MEMBERS OF COMMON COUNCIL.

The freeholders' charter under which the city of San Diego was organized (St. 1889, pp. 643-729, c. 22) took effect in May, 1889, and contains provisions relating to the compensation of all the charter officers of the city, except the members of the common council, as to whom it is silent. Article 2, c. 2, § 1, subd. 38, authorizes the council to make rules for the government of all employés, officers, etc., and to fix salaries and wages not otherwise provided by general laws or by the charter. Article 3, c. 9, § 1, reads: "The annual salaries of the officers and the compensation of the employés of the city shall be as follows: (Salary for mayor and other officers as to whom the amount to be received is fixed.) And all other officers and employés as may be fixed by the common council, and all salaries shall be payable monthly." In 1905 by an amendment of the charter the number of members of the council was changed from 27 to 9, but no change was made in the provisions of the charter relating to official salaries. Held, that the council had no power to create salaries for its members.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Petition by Percival E. Woods for writ of mandate against Daniel Potter, as auditor of the city of San Diego. From a judgment denying the writ, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Haines and Haines & Haines, for appellant. George Puterbaugh, City Atty., for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from a judgment denying a writ of mandate to compel the issuance of a salary warrant.

Defendant is auditor of the city of San Diego, and plaintiff was elected a member of the common council of that city at an election held April 2, 1907, the term of his office to commence May 6, 1907. The claim of plaintiff to salary is based upon Ordinance No. 2,814 of the city of San Diego, passed and adopted by the common council by a two-thirds vote after its disapproval by the mayor of the city. The ordinance was originally passed February 25th, disapproved by the mayor March 7th, and adopted by a two-thirds vote of the council on April 3, 1907, one day after the election of plaintiff, and by its terms was to take effect and be in force from and after May 6, 1907.

The freeholders' charter under which the city of San Diego is organized took effect the first Monday in May, 1889 (St. 1889, pp. 643-729, c. 20). It contains provisions relating to the compensation of all the charter officers of the city, except the members of the common council, as to whom the charter is silent. Ten officers are given fixed annual salaries, the salaries of two and the deputies of one are to be fixed by the common council, and the members of five boards are to serve without compensation. The right to create the salary in question is assumed to depend upon an exercise of a power vested in the common council by either one or both of two clauses of the charter, to wit: Subdivision 38 of section 1 of chapter 2 of article 2, which reads, "To make rules and regulations for the government of all servants, employés, officers, and departments, and to fix the fees and charges for all official services, and to fix salaries and wages not otherwise provided by general laws or by this charter"; or a clause in section 1, chapter 9 of article 3, which reads, "The annual salaries of the officers, and the compensation of the employés of the city shall be as follows: (Salary for mayor and other officers as to whom the amount to be received is fixed.) And all other officers and employés as may be fixed by the common council, and all salaries shall be payable monthly."

The petition alleges that prior to the passage of Ordinance No. 2,814 (from 1889 to 1907) "there has been no exercise of power by the common council of said city for or against providing, fixing, or establishing any salary or compensation for members of said common council." From this allegation it clearly appears that prior to the passage of Ordinance No. 2,814 there was not only no salary fixed which could be increased, but there was no salary or compensation attached to the office at all. The presumption arising from the absence of express authorization of compensation by the charter is strengthened by the rule of contemporaneous construction, and the presumption from 18 years acquiescence that it was not intended by the makers of the charter that the members of the common council should have any compensation for services. It further appears that in 1905 by an amendment of the charter the number of members of the council was changed from 27 to 9, but no change was made in the provisions of the charter relating to official salaries. This failure is significant, as this omission should have been supplied by an amendment to the charter. The propriety of this is apparent, when it is observed that the general clause under which the present ordinance is justified places the authority to create and fix such salaries in the hands of that body itself. The intention of the makers of the charter, as expressed by the original charter, cannot be affected by the mere reduction in the number of members of the council by the amendment of 1905.

To meet the effect of the clause in the charter requiring that "all official salaries provided for in this charter" shall be readjusted and fixed anew in the month of January, 1891, and every four years thereafter, appellant contends that as this is the first and original fixing of his compensation, and not a readjustment, or fixing again or anew, this clause has no application. If we accept this argument as having any weight, then it logically follows that the common council would (the first time) have the power to fix their compensation at any amount they desired, and the members of the council so fixing such salary might thereby become the recipients of their own bounty bestowed without limitation from the public treasury. The same line of reasoning is used in meeting respondent's claim that the ordinance is in violation of section 9 of article 11 of the Constitution. None of the cases cited by appellant to support this view consider the question whether or not the power which creates the office should also determine the right of the officer to compensation. In none was it held or contended that a subordinate body was authorized to create a salary for an office which owed its existence to a superior authority, nor do we think such authority could be implied. The two clauses of the charter relied upon here as granting the power relate generally to servants and employes, as well as officers of the corporation. The salary of no other charter officer of the city is dependent upon the existence of this power. The use of the word "officer" in the sense in which it is used in these clauses or either of them does not necessarily imply that a charter officer is intended. Patton v. Board of Health, 127 Cal. 395, 59 Pac. 702, 78 Am. St. Rep. 66.

Members of city councils occupy a position of trust, and are bound to the same measure of good faith toward their constituents that a trustee is to his cestui que trust. Andrews v. Pratt, 44 Cal. 309. The mere fact that a member of such a body acts as such in connection with any matter in which he is interested vitiates the transaction. Finch v. Riverside, 87 Cal. 597, 25 Pac. 765. It will be presumed that under such circumstances self-interest prevents the individual member from protecting the rights of the public against his own. Capital Gas Co. v. Young, 109 Cal. 140, 41 Pac. 869, 29 L. R. A. 463. The charter here in question prohibits members of the common council from being directly or indirectly interested in contracts whereby they may receive any money or profit from their own action taken in behalf of the city.

No contractual relations arise between an officer and the state by reason of the election or appointment of the former. There is no implied obligation to pay him for his services rendered. To recover he must show a right by law to compensation. Abbott on Municipal Corporations, § 685; Irwin v. Yuba Co., 119 Cal. 686, 52 Pac. 35. If the act authorizing the making of the city charter provides that the latter shall fix the compensation of the officers of a city, a provision in the charter fixing a maximum will not authorize the council to fix such a salary even within such maximum. Taylor v. City of Tacoma, 8 Wash. 174, 35 Pac. 584. If the officer is not satisfied with the compensation, he is not bound to hold the office or perform the duties thereof. Coyne v. Rennie, 97 Cal. 593, 32 Pac. 578.

In order, then, that a charter officer shall be entitled to compensation for his services, the burden is upon him to show that either the charter which created the office, or the legislative or constitutional authority under which the charter was framed, attached to that office the right to receive pay for his services. Such showing has not been made here. The power to "make rules and regulations for the government of all servants," etc., * * * "and to fix salaries and wages not otherwise provided by general law or by this charter," or the recital that "all other officers and employes as may be fixed by the common council," cannot be held to be a sufficient showing for this purpose. We have not overlooked the fact that in the section relating to official bonds there appears the clause "all salaried officers of this city, other than the mayor and members of the common council, must," etc. Conceding that in the interpretation of a charter containing an ambiguous statement as to the right of the members of the city council to a salary this clause might be considered in determining the intentions of the charter makers, it can have no application where the charter is devoid of any authorization whatever. Our conclusion in this regard rests upon the fact that it nowhere appears that the charter makers intended that the members of the common council should be compensated for their services.

While this view disposes of the case, there are other reasons which appear to us to justify the trial court in denying the writ asked for. The question of increase of compensation has been presented by both parties as if the time of the change or increase should be determined by the date of the passage of the ordinance. Our own Supreme Court has expressly said that the test of the time of increase is, "When did the law take effect?" Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 76, 82 Pac. 674. Those cases which construe constitutional inhibitions against an increase of salary similar to section 9 of article 11, upon the theory that its purpose is solely to prevent the possibility of an officer using his official position to obtain an increase of compensation after his election or his term begins, are distinguished by the opinion of the court in that case. The constitutional provision it is said was intended as well to avoid and prevent the abuses which may arise by reason of arrangements between candidates who are reasonably assured of election or appointment and the legislative power, if such arrangements be made to take effect after the election of such candidates, regardless of the time of the enactment. The date of the increase in this case according to this rule was May 6, 1907, and the discussions as to when the ordinance was enacted become unimportant.

If we were to accept the view of petitioner that he was entitled receive a salary which was not fixed or expressly provided for by the charter, such a claim against the city would have to be presented to and allowed by the auditing committee of the city before a warrant for it could issue. Sections 1 and 2, chap. 2, art. 6. Only monthly salaries fixed by the charter are excepted from the rule provided in these sections. The complaint does not allege any such presentation and allowance or rejection, and therefore, upon that theory, does not state a cause of action.

Judgment affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 35

PERRY v. J. NOONAN FURNITURE CO.
(Civ. 415.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 3, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—RECORD—REQUISITES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where it did not appear from the statement of case that a particular instruction which defendant assigned as error on appeal was not given at defendant's request, it would not be reviewed.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT—ORIGINAL HIRING—EXPIRATION OF TERM—CONTINUANCE OF EMPLOYMENT—PRESUMPTION.

Where an employé, hired at a fixed salary continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term of the original hiring without any new contract as to compensation, it is presumed that the parties intend the same compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 11.]

3. SAME—QUANTUM MERUIT.

Where an employé at a fixed salary continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term, the original contract controls as to the compensation the employé is entitled to receive, so that he cannot recover on a quantum meruit.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff for a considerable time had been employed by N. in his furniture business at a weekly salary of $27.50 and $32.50. N. having formed a corporation to continue the business, in which he owned nearly all the stock, plaintiff continued without a new contract to work as manager of the corporation, and drew from it $32.50 per week until he was discharged. Plaintiff having been appointed manager by the board of directors for a year, and discharged before the year expired, sued for the value of his services, and testified that they were reasonably worth $500 per month, and that the amount that he drew was only to cover living expenses. Held, that evidence that the services he performed as manager of the corporation were the same as those previously performed for N. was admissible to show that it was intended that he should be employed by the corporation on the same terms as those prescribed by the original contract.

5. CONTRACTS—PROOF—CONDUCT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1621, the terms of a contract may be manifested by conduct when not stated in words.

6. CORPORATIONS—ACTION FOR SERVICES—EVIDENCE.

In an action on quantum meruit against a corporation by an officer, evidence of the situation of the parties at the time, the relations, if any, in which they stood, of a business character or otherwise, is admissible to establish the understanding and intention of the parties.

7. WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

Where, in an action against a corporation for breach of an employment contract, plaintiff testified that his services were worth $500 per month, evidence that he had performed the same services for N. prior to the organization of a corporation for $32.50 per week was proper cross-examination.

8. CORPORATIONS—OFFICER'S SERVICES—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action against a corporation for breach of a general manager's contract of employment, a by-law of the corporation defining the duties of the general manager was admissible to show the nature of plaintiff's position.

9. EVIDENCE—VALUE OF SERVICES—EXPERTS—DISCRETION.

Determination of the qualification of a witness offered as an expert as to the value of services is largely within the discretion of the trial judge.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Donald E. Perry against the J. Noonan Furniture Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

See 1 Cal. App. 609, 82 Pac. 623.

R. M. Fitzgerald (Campbell, Fitzgerald, Abbott & Fowler, of counsel), for appellant. F. W. Sawyer and Curtis Hillyer, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment entered against it upon the verdict of a jury and the order of the court denying its motion for a new trial. The complaint is in two counts. In the first count plaintiff sought to recover a balance of $10,021.91 upon quantum meruit for services rendered by plaintiff to defendant, as its general manager, from November 18, 1898, to March 25, 1901. The second count alleges that plaintiff was duly elected general manager of defendant by its board of directors on the 18th day of February, 1901, for the term of one year from said day, and performed the duties of said position until the 25th day of March, 1901, from which last day defendant has refused to permit plaintiff to perform such duties. Upon this count plaintiff sought to recover the sum of $5,385 as the reasonable value of the services that would have been performed but for the prevention by defendant. The jury rendered a general verdict in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $2,500, for which judgment was accordingly entered for plaintiff.

Appellant objects to certain instructions given to the jury as misleading. Respondent insists that we cannot review the action of the court in this regard, for the reason that it does not appear from the record that the instructions now complained of were not given at the request of the defendant, and we think that this contention must be sustained. The statement of the case recites that at the conclusion of the testimony, and after argument by the respective counsel for each party, it was stipulated "that all instructions given by the court on its own motion were excepted to by both parties; that all instructions requested by plaintiff and given by the court were excepted to by the defendant; that all instructions requested by defendant and given by the court were excepted to by plaintiff." The statement sets forth about 20 folios of instructions, but nowhere is it shown which were given at the request of the plaintiff, which were given at the request of defendant, or which were given upon the court's own motion. As was said in Gray v. Eschen, 125 Cal. 1, 57 Pac. 664: "It is presumed that the proceedings in the court below were regular, and where error is claimed it is incumbent upon appellant to show it affirmatively." For this reason we cannot say that the court erred in the giving of the instructions. Gray v. Eschen, supra.

We think the court, in excluding certain testimony, erred to the prejudice of defendant. It was the contention of defendant that plaintiff had been employed by defendant during the period he worked for defendant at a stated salary, to wit, at the weekly salary of $27.50 per week, from November 18, 1898, to January 1, 1899, and at the weekly salary of $32.50 per week during the balance of the time, which had been fully paid him up to the time of his discharge, which occurred shortly after the death of Mr. Noonan. Plaintiff testified that his compensation had never been agreed upon or fixed, but that each week he had drawn $32.50 to cover his living expenses. He testified that the reasonable value of his services was $500 per month, and he sought to recover for his services at that rate. The J. Noonan Furniture Company was incorporated November 18, 1898. In this connection plaintiff, upon cross-examination, testified: "It was Mr. Noonan's idea and my idea to incorporate the J. Noonan Furniture Company. Prior to the time of the incorporation of the J. Noonan Furniture Company I worked for Mr. Noonan I think 10 or 11 years. I was an employé there." Thereupon he was asked by defendant's attorney, "What were your duties as an employé there?" Whereupon the attorney for the plaintiff said: "To this line of questions we will object to all of them, and take a ruling of the court and exception." The court sustained the objection, and defendant excepted. After plaintiff had testified that he had drawn $32.50 each week from the time of the incorporation, he was asked by defendant, "Isn't that the amount you received before incorporation?" Plaintiff objected, and the objection was sustained. Defendant excepted. Plaintiff testified that the assets of the J. Noonan Furniture Company came from J. Noonan. After plaintiff had testified that his duties did not change in character during the period covered by the action, he was asked on cross-examination, "On the 17th day of November, 1898, were not your duties just the same as they were on the 18th day of November, 1898?" To this question the court sustained the objection of plaintiff. In these rulings the court erred. It is manifest from the record that defendant sought to prove by the questions ruled out that plaintiff had, before the incorporation of the business of J. Noonan into the J. Noonan Furniture Company, worked for J. Noonan in the same capacity that he worked for the corporation thereafter, and at the same wages that he drew, and was paid after the incorporation of the business. This was proper cross-examination of the plaintiff upon his testimony that his compensation had never been fixed, and that the sums that he drew weekly were not in payment of a fixed salary, but simply for his living expenses.

Where an employé, hired at a fixed salary, continues in the same employment after the expiration of the term of the original hiring, without any new contract as to compensation, it is presumed that the parties intend the same compensation. Nicholson v. Patchin, 5 Cal. 475; Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42 Pac. 443; 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 16, and cases cited under note 3 on said page. In such a case there can be no recovery on a quantum meruit, as the terms of the original contract control. Nicholson v. Patchin, supra; Hermann v. Littlefield, supra; Grover & Baker Sewing Machine Co. v. Bulkley, 48 Ill. 189; Wallace v. Floyd, 29 Pa. 184, 72 Am. Dec. 620; Weise v. Milwaukee County, 51 Wis. 564, 8 N. W. 295; Ranck v. Albright, 36 Pa. 367; Ingalls v. Allen, 132 Ill. 170, 23 N. E. 1026. True, in the case at bar, after the 18th of November, 1898, plaintiff worked for a corporation, while before that date he worked for J. Noonan; but the record shows that the business of J. Noonan was on said day incorporated, and out of 1,000 shares of the capital stock 996 were issued to and owned by Mr. Noonan, while the remaining 4 shares were issued, one to plaintiff, one to J. E. Skelley, another employé of Mr. Noonan, one to D. E. Doyle, another employé of Mr. Noonan, and one to Frances Noonan, the wife of Mr. Noonan. And this was the corporation for which he worked, a corporation evidently formed as a convenient instrument for conducting the business of J. Noonan. If he had continued to work in the same employment for Mr. Noonan without a new agreement, it would be presumed as a matter of law that he continued to work for the compensation previously agreed upon. If it be conceded that this presumption would not obtain in this case as a matter of law, because of the change of the employer from an individual to a corporation practically owned by that individual, yet the circumstances were such as to make it proper to lay before the jury the conditions of the previous employment of plaintiff by Mr. Noonan. For if, notwithstanding the incorporation of the business under the name of the J. Noonan Furniture Company, plaintiff continued to work for the corporation in the same capacity in which he had previously worked for Mr. Noonan, and to draw weekly for over two years the same amount without objection and without asking for an increase, it might fairly be inferred that this was because the parties understood and intended that the original contract was in force. It was therefore competent to show what the original contract of employment was. The terms of a contract may be manifested by conduct when not stated in words. Civ. Code, § 1621. In action upon quantum meruit against corporations by an officer thereof, "the situation of the parties at the time, the relations, if any, in which they stood, of a business character or otherwise, are important to be known and considered, in order to arrive at a correct solution of the ultimate question involved." Barstow v. City R. R. Co., 42 Cal. 465; McCarthy v. Mt. Tecate L. & W. Co., 111 Cal. 328, 43 Pac. 956. Evidence as to the employment of plaintiff by Mr. Noonan, and the compensation paid, would have thrown light upon the conduct of plaintiff in taking a weekly payment of a fixed amount, and would have tended to make clear the understanding of the parties interested as to the compensation to be received by plaintiff for his services rendered to the corporation, which was the successor to the business of Mr. Noonan.

The questions ruled out were proper for another reason. Plaintiff had testified as an expert that the services performed by him were worth $500 per month. Upon this phase of his direct examination it was proper to show upon cross-examination that he had performed the same services for practically the same concern for a much less compensation than $500 per month.

The court did not err in admitting in evidence the by-law defining the duties of the general manager. Plaintiff had been appointed to the position of general manager, and it was proper to show what the duties of such position were, so that it could be determined from the evidence as to what he did do; whether he had properly and fully performed the duties of his position.

We cannot say that the court erred in overruling the objection to the testimony of plaintiff and Bartlett as to the value of plaintiff's services. Plaintiff showed himself sufficiently qualified to give an opinion as to the value of his services. While the qualifications of Bartlett were so meager that the court might well have ruled out his opinion, and such we think would have been the better practice, yet we cannot say that there was an abuse of discretion in allowing the testimony to go to the jury. The determination of the qualification of a witness offered as an expert must be left largely to the discretion of the trial judge. Howland v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 42 Pac. 983.

For errors in ruling out testimony above noted the judgment and order must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

ENGWICHT v. PACIFIC STATES LIFE
ASSUR. CO. et al. (WATKINSON, Intervener). (S. F. 4,642.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1908.
Rehearing Denied April 7, 1908.)

1. INSURANCE—MUTUAL ASSESSMENT COMPANIES—DEPOSIT WITH STATE TREASURER—RIGHT OF PARTICIPATION—“CONTRACT HOLDERS.”

Laws 1891, p. 126, c. 116, § 1, provides that every contract whereby a benefit may accrue to a party named therein on the death of a person insured thereunder, or for the payment of any sum dependent on the collection of assessments from persons holding similar contracts, shall be deemed a contract of mutual insurance on the assessment plan, and that such contracts must show that the liability of the insured thereunder are not limited to fixed premiums. Section 2 provides corporations may be formed to carry on the business of mutual insurance on the assessment plan, that no such corporation shall issue contracts of insurance till 200 persons have paid in $5,000, which sum shall be paid to the State Treasurer, and held in trust for the “contract holders” of such corporation. Held, the “contract holders” included only the holders of insurance contracts issued by the company within the scope of its authority under such law, and that a debenture issued by the company, in substance merely a promise of the company to pay at its office a certain sum, two years after date, with interest, and making reference to insurance only by a concluding provision giving the owner the option at its maturity to take a policy in lieu of the money, was not such an insurance contract.

2. SAME—PROCEDURE FOR REACHING FUND.

The money required by Laws 1891, p. 126, c. 116, § 2, to be deposited by a mutual assessment insurance company with the State Treasurer as a trust fund for holders of insurance contracts, can, on the company becoming insolvent, be reached only by an action in the nature of a creditor's bill, on the hearing of which, and with all the parties interested before the court, it may make an equitable distribution, and appoint a receiver to carry out the same; and an action at law in which the prayer is merely that the amount found due plaintiff from the company be declared a lien on and payable out of such fund, and that the treasurer be ordered to pay it, together with the appointment of a receiver by the court, with the command to all persons claiming any interest in the fund to appear and show cause within 60 days, it not a proper substitute procedure.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John A. Hosmer, Judge.

Action by George Engwicht against the Pacific States Life Assurance Company and Truman Reeves, Treasurer of the state, J. T. Watkinson intervening. From the judgment, said Treasurer of the state appeals. Reversed and remanded.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Geo. A. Sturtevant, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant. Aitken & Aitken, Jellett & Meyerstein, and M. B. Kellogg, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff brought his action as a policy holder against the defendant Life Assurance Company to have determined the amount due him under his policy, to have that amount declared a lien upon the fund of $5,000 on deposit with the defendant Reeves as State Treasurer of the state of California, and to have judgment that the State Treasurer pay the same out of the trust fund of $5,000 in his possession. The defendant assurance company is one of those organized under the provisions of the statutes of 1891 (page, 126, c. 116), and, following the life history of most of the companies of its kind, became, as is alleged, insolvent; its only assets being the $5,000 trust fund in the hands of the treasurer. J. H. T. Watkinson filed his complaint in intervention, alleging that he was the owner and holder of a certain debenture issued to him by the company. He alleged the failure of the life assurance company to comply with the conditions of its contract as evidenced by the debenture, further averred the assurance company was insolvent and had no surplus to be apportioned, that its only asset was the trust fund of $5,000 in the possession of the State Treasurer, and that he was entitled to resort to this fund for the payment of his demand. He, in turn, sought judgment for the amount due him under his debenture, and prayed that a receiver be appointed to take possession of the fund in the hands of the State Treasurer and to dispose of it under the directions of the court. The court found in accordance with the allegations of plaintiff's complaint and of the complaint in intervention, adjudged plaintiff to be entitled to the sum of $236, and the intervenor to be entitled to the sum of $848, decreed that these sums be first and preferred charges against the trust fund of $5,000 held by the treasurer, appointed a receiver, directed the treasurer to pay the $5,000 to the receiver, and directed that the receiver, after receiving the fund, give due and proper notice requiring all persons having or claiming any interest in the fund to be and appear herein within 60 days, and show what right, title, or interest they or each of them have or claim to have in and to said fund. From this judgment the Treasurer of the state appeals.

The rights of the intervenor may, with advantage, first be considered and disposed of. The law of 1891, under which this corporation was organized, received detailed consideration at the hands of this court in San Francisco Savings Union v. Long, 123 Cal. 107, 55 Pac. 708. So far as concerns the right of this intervenor, the following extracts from that law are made:

"Section 1. Every contract whereby a benefit may accrue to a party or parties therein named upon the death or physical disability of a person insured thereunder, or for the payment of any sums of money dependent in any degree upon the collection of assessments or dues from persons holding similar contracts, shall be deemed a contract of mutual insurance upon the assessment plan. Such contracts must show that the liabilities of the insured thereunder are not limited to fixed premiums.

"Sec. 2. Corporations may be formed * * * to carry on the business of mutual insurance upon the assessment plan. * * * No such corporation shall issue contracts of insurance until at least 200 persons * * * have paid to the Treasurer * * * the sum of $5,000. This sum shall be invested in bonds or securities. * * * Said bonds or securities * * * shall be placed * * * with the State Treasurer, and the principal sum shall be held in trust for the contract holders of such corporation. * * *

Section 1, above quoted, contemplates a scheme of insurance against accident, disability, or death, whereby the insured shall pay no fixed annual premium, but shall be liable in the proportion which his insurance bears to the insurance of his fellows holding like insurance. Hence the provision that these contracts of insurance must show that the liabilities of the insured are not limited to fixed premiums, but will be as much or as little as may be necessary to make good the insurer's outlay whenever the insurer is called upon to pay a claim. The provision of section 2 that the $5,000 fund deposited with the State Treasurer shall be held in trust for the contract holders of such corporation means, first, that when the contingency arises whereby resort may equitably be had, to this fund, all contract holders will be entitled to share ratably in it; and, second, that "contract holders" within the meaning of the section are not the general creditors of the company, though the company's debts to them may be evidenced by contract, but are the holders of insurance contracts issued by the company within the scope of its authority under this law.

The first and determinative question to be answered as to this intervenor is whether or not he is such a contract holder. The reading of his contract compels an answer in the negative. The debenture, which is his contract with the company and upon which he bases his right to share in the fund as a contract holder, provided that the assurance company promised to pay at its office $800 two years after date, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. This in its essence was the contract. True, the contract was confused, clouded, and befogged by other provisions usually found in the contracts of companies such as this, but none the less, stripped of these obscuring veils, such, and such only, was the contract. To illustrate, the debenture provided that the purchaser (called the subscriber) should at the maturity of the obligation be entitled, besides principal and interest, to a surplus then to be apportioned. But it is impossible that there could be a surplus in any true sense to an assurance corporation operating upon the mutual assessment plan. Attached to this so-called debenture are two interest coupons, reciting that the assurance company will pay the beneficiary under this debenture $48 (the amount of the annual interest) at its office, subject to the provisions of the contract.

Hereby, as well as by the title "debenture," there is an attempt to clothe the transaction with something of the characteristics of a bond. Yet, as a bond, it lacks the essentials of carrying a lien or mortgage upon any of the property of the promisor. Numerous other provisions are supposed to be added to this contract by reference. Thus it is declared that "the privilege and provisions placed by the company on the next page and in the interest coupons hereto attached are conditions precedent to and are part of this contract as fully as if they were recited at length over the seal and signature hereto affixed." A consideration of these provisions and conditions demonstrate that, touching this contract, they are but for purposes of confusion only. There is, for example, a nonforfeiture clause. But there can be no possible forfeiture against a man who has fulfilled every obligation in his contract by lending to another a given amount of money payable with interest at a specified time. There is a provision also for reinstatement which declares that after this debenture has been in force one year it may be reinstated within six months after first default in the payment of any installment. But there were no installments to be paid. There could be no default, and this clause also serves but to "darken counsel by words without knowledge." Again, in the "subscription" which is made a part of this contract, it is provided that the debenture subscribed for is to be issued on the mutual plan of participation in profits and the installment payments are not limited to fixed premiums. Here is an attempt to comply with, and, in the same sentence, an evasion of, the provision of section 1 of the act of 1891, to the effect that such contracts must show that the liabilities of the insured thereunder are not limited to fixed premiums. In the first place, the holder of such a debenture is not an insured at all, and, in the second place, having simply loaned his money to the company, he is not liable for any premiums whatsoever, whether fixed or to be determined by assessment. Only in the last clause at the end of this contract is there the slightest reference to insurance, and that is found in the following sentence: "At maturity, if the subscriber be then living and if the proceeds of the debenture are not withdrawn in cash, the entire value of the debenture and surplus may be converted into an annuity for life or may (subject to a satisfactory certificate of good health) be converted into a paid-up policy of life insurance." But this may not, by the most liberal construction, be distorted into a life insurance policy. It is merely an option extended to the owner of the debenture to take a policy in lieu of the money if he shall so desire. It follows herefrom that the intervener has no claim upon the fund until the claims, of all the contract creditors have been satisfied.

Coming now to the complaint of plaintiff, it will be remembered that the appointment of a receiver is not sought, the prayer of the complaint being merely that the amount found due to plaintiff be declared a lien upon and payable out of the $5,000 fund, and that Truman Reeves, as treasurer of the state, be ordered to pay the judgment out of such fund. This form of action draws support from the case of Kruger v. Life and Annuity Association, 106 Cal. 98, 39 Pac. 213. But the views expressed in that case are in irreconcilable conflict with those set forth in the later case of Savings Union v. Long, supra. It is there held, in brief, that the $5,000 fund is a trust fund to be ratably distributed amongst all the claimants entitled to share in it. Such a distribution cannot be had except in an action in the nature of a creditors' bill, upon the hearing of which, and with all the parties interested in the fund before it, the court may make equitable distribution of the fund, and appoint a receiver to carry that distribution into effect. The method adopted by the court in this instance, of appointing a receiver with the command to all persons claiming any interest in the fund to appear and show cause within 60 days, is not a permissible substitute for the procedure prescribed in Savings Union v. Long. No doubt may be entertained of the right of the plaintiff under these circumstances to invoke the aid of equity in enforcing his demand, but it will be a simple matter for the court, with the corporation defendant and its books before it, to cause a determination to be made of any and all other persons entitled to share in the trust fund, and invite or compel their presence and participation by interpleader in the action.

For which reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the foregoing views.

HIBERNIA SAVINGS & LOAN SOCIETY v. FARNHAM et al. (S. F. 4,427.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1908.

Rehearing Denied June 11, 1908.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—COMPUTATION OF PERIOD—DEATH OF PARTY LIABLE.

A cause of action against a mortgagor having arisen after her death, and when no administration on her estate existed, limitations did not begin to run until letters of administration were issued.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 431-438.]

2. SAME.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, requiring an action on a written contract to be brought within four years from the accrual of the cause of action, an action to foreclose a mortgage given by decedent and her husband was barred as to his liability as joint maker of the note and co-mortgagee after four years after the maturity of the note.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 118-127.]

3. SAME—SUBSEQUENT GRANTEES.

After decedent conveyed land to her husband they mortgaged it to plaintiff, and subsequently the husband conveyed to defendant, both deeds being recorded after plaintiff's mortgage. Held, that defendant is entitled to whatever protection the statute of limitations would have afforded the husband, purely as subsequent grantee, but nothing more.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 657, 658.]

4. SAME—IGNORANCE OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

Under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 1214, a conveyance by decedent to her husband, made before they mortgaged the land to plaintiff, was void as to the mortgage, the mortgage being recorded first and the mortgagee being such in good faith and for a valuable consideration, such invalidity continuing until the mortgagee acquired notice of the conveyance; and hence an action to foreclose the mortgage, brought within four years after the date when the deed was recorded, the mortgagee not having had previous actual notice of the conveyance, was not barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 337, requiring an action on a written contract to be brought within four years from the accrual of the cause of action.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR — REVIEW — SUBSEQUENT APPEALS—LAW OF CASE.

After decedent deeded land to her husband they mortgaged it to plaintiff, and subsequently he deeded it to defendant, the deeds being recorded after the mortgage. Plaintiff sued to foreclose, and judgment against defendant was reversed because there was no finding upon his plea of limitations nor of facts from which such finding might be inferred. On a subsequent appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, there were findings based upon appropriate allegations of the amended complaint of want of notice to plaintiff of the conveyance to decedent's husband, until the deed was recorded, which was within three months of the bringing of this action. Held, that the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply to the question of limitations, entitling defendant to judgment, since the element of want of notice of the conveyance was essential, to meet the plea of limitations, under Civ. Code, § 1214, making conveyances, excepting certain leases, void against a subsequent mortgagee in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose mortgage is first duly recorded, and was lacking in the facts found on the former trial.

6. SAME—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS—QUESTION NOT RAISED IN OPENING BRIEF.

Points made by appellant for the first time in his closing brief will not be considered, unless good reason appears for the failure to make them in the opening brief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3097.]

7. MORTGAGES—NOTICE OF PRIOR DEED—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage, defended by a subsequent grantee claiming under a deed executed before, but recorded after the mortgage, the burden was on plaintiff to show his want of notice of the deed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society against John Farnham, substituted for P. Boland, as Annie F. Lennon's administrator, and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James H. Boyer, for appellants. Tobin & Tobin, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to foreclose the lien of a mortgage executed on February 21, 1893, by Annie F. Lennon and her husband, James H. Lennon, to plaintiff, to secure the payment of a promissory note of the same date for $400, and the interest that accrued thereon. The appeal is from the decree of foreclosure, which fixes the amount due, directs the sale of the mortgaged premises to pay such amount, costs, and expenses of sale, orders judgment against the administrator for any deficiency remaining after such sale, and bars and forecloses the defendants, from the delivery of the commissioner's deed, of and from all equity of redemption and claim in said mortgaged premises. Boland having died, John Farnham has been appointed administrator of said estate, and substituted in place of Boland as defendant.

The note was due and payable, by its terms, one year after its date, that is, on February 21, 1894. The mortgage was acknowledged and certified so as to entitle it to be recorded, and it was recorded on February 23, 1893. Prior to the maturity of the note, and on or about March 29, 1893, said Annie F. Lennon died intestate. No proceeding for administration of her estate was commenced until the year 1900, when, on March 1, 1900, letters of administration of such estate were issued to P. Boland. Thereupon plaintiff presented for allowance the claim based on said mortgage, and the administrator, having rejected the same, commenced this action for foreclosure on May 10, 1900. Prior to the execution of said note and mortgage, viz., on January 9, 1892, said Annie F. Lennon had executed and delivered to said James H. Lennon a deed conveying to him the property covered by the mortgage, and on January 27, 1900, said J. H. Lennon executed and delivered to defendant James H. Boyer a deed of the same property. Neither of these deeds was recorded until January 31, 1900, when they were placed on record. Plaintiff had no knowledge or notice whatever of such deed from Annie F. Lennon to James H. Lennon or the deed from James H. Lennon to James H. Boyer, or that either of them ever claimed any interest in the property, until the date of such recordation. The record in this action establishes that at the time of the execution of the note and mortgage, the mortgaged property was, except for the deed of January 9, 1892, the separate property of Annie F. Lennon, and the title stood of record in her name until January 31, 1900. J. H. Lennon's only interest in such property was such as he acquired by said deed of January 9, 1892. The foregoing facts were alleged in the amended complaint, and are established by the findings of the trial court. The defendants demurred to such complaint on the ground that the alleged cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 337, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and, their demurrer having been overruled, pleaded such section as a defense in their answer. The trial court further found that said action is not barred by the provisions of any statute of limitation. No claim is made by defendants that the action is barred as to the estate of Annie F. Lennon; the rule being well settled in this state that the statute of limitations does not begin to run when no administration exists on the decedent's estate at the time the cause of action accrued. Smith v. Hall, 19 Cal. 85; In re Bullard, 116 Cal. 355, 48 Pac. 219. As against the estate the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the issuance of letters of administration. March 1, 1900, and this action was commenced May 10, 1900. So far as the estate was concerned, therefore, the judgment was clearly correct.

1. It is insisted that on the admitted facts plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations as to defendant Boyer, whose rights in the property are based solely on the deed of conveyance made by J. H. Lennon to him in January, 1900. The statute providing that an action upon any contract in writing executed in this state must be brought within four years from the time the cause of action accrues (Code Civ. Proc. § 337), there can be no doubt that defendants claim that plaintiff's cause of action against J. H. Lennon as a joint maker of the note and a co-mortgagor with Annie F. Lennon became barred on February 21, 1898, is well founded. But this is an immaterial matter in this case. No recovery was sought or given against J. H. Lennon or his grantee, Boyer, based upon any liability of said Lennon as a maker of the note or mortgage. They were made parties defendant solely upon the theory that they were subsequent grantees, claiming under a conveyance from the mortgagor, Annie F. Lennon, recorded subsequent to the recording of plaintiff's mortgage and prior to the commencement of action to foreclose the same; the sole object being to foreclose their rights under such conveyance. At the trial the action was dismissed as to said J. H. Lennon, because of his conveyance to Boyer, and the fact that he no longer claimed any interest in the property. If he had not conveyed the property and had remained a party defendant, the effect of the statute of limitations, if pleaded by him, would have been simply to protect him against personal judgment for any deficiency remaining due after sale of the premises, unless the plaintiff's cause of action against him as a subsequent grantee was barred by the statute. And whatever protection the statute of limitations would have afforded him purely as a subsequent grantee his successors in interest are also entitled to. But they are entitled to nothing more. Section 1214, Civ. Code, provides: "Every conveyance of real property, other than a lease for a term not exceeding one year, is void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the same property, or any part thereof, in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded, and as against any judgment affecting the title, unless such conveyance shall have been duly recorded prior to the record of notice of the action." The term "conveyance," as used in this section, embraces every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged, or incumbered. Civ. Code, § 1215. Under the plain terms of section 1214, Civ. Code, the conveyance of January 9, 1892, by Annie F. Lennon to James H. Lennon, which was not recorded until the year 1900, was void as against plaintiff's mortgage, recorded February 23, 1893; plaintiff being, as the findings establish, a mortgagee in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Such invalidity of the conveyance as to plaintiff continued certainly until it had notice thereof, which was not until the date of its record, January 31, 1900. In view of the explicit language of section 1214, Civ. Code, the utmost that Boyer can reasonably claim is that the conveyance to James H. Lennon became effectual so far as plaintiff's mortgage was concerned on the day when such conveyance was recorded; plaintiff not having acquired actual knowledge thereof before such record. Then, if at all, he became a subsequent grantee, and the statute of limitations commenced to run in his favor as such. A conclusion that would import validity to such a conveyance, as against such mortgagee, prior to actual knowledge by the mortgagee thereof, and prior to recordation would be in the very teeth of the statute. The case of Filipini v. Trobock, 134 Cal. 441, 66 Pac. 587, is authority for the proposition that the recording of such conveyance from Annie F. Lennon on January 31, 1900, gave to it, as against the mortgagee, who had no prior actual notice thereof, the effect of a conveyance executed by the grantor on that day. Speaking of a deed executed prior to the mortgage, and recorded thereafter, the court said: "But we think there can be as little doubt that, after she had recorded the deed from Antonio to her deceased husband, her position as successor to her husband became, and continued to be, no better and no worse than if the deed had been made the day it was recorded. By recording the deed she gave the same notice to the mortgagee of her rights that would have been given by the record of a deed of that date to her, or to any other person, and whatever rights accrue to any purchaser of mortgaged premises by the recording of his deed accrued to her." The opinion in this case clearly indicates the conclusion compelled by the express terms of section 1214, Civ. Code, viz., that the statute of limitations cannot begin to run in favor of one claiming under an unrecorded conveyance as against a mortgage given subsequent to the execution and delivery of the conveyance, for a valuable consideration, which is first duly recorded, in the absence of actual notice of such conveyance to the holder of the mortgage until such conveyance is recorded. We are, of course, not speaking of a case where the cause of action for the debt secured is barred as to the debtor, but only of a case where the cause of action is not barred as to the debtor, in this case Annie F. Lennon, and the protection of the statute is sought by one whose only claim is ownership of the land subject to the mortgage, under a conveyance executed by such debtor prior to the mortgage. In such a case, actual notice of his claim or the constructive notice afforded by the recording of his conveyance or other instrument forming the basis thereof is essential to bring him within the rule of Wood v. Goodfellow, 43 Cal. 185; Watt v. Wright, 63 Cal. 202, 5 Pac. 91; Filipini v. Trobeck, supra; Brandenstein v. Johnson, 140 Cal. 29, 73 Pac. 744; Vandall v. Teague, 142 Cal. 471, 76 Pac. 35; Cal. Title Ins., etc., Co. v. Miller, 3 Cal. App. 54, 84 Pac. 453. We are satisfied that the action was not barred by the statute as against Boyer. We have discussed this question upon the assumption that the general finding that the cause of action was not barred is a mere conclusion based on the specific facts found, which fully dispose of the issues as to the statute, raised by defendants' answer.

2. Defendant Boyer contends that the doctrine of the law of the case is applicable on the question of the statute of limitations, and requires a ruling in his favor thereon. This contention is based on a decision of this court on a former appeal in this case from a judgment against him. 145 Cal. 626, 79 Pac. 305. The judgment against Boyer was there reversed, for the reason that there was no finding upon his plea of the statute of limitations, "nor of facts from which such finding may be inferred." It was said that a finding in plaintiff's favor on sufficient evidence upon the issue of the statute would have been sufficient to support the judgment. The all-important distinction between that appeal and this is that we now have findings, based on appropriate allegations of the amended complaint, of want of notice on the part of plaintiff of the conveyance from Annie F. Lennon to James H. Lennon until the date of its recordation, January 31, 1900, a date within three months of the commencement of this action. This was essential under section 1214, Civ. Code, to meet the plea of the statute, and this element was lacking in the facts found by the trial court on the former trial. The former decision, therefore, does not assist Boyer on this appeal.

These are the only points made for reversal in the opening brief of defendants. Some additional points are made for the first time in their closing brief. We are not disposed to look with favor upon a point so made, unless good reason appears for the failure to make it in the opening brief. This practice is not fair to a respondent, and tends to delay the final disposition of appeals. This court has heretofore said that while it is undoubtedly at liberty to decide a case upon any points that its proper disposition may seem to require, whether taken by counsel or not, an appellant should, under the rules, make the points on which he relies in his opening brief, and not reserve them for his reply, and that the court may properly consider them as waived unless so made. Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431; Pheps v. Mayers, 126 Cal. 549, 58 Pac. 1048. This should undoubtedly be the rule where no good reason appears for the omission to make the point in the opening brief, and it does not appear that the appellant would be unjustly affected by a refusal to consider it. We think that it is properly applicable here. One of the points so made is that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the plaintiff was without notice of the prior deed from Annie F. Lennon to J. H. Lennon at the time it took the mortgage and loaned the money secured thereby, and that the trial court improperly refused to strike out certain evidence given on behalf of plaintiff on that issue. It is true, as contended by defendants, that the burden of proof was on plaintiff to show the negative fact of want of notice (Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 413, 78 Pac. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61, and cases there cited), and it is also true that the evidence on this point is not as full and complete as it might have been. But there was competent evidence showing want of notice on the part of officers of plaintiff having to do with the passing of the title and the paying to the mortgagors of the money loaned, and there was no pretense of an attempt on the part of the defendants to show knowledge by or notice to any officer or employee of plaintiff of the unrecorded conveyance. The record is such as to make it practically certain that there was no knowledge by plaintiff of the unrecorded conveyance until it was placed of record, and this is so even if the incompetent evidence quoted in the closing brief be disregarded. Under these circumstances, we believe the objections should be considered as waived by the failure of defendants to make them in their opening brief. The other point so made was that the court failed to specifically find on the issue raised by the denial of the allegations that James H. Lennon "joined in the execution of said note and mortgage as the husband of said Annie F. Lennon solely, and not as the owner of any interest in said real property." It is sufficient to say that findings on other issues fully cover this matter.

The judgment is affirmed.

(153 Cal. 537)

In re BAKER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,793.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1908.
Rehearing Denied June 11, 1908.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD—APPOINTMENT BY WILL — STATUTORY PROVISIONS — CONSENT AFTER TESTATOR'S DEATH—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Civ. Code, § 241, providing that a guardian of the person or estate, or of both, of a child, may be appointed by a father by will or by deed to take effect upon the death of the parent, with the written consent of the mother, the consent given by a mother after the father's death to a testamentary appointment by the father is sufficient.

2. JUDGMENT—FINDINGS OF JURISDICTIONAL FACTS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A finding of a court as to the residence of a minor in guardianship proceedings is conclusive as a jurisdictional fact, unless it was obtained by fraud or mistake, and, where the state of the record on appeal is not such as to permit a review of the evidence, a finding as to the residence of the minor cannot be questioned.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 912-915, 937-939.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—OBJECTION NOT TAKEN BELOW — SPECIFIC OBJECTION — NECESSITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 648, requiring an exception to a decision because of the insufficiency of the evidence to specify the particulars of the insufficiency, where the bill of exceptions on appeal from guardianship proceedings contains no specifications of particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient to justify a finding as to the jurisdictional question of the minor's residence, the evidence on that question cannot be reviewed nor its sufficiency considered.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Petition by Page E. T. Baker to revoke letters of guardianship, dismiss the guardianship proceedings, and set aside an order fixing the amount of the guardian's bond. From an adverse order, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Kearney, for appellant. M. K. Harris, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to revoke letters of guardianship and set aside an order fixing the amount of guardian's bond. It involves the validity of the appointment and qualification of a testamentary guardian.

The ward is the son of the appellant and her former husband, Westwood J. Baker. The parents were divorced on April 1, 1898, and thereafter lived apart; the father residing in Fresno county and the mother in San Francisco. The father died on July 4, 1905, leaving a considerable estate, which he disposed of by will. The will, which was admitted to probate on August 14, 1905, in the superior court of Fresno county, contained this provision: "I hereby appoint L. O. Stephens of the city of Fresno, guardian of the person and estate of my said son, Joseph Westwood Baker." The estate of the child consisted entirely of property held in trust by the said Stephens, part of it derived from the father, which was to remain in trust until the child became 25 years of age, and the remainder by devise from one Sarah W. Garrett to remain in trust until he was of age. All of it was situated in Fresno county and a considerable portion of it was real estate. The fact that the will purported to appoint Stephens the guardian of her son coming to the knowledge of the appellant, she employed an attorney in Fresno to represent her in the matter, and instructed him that she desired to retain the custody and guardianship of the person of her son. Thereupon it was agreed between her attorney and the attorney for Stephens that Stephens should waive the guardianship of the person and yield to her the custody and control of the child, but that he should be the guardian of the estate. Stephens then filed his application in the superior court of Fresno county, reciting the testamentary appointment aforesaid, and declining the guardianship of the person of the child, alleging that the minor was a resident of Fresno county, and asking the court to fix the amount of his bond as guardian and trustee of said estate, and to direct the clerk to issue letters of guardianship to him. The court made an order that this application be heard on September 11, 1905. This application and order were served on the appellant's attorney and by him delivered to her. She then signed and filed a writing as follows: "I hereby consent and agree that L. O. Stephens may be the trustee and guardian of the estate of said minor, but not of his person." Upon the hearing the court made an order fixing the amount of the bond of Stephens as guardian and trustee, and directing the issuance of letters of guardianship of the estate to him. Stephens filed the required bond, took the oath, and received the letters accordingly. Afterwards, on March 8, 1906, the mother filed in the said court a petition to revoke the order and the letters so issued and to dismiss the guardianship proceedings. The appeal is from the order denying this petition.

The provisions of the statute, applicable herein, relating to testamentary guardians are as follows: "A guardian of the person or estate, or of both, of a child born, or likely to be born, may be appointed by will or by deed, to take effect upon the death of the parent appointing: (1) If the child be legitimate, by the father, with the written consent of the mother; or by either parent, if the other be dead or incapable of consent. (2) If the child be illegitimate, by the mother." Civ. Code, § 241. "The superior court of each county, when it appears necessary or convenient, may appoint guardians for the persons and estates, or either of them, of minors who have no guardian legally appointed by will or by deed, and who are inhabitants or residents of the county, or who reside without the state and have estate within the county." Code Civ. Proc. § 1747. "Every testamentary guardian must qualify and has the same powers and must perform the same duties with regard to the person and estate of his ward as guardians appointed by the court, except so far as his powers and duties are legally modified, enlarged or changed by the will by which such guardian was appointed and except that such guardian need not give bond unless directed to do so by the court from which the letters of guardianship issue." Code Civ. Proc. § 1758.

The appellant contends that the testamentary appointment of Stephens was ineffectual because she did not consent thereto during the lifetime of the father, and that the proceedings in the superior court of Fresno county are void, for the reason, as alleged, that the minor was not at that time or afterwards a resident or inhabitant of Fresno county, but lived and resided in San Francisco, and that, therefore, the superior court of Fresno county was without jurisdiction. A deed may be made, to take effect immediately upon its execution, or, within certain limitations, at any time afterwards, even after the death of the grantor. A will can have no effect whatever until the testator is dead. Hence it is probable that the phrase "to take effect upon the death of the parent appointing," added as a qualification to the introductory paragraph of section 241 of the Civil Code, was intended to refer only to appointments made by deed. We do not, however, regard this clause as important. By the first subdivision of the section, the mother's consent in writing is required in all cases, if she is living. This implies that her consent is to be given at some time after the appointment has become otherwise effectual—that is, after the death of the father—since, until that time, it could not be known that she would survive, and it cannot be doubted that an appointment by the father either by will or by deed, to which the mother had not in her lifetime consented, would be effectual without such consent, if he survived her. Her consent is essential only in case she survives. The father's appointment is ineffective before his death; is, in fact, no appointment at all until his death. It is therefore only upon his death that her consent becomes of any importance. Furthermore, the will not only does not speak, as it is said, until the death of the testator, but it is wholly inoperative before it is probated, and the appointment of a guardian by will cannot be said to have been made until the validity of the will making it has been thus established. Hence, if she survives, but dies before probate, without executing any consent to the appointment, or making an appointment herself, the father's testamentary appointment would obviously be valid, although not confirmed by the consent of the mother. In view of these contingencies, it is the most reasonable construction of the statute to hold that her consent to a testamentary appointment may be effectually given after the father's death as well as before. There can be no hardship in this result. The appointment, if she survive, is of no effect if she dissents, and by the same subdivision which gives her this power of veto, she being the survivor, may withhold her consent and may appoint whom she chooses, or may herself apply to the court for appointment under section 1747, of the Code of Civil Procedure. She is then in control of the entire matter. We are therefore of the opinion that the appointment was valid and became effectual upon the death of the father and the subsequent written consent of the mother manifested by the writing above mentioned.

The argument that the superior court of Fresno county was without jurisdiction to make the order directing Stephens to give a bond as testamentary guardian is based on the assumption that at the time that order was made and the proceeding therefor instituted the minor was not a resident of Fresno county. In the original proceeding the petition of Stephens alleged that the minor was then a resident of Fresno county. Upon the hearing of that petition, the court found this allegation to be true and so recited in the order directing and fixing the amount of the bond. This finding as to the jurisdictional fact is conclusive unless it was obtained by fraud or mistake. In the present proceeding to set aside that order there is an attempt to allege that this finding as to the residence of the minor was obtained by fraud upon the court and upon the present petitioner, Page E. T. Baker, the mother of the minor. The court finds that this allegation is untrue, and that there was no fraud in obtaining the former order. It is contended that this finding is contrary to the evidence. The record before us, however, does not enable us to review the finding of the court below on that subject and it is therefore conclusive. The bill of exceptions contains no specifications of particulars wherein the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings. Such specification is necessary in order to authorize this court to review the evidence and consider its sufficiency to support the order. Code Civ. Proc. § 648; Winterburn v. Chambers, 91 Cal. 185, 27 Pac. 658; Meades v. Lasar, 92 Cal. 227, 28 Pac. 935; Estate of Depeaux, 118 Cal. 290, 50 Pac. 387; Estate of Behrens, 130 Cal. 418, 62 Pac. 603. The finding is therefore conclusive as to the residence of the minor, and establishes jurisdiction upon any theory of the law as to the place of jurisdiction. Section 1758 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes the court to make the order in question, is silent as to the county in which the proceeding must be instituted. Whether jurisdiction would lie in the county where the minor resided, the county where the will was probated, the county where the property was situated, the county where the guardian resided, or in that one of these counties first acquiring jurisdiction, or whether section 1747, providing by its terms only for jurisdiction in cases of guardians appointed by the court (Estate of Taylor, 131 Cal. 180, 63 Pac. 345) can be construed to apply to testamentary guardians, and place the jurisdiction in the county where the minor resides or is an inhabitant, are questions not here presented, since Fresno county upon the record before us answers to all the descriptions. We express no opinion upon the subject. In view of the conclusions we have reached upon the merits, we think that the alleged errors of law occurring at the trial and so very briefly discussed by counsel are unimportant. It is unnecessary to consider them.

There are some indications that this petition was intended as an application, under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside the previous order as a proceeding taken against the appellant through her surprise, inadvertence, and excusable neglect. Although there is no specification of the insufficiency of the evidence, we have examined the bill of exceptions on this point, and find the evidence wholly insufficient to establish any abuse of discretion on the part of the court below in denying her application, or to show that she was not fully advised of the facts and of her rights, assuming the application to be for relief under that section.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

AMERICAN DE FOREST WIRELESS TELEGRAPH CO. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (S. F. 4,511.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1908.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS—"PERSON."

A corporation, though organized under the laws of another state, is a "person" within Const. U. S. Amend. 14, providing that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law, or deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 730.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5322, 5335; vol. 8, p. 7752.]

2. CORPORATIONS — FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—EXTENT OF LEGAL EXISTENCE—COMITY.

Foreign corporations have no legal existence beyond the bounds of the state or sovereignty by which they are created, and can exercise none of the functions and privileges conferred by their charters in any other state or country, except by its comity and consent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 2487-2505.]

3. SAME—RIGHT TO MAINTAIN ACTIONS IN FOREIGN STATE.

There is no rule of common law which forbids a corporation organized to do business in one state from doing business in another, and, in the absence of statutory inhibition, the general comity existing among the states will permit a foreign corporation which has entered California and done business therein to maintain and defend actions arising out of such business.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 2487-2505.]

4. SAME—STATUTES CURTAILING RIGHTS OF FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

A statute which purports to curtail the privilege of foreign corporations to maintain or defend actions in the state, and to impose conditions upon compliance with which alone they may be permitted to do so, will not be construed to extend beyond the plain meaning of its terms, considered in connection with its object and purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 2510-2519.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—FOREIGN CORPORATION—RIGHT TO DEFEND ACTIONS IN STATE.

Civ. Code, § 408, provides that every foreign corporation doing business in the state shall file with the Secretary of State a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, etc. Section 410 declares that no foreign corporation which shall fail to comply with section 408 can maintain any action in the courts of the state until it has complied therewith. Held, that the sections do not forbid a foreign corporation which has failed to comply with their provisions from defending an action brought against it in the courts of this state, and in such an action where a foreign corporation's answer is stricken out for failure to comply with section 408, and judgment rendered against it on default for that cause alone, the judgment is void as denying it the equal protection of the laws, and depriving it of its property without due process of law.

Certiorari by the American De Forest Wireless Telegraph Company to review a decision of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment of the superior court and its order striking out the answer in the case annulled, and petitioner granted leave to defend.

C. M. Fickert, for petitioner. G. H. Perry, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari to review a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for the sum of $257.75 and costs, in favor of the San Francisco Commercial Agency, a corporation. The action in which the judgment was rendered was originally begun in the justice court, and the judgment sought to be reviewed was rendered in the superior court on appeal.

The defendant in the action, petitioner here, is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey. The complaint stated a cause of action to recover money due on contract. Summons was duly issued and the defendant appeared and filed an answer. The plaintiff therein then moved the court to strike the answer from the files, the motion was granted, and thereupon judgment was given in favor of the plaintiff therein against the petitioner as above mentioned. The motion to strike the answer from the files was made upon the ground that the defendant was a corporation of another state, that the demand sued on arose out of business transactions in this state, and that said defendant corporation had failed and neglected to comply with the statute of this state requiring a foreign corporation doing business in this state to file a certified copy of its articles of incorporation with the Secretary of State. No other ground was assigned as cause for the motion, and it appears to have been granted upon the ground that a corporation so failing cannot be allowed to defend an action brought against it in the courts of this state. The statutory provisions in question are found in sections 408 and 410 of the Civil Code. Section 408 provides that "every corporation organized under the laws of another state, territory, or of a foreign country, * * * which shall hereafter do business in this state or maintain an office herein, or which shall enter this state for the purpose of doing business herein, must file in the office of the Secretary of State of the state of California, a certified copy of its articles of incorporation, * * * and a certified copy thereof, duly certified by the Secretary of State of this state, in the office of the county clerk of the county where its principal place of business is located, and also where such corporation owns property." Section 10 declares that "no foreign corporation which shall fail to comply with section four hundred and eight * * * of this Code can maintain any suit or action in any of the courts of this state until it has complied with said section."

It will not be disputed that a corporation, although organized under the laws of another state, is a "person" within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, providing that no state shall deprive any person of property without due process of law, nor deny any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Gulf, etc., Ry. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 154, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666; Railway Tax Cases, 118 U. S. 396, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 118. It may also be conceded, as contended by counsel for respondent, that foreign corporations have no legal existence beyond the bounds of the state or sovereignty by which they are created, and can exercise none of the functions and privileges conferred by their charters in any other state or country except by comity and consent of the latter (19 Cyc. 1222), and that one of the privileges which a corporation receives by its charter is the privilege of maintaining or defending actions in its corporate name and as a body corporate; in other words, the privilege of being a "person" within the cognizance of the law. There is, however, no rule of the common law which forbids a corporation organized and empowered to do business in one state from doing such business in another state. In the absence of any statutory inhibition, there can be no doubt that the general comity existing between the states would permit a foreign corporation which had entered this state and done business therein to maintain and defend actions arising out of such business. 19 Cyc. 1211, 1212. A statute of this state which purports to curtail the privilege of foreign corporations to maintain or defend actions in this state, and to impose conditions upon compliance with which alone they may be permitted to do so, will not be construed to extend beyond the plain meaning of its terms considered in connection with its object and purposes. The sections above quoted do not purport to forbid a foreign corporation which has failed to comply with its provisions from defending an action brought against it in the courts of this state. They are only forbidden to maintain actions. The order of the court, striking out the answer because of the failure of the defendant to comply with the provisions of section 408, was not authorized by the statute. Notwithstanding the provisions of that section and of section 410 imposing a penalty for a violation thereof, the foreign corporation doing business in this state was entitled to defend any action brought against it. To prevent it from doing so would be to deny it the equal protection of the laws and to deprive it of its property without due process of law. It appearing from the record that the judgment was rendered upon default and that the default was entered for this cause alone, it follows that the judgment is void.

Sections 405 and 406 of the Civil Code purport to declare that any corporation of another state doing business within this state must file in the office of the Secretary of State a designation of some person residing within the state who may be served with process issued in this state against such corporation, and that such foreign corporation cannot maintain or defend any action or proceeding in any court of this state until it has complied with this provision. The motion in the case before us was not based upon the ground that the corporation had failed to comply with this provision, and hence no authority for the action taken can be predicated upon this statute.

It is ordered that the judgment of the superior court in the action above mentioned, and the order striking out the answer therein, be annulled, and that the petitioner be allowed to defend the said action.

In re RIVIERE'S ESTATE. (Civ. 489.)
(Court of Appeal, Second District, California,
March 24, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—ATTORNEYS' SERVICES—ALLOWANCE—APPLICATION.
Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, provides that an executor or administrator shall be allowed all necessary expenses in the settlement of the estate, and that any attorney who has rendered services to the executor or administrator may apply for an allowance which it shall be the duty of the executor or administrator to pay out of the estate, for which he shall be entitled to credit. Section 1619 declares that executors and administrators shall be allowed for fees of their attorneys for conducting the ordinary probate proceedings the same amounts as are allowed by the preceding section as compensation to executors and administrators for their own services, together with a further allowance for additional and extraordinary service. Held, that an application both by an executor's attorney and by the executor for an order making an allowance for the services of the attorney, though in a dual character, would be regarded as an application under section 1616, and not under section 1619.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR—ALLOWANCE TO ATTORNEY FOR EXECUTOR—PERSONS ENTITLED TO APPEAL.

Since Code Civ. Proc. § 1616, expressly authorizes an appeal from an order making an allowance for the services of an executor's attorney, such appeal may be taken not only by the attorney, but by any person having an interest in the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 939.]

3. SAME—DISMISSAL—GROUNDS.

It was no ground for the dismissal of an appeal from an order making an allowance to an executor's attorney that the appellate court could grant appellants no relief.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Petition by Charles H. Mattingly, as attorney for the executor and special administrator of the estate of Louis Riviere, deceased, and by Fritz Bachmann, as such executor and special administrator, for an order making an allowance to petitioner for attorney's fees. From an order granting such relief, the distributees appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Denied.

Edgar E. Lefebvre, McNutt & Hannon, Edward G. Kuster, and Edward L. Hutchinson, for appellants. Charles H. Mattingly, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Motion to dismiss appeal. Charles H. Mattingly, as attorney for the executor and special administrator of the estate of Louis Riviere, and Fritz Bachmann, as such executor and special administrator, upon notice given pursuant to an order of court therein made, applied to the court for an order under the provisions of sections 1616 and 1619 of the Code of Civil Procedure for an allowance to said executor and special administrator out of the assets of the estate for compensation on account of extraordinary services rendered by Charles H. Mattingly as such attorney, and for an order directing said executor and special administrator to pay such allowance to said attorney. Upon a hearing the court made an order whereby it fixed the attorney's fees of said Charles H. Mattingly for services rendered, and further ordered Fritz Bachmann, as such executor and special administrator, to pay the sum so fixed to said Charles H. Mattingly as such attorney out of the assets of said estate. The appeal is by parties interested in the estate, and is from that portion of the order allowing said Mattingly the sums of $1,000 and $500, respectively.

Notwithstanding the fact that the proceeding is of a dual character, on behalf of both attorney and executor, and alleged to be taken under the provisions of both of said sections 1616 and 1619, we nevertheless construe it as an application by the attorney for the executor and special administrator, made under the provisions of section 1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for an order requiring said executor and special administrator to pay said attorney out of the assets of the state such compensation for services rendered as to the court may seem just and proper. Since under the express provisions of this section the order is a subject of appeal, not only by the attorney who makes the application, but by any other interested party, it is unnecessary to consider the objection that appellants are not parties aggrieved by the order. Having an interest in the estate, they have the right to appeal.

There is nothing in the contention that no notice of appeal has been filed or undertaking or deposit on appeal filed or made.

A further ground for the motion is that the record does not present a case upon which this court can grant the relief for which appellants contend, nor any relief. Even if this be true, they are nevertheless entitled to a hearing upon presentation of their appeal. The fact that there is no merit in an appeal is no ground for its dismissal without a hearing.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

PER CURIAM. Upon a further examination of the questions involved upon the motion to dismiss the appeal in this case, we adhere to the original opinion filed herein, which is hereby ordered refiled as the judgment of this court.

FLEISCHHAUER v. FABENS et al.
(Civ. 454.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 2, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—QUESTIONS FOR REVIEW—INSTRUCTIONS.

Instructions given will not be reviewed on appeal, where no exceptions thereto were taken in the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1516-1532.]

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for malicious prosecution, it is error to instruct the jury that such actions have never been favored by law.

3. SAME—MALICE.

While it is essential in actions for malicious prosecution that malice must be proved, still it is not necessary that there exist, in the mind of the prosecutor, any hostility or any feeling of "personal grudge" or "ill will" against the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Malicious Prosecution, §§ 59, 60.]

4. SAME—DEFENSE—"PROBABLE CAUSE."

"Probable cause," justifying the institution of a criminal prosecution so as to constitute a defense in an action for malicious prosecution, embodies the element that defendant at the time of instituting the criminal prosecution believed plaintiff guilty.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Malicious Prosecution, § 26.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5618-5627; vol. 8, p. 7765.]

5. TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — REQUESTS — REFUSAL—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED BY INSTRUCTIONS GIVEN.

Refusal of requested instructions, covered by instructions given, is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 651-659.]

6. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION — ACTION — INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for malicious prosecution in causing the arrest of plaintiff for stealing a horse, where plaintiff claimed to have taken it up as an estray, a requested instruction as to what constituted an estray, and as to the law governing the taking up and impounding of such animals, was properly refused, since if plaintiff was not entitled to detain the animal, defendant had her remedy in a civil action, but the detention did not justify her in having plaintiff arrested for stealing the horse.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Fleischhauer against Lena C. Fabens and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Lena C. Fabens appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. P. Sex and Wm. A. Bowden, for appellant. Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for malicious prosecution. The plaintiff was arrested on a charge of grand larceny, preferred by the defendant, and at the hearing before a justice of the peace he was discharged. He thereupon brought this action for damages for malicious prosecution, and after a trial by a jury recovered judgment against the defendant for the sum of $377, and costs. This is an appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Very briefly the facts of the case are that plaintiff and defendant lived in the same neighborhood in San Jose; that defendant was engaged in the business of selling milk, and owned a mare, which she drove in a wagon in making deliveries; that on the evening of March 6, 1905, the mare was put in pasture; she was missing the next morning, and, after considerable search, was found in the barn of plaintiff. One of defendant's witnesses testified that, the morning after the mare had been placed in the field, he examined the fences, gates, and bars of the inclosure, and found them all in good repair; that the gates were closed, and the bars up; that no other animal was missing. The evidence introduced on behalf of the plaintiff shows that on the morning of March 7, 1905, the day on which the criminal prosecution was instituted, the plaintiff found the animal in question in his garden; that he did not know to whom she belonged, and that he took her up, and tied her in his barn; that defendant, upon learning the whereabouts of the animal, demanded her possession, and was told that she could have the mare upon paying $2.50, the amount of damage claimed to have been done by the animal to plaintiff's garden. Thereupon defendant immediately caused the arrest of the plaintiff upon the charge of grand larceny in stealing her horse.

Appellant complains of six of the instructions given by the court, apparently of its own motion. No exception was taken by appellant to any of these instructions, and we cannot therefore consider them. Garoutte v. Williamson, 108 Cal. 141, 41 Pac. 35, 413. This case was tried before the adoption of the amendment, in 1907, to section 647, Code Civ. Proc., providing that instructions to juries are deemed excepted to.

Appellant also contends that the court erroneously refused to give her requested instructions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 9, 10, 14, and 15, in that it thereby refused to group the facts, and tell the jury that if they found the facts a certain way, there was or was not probable cause, as the case might be, and that they should find accordingly. Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 227, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174. Most of such requested instructions are not in harmony with appellant's contention. Proposed instructions Nos. 3 and 10 are mere statements of the testimony. No. 4 does not appear in the transcript, and was doubtless adopted and given by the court in its general instructions. Nos. 5 and 9 are mere statements of abstract propositions of law, the first of which was properly refused, and the latter of which was given, in substance, by the court's own instructions, except that part of it which states that "actions for malicious prosecution have never been favored in law." It would have been error to so have instructed the jury. Reynolds v. Dunlap, 73 Kan. 759, 84 Pac. 720. No. 6 is an attempted definition and application of the term "malice." The court, in its instructions, gave a definition of the term "malice," which for the purpose of this case was entirely sufficient. The proposed instruction, after giving an apt illustration of the application of the term "personal malice," directs the jury that if the appellant acted without any personal feeling against the respondent, they should find for the appellant. It is elementary that in actions of this nature malice must be proved, but it is not true that there must necessarily exist in the mind of the prosecutor any hostility or any feeling of "personal grudge" or "ill will" against the accused. 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 675, 676; Wild v. Odell, 56 Cal. 136. No. 12 is the first of the proposed instructions at all in keeping with the theory upon which it is claimed all of these instructions were offered; that in refusing to give it the court, we think, committed no error. The instruction sets forth certain enumerated facts, and, in effect, tells the jury that if it finds these facts to be true, appellant acted with probable cause, and would be entitled to a verdict. The instruction reads: "I instruct you, gentlemen of the jury, that if you believe that said animal was so placed in pasture by said employé of defendants, and on the morning in question was missing, and that no means of said animal escaping or estraying from said pasture field appears from the evidence, and that the said animal was thereafter found in the possession of the plaintiff, and that no reasonable explanation was given as to how said animal came into the possession of said plaintiff, then that said Lena C. Fabens was, if these facts had been communicated to her, justified in making complaint against said plaintiff, charging him with grand larceny." This proposed instruction leaves out of consideration whether, at the time of instituting the criminal prosecution, the appellant herself did in fact believe the respondent guilty of the crime charged. The facts stated in this instruction, it may be conceded, are sufficient to warrant a reasonable person in believing the crime charged was true, and still the appellant here may not, in fact, have believed the charge, and unless she did so believe, she acted without probable cause.

The point is expressly ruled on in the case of Harkrader v. Moore, 44 Cal. 151, and it was there held that a request for an instruction upon the question of probable cause, not embodying this element as to the actual belief of the prosecutor in the guilt of the accused, was properly refused. The court said: "The gravamen of the action is that the defendant instituted the proceedings without probable cause; that is, without having at the time such knowledge or information of the circumstances as would superinduce, in the mind of an ingenuous and unprejudiced person of ordinary capacity, a reasonable belief that the plaintiff was guilty of the charge. The defense must be that he did believe, and had reasonable grounds to believe, at the time that the accusation he made was well founded. 'Probable cause does not depend on the actual state of the case, in point of fact, but upon the honest and reasonable belief of the party prosecuting. It must appear that the defendant knew of the existence of those facts, which tended to show reasonable and probable cause, because without knowing them he could not act upon them; and also that he believed the facts amounted to the offense which he charged, because otherwise he will have made them the pretext for prosecution without even entertaining the opinion that he had a right to prosecute. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 455.'" And in the case of Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 233, 234, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174, it was held that an instruction, given by the court upon this question of probable cause, which omitted this element as to the actual belief of the defendant in the guilt of the accused, was error.

Proposed instruction No. 14, which was refused, was covered by the fourth instruction given by the court.

Proposed instructions from 16 to 24, the refusal to give which is also complained of as error, were requested upon the theory that respondent claimed to have taken up the animal in question as an estray, and that the jury was entitled to be informed as to what constituted an estray, and as to the law governing the taking up and impounding of such animals. We think the court committed no error in refusing to give these instructions. Whether the respondent claimed more than he was entitled to under the estray law, or whether he was entitled to detain the animal, were not questions at issue in this case. If he was not entitled to detain the animal appellant had her remedy in a civil action, but these matters afforded no justification, in any sense whatever, for demanding the issuance of a warrant on the charge of stealing the horse.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

FALCONER v. HUGHES et al. (Civ. 429.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 7, 1908.)

COURTS—PLACE FOR HOLDING COURT—HOW PROVIDED — STATUTORY PROVISION—CONSTRUCTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 144, providing that, if suitable rooms for holding the superior courts and chambers for the judges of said courts are not provided, the courts or the judge or judges thereof may direct the sheriff to provide such rooms, etc., was intended to authorize the securing of suitable rooms where the supervisors had failed or refused to provide them, and the power given is restricted to directing the sheriff to make the provisions, and while the power might be extended in cases of necessity, if the sheriff should neglect or refuse to execute the court's directions, the court cannot disregard the statute, and legally give its directions to a person other than the sheriff before calling on him to execute its directions.

Application by David Falconer for a writ of mandate against J. W. Hughes and others, judges of the superior court. On demurrer to the petition. Demurrer sustained.

S. Solon Holl, for plaintiff and petitioner. El. S. Wachorst, Dist. Atty., and J. W. S. Butler, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondents.

PREWETT, J. Application for a mandate to the judges of the superior court of the county of Sacramento requiring them to audit a demand of petitioner for certain expenses incurred in repairing the courtroom of one of the judges of said court.

The only serious criticism preferred against the demand lies in the fact that the judge directed the petitioner, instead of the sheriff, to make the repairs. Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "If suitable rooms for holding the superior courts and chambers for the judges of said courts be not provided * * * the courts, or the judge or judges thereof may direct the sheriff to provide such rooms," etc. The grant of this power is limited, by the express language of its own terms, to a direction to the sheriff. This power cannot be extended by implication. Los Angeles Co. v. Superior Court, 93 Cal. 380, 28 Pac. 1062. In this case the court says: "The power conferred by section 144 is justified only by the necessity which may sometimes demand its exercise, and ought not to be enlarged by construction. All that it authorizes is an order requiring the sheriff to provide quarters or furniture or lights, etc., which the court presently requires for the transaction of its business." The power of the court or judge is measured by the section. Ex parte Widber, 91 Cal. 367, 27 Pac. 733. These are the only cases called to our attention that seem to be in point. It was the intention of the Legislature to authorize the court to provide suitable rooms, etc., where the supervisors have failed or refused to provide them; and the power given to the court is restricted to directing the sheriff to do the work or make the purchases. If the sheriff should neglect or refuse to execute the directions of the court, it may be that the power should be extended so as to authorize the court in cases of necessity to cause the work to be done, or the purchases to be made by some other person; but we do not think that the court can disregard the statute and give its directions to persons other than the sheriff, without first having called upon him to execute its directions. As we said in Ex parte Widber, supra: "This power vested in the judge or court is not an unlimited power, and therefore not a dangerous power. This section does not open wide the doors of the treasury and place the keys of the treasury vaults in the hands of the judiciary, with an invitation to enter and partake ad libitum as petitioner would insist; but the power is measured by the section, and expenditures made in excess of the limitation of the statute would be made without authority of law."

It follows that the demurrer should be sustained, and it is so ordered.

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 6, 1908.)

1. MANDAMUS—ALTERNATIVE WRIT—PETITION FOR—ISSUANCE.

Ordinarily the alternative writ of mandamus will and should issue where, upon the showing made, any doubt arises as to the rights of the parties, but, where it is clear from the petition that the peremptory writ ought not to issue, the alternative writ should be denied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 325.]

2. CERTIORARI—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY—APPEAL.

Certiorari does not lie where the remedy of appeal is available.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, § 5.]

3. SAME—PERSONS ENTITLED—STRANGERS TO RECORD.

Certiorari does not lie to review a judgment or order at the suit of a stranger to the record, his remedy being to have himself made a party by moving to set aside the judgment or order, and, if his motion is denied, he may on appeal from the order, if it is an appealable order, have the proceeding of which he complains reviewed, not only for excess of jurisdiction, but for error, and, in case it is not appealable, he may then resort to certiorari.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, § 44.]

4. SAME—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY—APPEAL—REVIEW IN MANDAMUS PROCEEDING.

Where a court had jurisdiction of a proceeding in mandamus, its decision, however erroneous it might be, was appealable, and hence certiorari would not lie for its correction or annulment.

Petition by Mrs. Nettie Tingley and another, copartners as Tingley & Elmore, against the superior court of Shasta county and Charles M. Head, judge thereof, for a writ of review. Writ denied.

T. W. H. Shanahan and Braynard & Kimball, for petitioners.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It appears from the petition, stated as briefly as may be, that petitioners made certain repairs on the "Anderson Free Bridge," in the county of Shasta, under contract with the board of supervisors, and the claim therefor was duly allowed and the county auditor duly notified to issue his warrants in payment of said claim; that some time prior thereto one Babcock had obtained a judgment in the superior court, for a sum in excess of said claim, against one J. M. Tingley, and that Babcock filed an authenticated transcript thereof with the auditor, after the latter had been notified to issue said warrants, in accordance with the provisions of section 710 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and demanded that the auditor draw warrants for the amount of said claim in favor of said superior court or the judge thereof and deposit the same in said superior court, so that the same might be applied by said court towards the satisfaction of the said judgment; that the auditor refused to draw his warrants to petitioners, and presumably also refused to issue his warrants to the court or judge. for, as appears, Babcock made application for writ of mandate in said court praying that said auditor be directed to issue said warrants to said court or the judge thereof; that the said court ordered the writ to issue commanding the auditor to deposit said warrants with said court or show cause, etc.; that thereafter said auditor complied with said writ, and without notice to petitioners, and without any showing in their behalf, drew two warrants covering the amount of said claim in favor of the said court and delivered the same to the judge thereof; that thereafter petitioners demanded of said auditor that he issue warrants in their favor in accordance with the order of said board of supervisors, and he then and there refused so to do, "stating in reply that he had been served with a writ of mandate directing him to draw said warrants in favor of Charles M. Head, judge of the superior court, to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment which said J. L. Babcock obtained against said J. M. Tingley, and he had complied with the command of said writ"; thereupon petitioners "made an application and motion in said mandamus proceedings setting forth the contract between said county of Shasta and your petitioners herein with a full presentation of all of the proceedings of said county of Shasta, by and through its board of supervisors, with reference to said contract, setting forth the parties who were interested therein, as well as the order of said board of supervisors directing the said auditor of the county of Shasta to draw warrants for the money due upon said contract in favor of your petitioners, and then and there moved said court, Charles M. Head, judge thereof, to make an order that the writ of mandate so issued and served as aforesaid be dissolved, discharged, dismissed, vacated and set aside"; that thereafter said motion was denied. Hence these present proceedings.

Ordinarily the alternative writ will issue and should issue where, upon the showing made, any doubt arises as to the rights of the parties. Where, however, it is clear from the petition that the peremptory writ ought not to issue, the alternative writ should be denied, thus avoiding delay and expense to the parties. In the brief filed with the petition the power of the Legislature to enact the law is not called in question. The point made is that there was no privity of contract between the county and J. M. Tingley; that he was not a party to the contract under which the county became indebted to petitioners, and that there was no money due and owing to him as judgment debtor of said county; and that, therefore, the provisions of said section 710 did not apply. We do not know what facts were made to appear in the petition for mandamus. It may be that it there appeared that J. M. Tingley was a member of the firm of Tingley & Elmore or that in some other way it was made to appear he had a pecuniary interest in the contract and warrants which could be reached under this section of the Code. The court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the proceedings in mandamus, and hence any error committed by the court could be corrected on appeal. The only question, therefore, is whether petitioners can avail themselves of this right of appeal, for certiorari will not lie where an appeal is open to them. The question arose in Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102. Speaking of the case where the party is a stranger to the record and the judgment or order is appealable, the court, by Chief Justice Beatty, said: "We cannot find in the decisions of this court a single case in which certiorari to review a judgment or order of a court has been issued at the suit of a stranger to the record. There is in fact another plain, speedy, and adequate remedy allowed by our practice to one whose rights or interests are injuriously affected by the judgment or by any appealable order of a court given or made in an action or proceeding to which he is not a party. He may make himself a party by moving to set aside such judgment or order, and if his motion is denied may, on appeal from that order, have the proceeding of which he complains reviewed not only for excess of jurisdiction but for error"—citing cases. "It is true that in one respect this remedy is less efficacious than that by certiorari, for neither the motion nor the appeal stays the enforcement of a void order unless the court, in the exercise of its inherent power, should approve a stay bond. Credits Com. Co. v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 82, 73 Pac. 1009. But while this is an inconvenience to the party compelled to appeal, there is always the opportunity of obtaining a stay in a proper case, and the possible injury from this cause is perhaps no greater or more to be apprehended than the injury to the party claiming the benefit of an order or judgment when its enforcement is stayed by certiorari without any undertaking to indemnify him." Then follows what was held to be the view of the court where the judgment or order is in excess of jurisdiction and is not appealable. Said the court: "In case of an order or judgment in excess of jurisdiction but not appealable, and therefore reviewable only upon certiorari, the remedy could be made available to any stranger to the record injuriously affected by a resort to the same method of moving to set aside, and thereby making himself a party." "And this is a practice," said the court, "to be commended and encouraged for its convenience; for it is presumed that, the attention of the court being drawn to its excess of jurisdiction, the order or judgment would be vacated on motion without the trouble and expense of certifying the record to a court of review." It appears that petitioners did precisely what is here recommended and hence they are in a position to obtain relief by appeal. The judgment or order of the court in the mandamus proceeding is appealable, as is the order refusing to vacate that order, and, as the court had undoubted jurisdiction to make the judgment or order, however erroneous his decision may have been, certiorari will not lie for its correction or annulment. Such, it seems to us, is the inevitable result of the principles laid down in Elliott v. Superior Court.

Nothing can be gained by a further hearing of the matter now here and the writ is therefore denied.

GRAND LODGE A. O. U. W. OF WASHINGTON v. MILLER et al. (Civ. 456.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 1, 1908.)

1. DEATH—SURVIVORSHIP—PRESUMPTIONS—"CALAMITY."

The earthquake of April 18, 1906, was a calamity within Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40, providing a presumption of survivorship with reference to persons killed in the same calamity.

2. SAME—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40, provides that when two persons perish in the same calamity, and it is not shown who died first, and there are no particular circumstances from which it can be inferred, survivorship is presumed from the probabilities resulting from strength, age, and sex, according to specified rules. Held, that the peculiar circumstances referred to should be construed to mean evidence relating to the death and calamity and particular facts which would justify a court or jury in finding the fact as to who died first, and not mere circumstances which would show or tend to show probably that one survived the other.

3. SAME—"INFERENCE."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40, provides a presumption of survivorship of persons perishing in the same calamity, unless particular circumstances are shown from which it can be inferred which of the persons survived. Held, that an inference within such section is not limited to the definition prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1958, as a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts found without an express direction of law to that effect, but that it should be construed to mean a conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof, a deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true, under section 1960, declaring that an inference must be founded on a fact legally proved, or on such a deduction from that fact as is warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities or passions of men, the particular propensities or passions of the person whose act is in question, the course of business, or the course of nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, p. 3579; vol. 8, p. 7687.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Insured and his wife having been killed at the same time in the earthquake of April 18, 1906, evidence held insufficient to show which survived, and, they both being over 15 and under 60 years of age, it would be presumed that the husband survived as prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Interpleader by the Grand Lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen of Washington against Ida Miller and others, to determine the ownership of certain insurance certicates on the life of William Peacock, deceased. From an order directing payment of one of the certificates to defendant Ida Miller, Ada Baptist, as executrix of Matilda F. Peacock, deceased, appeals. Affirmed.

W. F. Williamson, for appellant. Louis F. Hart and A. A. Sanderson, for respondent Grand Lodge A. O. U. W. of Washington. Miller, Bishop & Hoefler, for respondents Miller and others.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiff in interpleader to have the court determine as to who was entitled to $1,000 due by it under a policy or beneficial certificate issued to William Peacock. The $1,000 was deposited with the clerk of the court to abide the result, and plaintiff thereafter had no further connection with the case. The court filed findings, and caused judgment to be entered in favor of defendant Ida Miller. From the judgment so entered this appeal is taken.

The facts out of which this controversy arose may be briefly stated as follows: William Peacock held a beneficial certificate issued by plaintiff, by which it agreed to pay his beneficiaries the sum of $2,000 upon his death. He nominated his wife, Matilda F. Peacock, his beneficiary. The constitution and by-laws of plaintiff provided that upon the death of a designated beneficiary, in default of a new appointment by the holder of a certificate, prior to his death, then, upon the death of the holder of such certificate, the amount should be paid to the children of such deceased, share and share alike. Both William Peacock and Matilda F. Peacock were killed at Santa Rosa in the great earthquake disaster on the morning of April 18, 1906. They left surviving them their daughter, Ada Baptist; and William Peacock left surviving him Ida Miller, a daughter by a former marriage. These two daughter are the only surviving children of William Peacock, deceased, and Ada Baptist is the only surviving child of Matilda F. Peacock, deceased. The plaintiff issued two drafts for $1,000, one payable to Ada Baptist, the proceeds of which she has received; the other payable to Ida Miller. The draft which was made payable to Ida Miller was not delivered to her. The amount was and is claimed by Ada Baptist, as executrix of the estate of her mother, Matilda F. Peacock, deceased. In other words, Ada Baptist received $1,000 of the amount due by reason of her father's death, and claims that her sister of the half-blood should receive nothing from the beneficial certificate, but that the other $1,000 belongs to the estate of her mother. Her claim is based upon the contention that her mother survived her father, and hence that immediately upon the death of her father the amount became due by plaintiff to her mother. The court found that William Peacock survived his wife, Matilda F. Peacock, and the appellant insists that the evidence is not sufficient to support the finding.

Our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 40) provides: "When two persons perish in the same calamity, such as a wreck, a battle or a conflagration, and it is not shown who died first, and there are no particular circumstances from which it can be inferred, survivorship is presumed from the probabilities resulting from the strength, age and sex, according to the following rules. * * *

Fourth. If both be over 15 and under 60, and the sex be different, the male is presumed to have survived. If the sexes be the same, then the older." The evidence shows beyond question that the earthquake of April 18, 1906, was a calamity within the meaning of the above section. With one or two exceptions all the brick buildings in the city of Santa Rosa were demolished. The wing of the Occidental Hotel, in which William Peacock and his wife were sleeping, was razed to the ground. The roof and walls fell in, and many people in the building were killed, and many others were killed by the falling of buildings in other portions of the city. In fact, there is no question but that William Peacock and his wife perished in the same calamity. It is admitted that they were both over 15 and under 60 years of age. It is not shown by any direct evidence who died first, and therefore the presumption must control unless there "are particular circumstances from which it (who died first) can be inferred." The meaning of the statute, in speaking of circumstances from which it can be inferred as to who died first, is that there must be evidence relating to the death and the calamity and the particular facts which would justify a court or a jury in finding the fact as to who died first. The statute does not mean circumstances which would show, or which would tend to show probably, that one died before the other. If the matter is left to probability, then the statute settles the presumption. If it is claimed that one of the parties died before the other, it must be shown that such was the fact, and the statute merely means that such fact may be proven like any other fact by circumstantial evidence. Circumstances from which the fact may be inferred must mean by inferences which are rational conclusions from the facts proven. An inference is indirect evidence. It is defined in our Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1958) as "a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts found without an express direction of law to that effect." The above definition, while correct as to an inference to be drawn by a jury, is not so broad or comprehensive as the usual definition of an inference as "a conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof; a deduction or conclusion from facts or propositions known to be true." Bouv. Law Dictionary, Rawles' Revision. The idea of the broader definition is contained in section 1960, Code Civ. Proc., which reads as follows: "An inference must be founded: (1) On a fact legally proved; and (2) on such a deduction from that fact as is warranted by a consideration of the usual propensities or passions of men, the particular propensities or passions of the person whose act is in question, the course of business, or the course of nature."

The evidence here shows without contradiction that the bodies of both William Peacock and his wife were found by a rescuing party about 9 or 10 o'clock on the morning of the earthquake, after removing the débris, timbers, and mortar, on the same bed in the room in which they had retired the night before, cold in death, and that there was mortar and débris on the bed and over the bodies. There is evidence to the effect that William Peacock's body was lying flat in bed with one hand under the back of his head; that there was a cut near his temple; that his skull was crushed; that he had a wound in his stomach; that the bedclothes were off his shoulders and off part of one side of his body; that the bedclothes were off, or, rather, at the foot of the bed on the side where Mrs. Peacock lay; that one of her legs was out over the side of the bed; that her body was pretty badly bruised; that there was mortar through her hair, under her eyelids, and in her nostrils; that there was a watery substance or foam in her mouth; that her face and body were somewhat discolored. Ada Baptist and her husband, Joseph Baptist, each testified that when they saw Mrs. Peacock's body 10 days after death, when she was buried at Petaluma, her hair was grey from a quarter to half an inch from the scalp, extending from the forehead pretty much over the entire scalp. Ida Miller testified that about three weeks before the death of Mrs. Peacock she saw her sister, Ada Baptist, putting some hair restorer on Mrs. Peacock's hair. John Peacock, a brother of William Peacock, deceased, testified that he saw the body of Mrs. Peacock the next day after the earthquake, and that he noticed no difference in the color of her hair after death from what it was before. None of the witnesses who assisted in taking out the bodies on the morning of the earthquake testified as to any rim of grey hair near the scalp. It is sufficient to say that in our opinion it cannot be reasonably inferred that William Peacock died first. He may have been rendered perfectly unconscious and insensible by the crushing of his skull, and yet may have breathed for a considerable time afterwards. Mrs. Peacock may have made a muscular movement of her feet or thrown the covers from her side of the bed in her agony, and yet have expired the moment afterwards. She did not get off the bed where she lay. No one saw them, and no sound of distress reached from the room where they were dying to any living person. As to which one drew the last breath it is impossible to tell.

The evidence supports the finding of the trial court, and the judgment is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.

CRIMINAL LAW—CONTINUANCE—JURISDICTION.

Jurisdiction to determine what constitutes sufficient cause to justify a continuance not exceeding 60 days, as authorized by Pen. Code, § 1052, authorizing the court on sufficient cause to direct the postponement of the trial, is vested in the first instance in the trial court, and it cannot by the exercise of the discretion vested in it be deprived of jurisdiction to try the case so continued, and the remedy for an abuse of discretion in ordering the postponement of the trial without sufficient cause is by appeal from the judgment, accompanied by proper record.

Application by George Yung for a writ of prohibition to be directed to a justice's court. Writ denied.

See 94 Pac. 594.

C. W. Pendleton, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ of prohibition to be directed to the justice court in and for Orange township, Orange county, Cal.

On November 14, 1907, petitioner was arrested under and by virtue of a warrant issued out of said justice court upon a complaint charging him with the violation of a certain ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquor as in said ordinance provided. On February 24, 1908, he was duly brought to trial, but, owing to the fact that the jury were unable to agree, a mistrial resulted. On the 27th of February following the case was, by an order of said justice court, set for trial on the 9th day of March, 1908, at 10 o'clock a. m. At said time petitioner, as defendant in said case, with his counsel, appeared in said court, and demanded that the trial of petitioner proceed. Said court, however, continued the trial of the case to March 10, 1908. Petitioner by his counsel thereupon moved the court for a dismissal of said charge against him, which motion was then and there denied. On March 10, 1908, the day to which the case had been continued, the same was called for trial, whereupon the justice of the court, assigning the absence of defendant's counsel as a reason for so doing, continued the trial of said charge against petitioner to March 26, 1908.

Petitioner contends that said postponements of the trial of said charge against him were by said court made without sufficient or any cause, and that by reason whereof said court has no jurisdiction to try said petitioner upon said charge. Under section 1052, Pen. Code, the court was authorized, upon sufficient cause, to direct the postponement of the trial to another day. Jurisdiction to determine what constitutes sufficient cause to justify a continuance not to exceed 60 days is in the first instance vested in the sound discretion of the trial court. It cannot, by the exercise of the discretion thus vested in it, be deprived of jurisdiction to try the case so continued. By postponing the case the court did not lose jurisdiction to try it. The remedy, if there was an abuse of discretion in ordering the postponement of the trial without sufficient cause, is on appeal from the judgment, accompanied by a proper record. The question of the right to a dismissal under the provisions of section 1382, Pen. Code, is not involved herein, for the reason that the trial was not postponed a period of 60 days beyond the date of the mistrial. Ex parte Ross, 82 Cal. 109, 22 Pac. 1086; People v. Chadwick, 143 Cal. 116, 76 Pac. 884. The question of abuse in this case cannot be reviewed upon an application for a writ of prohibition.

The writ is denied.

Ex parte RUEF. (Cr. 136.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 24, 1908.)

1. BAIL — APPLICATION — PRESUMPTION OF GUILT.

For the purposes of an application to admit to bail after indictment returned or information filed, the court must assume that defendant is guilty of the offense with which he is charged.

2. HABEAS CORPUS—DETERMINATION—REDUCTION OF BAIL.

The appellate court will not grant a reduction of bail on habeas corpus unless it clearly appears that the amount fixed by the trial court is excessive and an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, § 96.]

3. BAIL—REINDICTMENTS.

Where 116 indictments were filed against petitioner, each charging him with bribing a member of the board of supervisors, an order admitting petitioner to bail in the sum of $10,000 on each charge, save as to certain reindictments for offenses charged in other of the indictments on which the bail was fixed at $5,000 on each charge, was not excessive except as to the reindictments on which bail should only have been required in a nominal amount.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 5, Bail, § 209.]

Application by Abraham Ruef for a writ of habeas corpus sur bail. Writ granted in part.

See 89 Pac. 604, 605.

Frank J. Murphy, Henry Ach, and M. C. Chapman, for petitioner. Francis J. Heney, for respondent.

HALL, J. The petitioner, Abraham Ruef, asks the court to admit him to bail upon divers indictments now pending against him in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Bail has been fixed upon each charge by order of the superior court, so that the proceeding before us is in effect an application for a reduction of the bail heretofore fixed by the court in which the indictments are pending. There are now pending 116 indictments against petitioner, in each of which he is charged with bribing a member of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco. The bail was fixed by the superior court at the sum of $10,000 upon each charge, save as to indictments designated as Nos. 1184 to 1192, inclusive, upon which the bail was fixed at $5,000 upon each charge. In his affidavit petitioner sets up that 37 of the indictments are duplicates, or reindictments of petitioner for offenses charged in other of the indictments. The reindictments are those designated by the numbers 810 to 823, both numbers inclusive, 841 to 854, both numbers inclusive, and 1,184 to 1,192, both numbers inclusive. This was not denied by the district attorney, although his attention was specially called to the matter at the hearing before this court, and we have therefore accepted this statement as the truth. Petitioner claims that the bail is excessive, and alleges that he cannot give it.

By the express provision of the Constitution of this state all persons shall be bailable, except for capital offenses, when the proof is evident or the presumption great, and excessive bail shall not be required. Bail is not to be deemed excessive, however, simply because the particular person under indictment cannot give the bail required. Bail should not be exacted for the purpose of punishing a person charged with crime, for no man is punishable for a felony except on his plea of guilty, or upon conviction by a jury of his peers. Bail is exacted for the purpose of securing the attendance of the defendant upon court at all times when his attendance may be lawfully required, and his rendering himself in execution of any judgment that may be pronounced against him. Upon an application to admit to bail after indictment returned or information filed, the court must assume that the defendant is guilty of the offense with which he is charged. In an application to this court upon habeas corpus for a reduction of bail upon the ground that the amount fixed by the trial court is excessive, this court will not interfere unless it clearly appears that the amount fixed is excessive. It is not sufficient that this court might originally have deemed a lesser amount sufficient. It must clearly appear that the trial court has abused its discretion before this court will reduce the amount. Ex parte Williams, 82 Cal. 183, 23 Pac. 118; Ex parte Ryan, 44 Cal. 555; Ex parte Duncan, 53 Cal. 410; Id., 54 Cal. 75.

We have not been cited to a single case in this state, nor have we found one, where, after bail had once been fixed by a trial court, the amount required has been reduced by the Supreme Court. Upon the contrary, it has been uniformly held that the appellate court will not interfere with the action of the trial court unless "the bail demanded be per se unreasonably great, and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved." Ex parte Duncan, 54 Cal. 75. In the Duncan Case it was distinctly laid down that it must be assumed that the defendant was guilty of each of the 10 distinct offenses charged against him (53 Cal. 410); and upon a second application after two trials had been had without a conviction it was held that this presumption still prevailed. In the Duncan Case the bail was in the aggregate $112,000 upon 10 indictments, and the offense charged was embezzlement, for which the maximum penalty is 10 years upon each conviction. In the case at bar the maximum penalty is 14 years upon each conviction. And in the Duncan Case a reduction in bail was refused even after two trials without a conviction. It has been urged with much earnestness that the court should not exact as great bail upon each of a great number of indictments as it would upon each of a lesser number, for at most the imprisonment could not in any event exceed the term of the defendant's life. While this argument from one aspect of the case has some force, upon the other hand, the greater the number of indictments the greater the probability of conviction. The greater the probability of conviction the greater the inducement to a defendant to become a fugitive from justice. The petitioner shows by his affidavit that he is a man of means, and now engaged in improving his holdings in San Francisco. How much he is worth does not appear, but the greater the amount of his wealth the more readily he could give a large bail, and the more readily he could flee to some country where perhaps he could live in comfort on his possessions. The offense of bribery with which petitioner is charged is one that is justly regarded as particularly serious. It is, in its effect upon the public welfare, of the utmost gravity. The bribery of legislative officers corrupts the very foundation of government, and affects every citizen of the commonwealth. These are all proper matters to be considered in fixing bail after indictment found. As was said in Ex parte Duncan, supra: "We are not to assume in this case the functions of the court committing the prisoner, or substitute our own for its judgment in fixing the amount of bail. Before we are authorized to interfere, the bail demanded must be per se unreasonably great, and clearly disproportionate to the offense involved." After a careful consideration of the matters presented we do not think that this court is warranted in interfering with the matter of bail as fixed by the court to which the indictments were returned, save as to the indictments that are reindictments for the same offense charged in prior indictments. These duplicate indictments present another phase of the question. No one will for one moment contend that any person should be twice punished for the same crime; and the Constitution of the state expressly provides that "No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense." Const. art. 1, § 13.

When the trial court fixed the bail at $10,000 upon each of the original indictments, it necessarily determined that such sum was sufficient to secure the attendance of the defendant to answer to the offense charged in such indictment. We cannot see that the amount should be doubled because another indictment is filed for the same offense, which is the effect of requiring the same amount on the reindictment. If this were allowed, a defendant indicted five times for one offense could be required to give bail in an amount five times as great as the court should determine to be sufficient for the one offense. This we think would work a manifest injustice, and result in the exaction of clearly excessive bail. The court fixed the bail upon each charge of bribery at $10,000, and thus determined that this was a sufficient sum to fix as bail for the offense charged. Any considerable bail required under these circumstances upon a second indictment for the same offense must be per se excessive, and clearly contrary to the spirit of our laws, and especially of the Constitution of this state. We are of the opinion that defendant should be admitted to bail upon the so-called reindictments, to wit, in cases designated as numbers 810 to 823, and 841 to 854, and 1184 to 1192, in a nominal amount. While the amount of the bail that will still be required of petitioner under the order which we make in this proceeding will be large in the aggregate, it must be remembered that under the law and the Constitution of the state he is entitled to a speedy trial. It must be assumed that the law will be complied with in this respect.

We have made an order in accordance with the views herein expressed simultaneously with the filing herewith.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

On Application for Reduction in Bail.

PER CURIAM. The application of Abraham Ruef, upon habeas corpus, for a reduction in the amount of bail required of him under certain indictments now pending against him in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, having been heretofore heard and duly considered, it is now ordered that as to the cases designated as Nos. 590 to 654, both inclusive, and numbers 827 to 840, both inclusive, said application be, and the same is, denied, and as to said cases the said writ is discharged.

It is further ordered that, as to the cases designated in said superior court by the numbers 810 to 823, both inclusive, and 841 to 854, both inclusive, and 1184 to 1192, both inclusive, said Ruef be admitted to bail in the sum of five dollars upon each indictment, with two sufficient sureties, to be approved by a judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, provided that if the original or first indictment for any of the offenses charged against said Ruef shall be dismissed, leaving a second or reindictment for the same offense against said Ruef still pending, the said superior court may increase the amount of bail required upon such second or reindictment.

WILLIAM EDE CO. v. HEYWOOD et al.
(S. F. 4,842.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1908
Rehearing Denied June 19, 1908.)

TAXATION—PAYMENT OF MORTGAGE TAX BY PURCHASER FROM MORTGAGOR—RIGHTS AGAINST MORTGAGEE.

A grantee of real estate who paid the tax assessed against the interest of the mortgagee of his grantor, which interest, for purposes of taxation, is an interest in land (Const. art. 13, § 4; Pol. Code, § 3627), and which tax is a lien on the interest of the mortgagee (Pol. Code, § 3718), cannot recover of mortgagee the sum so paid to discharge the tax, as there was no contractual relation between them.

Beatty, C. J., and Shaw and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the William Ede Company against William B. Heywood and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. Bates, for appellant. Powell & Dow, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll alone from the judgment in favor of the defendants. The action is to recover money alleged to have been paid by the plaintiff to the use of the defendants. The facts are as follows: On the first Monday of March, 1905, the defendant William B. Heywood was the owner and holder of a duly recorded mortgage on certain land in San Francisco, and on that date the taxes for that year on his interest as such mortgagee became a lien on the said interest. Pol. Code, § 3718. This interest for purposes of taxation is an interest in the land. Const. art. 13, § 4; Pol. Code, § 3627. On April 19, 1905, this mortgage was fully paid and satisfaction thereof entered of record. On June 1, 1905, the land was conveyed by Louis Friedlander and Jennie Friedlander, his wife, and F. K. Houston and Mary F. Houston, his wife, the owners thereof, by their grant, bargain, and sale deed to plaintiff. The aforesaid taxes on the mortgage interest were duly assessed and levied. On November 1, 1905, plaintiff gave notice to said defendant that said taxes remained unpaid, and demanded that said defendant pay the same, which he then and ever since has refused to do. On November 27, 1905, being the last day for payment before delinquency, plaintiff paid the taxes. Said defendant, although requested so to do, has ever since refused to pay to plaintiff the amount so paid. Upon these facts, the trial court concluded that plaintiff was not entitled to recover, and gave judgment for defendants.

The case before us is simply that of one who has purchased real property with the title burdened by an incumbrance done, made, or suffered by the grantor, or some one claiming under him, seeking to recover the sum that he has paid to discharge such incumbrance, not from his grantor or his heirs, but from a third person, with whom he has not and never had any contractual relation whatever. This was exactly the case of McPike v. Heaton, 131 Cal. 109, 63 Pac. 179, 82 Am. St. Rep. 335, where the plaintiffs had purchased land subject to a tax lien, which should have been paid by the defendant to whom the property was assessed, but who was not plaintiffs' immediate grantor and bore no contractual relation to them. It was held that the covenant against incumbrances done, made, or suffered by the grantor or any person claiming under him, implied from the use of the word "grant" in the conveyance made by plaintiffs' grantor (Civ. Code, § 1113), which included taxes (Civ. Code, § 1114), did not run with the land, or pass to the assignee, and that as plaintiffs had no contractual relation with defendant, no recovery against him could be had. That, without some contractual relation, there could be no obligation on the defendant so far as the plaintiffs were concerned. It was said: "They could have protected themselves against these taxes either by assuming their payment as a part of the consideration for the purchase, or by suitable covenants with Jackson [their grantor], but they have no right of action therefor against the defendants." In Canadian, etc., Co. v. Boas, 136 Cal. 419, 69 Pac. 18, it was held that a mortgagee who had obtained title to the property by foreclosure proceedings could not recover of a junior mortgagee whose interest in the property had been extinguished by the foreclosure proceedings the amount paid by it in redeeming the property from a sale to the state for taxes assessed against such junior mortgagee on such junior mortgage. This decision was based on the proposition that there was no contractual relation whatever between the plaintiff and defendant with respect to the moneys sued for, and it was said that the plaintiff was in no different position from that of any other purchaser of land who finds his title clouded. The case of Henry v. Garden City Bank, etc., 145 Cal. 54, 78 Pac. 228, was substantially the same in facts and in result. See, also, Bock v. Gallagher, 114 Mass. 28. All of these cases proceed upon the theory that one who buys property from another takes it just as it is, regardless of the nature of the title, or the number or character of liens resting upon it, except in so far as he is protected by contract. Independent of contract, neither his immediate grantor nor any other person is under any obligation to make perfect the title for him, or discharge any incumbrance or lien on the property. By reason of section 1113 of the Civil Code, certain covenants on the part of the grantor for himself and his heirs are implied from the use of the word "grant" in any conveyance by which an estate of inheritance or fee simple is to be passed, unless otherwise expressly provided in the conveyance, and the right of the grantee to reimbursement from the grantor and his heirs for money necessarily paid by him to discharge incumbrances so covenanted against thus rests on the terms of his contract. It is impossible to distinguish these cases from the case at bar, and, under the doctrine declared thereby, the conclusion of the learned judge of the trial court was correct. Appellant relies strongly upon the case of San Gabriel Co. v. Witmer Company, 96 Cal. 623, 29 Pac. 500, 31 Pac. 588, 18 L. R. A. 465, 470. There can be no doubt that its contention finds support in the conclusion reached in that case, but that case, decided by a bare majority of this court, and the case of Angus v. Plum, 121 Cal. 608, 54 Pac. 97, decided upon the authority of the former case, have been practically overruled by the later decisions already cited, so far as the same might be held applicable under the circumstances appearing in this case.

As to the defendant William B. Heywood the judgment would be right, even if the contention of appellant as to the law applicable were to be upheld. He was the original mortgagee, and the record shows that on April 24, 1904, he duly assigned and transferred the mortgage upon which the tax was assessed to the defendant William B. Heywood. As he was not the owner of the mortgage interest on the first Monday of March, 1905, he, of course, was never liable for the tax.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. The complaint in the case does not allege that the mortgage on which the tax was levied had been paid. The answer alleges that it was fully paid and satisfied on April 19, 1905, and the court so found. It is not claimed that the amount of the mortgage tax was deducted or retained by the mortgagor at the time this payment was made or at all. The case, therefore, presents the question of the rights of one who has purchased property burdened with a lien for the payment of an obligation of a third person with whom he has no direct contractual relations, and who has been compelled to pay money to discharge that lien, to recover of the person whose obligation he has thus been compelled to pay the money paid in discharge thereof. In my opinion the facts make a clear case, under the common law, in assumpsit for money paid. The subject is exhaustively treated and the cases at common law discussed by Prof. Keener in his work on Quasi Contracts, pp. 388, 400. He prefaces the discussion by this general statement of the rule: "No one officiously paying the debt of another can maintain an action either at law or in equity to recover the money so paid. * * * If, however, the payment made, though made without request, is not regarded in law as having been officiously made, the party so paying is entitled to be reimbursed by the debtor to the extent that the debt as between the debtor and himself should in equity and good conscience have been paid by the debtor." Other authorities are of similar effect: "An action for money paid is maintainable in every case in which there has been a payment of money by plaintiff to a third party, at the request of defendant, express or implied, with an undertaking, express or implied, to repay the amount. * * * And whether the request be direct, as where the party is expressly desired by the plaintiff to pay, or indirect, where he is placed by him under a liability to pay, and does pay, makes no difference." 27 Cyc. 833. And further: "Where, in order to protect his own property, real or personal, the owner pays off an outstanding incumbrance which another has undertaken or is legally liable to pay, he may recover from such other the amount so paid by him in an action for money paid." 27 Cyc. 834. "It is well settled that, where one person is compelled to pay money which another is under legal obligation to pay, the former is entitled to recover it back from the person legally bound. The request necessary will be implied as well as the promise, where the consideration consists in the plaintiff's having been compelled to do that, to perform which the defendant is legally compellable. Under these circumstances the person paying the money has the same right of action as if he had paid it at the other's express request." 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1108; 27 Cyc. 835, 837. As to the application of this rule, the instance of one who is compelled to pay money to prevent seizure or sale of his property for the debt of another is given. 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1110. The duty to pay taxes is not, for some purposes, regarded technically as a debt. Nevertheless the rule applies where the obligation to pay consists of taxes assessed against the defendant as well as in cases of ordinary debts. 27 Cyc. 835, citing many cases; Hogg v. Longstreth, 97 Pa. 255; Graham v. Dunigan, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 629. The decisions of the courts fully establish these propositions. Those of the courts of this country are very numerous. They are noted in detail in 35 Cent. Dig. at columns 44 to 53, inclusive. A number of the English cases are referred to by Prof. Keener in the chapter above cited. The rule has been followed in this state and the right to recover money paid for taxes on a mortgage interest, under facts similar to those here involved, sustained in San Gabriel, etc., Co. v. Witmer Bros. Co., 96 Cal. 623, 29 Pac. 500, 31 Pac. 588, 18 L. R. A. 465, 470, and Angus v. Plum, 121 Cal. 608, 54 Pac. 97.

For the sake of clearness, it should be said that in cases of this character the request and promise said to be implied in law are mere fictions invented by the common-law courts because, under the common-law system of procedure, no remedy was provided except an action of assumpsit, in which, according to the rule of pleading, the declaration was required to allege both a request and a promise, and it was therefore necessary to the ends of justice to presume a request and promise where none were made, in order to sustain the action and give the party a remedy to enforce a manifest right. In this state where forms of action are abolished, and a statement of the facts constituting the cause of action is all that is required of a plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 426), it is unnecessary to allege either the request or the promise, if the facts show a liability of defendant to plaintiff. The liability really rests, not on the implied request and promise, but on the principles of justice and right which require the defendant to repay to plaintiff what plaintiff has been obliged to pay for his benefit. Keener, Quasi Cont. 14; San Luis Obispo Co. v. Gage, 139 Cal. 407, 73 Pac. 174. In equity, also, the recovery may be had upon the principle that the plaintiff is subrogated to the rights of the party to whom the money was paid. "Any person having an interest in property on which there is a lien or incumbrance may, if necessary for his own protection, pay off the same and be substituted to the rights and remedies of a holder thereof." 27 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 235. The tax here involved was, when paid, a lien on the plaintiff's land. It was assessed upon an interest therein while that interest belonged to the defendant. It was therefore a personal obligation of the defendant, having "the effect of a judgment against the person." Pol. Code, § 3716. The statute of 1880 authorizes a county to sue in its own name to recover delinquent taxes. St. 1880, p. 136, c. 123; Los Angeles v. Ballerino, 99 Cal. 595, 32 Pac. 581, 34 Pac. 329. If not technically a debt due the state, it was at least a personal obligation of the defendant, upon which a civil suit could be maintained and a personal judgment recovered by the county. See, also, Perry v. Washburn, 20 Cal. 351; People v. Seymour, 16 Cal. 343, 76 Am. Dec. 521; Moore v. Patch, 12 Cal. 270; Oakland, City of, v. Whipple, 39 Cal. 115; Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 563, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168. The plaintiff was compelled to pay the tax to avoid a sale of his property therefor, and in equity he is subrogated to the right of the city and county of San Francisco, and may maintain an action to recover the money paid. By the principles of the common law aforesaid the effect is the same. The said defendant owned the property—that is, the mortgage interest—at the time the lien for the taxes accrued. It was his duty, both in law and in morals, to pay the same. The plaintiff did not pay them officiously or voluntarily, but to protect his own property, and only after the defendant had expressly refused to pay. By the principles stated he was entitled to be reimbursed by the defendant.

It is contended that the decisions of this court in McPike v. Heaton, 131 Cal. 110, 63 Pac. 179, 82 Am. St. Rep. 335, Canadian, etc., Co. v. Boas, 136 Cal. 420, 69 Pac. 18, and Henry v. Garden City Bank, 145 Cal. 54, 78 Pac. 228, have overruled San Gabriel Co. v. Witmer and Angus v. Plum, supra, and have established a rule contrary to the principles above stated. McPike v. Heaton was not a case of mortgage taxes. Heaton, the owner of the land on the first Monday of March, conveyed by grant deed to one Jackson on March 27th, and on the next day Jackson conveyed to McPike, the plaintiff. The case was treated as an action upon the covenant implied from the grant, and it was held that the covenant of Heaton against the tax lien accruing during his ownership did not run with the land, nor pass to McPike with the grant by Jackson to him. The Witmer Case was distinguished, although incorrectly, but not overruled. The further statement in the opinion that the defendant was under no personal liability for the tax and that payment could be enforced only by a sale of the land, was manifestly incorrect in view of the statute of 1880 aforesaid and the decisions in Los Angeles v. Ballerino, supra, and the other cases above mentioned. It may be that the case involved the principles applied here and might have been decided differently if those principles had been recognized and enforced, but they were not in any way referred to, and I cannot presume that the court intended silently to overrule and set aside doctrines so well established. This is particularly true of a common-law rule which by statutory enactment is made the rule of decision in all the courts of this state. Pol. Code, § 4468. I cannot agree with the main opinion in holding that the case at bar is identical with McPike v. Heaton, as that action was considered in the opinion therein rendered. The conclusion there reached was manifestly based in large part upon the assertion which, as I have shown, was erroneously made, that the defendant was under no personal liability for the tax, and payment could be enforced only upon a sale of the land. If that was the case here, if there was no obligation on the part of the mortgagee to pay the tax assessed against the mortgaged interest, either as between himself and the state, or as between himself and the plaintiff, then no principle of equity and good conscience would give the plaintiff the right to ask of him the repayment thereof. But, when it is seen that the mortgagee was under both a moral and legal obligation to pay the tax and that such obligation was enforceable against him by suit, it should be perceived at once that the highest considerations of equity and good conscience demand that another should not be compelled to pay it gratuitously for his benefit without having a right of action against him. In Canadian Co. v. Boas the defendant was a junior mortgagee, and the plaintiff a purchaser at a foreclosure sale, under a prior mortgage. The interest of Boas as mortgagee, on which the tax was assessed prior to the foreclosure, had been extinguished by the foreclosure and sale. In Henry v. Garden City Bank, the facts were substantially the same. There may be a serious question in such cases, especially if the mortgagor is insolvent, whether, under the principles of law and equity above mentioned, when the mortgagee's beneficial interest has been completely destroyed and the entire estate thus transferred to a purchaser, such mortgagee is "in equity and good conscience," as between him and the purchaser, bound to pay the taxes accrued on an interest which has become a mere shadow; its substance having passed to the purchaser. In actions for money paid by plaintiff to defendant's use, the existence of this element in plaintiff's grounds of recovery in each case, or class of cases, must depend upon the facts of the particular case. It may be conceded that, in this state these cases establish the rule that equity and good conscience do not demand that a junior mortgagee shall pay the tax on his former mortgage interest, for the benefit of a purchaser under a foreclosure which has demonstrated that that interest had no real value.

The present case is of a different character. There has been no foreclosure. The suit is practically by a mortgagor against a mortgagee for taxes paid on the mortgagee's interest, which has been made good by payment. The mortgagee was justly chargeable with the tax thereon. By his neglect it has devolved upon plaintiff's property, thereby forcing the plaintiff to pay the tax to relieve the property from the lien. The payment unquestionably was of benefit to the defendant. Therefore, even if those decisions are sound, the principles on which they rest should not be applied to this case. It is true that there is a long line of cases holding that where one who buys property by quitclaim deed and subsequently finds that property incumbered by liens of which he has taken no account in making his purchase, and which he is compelled to pay to protect his property, he has no right of action to recover the money thus paid from his grantor, and that no covenant not running with the land will protect him as against previous owners, or give him a right of action against them. But it is also true, and has been settled for many years by the authorities I have previously cited, that where such person is thus compelled to pay the debt of another which, as between himself and that other, the other, in equity and good conscience, should have paid, he may recover the amount paid without resort to any covenant and in the absence of any contractual relations between them. The right of action in such cases does not spring from the existence of contractual relations, but from principles of justice and equity which do not require one person to pay the debt of another, under compulsion, and not officiously, which that other was in duty bound to pay himself.

CAHILL v. E. B. & A. L. STONE & CO. et al.
(S. F. 4,378.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1908.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PREMISES—LIABILITY OF OWNER.

An owner of premises, over which there is a path used by the public with his knowledge and consent, who places a dangerous and concealed obstruction in the path, is liable for injuries sustained thereby to a person using the path.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 52-61.]

2. SAME—PLACES ATTRACTIVE TO CHILDREN.

One who places an attractive and dangerous contrivance in a place frequented by children, and who knows or has reason to believe that children will be attracted to it and subjected to injury thereby, owes the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent such injuries to them, but he is not held to the exercise of great care, and this rule applies to any attractive and dangerous machinery so placed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 52-61.]

3. PLEADING—DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS.

A demurrer to the complaint admits the truth of its allegations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 525-534.]

4. NEGLIGENCE—PLACES DANGEROUS TO CHILDREN—DANGEROUS CONTRIVANCES.

One constructing a railroad track in a street in a populous residence district where many children lived left on the track a push car heavily loaded with steel rails. The car was left unguarded, uninclosed, and unfastened. Children from 5 to 14 years of age were, with his knowledge and consent, accustomed to congregate on and around the car, and he knew that because of the grade of the track there was danger of the car starting and injuring the children, and he knew that the car might easily be moved by the children. Held, that the car was a dangerous contrivance, and he owed the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent injury to the children.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 55-61.]

5. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

There is no precise age at which as a matter of law a child is held accountable for his actions to the extent of an adult, and there is no conclusive presumption that a boy 12 years old perceived the danger of playing on a push car loaded with steel rails left on a railroad track, especially in the face of an averment that he was too young and inexperienced to foresee the danger, and whether he is chargeable with negligence is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 347, 348.]

6. SAME—AVAILABILITY AS DEFENSE.

Contributory negligence is a matter of defense, where it does not appear on the face of the complaint or by the evidence for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 221-234.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Henry A. Melvin, Judge.

Action by Sumner Cahill by P. Cahill, guardian ad litem, against E. B. & A. L. Stone & Co. and another. From a judgment for defendants rendered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Haven & Haven and Robert C. Porter, for appellant. Reed & Nusbaumer and B. H. Griffins, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The defendants separately demurred to the complaint, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrers were sustained without leave to amend. Judgment was given for the defendants thereon, and plaintiff appeals.

The action is to recover damages for injuries sustained, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants. The only questions presented are whether or not the facts show that the defendants were chargeable with neglect of any duty owing by them to plaintiff, and whether or not the facts stated show that the neglect of the plaintiff caused or contributed to his injury. The following is a statement of the facts alleged: The plaintiff at the time of the accident was 12 years of age. The defendants were constructing a railroad track in and upon one of the public streets in the city of Oakland. The track was laid to a point near the crossing of Fifty-Sixth street. It was placed in a trench some two feet deep, with sharp banks on each side situated about two feet distant from the rails. A push car heavily loaded with steel rails was, by the defendants negligently left standing on this track in the street, unguarded by any person, uninclosed, unlocked, and unfastened, without any brake or device for stopping it when started. It was of such weight that when put in motion even on a very slight grade it could not be readily stopped. The grade of the track at that point descended slightly toward Fifty-Sixth street. This was in the center of a populous residence district of the city where many children lived. The lots abutting the street opposite where the car stood were not inclosed, and children were accustomed to congregate there for play. On that day, and during all the time of the construction of the roadbed and track, children from 5 to 14 years of age, with the knowledge and consent of the defendants, were accustomed to congregate upon and around said push car and play upon said car, and defendants then well knew of the danger from said car and track to children in that vicinity. The plaintiff lived with his parents about 250 yards distant from the point where the car was left on the track. Other children at play on said push car had put it in motion.

"Plaintiff was then and there attracted to said car by its said condition and appearance and said surroundings as a place of play and said plaintiff was then and there too young and inexperienced to foresee the danger therefrom, and plaintiff then and there got upon said car with said other children," and in the course of his play upon the said car, and in an attempt to stop it as it was running down the rails upon which it had been left standing by the defendants, he was caught between the side of the car and the bank of said trench, and his foot was thereby thrown beneath the car wheel and badly crushed. He sues for the damage resulting from this injury.

The contrary not being alleged, it is to be assumed that the defendants had the lawful right, under permission from the proper public authorities, to lay its track in the streets and leave the push car standing thereon. The car being thus rightfully in the street, the plaintiff had no right to go upon it, or to interfere with it in any way, without the consent of the defendants. He would have been with respect to the car technically a trespasser, except for the allegation that children were accustomed to play upon it with the knowledge and consent of the defendants.

We cannot perceive wherein the case presented by the complaint, its absolute truth being unqualifiedly admitted by the demurrer, is to be distinguished from the line of decisions commonly known as the "turntable cases." These cases rest upon the same general principle as those which hold liable the owner of premises over which is a path which, with his knowledge and consent, is frequented by the public, and in which he places a dangerous and concealed obstruction which causes injury to a person passing along the path. See 37 Cent. Dig. cols. 390-393, for citations. For like reasons, one who places an attractive but dangerous contrivance in a place frequented by children, and knowing, or having reason to believe, that children will be attracted to it and subjected to injury thereby, owes the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent such injury to them, and this because he is charged with knowledge of the fact that children are likely to be attracted thereto, and are usually unable to foresee, comprehend, and avoid the danger into which he thus knowingly allures them. The leading case on this subject in this state is Barrett v. S. P. Co., 91 Cal. 302, 27 Pac. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 186, where it was said: "If defendant ought reasonably to have anticipated that leaving this turntable unguarded and exposed an injury such as plaintiff suffered was likely to occur, then it must be held to have anticipated it, and was guilty of negligence in thus maintaining it in its exposed position. * * * A child of immature years is expected to exercise only such care and self-restraint as belongs to childhood, and a reasonable man must be presumed to knew this and required to govern his actions accordingly. * * * And it has been held in numerous cases to be an act of negligence to leave unguarded and exposed to the observation of little children dangerous and attractive machinery which they would naturally be tempted to go about or upon, and against the danger of which action their immature judgment opposes no warning or defense"—citing cases. The same doctrine was affirmed in Callahan v. Eel River, etc., R. Co., 92 Cal. 89, 28 Pac. 104. See 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 474, for a full citation of cases. The rule of course is not to be confined to turntables, but applies to any attractive and dangerous machinery so placed. 1 Kinthead on Torts, § 26; 2 Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) p. 1270.

It is true that in this state the rule has been strictly limited to the particular character of cases mentioned in the Barrett Case. In Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 349, 47 Pac. 113, 598, 56 Am. St. Rep. 106, wherein it was held that the owner of a lot was not liable for the death of a boy drowned in a pond on his premises, Mr. Justice McFarland, speaking of the so-called "turntable cases," says: "The rule as thus applied rested on the ground that the immature judgment of a young child could not well determine or provide against the danger of meddling with such machinery, and that therefore the railroad company was liable for legal negligence in erecting it and leaving it exposed as an attraction to children, and a temptation to them to intermeddle with it." It is further stated that the principle of these "turntable cases," while well established in this state, is an exception to the general rule that the owner of land is under no legal duty to keep it in safe condition for others than those whom he invites there.

It is claimed by the respondents that later cases have practically repudiated the rule. An examination of the decisions, however, discloses the fact that in each case there was some feature by which it is distinguishable from cases similar to Barrett v. S. P. Co., supra, and also from the case at bar. The case of George v. Los Angeles Railway Co., 126 Cal. 357, 58 Pac. 819, 46 L. R. A. 829, 77 Am. St. Rep. 184, is much relied upon as a case holding to the contrary. It is somewhat difficult to agree to the statement made in that case that the two instructions there considered were not contradictory of each other, but, conceding that they are not conflicting, it is apparent that the instruction chiefly relied on by respondents included some acts of due care on the part of the defendants in that case which do not appear to have been exercised by respondents here. In that case a boy was injured while playing upon trailer cars allowed by the defendant to stand on the railroad track in a street in the city of Pasadena. The jury were instructed that if they found that the cars were held by brakes of the ordinary kind, set in a manner to hold them unless loosened by some one, and that the only danger connected with the car was one open to the observation, and which could be comprehended by a boy of plaintiff's age and of average intelligence, the plaintiff could not recover. One of the conditions of the instruction was that the jury should find as it did that the defendant had exercised care and set the brakes so that the car would be held in place. In the present case the allegation is that the car was negligently left unguarded, uninclosed, unlocked, and unfastened. The distinction is pointed out in Lofthus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 217, 65 Pac. 379. It is that the "turntable cases" rest in part upon the proposition that the danger created by the act of the owner could be easily removed by the simple device of locking or fastening the dangerous machinery, and that, while the owner of such machinery is not held to the exercise of great care in protecting it against the trespasses of children, it is required to exercise ordinary care to that end. In Studer v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 404, 53 Pac. 942, 66 Am. St. Rep. 39, the court was not considering the effect of the allegations of a complaint admitted to be true by a demurrer, and averring that the defendant was negligent, and that the child was too young and inexperienced to foresee the danger, but was considering the conceded fact that the boy was of ordinary capacity and intelligence and the undisputed evidence which the trial court had held sufficient to establish contributory negligence on his part. Many other cases are cited by the respondents in which similar questions arising upon the evidence were considered, and in which it was held that under the proof made the child was guilty of contributory negligence either in exposing himself to the danger or in failing to avoid it. Tucker v. N. Y., etc., Co., 136 N. Y. 668, 33 N. E. 385; Merryman v. Chicago, etc., Co., 85 Iowa, 634, 52 N. W. 545; Carson v. Chicago, etc., Co., 96 Iowa, 583, 65 N. W. 831; Brown v. European, etc., Co., 58 Me. 384; Twist v. Winona, etc., Co., 39 Minn. 164, 39 N. W. 402, 12 Am. St. Rep. 626; Kaumeier v. City Electric R. Co., 116 Mich. 306, 74 N. W. 481, 40 L. R. A. 385, 72 Am. St. Rep. 525. It is of course possible in any case that the evidence may show that a child of 12 years of age is guilty of contributory negligence. It is not at all improbable that the evidence in this case would be strongly to that effect. The defendants did not see fit to await the coming in of the evidence, but interposed a demurrer which admits the truth of the allegations of the complaint. The cases involving a consideration of the effect of undisputed evidence showing negligence on the part of the child or evidence upon which a jury has so decided are not applicable to the present case.

It is contended that the car was not in itself dangerous, and Kaumeier v. City Electric R. Co., supra, is cited as holding this proposition. It may be admitted that such a car would not be dangerous when not in motion. The same is generally true of any ordinary machinery. But we cannot agree to the proposition that a car set upon rails, upon which it may easily be moved by children, and of sufficient weight to crush a person over whose body it might pass, is not a dangerous thing for children to be allowed to play with. They have an instinctive desire to see machinery in motion, and take delight in riding, and, if they have access to anything upon wheels, they will usually set it going if able to do so, especially if they can ride upon it themselves. In the "turntable cases" the turntable would be harmless if left at rest. The danger arises from the propensity of children to set it in motion. The car in question was dangerous for the same reason.

It is claimed that as the boy was 12 years of age he must be considered capable of exercising care for his own protection, and chargeable with negligence to the same extent as a mature person. There is no precise age at which, as a matter of law, a child is to be held accountable for all his actions to the same extent as one of full age. Railway v. Carlson, 58 Kan. 66, 48 Pac. 635. In that case it is said: "The question as to the capacity of a particular child at a particular time to exercise care in avoiding a particular danger is one of fact, falling within the province of a jury to determine." The child there referred to was 10 years of age. In Biggs v. Wire Co., 60 Kan. 223, 56 Pac. 4, 44 L. R. A. 655, the same rule was applied to a boy of 14 years, the court saying: "We cannot say as a matter of law at what age a boy would be possessed of such intelligence, foresight and judgment as to charge him with contributory negligence in a case like the present." In the case at bar the question of plaintiff's possession of sufficient intelligence and foresight is foreclosed, so far as the pleading is concerned, by the allegation that "he was too young and inexperienced to foresee the danger." It may be conceded that many boys of the age of 12 years would have perceived the danger attending the acts of the plaintiff which led to his injury. There is, however, no conclusive presumption that a 12 year old boy is able to foresee such danger, or that he has sufficient wisdom to avoid it. The question is one of fact to be shown by the evidence, and is not to be presumed in the face of an averment to the contrary. Jenson v. Will & Finck Co., 150 Cal. 408, 89 Pac. 113; Foley v. California H. Co., 115 Cal. 190, 194, 47 Pac. 42, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87. If the defendants had gone to trial and awaited the production of evidence upon the subject, it may be that contributory negligence would have been clearly shown. But by the allegations of the complaint, upon which they chose to rest their case, no such negligence appears. Contributory negligence is matter of defense, where it does not appear upon the face of the complaint, or by the evidence for the plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed.

VAN LOENEN et al. v. GILLESPIE et al.
(L. A. 1,770.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

A contract for a street improvement, providing that damages from the nature of the work to be done, or from any unforeseen obstruction encountered, or from the action of the elements, or from any incumbrances on the lines of the work, or from any omission on the part of the contractor or any person employed by him not authorized by the agreement, shall be sustained by the contractor, though not in strictness a "specification" as designated in the contract and in the proposed work, is a part of the contract, and the contract is void authorizing the setting aside of assessments for the work.

Shaw and Lorigan, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by William Van Loenen and others against Frank Gillespie and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The following was the opinion of HENSHAW, J. (with whom LORIGAN and McFARLAND, JJ., concurred), in Department No. 2:

"In this action, brought by plaintiffs to set aside assessments on their property, made by the street superintendent in proceedings under the street law, plaintiffs had judgment, and defendants appeal.

"Certain ordinances of the city of Los Angeles became incorporated as 'Specifications' in the proposed work, in conformity with which specifications bids were ordered, and the contract let. In particular, those specifications contained the following: 'All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under this agreement, or from any unforeseen obstruction or difficulties which may be encountered in the prosecution of the same, or from the action of the elements, or from any incumbrances on the lines of the work, or from any act or omission upon the part of the contractor, or any person or agent employed by him, not authorized by this agreement, shall be sustained by the contractor.' In Blochman v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 662, 67 Pac. 1061, 57 L. R. A. 213, the specifications declare: 'All loss or damage arising from the nature of the work to be done under these specifications shall be sustained by the contractor.' In the case at bar it will be seen that the language is in meaning identical with that condemned in Blochman v. Spreckels. The added clauses tend in no way to modify this conclusion, or to relieve the difficulty. Blochman v. Spreckels was decided by one department of this court, and in the other department was decided the case of Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 666, 67 Pac. 1091, where the same decision was reached. It must be concluded, therefore, that the trial court was correct in its determination. Nor can it matter that the provision thus condemned is not in strictness, a 'specification,' and would not be construed to be a 'specification' by an architect or builder. It is as much a specification as that condemned in Brown v. Jenks, 98 Cal. 10, 32 Pac. 701, where the requirement was that the contractor should give a bond 'for keeping the street so improved in thorough repair for the term of five years from the completion of the contract.' Whether or not the language is, in strictness, a specification, it is certainly a binding term and condition of the contract.

"The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed."

On rehearing, granted May 4, 1907, LORIGAN and SHAW, JJ., dissented for reasons stated in dissenting opinion in Woollacott v. Meekins, 91 Pac. 615.

Albert J. Sherer and J. Wiseman Macdonald, for appellants. O. B. Carter, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Ordered that the opinion heretofore rendered by this court in Department 2 in this case is adopted as the opinion by the court in bank and the judgment affirmed accordingly.

SHAW and LORIGAN, JJ., dissent, for the reasons stated in the dissenting opinion in Woollacott v. Meekins, supra, heretofore rendered by the court in bank.

DAVISSON v. EAST WHITTIER LAND & WATER CO. (L. A. 1,915.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 15, 1908. Rehearing Denied March 16, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVE-NESS.

Where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, a finding of the trial court on such evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

2. ARBITRATION AND AWARD—AGREEMENTS TO ARBITRATE—CONDITION PRECEDENT TO ACTION.

Where a contract provided that, in case of a dispute between the contracting parties as to the value of extra work done or work omitted, the same should be valued by two competent persons, one employed by each of the parties, and, in case they could not agree, by an umpire selected by them, the submission of a controversy as to the value of extra work as stipulated for in the contract was a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Arbitration and Award, § 30.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by B. R. Davisson against the East Whittier Land & Water Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for new trial.

Hunsaker & Britt and Harris & Swanwick, for appellant. John E. Daly, E. W. Freeman, and A. D. Laughlin, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an action to recover the sum of $1,272.91, with interest, upon the first count, for labor done and materials furnished by plaintiff's assignor in constructing and laying pipe lines and building concrete boxes for the defendant corporation in the county of Los Angeles, for use in connection with its irrigating works, and, upon the second count, to recover the further sum of $9,467.47, with interest, alleged to be due for similar work and materials furnished by plaintiff, principally in the construction of certain lateral pipe lines in said county of Los Angeles and the county of Orange, for the defendant corporation. Judgment was rendered in the superior court in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $4,000, with interest and costs, and from the said judgment and an order refusing a new trial the defendant corporation appeals. The said sum of $4,000, for which the trial court rendered judgment, comprises the full amount prayed for in the first count of the complaint, to wit, the sum of $1,272.91, and the further sum of $2,727.09, awarded by the court upon the second count of said complaint, which was for extra work.

Several questions are involved in this appeal, which will be considered seriatim, as follows:

1. Upon the first count in the complaint the finding of the trial court is as follows: "That between the 1st day of November, 1903, and the 11th day of March, 1904, plaintiff and J. F. Smith furnished materials and performed labor for the defendant at its special instance and request in constructing pipe lines, building concrete boxes, and in laying and completing certain pipe lines for the defendant in the county of Los Angeles, aforesaid, and that the defendant promised and agreed to pay to the plaintiff and said Smith therefor the sum of $1,272.91. That no part of said sum has been paid. * * * That plaintiff is entitled to judgment against defendant for the amount of said sum of $1,272.91," etc. In our opinion appellant's contention that the above finding is not supported by the evidence cannot be maintained. Appellant claims that the sum of $1,272.91 awarded plaintiff by this finding was included in a payment of $5,000 made to the plaintiff by Mr. Stowell, an officer of the defendant company, on May 14, 1904. The plaintiff testifies on cross-examination as to this matter as follows: "I received $11,366.82, which has been paid on the second cause of action at various times. It was not received all in one payment. The last payment of $5,000 was on May 14, 1904. November 18, 1903, I received $5,000. This payment was for the second cause of action. I received the money from Mr. Stowell." The plaintiff might have gone further in his testimony on this subject, but this clear cut and positive statement will at least bring the case within the rule of this court that a finding will not be disturbed when there is a substantial conflict in the evidence, and is sufficient to sustain the finding of which the appellant complains.

2. Counsel for appellant contends that the plaintiff is not entitled to maintain his action as far as the second count of his complaint is concerned, and in that connection invokes the following provision contained in the contract annexed to and made a part of the defendant's amended answer to the complaint, and found by the court: "Should any dispute arise respecting the true value of the extra work done, or works omitted, the same shall be valued by two competent persons, one employed by the owner and the other by the contractor, and, in case they cannot agree, these two to have power to name an umpire, whose decision shall be binding on all parties." In view of the conclusion at which we have arrived after a careful examination of the entire record, the effect of this provision becomes the most important matter remaining for consideration on this appeal. It becomes necessary, therefore, to determine the effect of the provision above set forth as to the valuation by arbitration of the extra work done. In Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 307, 38 Am. Rep. 54, the contract before the court was practically identical, word for word, with the one here involved. After a review of the authorities, Morrison, C. J., says: "In view of the foregoing authorities, and the principle they announce (which we believe to be correct), no right of action accrued to the contractor for the extra work done by him, until the same was valued, or some good and sufficient excuse for a failure to value the same in accordance with the agreement was shown. In this case no valuation was made, and no reason is shown for a failure to make such a valuation. We are therefore of the opinion that the contractor was not entitled to recover anything for extra work." The syllabus in Holmes v. Richet, supra, also contains a clear and concise statement of the legal principle contained in the opinion, which applies to the case at bar, as follows: "It now seems to be the settled law that an agreement to refer a case to arbitration will not be regarded by the courts, and they will take jurisdiction and determine a dispute between parties, notwithstanding such agreement. But when the agreement is that the covenantor shall pay such sum, and only such sum, as shall be determined by arbitrators, the procuring an award is as clearly a condition precedent to an action as if the parties had expressly so provided. So held, with reference to a contract for the construction of a building in which it was agreed, that, should any dispute arise regarding the value of extra work, the same should be valued by arbitrators. * * * The distinction between the two classes of cases stated is that in the former the parties undertake by an independent covenant or agreement to provide for an adjustment and settlement of all disputes and differences, to the exclusion of the courts, and in the latter they merely, by the same agreement which creates the liability and gives the right, qualify the right, by providing that, before any right of action shall accrue, certain facts shall be determined, or amounts and values ascertained; and this is made a condition precedent, either in terms or by necessary implication." See, also, Loup v. Cal. Southern R. R. Co., 63 Cal. 103; Scammon v. Denio, 72 Cal. 398, 14 Pac. 98; Tally v. Parsons, 131 Cal. 516, 63 Pac. 833; Roche v. Baldwin, 135 Cal. 522, 65 Pac. 459, 67 Pac. 903. It may be said that in the last case cited Mr. Justice Henshaw filed a dissenting opinion, and Mr. Justice McFarland also dissented; but it should be stated that the facts presented in Roche v. Baldwin were widely at variance with those in the case at bar. In the former case the making of the agreement as to compensation was squarely denied and absolutely repudiated by Mr. Highton, the plaintiff's assignor. In the case at bar the record contains no showing whatever of any attempt upon the part of plaintiff to procure an award in conformity with the terms of the contract, prior to the bringing of his action, or at any other time, nor do counsel for the plaintiff and respondent mention the matter in any way in their brief replying to the argument of appellant. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the judgment should be reversed as to the amount awarded on the second count of the complaint, to wit, the sum of $2,727.09.

3. In view of the foregoing conclusions, it is not necessary to discuss the remaining points made by counsel. It may be proper to state, however, that the judgment in favor of plaintiff is too great by the sum of $1,000, as shown by the judgment roll, the mistake having occurred in the subtraction of the amount which the trial court found had been paid by the defendant, to wit, the sum of $11,366.82, from the amount found to be the reasonable value of materials furnished and labor done, to wit, the sum of $13,093.91, which difference or balance the court found to be the sum of $2,727.09, whereas it is plain that it should have been $1,727.09. However, this matter becomes immaterial in view of the conclusions we have reached; and, for the purposes of the present appeal, the same may be said of the contention raised by counsel as to the divisible nature of the contracts involved in the action, and the question as to whether the evidence in the trial court was sufficient to warrant the findings. It is to be observed that this action was not brought to enforce a mechanic's lien, and that neither the action nor the defense is based, in any respect, on the mechanic's lien law.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed as to the amount involved in the first count of the complaint, to wit, the sum of $1,272.91, and interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from July 29, 1905, and reversed as to the sum of $2,727.09, awarded to plaintiff upon the second count of the said complaint. The order refusing to grant a new trial is affirmed as to the first count of the complaint, and is reversed as to the second count. The cause is remanded for a new trial as to the last count, neither party to recover costs on this appeal.

MERCED OIL MINING CO. et al. v. PATTERSON et al. (S. F. 4,640.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 20, 1908.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS—LOCATIONS—PLACER CLAIMS—CONVEYANCES—VALIDITY—EFFECT.

Where eight persons as associates make a location of 160 acres of mineral lands under the placer mining laws, and then, before making any discovery, convey a designated 40-acre part thereof to a grantee, with the expressed intent that the grantee shall have all the rights therein which the associates enjoyed, and there is no other agreement, the conveyance operates to sever the 40 acres from the balance, and make it a separate and independent claim, and a discovery made by the grantee thereon does not inure to the benefit of the associates.

2. SAME.

Where the conveyance was made under an agreement as a part of the consideration that a discovery made by the grantee shall inure to the benefit of the associates, a discovery made by the grantee inures to the benefit of the associates and subsequent grantees; the conveyance and agreement being valid.

3. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONVEYANCES—CONSIDERATION.

Where eight persons as associates made a location of 160 acres of mineral lands under the placer mining laws, and then, before making a discovery, made a conveyance to a grantee of a designated 40-acre part thereof, and the conveyance was silent as to any agreement of the parties with respect to the effect of any discovery made by the grantee, parol evidence that the conveyance was made under the agreement, as a part of the consideration, that work done and discovery made by the grantee should inure to the benefit of the associates and subsequent grantees, was admissible, under the rule that parol evidence is admissible to show the true consideration of a contract.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by the Merced Oil Mining Company and C. H. Castle against R. L. Patterson and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment in favor of plaintiff the Merced Oil Mining Company affirmed, and judgment in favor of plaintiff C. H. Castle reversed, and cause remanded.

N. C. Caldwell and E. A. Williams, for appellants. Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. In May, 1899, C. C. Spinks and his seven associates entered upon and located 160 acres of vacant, unoccupied mineral lands of the United States under the placer mining laws. The mineral for which the lands were thought to be valuable was oil. The boundaries of the consolidated claim were marked, and the locators proceeded with the work of development to make an oil discovery. On the 27th day of January, 1900, and before any discovery of oil had been made by the associates, they conveyed a certain 40 acres of their 160 acres to the Merced Oil Mining Company, and on the 20th day of February, 1900, they conveyed another 40 acres to C. H. Castle. The Merced Oil Mining Company prosecuted the work of discovery by drilling a well, and in the September or October following made a sufficient discovery of oil. The conveyance by Spinks and his associates of the 40 acres to the Merced Oil Mining Company, so far as appears from this record, was a conveyance of their rights to the specific 40 acres in severalty, and the same may be said of the 40 acres to Castle.

These two plaintiffs join in a single action as deriving title from a common source, alleging a trespass and interference by the defendants with their ownership and right of possession to these lands so conveyed to them, seeking a decree quieting their title against the defendants, and an injunction restraining the defendants from further trespass and interference with the freehold. The defendants, for their claim of title, set forth later locations made by them upon these same lands. The cause was tried before a jury, which returned special verdicts upon the issues propounded. These special verdicts were adopted and embodied in the judgment of the court. A motion for new trial was made and denied, and defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order so denying their motion for a new trial.

Upon the trial the court adopted, as the correct interpretation of the law, the theory of plaintiffs, namely, that the consolidated claim of Spinks and his associates to the 160 acres constituted a single claim, with the right of possession in Spinks, his associates, and their grantees as against attempted relocations, made while they were actually in the possession of the land and diligently prosecuting the work for the discovery of oil; that the expenditure of $100 per year upon any part of the 160 acres was an expenditure for and on behalf of the whole claim of 160 acres, and that a discovery of oil upon any part of the 160 acres perfected the location of the whole 160-acre claim. Upon this appeal respondents contend that full support for this theory of the law is found in the case of Miller v. Chrisman, 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444, 98 Am. St. Rep. 63. In Miller v. Chrisman this court was called upon to consider a situation where the associates had conveyed all their interests in the 160-acre claim to one of the number. The contention advanced in that case was that, by these conveyances made before discovery of mineral, the whole location lapsed and became void, or, in the alternative, at least, the associates' rights to 140 acres lapsed, leaving Miller, the last associate and the grantee of the others, a location of only 20 acres in and about the situs of the oil discovery which he afterward had made. It was said in Miller v. Chrisman that when the eight citizens, who separately would have been entitled to locate each no more than 20 acres, consolidated and together located 160 acres, the location was not to be deemed eight separate locations of 20 acres each, but was, within the contemplation of the law, a single location of 160 acres, the exterior boundaries of this location being all that they were called upon to demarcate, their right of possession being a common right of possession, their interests common and undivided interests, and that as the law governing such locations provided that, when one or another of the associates abandoned, his interest should go to such associates as continued in possession doing the work, no reason could be seen why one or more of these associates could not, by conveying to their co-locators, accomplish the same result as would be worked by their abandonment, and it was therefore held that by force of such conveyance the remaining associates or associate acquired all the rights of the others in the whole 160-acre claim. Strictly, therefore, the decision in Miller v. Chrisman went no further than to hold that conveyances by the associates amongst themselves, which in no manner segregated the interests, nor destroyed, nor impaired the right of possession which they enjoyed in common, were permissible and legal. The decision of the trial court in the case at bar, it is to be noted, is a long stride in advance of the decision in Miller v. Chrisman. By stipulation of the parties, all questions of weight and conflict in the evidence are eliminated, and the court is asked to decide the following legal questions:

"(A) Was the discovery of oil made by plaintiff, the Merced Oil Mining Company, on the 40 acres conveyed to, and held by, said company, sufficient to validate and perfect the entire location of said quarter section under which said corporation derails title to its respective 40 acres as a placer mining claim, and to relieve the said C. H. Castle from the necessity of making any discovery of oil upon the 40 acres claimed by him in order to perfect his claim to such 40 acres under the laws of the United States?

"(B) After the different parts and portions of said quarter section had been conveyed to, and held by, the several parties as shown by said statement and the verdict and findings herein, was $100 worth of work done upon any one of the several parts and portions a sufficient compliance with the laws of the United States requiring the performance annually of $100 worth of work upon any placer mining location, as to the entire location of 160 acres, or was each of said parties required under the laws of the United States to perform $100 worth of work upon each part and portion so held by each party in severalty?"

The case thus presented is not that of a conveyance by one associate to another or to an outsider of his undivided interest, but is a conveyance to an outsider by all of the associates of all their interest to certain designated and described portions of their 160-acre claim. By the conveyance to Merced Oil Mining Company (and the same is true of course of the conveyance to Castle), the associates stripped themselves of all rights of possession, of all right to enter upon the 40 acres of land to prosecute their mining operations, and, upon the other hand, the Merced Oil Mining Company, in taking the associates' title to this 40 acres, acquired no right of entry whatsoever upon the lands remaining to the associates. So far as the record before us discloses, this was the situation.

No doubt may be entertained that a conveyance such as this may be made, and that the effect of such conveyance, if such be its expressed intent, is to surrender to the grantee all of the rights which the grantors formerly enjoyed. If such a surrender be made, without further understanding and agreement between the parties, it is apparent, we think, that the portion so served must be regarded as a separate and independent claim. Excepting as preserved by the agreement of the parties, there are no rights in common between the grantors and the grantee. The right of possession to the portion of the consolidated claim so severed by conveyance is lost to the original associates. In effect it is an abandonment by them of that piece of land. It is their declaration that they no longer hold such land under the right of possession in common which they enjoy as to the remainder. It cannot be perceived, therefore, that under the circumstances stated a discovery made by such independent owners upon the limited tract conveyed to them can be held to redound to the benefit of the associates who have parted with all interest in and control over it. This, we say, must be the condition where the agreement of the parties goes no further than to a bare conveyance of the grantor's possessory rights. But, upon the other hand, by convention and agreement of the parties, a radically different result may be legally accomplished. No one would question but that the associates might authorize a stranger to their interests to enter upon their land and sink a well, agreeing, in the event of a discovery of oil, to convey to such person any designated portion of the claim. In such case clearly the work would be done for the benefit of all the associates and of the whole claim. It cannot make any difference that the conveyance to the party who is so to develop the land is made before or after discovery, provided that it be understood between them that, as part of the consideration, the work done and the discovery when made shall be for the benefit of the whole claim. As parol evidence is always received to show the true consideration of a contract, this part of the consideration may rest upon an oral agreement of the parties, and need not, therefore, be embodied in the deed. As in the case of quartz locations, it is permissible for two locators to join in sinking a shaft or driving a tunnel without the boundaries of their locations in their effort to strike the vein or lode, with the result that the work so done is deemed in law to have been done on and for the benefit of their respective locations, so in these placer locations no reason is perceived why the parties may not make a conveyance of a divided as well as an undivided interest, to the end that the grantee may prosecute the work of discovery for the benefit of all. But, upon the other hand, while the distinction made may perhaps be regarded as overrefined, nevertheless logically the contrary of the proposition is equally true, that if such conveyance be made, without any such understanding, it is in law no more than a surrender and abandonment of the possessory rights which the original locators had, and the establishment, in effect, of a new and independent location in their grantees.

Coming to apply this principle to the facts in the case, if as a part of the consideration of the deed to the Merced Oil Mining Company it was understood and agreed between the parties that the labor done and money expended upon the Merced Oil Company's 40 acres should operate for the benefit of the land remaining in the possession of the associates, such effect would be legally given. And, in turn, the value of the work and the resulting discovery would redound to the benefit of all subsequent grantees of the associates. In this sense must be understood the declaration in Weed v. Snook, 144 Cal. 439, 77 Pac. 1023. The title of the Merced Oil Mining Company does not by appellants seem to be seriously questioned, but, as to the right and title of Castle, it appears from the instructions given by the court to the jury that they were advised, in effect, that the possession and discovery by either plaintiff of his segregated portion of the claim was a possession and discovery of both plaintiffs. This, as has been discussed, was too broad a statement of the law, and it follows, therefore, that the judgment in favor of castle must be reversed and the cause remanded.

The judgment in favor of the Merced Oil Mining Company is affirmed, and the judgment in favor of C. H. Castle is reversed and the cause remanded.

HASKELL et al. v. CITY OF LONG BEACH et al. (L. A. 2,015.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1908.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—ELECTIONS.

St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247, as amended by St. 1905, p. 551, c. 411, relative to the annexation of territory to incorporated cities, provides that notice of intention to hold an annexation election shall invite the electors to vote by placing on their ballots the words "for annexation" or "against annexation," or words equivalent thereto, and that the ballots used at such election, the opening and closing of the polls, the holding and conducting of the election shall be in conformity as far as may be with the general laws concerning elections, and that in counting the ballots and making returns the board shall do as nearly as practicable in the manner provided in the election laws. Held, that ballots cast at an election, stamped in the line bearing the phrase "for annexation," were not invalid because of the fact that they were not stamped in the voting square, as required by the general election law.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by L. E. Haskell and another against the city of Long Beach and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

M. P. Goodrich, Ex-City Atty. of San Pedro, J. S. Chapman, and Ward Chapman, for appellants. Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke & Jutten, H. Steylitz, City Atty. of San Pedro, George A. Skinner, City Atty. of Long Beach, and John E. Daly, Ex-City Atty. of Long Beach, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. Plaintiffs' appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

This action was brought to set aside and annul an attempted annexation by the city of Long Beach of certain territory on Terminal Island, lying between the cities of Long Beach and San Pedro, in Los Angeles county. The plaintiffs are residents and taxpayers of the territory sought to be annexed and bring the action on the ground that at a special election held for the purpose of determining whether annexation should be made such attempted annexation was in fact defeated by a majority vote of the electors in the territory sought to be annexed, and that the finding of the election board of the election precinct embracing that territory, and the finding of the board of trustees of the city of Long Beach, after a canvass of the votes cast, to the contrary, were both void. The proceedings for the annexation of the territory in question were had under the statute of 1889, as amended in 1905, providing for the alteration of boundaries of, and for the annexation of territory to, incorporated cities and towns. Stats. 1889, p. 353, c. 247; Stats. 1905, p. 551, c. 411. There is no question in the case as to the regularity of all the proceedings relative to the special election at which the proposition for the annexation of the territory in question to the city of Long Beach was voted on. In order to affect annexation of outside territory to an incorporated city, it is necessary under the statutes above referred to that at a special election held for that purpose there shall be a majority vote in both the municipality and in the territory to be annexed in favor of the proposition of annexation then submitted. The vote in the election precincts embracing the city of Long Beach was largely in favor of the proposition, but it is insisted by appellants that in reality the proposition was defeated by a majority vote of the electors in the territory sought to be annexed. In the election precinct which embraced that territory there were cast 146 ballots. The election officers of the precinct in the count of the ballots unanimously rejected one ballot as improperly marked, and that this was proper is not questioned. The election board certified that 145 legal votes had been cast, of which there were found 73 in favor of annexation and 72 against it, and that the proposition to annex the territory had been carried by a majority of one and the returns being delivered to the board of trustees of the city of Long Beach were canvassed by that body and the same result declared. The action of the plaintiffs was based upon a claim that the certificate of the election officers was false; that the officers counted certain ballots which were illegal and void and which should have been rejected; that in fact according to the legal ballots cast the proposition for annexation, instead of being carried by a majority of one, had been defeated, by just that majority.

Fac similes of the ballots the legality of which are questioned are set forth in the record. There are four, and their validity or invalidity is the only question in the case which requires consideration. The resolution passed by the board of trustees of the city of Long Beach calling such special election, and the notice of election prescribed the form of ballot to be used with instructions in said notice of election to the voters as follows: "To vote, stamp a cross (X) in the voting square to the right of and opposite the answer you desire to give; all marks except the cross (X) are forbidden; all distinguishing marks or erasures are forbidden and make the ballot void." These instructions were also printed on the ballots which were otherwise similar to that required by section 1197 of the Political Code, and a copy of the form of ballot furnished the voters at their election in question is as follows:

1	For Annexation
2	Against Annexation

Two of the ballots in question had a cross stamped after the words "For Annexation" and one of them had a cross after the words "Against Annexation," but on each the cross was stamped in the parallelogram to the left of what was intended on the ballot to be the voting square and not in the square itself. The fourth ballot was marked with a cross to the left of the words "For Annexation" and stamped in the square containing the number "1." The trial court held these four ballots to be legal and to have been properly counted. Appellants contend that this was error, and that such ballots should have been rejected.

It is provided by the first section of the act under which these annexation proceedings were had that "such notice" [the published notice of the resolution of intention to hold an annexation election] "shall distinctly state the proposition to be submitted, i. e., that it is proposed to annex to, incorporate in, and make a part of such municipal corporation the territory sought to be annexed, specifically describing the boundaries thereof; and in said notice the qualified electors of said municipal corporation, and the qualified electors residing in said territory so proposed to be annexed, shall be invited to vote upon such proposition by placing upon their ballots the words 'for annexation' or 'against annexation' or words equivalent thereto." It is further provided in said act that "the ballots used at such election, the opening and closing of the polls, and the holding and conducting of such election shall be in conformity, as far as may be, with the general laws of this state concerning elections"; and further that in counting the ballots and making returns the election board should do so "as nearly as practicable in the manner provided in the election laws of this state."

It is insisted by appellants that under the latter provisions of the act it was intended primarily and unqualifiedly to preserve in such elections all the safeguards minutely provided for in the general election law and to make its provisions applicable; that, under the provisions of that law in order to make a ballot legal and valid, it must be stamped with a cross in the square provided for that purpose; that this provision is mandatory, and that as the four ballots in question here, having the cross stamped in places other than the voting square where the mandatory provision of the general election law required them to be, were invalid and should have been rejected. Conceding, without deciding, this position of appellants to be correct if the validity of ballots cast at an election under the annexation act are to be tested by the provisions of the general election law, still it is insisted by respondents that in an election of the kind here involved the electors are not bound by the provisions of the general election law as to how they shall mark their ballots so as to indicate their intention with reference to the proposition of annexation submitted to them; that under the act they are not controlled in their expressions of intention by these provisions of the general election law but may express such intention by marking the ballot in any manner which will indicate such intention on the subject of annexation.

We think this position of respondents is correct. It will be observed that under the provision of the annexation act which states how the voter shall be invited to express his choice of the proposition of annexation there is no requirement that that choice shall be indicated in any particular manner. Nor in the provision making the general election law in certain respects applicable to elections held under the act is there any such explicit language used as would indicate that such choice must be made by marking the ballot in the voting square and nowhere else. If it was intended that such law, in this particular, should be applicable to elections under the act, it is only reasonable to assume that the Legislature would have so declared. The provision in the act that "the ballots used at the election, the opening and closing of the polls, and the holding and conducting of such election shall be in conformity, as far as may be, with the general laws of the state concerning elections," is not an express requirement that the ballots shall be marked in the particular voting square, where under the general election law it is required that the cross shall be placed. The expression used in this particular provision "as far as may be" and the expression in the section of the act heretofore referred to relative to the counting of the ballots by the election board and the returns, and requiring that this shall be done "as far as practicable" according to the provisions of the general election law, indicates that some relaxation of the requirements of that general law as to all these matters was permitted. Of course, these expressions, on account of their indefiniteness, render it very difficult to determine just to what extent it was intended that the provisions should be relaxed, but we think that the expression "as far as may be" found in the provision in reference to the ballots and the holding and conducting of the election was used in view of the fact that the prior provision of the act relative to the method in which the elector might express himself on the proposition of annexation was quite liberal as to the method whereby that choice might be indicated, and that it was not intended to curtail it in any respect. That prior provision is that the "qualified electors residing in said territory so proposed to be annexed shall be invited to vote upon such propositions by placing upon the ballots the words 'for annexation' or the words 'against annexation' or words equivalent thereto." By this provision any method of indicating his wish upon the subject, either by placing upon the ballot "for annexation" or "against annexation," or "words equivalent thereto," was permitted, and, as we say, it was doubtless the intention of the Legislature, while providing that the general election law should apply to elections under the annexation act, "as far as may be," to relax the provisions of that law as to marking in the voting square, and to permit the expression of the voter to be indicated by marking the ballot in any manner which would clearly and reasonably indicate such choice. It will be observed that under the first provision of the act inviting the voters to indicate their choice on the proposition submitted by the use of the words there mentioned or equivalent words it is not required that the ballot furnished to the voter shall have these words or any equivalent words printed on it. The city of Long Beach might have provided a blank form of ballot which would have permitted the voter, as the section permitted him, to indicate his choice by writing thereon the words specially mentioned in the provision or other equivalent words. The municipality could, it is true, print on the ballots furnished the voters the words "for annexation" or "against annexation." This would be a substantial compliance with the statute as was held in People et al. v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 345, 346, 65 Pac. 752, as far as submitting the proposition to the choice of the voters. At the same time it would not have interfered with the right of the voter, or limited that right, as to the mode he might adopt in giving expression to the alternative choice submitted to him. In the case last cited it appears that in the annexation election in question there a ballot similar to the one used in this election was submitted to be voted on with similar instructions to the voter to place the cross in the square. While the precise point made here does not appear to have been involved in the case cited, still the court in holding that such a ballot might be provided for the election and would be a substantial compliance with the first provision of the annexation act says as to the effect to be given to the ballot where so provided and used that "it (the ballot) should be read in the light of all the circumstances surrounding the election and the voter, and the object should be to ascertain and to carry into effect the intention of the voter, if it can be determined with reasonable certainty. The ballot should be liberally construed and the intendments should be in favor of a reasoning and construction which will render the ballot effective rather than some conclusion which will, on a technical ground, render it ineffective. Behrenmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 595, 26 N. E. 704." If the provision of the general election law was to be applied as appellants insist it should, it would be a restriction and limitation of the liberal method which the annexation act itself offered the voters to express their choice, and while the Legislature might make such a restriction, notwithstanding the method was otherwise liberally extended, we should not construe a provision which is indefinite and doubtful on the subject as having accomplished that result. Under this view, we perceive no reason why these ballots should not be held valid. The voter has clearly indicated by his manner of voting his choice upon the proposition. The only purpose of the annexation law is to ascertain the wishes of the voters upon the subject—the number of those voting in the affirmative and those voting in the negative—and it is apparent from the general language used that great liberality was intended to be afforded to the voter in expressing his choice, and that any method which the voter adopted filled this requirement. All that is necessary is that it be manifest from the ballot of the voter that he has clearly indicated his choice upon the subject, and, in using a cross to indicate such choice, it is not necessary under the annexation act that he use it in conformity with the general election law, and that he should place it in the voting square. It is necessary only that he so use it that its use leaves no doubt as to how he intended to vote upon the proposition. When he has done this he has complied with the annexation law as to voting and the vote must be counted. Now, take the ballots in question. There can be no doubt but that the two voters who placed a cross in the parallelogram to the right of the words “for annexation” intended to vote affirmatively upon the proposition; neither can there be any doubt that the one who stamped the cross in the same place after the words “against annexation” intended to vote negatively on it; nor can it be doubted that the voter placing the cross in the numeral square to the left of the words “for annexation” intended to vote in behalf of the proposition. So that, the intention of the voter being clear from the ballot, the purpose of the provisions of the annexation law was accomplished in the method it allowed and the votes were legal and valid. This being true, it cannot be, as suggested by counsel for appellants, that these crosses, as placed by the voters, were distinguishing marks. The crosses were placed on the ballot where the voter had a right legally to place them, and hence are not subject to the objection that they constituted distinguishing marks. Tibbe v. Smith, 108 Cal. 108, 41 Pac. 454, 29 L. R. A. 673, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68.

It is insisted, however, by the appellants that, even if the provisions of the general election law as to placing the cross in the voting square is not applicable to the election held under the annexation act, still the notice of election given by the board of trustees of the city of Long Beach and the directions on the ballots requiring that “to vote, stamp the cross (X) in the voting square to the right of and opposite the answer you desire to give” was a mandatory requirement and noncompliance therewith rendered the ballots in question invalid. There is no merit in this claim. While counsel for appellants have cited a number of cases in support of this proposition, they are cases where elections were held under the general election laws. But as we have concluded that the provisions of the general election law are not applicable under the terms of the annexation act—at least to the extent of marking the ballot by placing a cross in the voting square—there is nothing in the act anywhere authorizing the board of trustees to prescribe any directions as to placing the cross in a voting square. The statute, as we have seen, is quite liberal in its terms, and allows the voter to adopt any method of stamping a cross on his ballot which will show the intent with which he voted on the proposition submitted. While it was not improper in the notice of election to direct the voter where he should mark his ballot so as to best evidence his intention, still such directions could not have the force of mandatory provisions because they are not authorized by any provision of the annexation act. In order to be mandatory, it must at least appear that the directions were warranted by some provision of law. There being no such provision, the directions on that subject by the board in the notice of election and on the ballots were directory merely, and noncompliance therewith did not invalidate the ballot so long as it appeared from any mode of stamping thereon that the voter had clearly indicated his choice on the submitted proposition.

While some other points are made by the appellants as to the canvass of the vote by the board of trustees of the city of Long Beach and upon the findings made by the court, we do not perceive that they present any errors which would call for a reversal of either the order or the judgment, and they are both affirmed.

PEOPLE v. YUN KEE. (Cr. 45.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 11, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITIONS.

A requested instruction need not be given, a similar instruction having been given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

2. SAME—REASONABLE DOUBT.

An instruction on reasonable doubt is not objectionable because of the sentence: “A reasonable doubt is a doubt based on reason, and growing out of the testimony and evidence in the case."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1906-1922.]

3. SAME—PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE—RECONCILING EVIDENCE.

The statement in a requested instruction on presumption of innocence: "It is the duty of the jury, if possible, to reconcile the evidence with this presumption"—is sufficiently covered by instructions that every accused person is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant is entitled to this presumption of innocence until the minds of the jurors are convinced of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, and that if they believe the evidence on any essential point admits of any reasonable doubt, he is entitled to the benefit of it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

4. SAME—NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTIONS.

There is no necessity of giving a requested instruction cautioning the jury against allowing their judgment "to be swayed by any popular feeling that may exist on the outside," and that "the multitude are not the judges in this case," there being nothing in the case to suggest that "popular feeling" has in any way been aroused or has manifested itself, or that there is anything calculated to arouse popular feeling "on the outside" or elsewhere.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1980-1985.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; E. C. Hart, Judge.

Yun Kee, charged as Choy Lung, was convicted and appeals. Affirmed.

C. H. S. Bidwell and Grove L. Johnson, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The sufficiency of the evidence to warrant the verdict of the jury is not questioned. A reversal is asked on the ground that the court erred in giving a certain instruction, proposed by the people, and in refusing to give instructions, asked by defendant, marked 3, 7, and 13. The instruction given at the request of plaintiff was upon the doctrine of reasonable doubt. That part of the instruction complained of reads as follows: "By this term 'reasonable doubt' is not meant every possible or fanciful doubt or conjecture that may suggest itself or be suggested to your minds. It is not a mere guess or surmise, because everything relating to human affairs and dependent upon moral evidence is open to some fanciful doubt or conjecture. A reasonable doubt is a doubt based upon reason, and growing out of the testimony and evidence in the case. A reasonable doubt is that state of the case, which, after an entire comparison and consideration of all the evidence, leaves your minds in that condition that you cannot say you feel an abiding conviction, to a certainty, that the accused committed the offense." The objection is thus stated in the brief: "It requires the jurors to give a reason for their doubt, based upon the evidence introduced." It is further urged that the instruction is "ambiguous and abstruse"; that while the last part of the instruction conforms to that given in Commonwealth v. Webster, by Justice Shaw, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 320, 52 Am. Dec. 711, it gives but a part of that instruction, and the court erred in refusing defendant's instruction marked 3, which was the instruction given in the Webster Case, and in holding that it was elsewhere given. So far as this latter instruction attempted to state the doctrine of reasonable doubt it is substantially the same as the one given, except the sentence italicized, as shown above. Some point is made that upon the authority of People v. Paulsell, 115 Cal. 6, 46 Pac. 734, it was the duty of the court to give instruction 3, even though the court had given a similar instruction elsewhere. We do not understand this to be the rule. The trial court is not required to repeat instructions once given. Besides, there were some other rules for the guidance of the jury, stated in the proposed instruction, which were elsewhere given correctly. The only objection, therefore, is to that part indicated by italics. In it we discover no error. If a reasonable doubt growing out of the evidence in the case is not to be based upon reason, we are at a loss to discover a foundation for it, unless it be based upon mere conjecture and irrational speculation, and this is not permissible.

Instruction marked 7 stated the rule as to the presumption of innocence, and that "it is the duty of the jury, if possible, to reconcile the evidence with this presumption." It is claimed that the part of the instruction above quoted was not elsewhere given. An instruction at folio 53 was as follows: "All presumptions of law are in favor of innocence, and every person accused of crime is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. This is a substantial right given by the law to every person accused of crime, and this defendant is entitled to this presumption of innocence until your minds are convinced of his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." The court, at defendant's request, instructed the jury that if "they believe that the evidence upon any essential point in the case admits of any reasonable doubt, the prisoner is entitled to the benefit of it." The court did not use the language requested by defendant, but an intelligent application of the instructions given, which we must presume was given by the jury, must necessarily have led the jury to consider the evidence with this presumption present in their minds. Where followed by "with" or "to" the word reconcile means to make consistent, to bring to agreement. Webster's Dictionary. The jury could not have reached a verdict of guilty, having the instructions as given in mind, without having found that the evidence could not be reconciled; i. e., made consistent with the presumption of innocence.

Instruction 13 was refused because elsewhere given. It was framed to caution the jury against allowing their judgment to be influenced by bias or prejudice or their judgment "to be swayed by any popular feeling that may exist on the outside; the multitude are not the judges in this case." The court fully instructed the jury on this point, but did not caution the jury against being swayed by "popular feeling," nor did it inform the jury that "the multitude are not the judges of this case." There is nothing in the case to suggest that "popular feeling" had in any manner been aroused or had manifested itself in any way, or that there was anything in the case calculated to arouse popular feeling "on the outside" or elsewhere, and certainly it was not necessary to instruct the jury that "the multitude are not the judges in this case," nor was it prejudicial to refuse to so instruct the jury.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HOGAN et al. v. BIGLER. (Civ. 439.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 9, 1908. Rehearing Denied
June 8, 1908.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT —FILING OF CLAIM—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a claim of lien, filed by one claiming to have furnished materials which were used in a building or structure, does not state the name of the person to whom the materials were furnished, as expressly required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, it cannot be the basis for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien on the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 243.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Mechanic's lien proceeding by Hugh Hogan and others against Louisa Bigler. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

B. F. Bergen and Harry H. Johnson, for appellant. J. E. McElroy, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. Plaintiffs recovered judgment, foreclosing a materialman's lien on the premises described in the complaint, belonging to defendant, Louisa Bigler. It is required by the Code (Code Civ. Proc. § 1187) that the claim or notice of lien, filed by one claiming to have furnished materials which were used in the building or structure, shall state, among other things, "the name of the person to whom he furnished the materials." In this case the claim of lien stated that the lumber was sold and furnished to J. J. Crawford, and the complaint so alleges. The evidence shows without conflict that the lumber was sold to Fred Hambleton, and the court finds that the lumber was sold, furnished, and delivered to "E. C. Wood, F. Hambleton, and C. M. Cook." The notice of lien, therefore, did not comply with the plain mandate of the statute. Plaintiffs sold the lumber directly to Hambleton; that is, Hambleton was the party who went to them and ordered the lumber. They knew him, and no matter what he stated as to the party for whom he was purchasing the lumber, they could easily have complied with the law by stating the fact, in their claim of lien, as to whom the lumber was furnished. The courts have uniformly held that the party who desires to avail himself of the provisions of the mechanics' lien law, so as to charge the land or building of a third party with a debt incurred by another, and not by the owner, must comply substantially with the statutory requirements as to making out in writing and verifying his claim of lien. We have no power to dispense with the plain requirements of the statute. The Legislature saw fit to require that the claim should state the name of the person to whom the materials were furnished. The claim in this case does not do so; hence it cannot be the basis for the enforcement of a lien on the land of the defendant, Louisa Bigler.

In Madera Flume Company v. Kendall, 120 Cal. 182, 52 Pac. 304, 65 Am. St. Rep. 177, the notice of lien did not state the name of the person to whom the plaintiff furnished the materials, and it was held insufficient. The court said, after quoting the statement in the claim of lien: "In this statement the plaintiff does not state that it furnished any of these materials to William Price, nor does it state the name of the person to whom it did furnish them. Not only does the statement fail to name the person to whom the materials were furnished by the plaintiff, but it is consistent with their having been furnished by it to some one other than Price, for whom he obtained them in fulfillment of his contract with Kendall." It appears clear that if a notice or claim of lien states that materials were furnished to a particular person, when, as a fact, they were sold to a different person, and not to the person named, such claim would be more objectionable and defective than if the claim of lien had contained no statement. In the one case no information is given, and in the other information is given which is untrue and misleading. See, further, McDonald v. Backus, 45 Cal. 262; Wood v. Wrede, 46 Cal. 637; Hooper v. Flood, 54 Cal. 218; Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 37 Pac. 195. In Buell & Co. v. Brown, 131 Cal. 158, 63 Pac. 167, it is said: "To charge their property by virtue of this statute it was necessary for him [the lien claimant] to comply with the mandates thereof. We are not required to give a strained construction to the statute in order to enable plaintiff to collect its debt from parties who never agreed to pay it, and who never requested the delivery of the materials." In Santa Monica Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 377, 51 Pac. 376, it is said: "The right to enforce a mechanic's lien depends upon a compliance with the requirements of the statute. Unless the notice of the lien, which is filed with the county recorder, contains the statement required by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the claimant is not entitled to his lien. This section requires the claim of a materialman to contain a statement of his demand after deducting all just credits and offsets, also a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of his contract. The provision that the claim must contain all those statements means that the statements thus contained must be correct. If they are not correctly stated their right to a lien is lost."

It follows that the judgment must be reversed; and it is so ordered.

Ex parte DIEHL. (Cr. 68.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 7, 1908.)

1. LICENSES—REGULATION OF BUSINESS.

Horseshoeing is a business which cannot be regulated.

2. SAME—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—REGULATION OF BUSINESS—STATUTORY AUTHORITY.

Where a city, having express power to license every kind of business, either for revenue or for regulation, imposes a license tax on a business which cannot be regulated, there is no presumption that the ordinance imposing the tax was a measure of regulation, merely because of the absence of language therein indicating its purpose to be for revenue, but the presumption is that the measure is a revenue measure.

3. SAME—"BUSINESS."

The word "business" in Freeholders' Charter, St. 1903, p. 697, c. 31, authorizing a municipal corporation governed by the freeholders' charter to license, for purposes of regulation and revenue, "all and every kind of business transacted or carried on" in the municipality, includes, with a few exceptions, all manner of occupations or means by which persons earn a livelihood, and includes the business of horseshoeing carried on within the limits of the city, and an ordinance imposing a license tax on such business is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 915-923; vol. 8, pp. 7593-7594.]

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT—FAILURE TO TAKE OUT LICENSE.

The penal clause of an ordinance imposing, for purpose of revenue, a license tax on enumerated businesses, declaring that any person violating any of the provisions of the ordinance shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine, or imprisonment until the fine is paid, does not authorize imprisonment until the license tax is paid, but the misdemeanor consists in a refusal to obey the ordinance, and the fine authorized to be imposed on conviction is not intended as a payment of the license tax, but as a punishment for a violation of the ordinance, and the penal clause is not invalid as providing for a penal punishment for the nonpayment of a debt.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 151½.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LEGISLATIVE CONTROL—REVENUE—LICENSES.

Under Const. art. 11, § 6, as amended in 1896 (St. 1895, p. 450, c. 23), declaring that the charters of cities shall be subject to general laws, "except in municipal affairs," etc., Pol. Code, § 3366, enacted in 1901, restricting the power of licensing by local legislative bodies of all and every kind of business to the purposes of regulation, has no application to a municipality governed by Freeholders' Charter, St. 1903, p. 697, c. 31, authorizing the imposition of a license tax for purposes of regulation and revenue.

Habeas corpus by P. Diehl, praying for his discharge from custody, under a warrant issued out of a justice's court for a violation of a municipal ordinance. Petitioner remanded.

Theo. A. Bell and Jos. D. Cornell, for petitioner. Wallace Rutherford, City Atty., for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner was arrested by N. E. Boyd, city marshal of the city of Napa, upon a warrant of arrest issued out of the justice's court of Napa township in the county of Napa. The complaint upon which said warrant of arrest was issued charges the petitioner with the violation of Ordinance No. 374, as amended by Ordinance No. 400, of said city of Napa, in that said petitioner engaged in carrying on the business of horseshoeing "for profit, for which a license is required, without procuring a license therefor." It is claimed by the petitioner that his restraint is illegal and void, and he, therefore, asks that he be restored to his liberty through the writ of habeas corpus. The ordinance referred to enumerates a long list of businesses and occupations made, by the provisions thereof, subject to a municipal license tax. In certain instances the amount of the tax required is graduated according to the amount of the business done. Section 21 of said ordinance provides that "every person engaging in the business of shoeing horses, or who does a general blacksmithing business, shall pay a license tax of one dollar per month." Section 4 authorizes the city tax collector to institute suit against any person carrying on any of the businesses or occupations mentioned in the ordinance, who has failed or refused to take out the required license for the recovery of the amount of the license tax. Section 69 provides that "any person violating or willfully noncomplying with any of the provisions of this ordinance is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not less than $5.00 nor more than $100.00, or imprisonment in the city jail until said fine is paid," in proportion to one day for each dollar of such fine. It is claimed that so much of said ordinance as requires the payment of a license tax as a condition to carrying on the business or exercising the occupation of horseshoeing, and subjecting a person to the penalty of a misdemeanor for failure to procure the license prescribed, is unconstitutional and void, for the following reasons: (1) That said ordinance attempts to regulate the occupation of horseshoeing, which occupation is not subject to regulation. (2) That the occupation of shoeing horses is not a business carried on or transacted for profit.

The city of Napa is governed as a municipal corporation, by a freeholders' charter, and among the powers thereby granted to the city council or governing body of said municipality is that of licensing, for purposes of regulation and revenue, "all and every kind of business transacted or carried on in said city," etc., and "to provide for the collection thereof by suit or otherwise." St. 1903, p. 697, c. 31. It is contended that the ordinance under consideration does not show upon its face that it is a revenue measure, and that, therefore, the presumption is that it was intended for regulatory purposes. In support of this position counsel cite Bessette v. People, 193 Ill. 334, 62 N. E. 215, 56 L. R. A. 558, and Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) p. 1139. We do not think the contention of the petitioner is sustained by the authorities cited. It is true that it appears to be the rule, as Mr. Cooley declares it to be, that, "as all delegated powers to tax are to be closely scanned and strictly construed, it would seem that when a power to license is given, the intentment must be that regulation is the object, unless there is something in the language of the grant, or in the circumstances under which it is made, indicating with sufficient certainty that the raising of revenue by means thereof was contemplated." And the Illinois Supreme Court, in Bessette v. People, supra, only follows and adopts the rule as thus laid down by Judge Cooley. But in the case at bar there is no reason for invoking the operation of a presumption as to the object of the provision of the ordinance requiring a license tax to be paid by a person engaging in the occupation of horseshoeing within the limits of the city of Napa. The charter, as we have seen, grants to the municipal authorities the power to license a business either for revenue or for regulation. Thus it is to be observed that there is "something in the language of the grant" indicating that the provision in question involves only the exercise of the taxing power. The provisions of the ordinance grading the amount of the tax on certain businesses therein enumerated according to the amount of the business transacted furnish additional evidence that the ordinance, as a whole, was intended as a revenue measure. But it is not, in our opinion, necessary that the ordinance, so far as the business of petitioner is concerned, should, by any particular language, indicate that the purpose of requiring a license tax for engaging in the business of horseshoeing is for revenue. We are familiar with no principle sustaining the proposition that where, as here, the charter expressly authorizes the imposition of a license tax for purposes of revenue upon every kind of business transacted, and a business so taxed is one which admittedly cannot be regulated, a presumption arises that the measure is one of regulation, in the absence of language therein indicating its purpose to be for revenue. In other words, it is conceded that horseshoeing is a business which cannot be regulated. Bessette v. People, supra; Cooley on Taxation, p. 1125. Now, then, upon what principle can a presumption be justified that the city council, having express power to license a business for revenue, intended to license such business, which cannot be made the object of regulation, for the purposes of regulation rather than for revenue? It seems to us, rather, that the presumption would be, if presumption were at all necessary, that the city council intended to do only what it had the right and the power to do. We do not think there is any merit in the point that the occupation of shoeing horses is not a business carried on or transacted for profit. The charter provision no doubt employs the word "business" in its broadest signification, and the term as so used was in our judgment intended to include, with a few possible exceptions, all manner of occupations or means by which persons earn a livelihood. Besides, the profits realized by a farrier, engaged in business for himself, are not, presumably, confined to the value of his services in adjusting shoes upon the hoofs of the animals brought to his establishment to be shod. He is entitled to and no doubt charges for and receives a reasonable profit for the labor and the material necessarily employed in the manufacture of the shoes, or, if he does not manufacture them himself, then a reasonable return on his investment, which, of course, constitutes the profit.

Counsel further makes the point that, if the provision of the ordinance relative to the business of the petitioner is designed for the purpose of revenue, then it is against the spirit and policy of the law to subject a person failing or refusing to pay the license required therefor to penal punishment for the mere nonpayment of a debt. This point was forcefully presented, but no authorities cited sustaining it. Our attention has not been turned to any California authority upholding the position, but, so far as we are advised, it has been uniformly the assumption that the power exists in the local authorities to declare as a misdemeanor the act of noncompliance with the provisions of an ordinance requiring the payment of a license tax for revenue purposes. We see no reason why such power should not be exercised consistently with the policy of the law against imprisonment for debt. We do not understand the penal clause of the ordinance before us to mean that one engaging in business upon which a license tax is imposed under the taxing power, and refusing to procure the license required, may be imprisoned until the license tax is paid. The misdemeanor consists in a refusal to obey the provisions of the ordinance, and the fine authorized to be imposed upon conviction is not intended as a payment of the license tax, but as a punishment for defying the commands of the ordinance. The mere conviction and punishment do not and cannot have the effect of absolving the offender from the duty of procuring the required license if, thereafter, he resumes engaging in the business. And, if he should again refuse to take out the license, he may then be subjected to another prosecution and punishment for such refusal.

Some reference was made during the course of the argument to section 3366 of the Political Code. This section, enacted by the Legislature of 1901, restricts the power of licensing by local legislative bodies "of all and every kind of business" to the purposes of regulation. But that section has been construed, in view of the provisions of section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution, as amended in 1896 (St. 1895, p. 450, c. 23), as having no application to municipalities governed by freeholders' charters (Ex parte Braun, 141 Cal. 207, 74 Pac. 780), and it can therefore exert no influence on the decision of the questions involved in the case at bar.

We think the provisions of the ordinance complained of here are in all respects valid, and represent a reasonable exercise of an expressly granted power.

For the foregoing reasons, the writ is denied, and the petitioner remanded.

In re KOCH'S ESTATE. (Civ. 498.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 13, 1908.)

1. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—INTENTION OF TESTATOR.

A will should be so construed as to carry out the desire and intention of the testator, if it is possible to do so from the words used.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 936.]

2. SAME—CONSTRUCTION TO AVOID INTESTACY.

A will should be interpreted so as to avoid intestacy, if reasonably possible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 964.]

3. SAME—CODICILS.

In construing a codicil, it must be read in connection with the will and as a part of it; effect being given to the whole will, if possible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 997.]

4. SAME—"BELONGINGS."

A will bequeathed sums of money to various persons, including testatrix's sister and heir at law, but made no disposition of the residue of the estate after paying the amounts therein named and the debts, nor of testatrix's household furniture, clothes, and personal belongings. A codicil bequeathed to two of the legatees in the original will "all my belongings, furniture, and clothes included." Held that, by the term "belongings," testatrix did not mean money, but meant her ornaments, books, pictures, besides her furniture and clothes, which she had not disposed of by the original will.

5. SAME—PARTIAL INTESTACY.

There being no disposition of the residue of money after payment of the bequests, it passed to testatrix's sister as heir at law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Proceedings for the settlement of the estate of Margaret S. Koch. From the portion of the decree of distribution awarding the residue of the estate, there was an appeal. Affirmed.

Charles K. Harper and Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for appellants. Wilbur G. Zeigler, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This is an appeal from that portion of the decree of distribution awarding the residue of the estate of deceased, $1,688.80, to Catherine Billington, her sister and sole surviving heir at law. The question to be decided is as to the construction of a codicil to the will. The will is as follows: "San Francisco, California, February second, 1905. I Margaret S. Koch do hereby declare this to be my last will and testament I revoke all other will heretofore made by me I desire all my Just debts to be first paid Then I desire to leave to my sister Mrs. Catherine Billington the sum of one thousand dollars I also leave to Mrs. Fanny Harpe one thousand dollars I also leave to Charles K. Harper the sum of Five Hundred dollars also I leave to Emile Sherwood Harper one thousand dollars I also leave to Sister Alice late Matron of the Episcopal Home for Old Ladies San Francisco the sum of five hundred dollars as a little gift for her kindness to me when I stayed at the Home I also leave to my dear friend Mrs. Sothern the sum of five hundred dollars I also leave to Miss N. Townsend the sum of five hundred dollars if there should be money enough after all the above named parties have been paid and my just debts have been paid. I hereby appoint my friend Henry P. Harper executor of this my will to serve without bonds. [Signed] Margaret S. Koch." The codicil is as follows: "I leave to Mrs. Fanny Harper and Nettie Townsend all my belongings, furniture and clothes included. [Signed] Margaret S. Koch. January the twentieth nineteen hundred six." A will should be so construed as to carry out the desire and intention of the testator, if it is possible to do so from the words used. It is also the rule in the construction of a will to interpret it, if reasonably possible, so as to prevent intestacy. As to what were the intentions of a testator in a given case is often a question difficult of solution. Sometimes its final determination is but an approximation. We must take, not only the will, but its entire scheme; the property disposed of; the persons named as devisees or legatees; the words used; and the context. The technical import of words should not prevail over the obvious intent of the testator; and words should be construed with reference to the surroundings. Here the decedent had her little estate all in money or convertible paper. She intended to dispose of it by bequests of certain named amounts to her sister and her friends who were nearest and dearest to her. She began by first naming her only sister and heir at law, Mrs. Billington, to whom she gave $1,000. She next named Mrs. Harper, to whom she gave $1,000, and, after other bequests, finally named Miss Townsend, to whom she gave $500, "if there should be money enough after the above named parties have been paid and my just debts have been paid."

It is plain that by the original will, without the codicil, the testatrix intended to postpone Miss Townsend to the legatees first named, and to leave her less than $500 if there should not be sufficient money with which to pay the $500 after paying all the just debts and all the prior bequests. It is also beyond controversy that the will without the codicil made no disposition of the residue of the estate after paying the amounts therein named and the debts. If at the time of distribution there should be more money than enough to pay all expenses, debts, and legacies by the original will, the residue was not disposed of. The household furniture and the clothes of deceased were not disposed of, nor any little items of jewelry, personal belongings, pictures, or books. If the testatrix had died without the codicil having been made, the residue of money and all furniture and belongings would have gone to the sister, Mrs. Billington. It therefore seems reasonable that it occurred to the testatrix that she had not made any disposition of her furniture, clothes, and little personal articles. She therefore wrote the codicil. What did she mean by "all my belongings, furniture, and clothes included"? If by the word "belongings," testatrix meant money, she evidently intended by the words used to give all her money to Mrs. Harper and Miss Townsend, because she said she left them all her belongings. The effect of such construction would be to destroy all the other bequests made in the will, and to give all her property to Mrs. Harper and Miss Townsend. It is evident that she had no such idea in her mind. She knew that she had given Miss Townsend $500 if there should be money enough left to pay her that amount. She knew of the other bequests to the parties named in the will, and, so knowing, she did not revoke any bequest by the codicil. She said nothing about the residue of her estate, because she evidently thought she had disposed of it all, except that upon which she desired the codicil to operate. She desired her will to remain, to take effect with the codicil affixed thereto. We are therefore of the opinion that by the words of the codicil she meant the furniture, clothes, pictures, jewelry, and things which she ordinarily used for her personal comfort. Her bed, her chairs, her clothes, her pictures, her dishes, her jewelry were her belongings in the sense in which she used the term. She evidently had such things in mind; and, when she said "I leave all my belongings," she did not, in our opinion, mean all her money, nor all the residue of her estate. While her money, as belonging to her, was in one sense a belonging, yet it is clear that she did not mean money by the word "belongings" as she used it, for she had in her own mind expressly disposed of that. She evidently meant to dispose of something that in her mind she had left undisposed of. All of the will must, if possible, be given effect. The codicil must be read into it and as a part of it. It must as so read be held not to have any relation to the money belonging to the deceased. She evidently did not have her money in mind as being a "belonging" which she was disposing of by the codicil. If deceased thought that "belongings" meant all her property, she would not have added the words "furniture and clothes included." Such words would have been entirely superfluous. She used the words with reference to her ornaments, books, pictures, and so forth, and added that she intended it to include "furniture and clothes." She desired all these things to go to Mrs. Harper and Miss Townsend. We must give the word "belongings" the sense in which it is clear that the testatrix used it.

In Le Breton v. Cook, 107 Cal. 416, 40 Pac. 553, in speaking of the word "residue," it is said: "Where, however it is manifest from the context or from the provisions of the will that the testator used that word in a more restricted sense, it will be given the meaning in which it is clear that the testator used it." In Andrews v. Schoppe, 84 Me. 170, 24 Atl. 805, where the will gave certain enumerated household articles, furniture, beds, and so forth and "all other articles of personal property," it was held that the latter words must be used in connection with the words preceding them, and that, as so used, the words did not include promissory notes found among the effects of deceased. In Tallman v. Tallman, 3 Misc. Rep. 465, 23 N. Y. Supp. 734, it was held that, in view of other bequests in the will, a bequest of "all my personal property" referred only to household effects. In Bills v. Putnam, 64 N. H. 554, 15 Atl. 138, where the bequest was to two daughters of the testatrix of all her "wearing apparel, household furniture, and personal property of every name, nature and description," it was held that the words personal property were used in their restricted sense, and that they did not include everything except real estate.

The views herein expressed, in our opinion, carry out the intention of the deceased as to all the property she disposed of. Her debts were paid as she desired. The full amount of each legacy has been given as she directed. She made no disposition of the small amount of cash left after all these things had been done. The law gives that to her sister, the only surviving heir.

The decree is affirmed.

FITE v. PERRY. (Civ. 425.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 13, 1908.)

1. GIFTS—CAUSA MORTIS—DELIVERY AND ACCEPTANCE—NECESSITY.

A writing is not necessary to a gift causa mortis, but possession must be absolutely delivered to the donee before the death of either of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Gifts, §§ 104, 123.]

2. WILLS—DISTINGUISHED FROM GIFT CAUSA MORTIS.

The distinction between a testamentary gift and a gift causa mortis is in the time of the change of possession, which in the case of a gift causa mortis is necessarily before the donor's death.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 219; vol. 24, Gifts, § 121.]

3. GIFTS—CAUSA MORTIS—SUFFICIENCY OF DELIVERY.

Where plaintiff informed another that a person in his last illness had given her certain property, but took no steps to reduce it to possession, and did not ask the person in whose possession it was to hold it for her, and did not even see the property at the time or thereafter state to deceased before his death that she had seen the person in whose care the property was and told him of the gift, and testified at trial that she understood she was not to take possession and had no right to possession before the owner died, and understood that the owner did not intend to transfer possession to her until after his death, she may not claim the property as a gift causa mortis, since there was no delivery of it before the death of the donor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; F. A. Kelley, Judge.

Action by Maud Fite against V. E. Perry, as administrator of the estate of C. C. Carlton, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Pardee & Pardee, for appellant. R. M. Rankin and W. M. Boardman, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to recover possession of certain two horses, two sets of harness, and a buggy, alleged to be the property of plaintiff and wrongfully withheld by defendant. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and plaintiff had the judgment, from which defendant appeals on bill of exceptions.

The findings are made up largely of probative facts. The ultimate facts found which are controverted are the following: That deceased on November 4, 1906, "being in contemplation of death, but of clear and sound mind, did give and grant to the said plaintiff the said property" (describing the property mentioned in the complaint); that "at the time the gift of said property was made to the plaintiff, as aforesaid, the said personal property was in the possession of said C. C. Carlton and was situated in a barn and corral jointly used by him and one T. J. Kennedy." There is no finding that plaintiff took possession of the property prior to the death of decedent, or at all, but there is a finding of certain facts which the court probably treated as equivalent to taking possession of or relieving plaintiff from the necessity of taking actual possession. This finding is as follows: "That after said gift was made to plaintiff by said C. C. Carlton, to wit, about the hour of 11 o'clock a. m. of said 4th day of November, 1906, plaintiff left the sick room of said C. C. Carlton and went out to make arrangements to take said personal property; that plaintiff met said T. J. Kennedy, and informed him that said C. C. Carlton had made such gift to her of said property, and said T. J. Kennedy thereupon said to plaintiff: 'I am glad of it. I would rather see you have it than any one'—that plaintiff being satisfied and understanding from his statements that said T. J. Kennedy would care for and hold said property for plaintiff, returned to the bedside of said C. C. Carlton and there remained until his death at about the hour of 8 o'clock p. m. of said 4th day of November, 1906; that the said horses, and particularly one of them, was too fractious and dangerous to be handled and controlled by plaintiff personally." As conclusions of law the court found that deceased, "in contemplation of death, on the 4th day of November, 1906, did give and grant to the said plaintiff the said personal property, and that said plaintiff ever since has been and still is the owner of said property, and entitled to the possession thereof."

It appeared that deceased was about 70 years old, and had been on intimate social relations with plaintiff's family and was particularly attached to her in a friendly way; that he had been sick for some time, and plaintiff was told he wanted her and she went to him on November 4th. She testified: "He died about 8 o'clock in the evening of the 4th of November, 1906, and I was with him nearly all the time. The time he made the gift to me was early in the morning, about 9 or 10 o'clock. I think he was in a dying condition, but perfectly in his right mind. * * * He seemed to realize that he was about to die." She was asked to state what was said by him in reference to the gift, and replied: "Why, the way the subject came up, he was upstairs and he was right on an angle to where his barn was where he kept these horses, and I looked out and says: 'You ought to see Prince and Doc.' Mr. Carlton says: 'How do they look?' I says, 'They look fine. They are playing.' Then he said—he gave them to me. Shall I say what he said? Mr. Boardman (Plaintiff's Attorney): Go ahead. Witness (continuing): He says: 'If I don't happen to get over this,' he says, 'I want you to have the buggy, horses, and harness.' He says: 'Make arrangements and get them,' or, 'and take them.' I wouldn't swear to that, either 'get' or 'take.'" She further testified that he called the attention of Mrs. Packwood to what he had said; "called her by her given name twice, and I understood it and she did, as he wanted her to witness that he had given me the property." Mrs. Packwood was a friend of deceased and plaintiff, and was present and to some extent corroborated the testimony of plaintiff. The plaintiff further testified: "A few minutes after this conversation I went downstairs out into the street and met Mr. Kennedy, and I told him that Mr. Carlton had given me the team, buggy, and harness. He said he had rather see me get them than any one else, or some words to that effect. Mr. Kennedy is the man who had the buildings and butcher shop and tools rented from Mr. Carlton. Besides the premises known as the butcher shop, there was a barn where Mr. Carlton kept his horses, and there was a back room on the premises that Mr. Carlton kept his things in and slept in there when he was in the town of Bieber. Mr. Carlton took care of his horses until he was sick—until he went to bed. Mr. Kennedy fed the horses for Mr. Carlton after he took sick. At that time Mr. Kennedy gave me to understand that he thought they were mine. Q. Then what did he give you to understand about the horses being there? A. He gave me to understand he thought they were mine. I went back to the room. He asked me if I would stay with him when I first went in the morning, and I felt disposed to go back and attend the sick man. I left him for the purpose of going over to make arrangements about getting the horses or taking the horses as was stated by him. I went over to tell Mr. Kennedy. That conversation with Mr. Kennedy was within less than an hour after he gave me the property. That was before noon, and he died at 8 o'clock at night. I saw Mr. Kennedy the next morning, and told him that I wanted the horses. He said I could have them, but he had nothing to do with them, something of that sort; and then I told him I would have some of the boys go up and get them and take them down to father's place, and he said all right. The horses were not safe for any woman to handle. In a short time I saw him again, and he told me I could not have them."

On cross-examination she testified: "Mr. Carlton stated to me that I was to have possession of the property in case he died, but did not give me any writing at that time. I had three interviews with Mr. Kennedy about the team. In the third one he refused to give me possession of the team. Q. Did Mr. Carlton have any children? A. Yes, sir. Q. How many? A. Well, I never saw but one of them. I heard he had four, though. Q. What were Mr. Carlton's exact words in reference to the gift? A. He says: 'If I don't happen to get out of this,' he says, 'the horses, buggy, and harness are yours. Make arrangements and get them,' or 'take them.' Q. Did he tell you any particular time? A. No, sir. Q. Didn't say you was to get them at that time? A. No, sir. He started to coughing and didn't say any more. Q. You understood, though, that you were not to have possession of the team unless he died? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you consider then that you had any right to take possession of the team before his death? A. No, sir. Q. Why did you make that demand of Mr. Kennedy then? A. I didn't make a demand. I understood that they were mine when he died, and we all knew he was going to die because the doctor had said there was no hopes. The Court: How did you understand it at the time he told you he would give you the horses, harness, and buggy; that he intended to transfer the possession from himself to you or not? A. No; I didn't until after he died. Q. Then did you understand that he intended to make a complete gift to you? A. Yes, sir. Q. And that it would only be a short space of time before he died? A. Yes, sir." It may be assumed that the evidence was sufficient to justify the finding that the deceased intended to give the property to plaintiff should he not recover from his then sickness. But to complete this gift and make it effective it was necessary that there should be delivery to the donee, actual or symbolic, before the death of the donor. The principles governing gifts causa mortis are well stated in Noble v. Garden, 146 Cal. 225, 79 Pac. 883. We quote briefly from authorities cited: "In a gift causa mortis a written instrument is not necessary. It may be, and usually is, made by parol, and the possession of the thing given must be absolutely delivered to the donee before the death of the donor and the donee. * * * The most characteristic mark of distinction between a legacy and such a gift is the change of possession. From the nature of the donatio, it is apparent that the infallible test which must distinguish it from a testamentary gift is delivery, a change of dominion in presenti. Without this there is really nothing to distinguish it from an ordinary testamentary bequest." Thornton on Gifts, § 20, and cases cited. In Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 602, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500, the question is fully treated and the cases collected. The court said: "If the gift does not take effect as an executed and complete transfer to the donee of possession and title, either legal or equitable, during the life of the donor, it is a testamentary disposition, good only if made and proved as a will. * * * But there must be delivery of possession. The contract must have been executed. The thing given must be put into the hands of the donee, or placed within his power by delivery of the means of obtaining it. * * * Without delivery the transaction is not valid as an executed gift; and, without consideration, it is not valid as a contract to be executed."

Under these rules what occurred between plaintiff and Kennedy after the death of Carlton is immaterial. When plaintiff informed Kennedy that Carlton had given her the property she took no steps to reduce it to possession, nor did she request Kennedy to hold it for her, nor did he say he would do so. She did not even view the property at that time, nor did she report to Carlton that she had seen Kennedy. She testified that she understood that she was not to take possession, and that she had no right to take possession before Carlton died. The court asked her whether she understood that Carlton intended to transfer the possession from himself to her or not, and she replied: "No; I didn't, until he died."

In view of the principles of law above stated, it seems to us quite clear that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the findings of the court.

The judgment is reversed.

HARROLD v. BARNUM, Auditor. (Civ. 468.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 31, 1908.)

OFFICERS—COMPENSATION—INCREASING COMPENSATION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS—"TERM OF OFFICE."

The phrase "term of office," in Const. art. 11, § 9, providing that compensation of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office, etc., applies only to officers who have a fixed and definite term, and does not apply to appointive officers, who hold at the pleasure of the appointing power, and the constitutional inhibition does not apply to the office of deputy county surveyor, the incumbent of which holds under an appointment of the county surveyor at his pleasure.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Application for mandamus by Thomas R. Harrold against H. E. Barnum, auditor of the county of Fresno, to compel defendant to issue a warrant to plaintiff. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Everts & Ewing, for appellant. Denver F. Church and M. F. McCormick, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. January 7, 1907, one Scott McKay, having been theretofore elected county surveyor of Fresno county for a term of four years, qualified and assumed the duties of that office. He thereupon appointed the plaintiff deputy county surveyor, which appointment continued in force until June 1, 1907, when it was revoked. Thereafter however, he was reappointed to the same position, qualified under the second appointment, and served for one month, whereupon he demanded of the county auditor (defendant) a warrant upon the treasury of said county for the sum of $100 as his salary for said month, being the month of June. Compliance with this demand was refused, and plaintiff in his complaint prays for an alternative writ of mandate, directing said auditor to issue and deliver said warrant to him. Judgment went for defendant, from which judgment plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

When Scott McKay was elected to the office of county surveyor in January, 1907, his salary and that of his deputy was fixed by the county government act (St. 1905, p. 435 et seq. c. 364) as follows:

"In counties of the seventh class (Fresno) the county officers shall receive as compensation for the services required of them by law or by virtue of their offices, the following salaries, to wit:

"Par. 12. The surveyor, two thousand dollars ($2,000.00) per annum in full compensation for all services as county surveyor, as road viewer and road inspector, and his actual expenses when at work in the field. He shall have one deputy at an annual salary of nine hundred and sixty dollars ($960.00)."

The Legislature of 1907 (St. 1907, p. 447, c. 10) modified the foregoing paragraph 12 by amending section 4236 of the Political Code, so as to fix the salary of deputy surveyor at $1,200 per annum. In all other respects the paragraph remains unchanged.

The question for determination is whether the act increasing the salary of the office held by appellant, viz., that of deputy county surveyor, is within the prohibition of article 11, § 9, of the Constitution of this state, which reads: "Compensation of any county, city, town or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office, nor shall the term of any officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed." After a careful examination of the authorities, we are convinced that the expression "term of office," as used in the constitutional provision just quoted, applies only to officers who have a fixed and definite term, and that it does not apply to appointive officers who hold at the pleasure of the appointing power.

In the case of Gibbs v. Morgan, 39 N. J. Eq. 128, where a preliminary question was whether the constitutional prohibition against increasing or decreasing the percentage or allowance of public officers during the time for which they were elected or appointed applied to a deputy county clerk, the court says: "Deputy clerks are public officers, but they have no term in the sense in which the expression is used in the paragraph above quoted. They are employes of the county clerks, and their employment is a matter of mere private contract. The law merely constitutes them public officers and gives them certain powers. It does not establish any particular period of service for them. That is left to private agreement. Since they have no term in the sense in which the word is used in the Constitution, it follows that the constitutional prohibition when applied to legislation to create or increase their compensation is unqualified." In Speed v. Crawford, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 207, the word "term" is expressly held to designate "a fixed and definite period of time," and the court states that officers removable at the pleasure of another officer, or where they may be removed on the occurrence of an uncertain event, do not hold office for a term. This case was decided on a constitutional provision similar to the one found in this state. In State v. Johnson, 123 Mo. 43, 27 S. W. 399, a chief engineer of a city fire department was appointed by the council, and was subject to be removed by it. During his incumbency of the office his salary was increased. There, in construing the following constitutional provision: "The compensation or fees of no state, county or municipal officer shall be increased during his term of office"—the court said: "It will be observed that this section of the Constitution only embraces within its provisions officers who are elected or appointed for some specific or definite term, and that it has no application whatever to the case in hand, where the relator's term of office is not fixed by any law or ordinance and when he simply holds at the pleasure of the appointing power. The relator was not elected nor was he appointed for any definite time. There does not seem to be room for argument in regard to the proper meaning of this section, so plain is it in its construction." State v. Galusha, 74 Neb. 199, 104 N. W. 201, involved a definition of the phrase "term of office," and the court held that it meant "a fixed and definite period of time," and in support of this position it cites a number of authorities, among others, State v. Stonestreet, 99 Mo. 361, 12 S. W. 895, in which last case it is said: "Whether we take the phrase [term of office] in its ordinary or popular sense, or its technical import, it means one and the same thing—a fixed and definite period of time." Somers v. State, is reported in 5 S. D. 321, 58 N. W. 804, and again upon rehearing in 5 S. D. 584, 59 N. W. 962. There the salary of a deputy superintendent of public instruction was reduced by an act of the Legislature from $1,200 to $900 per annum, and he contended that this act of the Legislature was in violation of a section of the Constitution, which provided that "the compensation of no public officer shall be increased or diminished during his term." The court reviewed the authorities, and held that this contention was not correct, for the reason that under the law he has no term. The court said: "He had no title or tenure to the office beyond the pleasure of the appointing power. The word 'term,' when used in reference to the tenure of office, means, ordinarily, a fixed and definite term, and does not apply to appointive offices held at the pleasure of the appointing power." See, also, State v. Massillon, 24 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 249; 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (1st Ed.) p. 562; 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) p. 53; Mechem on Public Officers, § 385. Respondent also cites the case of Larew v. Newman, 81 Cal. 588, 23 Pac. 227, decided in 1857. There are some expressions in the case contrary to the views just expressed, but they were unnecessary for the decision, and therefore are not controlling here.

Respondent also cites the case of Larew v. Newman, 81 Cal. 588, 23 Pac. 227. There, a few months after one Engenhoff was elected county superintendent of schools he resigned, and one Larew was appointed to fill the unexpired term. After Engenhoff was elected, and before he resigned, the salary of county superintendent of schools was increased, and Larew sought to recover the increased salary. The court held, construing the constitutional provision already quoted, "that the increased salary did not commence until after the expiration of the time for which Engenhoff had been elected." That case is not in point. There the term of office was fixed and definite. The term of an office relates to the office, and not to the incumbent. When Engenhoff resigned and Larew was appointed a new term was not thereby commenced. The resignation merely created a vacancy within the term. Somers v. State, 5 S. D. 584, 59 N. W. 963.

The judgment is reversed.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INCONSISTENT FINDINGS.

Even if there be two findings in an action to recover money paid on agreement of defendant to deliver a contract for sale of land, one that the agreement was made by defendant as broker, the other that he undertook to sell directly to plaintiff, such inconsistency would not warrant a reversal of the judgment for plaintiff; it having been defendant's duty, which it did not perform, in which ever capacity it acted, to deliver a contract entitling plaintiff to an unnumbered title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4234.]

2. ESTOPPEL—KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS.

Plaintiff is not estopped to question the character of the contract for sale of land delivered by defendant under its agreement, because having accepted from defendant, before delivery of the contract, part of a forfeiture on a resale of the contract to another by defendant as plaintiff's agent; plaintiff not having then known of the defect in the contract.

3. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—VARYING CONTRACT.

Parol testimony of previous transactions, the only effect of which could be to change the terms of the agreement relied on, is inadmissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Mary Steele against the Guaranty Realty Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Taft & O'Dell, for appellant.
Cryer & Tuttle, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Plaintiff and defendant on July 7, 1905, entered into the following contract: "Mrs. M. Steele has this day deposited with Guaranty Realty Company, of Ocean Park, Cal., twenty-five dollars, as part of the first payment on the purchase of lot 10, block 15, of the Silver Strand tract, Los Angeles county, California. Purchase price, $1,600. Balance of said first payment amounting to about $875, to be paid within 5 days from date, when contract of purchase is to be delivered. If said contract cannot be procured this deposit is to be returned, and if the balance of said payment is not paid, the deposit is to be retained in payment of commissions and for services rendered. Date: July 7. Names: G. R. Co. (G.) M. Steele." Pursuant thereto, plaintiff paid defendant the $875 specified within the time required. Defendant never delivered a contract of sale for the lot described, other than one theretofore executed by the owners with one Albright, by which the premises were to be conveyed subject to such limitations and reservations as to substantially incumber the title. Before the tender of the assigned contract, defendant informed plaintiff that it had resold the contract agreed to be delivered to plaintiff at an advance, and that the proposed purchaser had forfeited $50 paid on such contract of resale, and defendant accordingly paid to plaintiff one-half of such forfeiture. Thereafter defendant delivered to plaintiff the contract made by the owners of the lot with Albright and by Albright assigned; but, upon examination and discovery of the limitations and reservations therein, plaintiff refused to accept the same and brought this action to recover the money paid defendant under the agreement. Judgment went for plaintiff for the money so paid, less $25 theretofore received by her from defendant.

Appellant insists that the findings are inconsistent, in that one finding, in effect, is that the agreement to deliver the contract was made by defendant as a broker, while another finding is that the defendant undertook to sell the lot directly to plaintiff. Were an inconsistency even apparent, it would not warrant a reversal of the judgment, for in whatever capacity the money was received under the agreement with plaintiff it became the duty of defendant to deliver a contract by the terms of which, upon the performance by plaintiff of the obligations imposed upon her, she would be entitled to a deed conveying an unincumbered title. The court finds, and there is evidence in its support, that no such contract was tendered or delivered.

It is insisted, further, that plaintiff is estopped to question the character of the contract tendered, because she had accepted $25 as part of a forfeiture on a resale of the contract by defendant; but the court finds, and there is evidence to warrant the same, that when defendant represented to plaintiff that it had resold the contract at an advance, and that the proposed purchaser had forfeited $50 upon deposit, one-half of which plaintiff was entitled to and which she received, she did not know that the lot was incumbered, or that the contract which defendant had undertaken to procure or deliver was so restricted in its terms. Plaintiff being in ignorance as to the character of the contract, the subject of the resale, the acceptance of the $25 did not estop her from asserting her legal rights when the true character of the proposed contract sought to be assigned was brought to her attention. She is not shown to have accepted the benefit with notice. We are not interested in the question of the weight given by the court to conflicting evidence. That was a matter for the trial court to determine, and with its determination we must be content.

The court did not err in excluding testimony relating to previous transactions between the parties. Its effect could only be to modify and change the terms of the written agreement, which is not permissible, were it even assumed that one who had purchased an incumbered title previously from the same parties would be willing to accept a title of the same character in subsequent transactions. The rule relating to the admission of oral testimony as to matters not inconsistent with the terms of the written agreement has no application here. The paper writing executed by defendant is, in legal effect, a contract as distinguished from a mere receipt, and the rule relating to the admission of evidence to explain receipts is not here involved.

We find no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—TERMINATION—INJURY TO PREMISES.

That a tenant after the beginning of his term was deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises by the destruction of a crop thereon by inevitable casualty, happening without the fault of either himself or landlord, did not at common law entitle him to an apportionment of rent under an unconditional promise to pay a stipulated sum as rental.

3. SAME—DESTRUCTION OF CROP.

Civ. Code, § 1932, providing that the hirer may terminate the hiring before the end of the agreed time where the greater part of the thing hired perishes from any other cause than ordinary negligence, does not authorize a tenant of land planted with asparagus, from which he expected to harvest a profitable crop, to recover the partial rent paid on the destruction of the crop by a flood, without destroying the asparagus beds, since the thing destroyed was the growing crop belonging to the tenant under section 1926, providing that the products of a thing hired during the hiring belong to the hirer; asparagus growing from roots which are perennial, and, being once planted, producing the asparagus of commerce for many successive years.

Action by W. E. Meek against Margarita Cunha and another. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bigelow & Dorsey and Mastick, Van Fleet & Mastick, for appellant. Jordan & Brann, for respondents.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment on demurrer sustained to plaintiff's complaint.

As appears by the complaint, plaintiff on the 30th day of November, 1903, leased of defendants for the period of 10 months next ensuing 55 acres of land then planted in asparagus, which produced annual crops, and which asparagus, it is alleged, constituted, and was then known to defendants to constitute, the material and sole inducement to plaintiff to hire said land. By the terms of the lease plaintiff unconditionally promised to pay as rental the sum of $2,500, to wit, $2,250 at the execution of the lease, and $250 on April 1, 1904, and plaintiff did pay on the 30th day of November, 1903, said sum of $2,250. About the 1st of April, 1904, an extraordinary rise occurred in the San Joaquin river, which bounds the leased lands, whereby the flood waters thereof, without any fault of defendants or plaintiff, broke through the levee which protected said lands and inundated the same, so that the lands and asparagus beds thereon were kept covered by water to a depth of several feet during the months of April, May, and June, 1904, and the whole crop of asparagus for the season destroyed, save what had been cut during the two weeks immediately preceding April 1st, the value of which was much less than the amount expended by plaintiff in the care and cultivation of the leased premises. It is alleged that because of said flood the only beneficial use of said lands or of said asparagus beds which plaintiff made or could have made was between March 15 and April 1, 1904; the use during the remainder of the term being merely nominal and of no benefit to plaintiff. On May 5, 1904, plaintiff served on defendant written notice of rescission, stating that the asparagus crops on the leased lands had been destroyed by the flood, demanded the repayment of the $2,250 paid by defendants, and offered to surrender possession of the leased land. Repayment being refused, this action was brought to recover the sum of $2,250 paid as rent for the leased premises.

Plaintiff, upon the facts stated in his complaint, had no cause of action against defendant to recover the money paid as rent, or any portion thereof. When reduced to its last analysis, plaintiff leased land planted to asparagus, from which he expected to harvest a profitable crop, but for a cause for which defendants were in no way to blame he lost the crop and the opportunity to make any profitable use of the land. Neither the land nor the asparagus beds were destroyed—the crop only was destroyed. Asparagus is grown from roots which are perennial, and, being once planted, produce the asparagus of commerce for many successive years. An asparagus bed is in this respect much like an orchard. We apprehend that no one would contend that the lessee of an orchard who lost his entire crop for a season by reason of blight, storm, or insect pest could have an apportionment of rent as against his landlord under a lease containing an unconditional promise to pay rent. Appellant concedes that, under the general rule at common law, the fact that the tenant after the beginning of the term was deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the leased premises by inevitable casualty, happening without the fault of either the landlord or tenant, would not entitle him to an apportionment of rent (Cowell v. Lumley, 39 Cal. 151, 2 Am. Rep. 430; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 305, cases in note 6); but he urges that this case is within the exception to the general rule, recognized in some of the states, that, where a substantial part of the premises is destroyed without fault of either party, the tenant will be entitled to an apportionment of rent. The cases of this character are all where buildings or other structures essential to the use of the leased premises were destroyed. No case can be cited where the destruction of a crop has been held in a common-law state to entitle the tenant to an apportionment of rent under an unconditional promise to pay a stipulated sum as rental.

Neither does the fact that a tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the premises is interrupted by an inundation affect his liability for rent. 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 306; Niedelet v. Wales, 16 Mo. 214. The case of Wattles v. South Omaha Ice & Coal Co., 50 Neb. 251, 69 N. W. 785, 36 L. R. A. 429, 61 Am. St. Rep. 554, much relied on by appellant, bears no similitude to the case at bar. Icehouses and buildings, necessary and essential to the use of the plant rented for gathering and storing ice, were destroyed. The case would have some likeness to the case at bar if, by reason of high temperature, the ice ponds had produced no ice. Viterbo v. Friedlander, 120 U. S. 730, 7 Sup. Ct. 962, 30 L. Ed. 776, also relied on by appellant, arose under the Code of Louisiana, where the rules of the civil law prevail, and was an action to annul a lease of a sugar plantation, where the bridges, roads, drainage canals, and "stubble" and "seed cane," from which cane is harvested and taken to plant and to make into sugar, were destroyed by an overflow of the Mississippi river through a crevasse in the levee along the banks of the river. In this case it was held that, if the crops only had been destroyed, the tenant would not have been entitled to any abatement in the rent, but that the destruction of the bridges, roads, canals, "stubble," and "seed cane" was such a destruction of the subject-matter of the lease, to wit, a "sugar plantation," as to bring the case within the scope of the Louisiana Code, providing that "if, during the lease, the thing be totally destroyed by an unforeseen event, * * * the lease is at an end," and accordingly the lease was annulled. In passing upon the question involved the court used this significant language: "This was not a mere destruction of a crop for one year, like the destruction of a crop of wheat, or of grapes, or of apples, but it was more like the destruction of the vines, or of the apple trees, from which present and future crops are to be gathered." But the case at bar is simply the destruction of the crop; no destruction of any part of the premises or of the asparagus beds or roots being alleged or claimed. Plaintiff in his notice of rescission correctly stated the facts when he wrote, "and that the entire asparagus crop therein has in consequence perished."

Appellant urges that the facts of this case bring it within the provisions of section 1932, Civ. Code, that "the hirer of a thing may terminate the hiring before the end of the term agreed upon * * * (2) where the greater part of the thing hired or that part which was, and which the letter had at the time of the hiring reason to believe was the material inducement to the hirer to enter into the contract, perishes from any cause other than the ordinary negligence of the hirer." But it is perfectly plain that no part of the thing hired has been destroyed. At the time of the hiring no crop was in existence. The land containing asparagus beds was hired, but neither the land nor the asparagus beds were destroyed. Doubtless plaintiff hoped to realize a crop, but, as stated in his notice of rescission, "the asparagus beds on the premises constituted the sole inducement which caused me [him] to enter into the contract," and the asparagus beds have not perished nor been destroyed. The facts do not bring the case within the provisions of section 1932, Civ. Code.

The only thing that was destroyed was the growing crop, which belonged to the tenant (section 1926, Civ. Code), and the loss of which must be borne by him.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHURCHILL v. MORE. (Civ. 465.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
March 25, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—BOND TO STAY EXECUTION.

Where, in an action for claim and delivery, plaintiff recovered judgment for possession of certain specified personal property, or $1,636.80, the value thereof, in case delivery could not be made, whereupon defendant appealed and executed an undertaking that in case of affirmance he would obey the order of the appellate court, or would pay the amount directed to be paid and all damages and costs, such undertaking was not one authorized or contemplated by Code Civ. Proc. § 942, providing for an undertaking on appeal to stay execution on a money judgment, which section is applicable only to a judgment directing the payment of a specified sum of money enforceable by execution, and not to a judgment which may be satisfied in either of two or more modes.

2. SAME—JUDGMENT AGAINST SURETY—MOTION.

Where an undertaking on appeal in an action for claim and delivery was not one authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 942, which is the only statute authorizing the rendition of judgment against the surety on motion after affirmance, the superior court had no jurisdiction to render judgment against the surety on such undertaking under a stipulation therein that judgment might be so entered, as such stipulation rests for its efficacy on the statute alone.

3. JUDGMENT—WANT OF JURISDICTION—VALIDITY.

Where want of jurisdiction is apparent on the face of a judgment, it is void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 23, 24.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—RIGHT OF REVIEW—ESTOPPEL AND WAIVER—PAYMENT OF JUDGMENT.

Where a surety on an appeal bond paid a judgment against it which was void for want of jurisdiction, such payment could not be treated as invalid in attacking the jurisdiction of the court that rendered the judgment; the judgment having passed beyond review, in the absence of a vacation of the satisfaction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 984-986.]

5. SAME—NATURE OF PROCEEDING—RIGHT TO APPEAL.

Where, after judgment in an action for claim and delivery had been affirmed on appeal, judgment was rendered without jurisdiction on motion against the surety on the undertaking on appeal, the entry of such judgment was not a special proceeding; but in sequence of the judgment appealed from, so that the appellant, not having been affected by the judgment against the surety, was not an aggrieved party who might appeal from the judgment against the surety.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 947-952.]

6. JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS—VACATION.

As such judgment against the surety did not amount to an adjudication by which appellant was bound, he was not entitled to move to vacate it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

Action by Frank G. Churchill against John F. More. From an order vacating a judgment against a surety on a bond given in replevin suit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Richards & Carrier, for appellant. William G. Griffith and Canfield & Starbuck, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from an order of the superior court of Santa Barbara county.

The case is this: Plaintiff obtained a judgment in an action for claim and delivery by which judgment he recovered from defendant possession of certain specified personal property, or $1,636.80, the value thereof, in case delivery could not be had. From this judgment defendant appealed and gave an undertaking on appeal and a further undertaking in double the amount of the value of said property, conditioned that "if that part of the said judgment so appealed from, or any part thereof, be affirmed, or the appeal be dismissed, the appellant will obey the order of the appellate court upon the appeal or will pay, in United States gold coin, the amount directed to be paid by said part of said judgment so appealed from, or by the part thereof as to which the said judgment shall be affirmed, if affirmed only in part, and all damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal," with the further stipulation "that, if the appellant does not make such payment within 30 days after filing of the remittitur from the Supreme Court in the court from which the appeal is taken, judgment may be entered on motion of the respondent in his favor against said surety, for such amount, together with the interest that may be due thereon and the damages and costs which may be awarded against the appellant upon the appeal." This undertaking was executed by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. Preliminary to the execution of this undertaking, defendant entered into a written contract of indemnity with the surety, by which he agreed to indemnify and keep the said guaranty company indemnified from and against any and all loss, costs, charges, suits, damages, counsel fees, and expenses of whatever kind or nature, which said guaranty company shall or may for any cause, at any time, sustain or incur or be put to, for or by reason or in consequence of said guaranty company's having executed said bond. The judgment so appealed from was affirmed by the appellate court and a remittitur duly filed. More than 30 days after the filing of such remittitur, plaintiff filed an affidavit setting forth the execution of said undertaking, the affirmance of the judgment, and, further, that the defendant had not performed the judgment of the court either by delivering the personal property on paying its value, and on November 19, 1906, applied to the court for judgment against the surety in accordance with the terms of the bond, and thereupon a judgment was rendered by said superior court in favor of plaintiff and against said surety company for the sum of $1,941.85, being the amount of the value of the personal property, together with costs and interest; that execution issued out of this judgment, and the amount called for by such execution was collected by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco and paid over to plaintiff, who, on November 28, 1906, duly entered in the judgment book a satisfaction of said judgment. Thereafter, on the 13th of May, 1907, defendant More moved the court to vacate and set aside the judgment rendered against the surety company upon the ground that the judgment so rendered was void for want of jurisdiction, and was procured by said plaintiff by a misrepresentation of fact, and that said judgment was given and made by said court against the surety company through inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. Affidavits and counter affidavits were filed, and on the 27th of May, 1907, the superior court of Santa Barbara county granted the motion of said More vacating and setting aside said judgment, upon the grounds that said judgment was inadvertently given and at the time of the rendition thereof the court was without jurisdiction of the person of said surety company, and that said judgment is void. From this order of the court vacating the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Counsel for both appellant and respondent discuss in their briefs the character and effect of the undertaking given by the guaranty company. We think it not necessary for a proper determination of this case to determine whether or not the undertaking given is a statutory bond or a common-law bond, with or without consideration. It is sufficient to say that it is not an undertaking given under section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides for an undertaking on appeal to stay execution on a money judgment, and which section alone provides for the entry of a judgment thereon on motion, in default of the payment of the judgment within 30 days after the filing of the remittitur. This undertaking being given in an action of claim and delivery where the judgment was in the alternative primarily for a return of the property, and incidentally for a money judgment for the value thereof if a return be not had, is not the undertaking contemplated by section 942, Code Civ. Proc.: "That section is applicable to a judgment which directs payment by the defendant of a specific amount of money, and which can be directly enforced by a writ of execution, but has no application to a judgment which may be satisfied in either of two or more modes." Kreling v. Kreling, 116 Cal. 460, 48 Pac. 383. The stipulation in the bond of the surety company that judgment may be entered upon motion rests for its efficacy on the statute alone. Reay v. Butler, 118 Cal. 115, 50 Pac. 375. Section 942 being the only statute authorizing the rendition of judgment upon motion, it follows that recovery upon any bond other than one covered by section 942 must be by action. The superior court had no jurisdiction to render the judgment in this case on motion, and such want of jurisdiction is apparent upon the face of the judgment. Being so apparent the judgment was void. The surety company, however, without appealing therefrom or in any manner questioning the jurisdiction of the court, submitted to subsequent proceedings resulting in a full payment and discharge of said judgment, and the same was satisfied of record. "Satisfaction" means payment, and payment of a judgment cannot be treated as void for the purpose of attacking the jurisdiction of the court that rendered it. The surety had its remedy, by motion or otherwise, to vacate the satisfaction; but until set aside it is valid, and the judgment itself has passed beyond review." Morton v. Superior Court, 65 Cal. 498, 4 Pac. 491. In a subsequent case (Kenney v. Parks, 120 Cal. 24, 52 Pac. 40), the court, in considering the case last cited, says that the rule there laid down has no application when the party aggrieved has appealed within the statutory period. In this case the surety has neither procured a vacation of the entry of satisfaction nor sought an appeal from the judgment, nor in any manner indicated its desire for relief therefrom. Defendant More alone moved the court for the vacation of the judgment, without moving for a vacation of the entry of satisfaction. The right of More to so proceed depends upon whether or not he is affected by the judgment. If such judgment against the surety had the effect, under any circumstances, to determine More's rights, then he could move for its vacation. Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 136 Cal. 575, 69 Pac. 220. Section 473, Code Civ. Proc. authorizes the court to relieve a party from a judgment or order taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect, and mistake of law is comprehended therein. The question is therefore presented as to the effect of this judgment upon More, for if it did not purport and did not in fact adjudge any relief against him personally, or against any property belonging to him, it did not in any wise conclude or impair his previously existing rights. The judgment, being void upon its face, was open to collateral attack, and neither the voluntary nor coerced payment by the surety can have the effect to conclude More in any action upon his indemnity contract. His liability thereon depends upon the terms and scope of such contract, unaffected by any void adjudication upon the undertaking executed as a stay bond.

We are of opinion that, while the entry of the judgment against the surety upon an appeal bond is not a special proceeding, but is in sequence of the judgment rendered therein against appellant, in which action against appellant the surety made itself a party to the original action and proceedings (Hawley v. Gray Bros., 127 Cal. 562, 60 Pac. 437), nevertheless, More, while a party to the original proceeding was not affected by this latter judgment and was neither an aggrieved party who might appeal, nor one who might procure a vacation of such judgment, unless the same was taken against him or in some manner amounted to an adjudication by which he was concluded in some right.

This not being made to appear, we think it was error in the superior court to vacate this judgment upon motion of More, and the order vacating the same is reversed.

Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 5, declaring every idle, lewd, or dissolute person or associate of known thieves to be a vagrant, constituted a valid exercise of the Legislature's power, with reference to the elements of lewdness and dissoluteness.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The constitutional right of due process of law will not be given such effect as will render impossible laws which are generally admitted to be essential to the safety and well-being of society.

4. VAGRANCY—LEWDNESS—AFFIDAVIT.

One charged with being an idle, lewd, and dissolute person is sufficiently advised of the character of his offense.

5. SAME—STATUTES.

Pen. Code, § 647, subd. 5, declaring every idle, lewd, or dissolute person to be a vagrant, was not defective for failure of the Legislature to specify the evil and corrupt practices which might constitute one a lewd or dissolute person.

6. STATUTES — AMENDMENT — REFERENCE TO NUMBER.

Amendment of a section of the Penal Code by reference to its number is proper.

7. HABEAS CORPUS—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE — FACTS ALLEGED AS CONSTITUTING OFFENSE.

Whether the facts charged in an affidavit alleging defendant to be an idle, lewd, and dissolute person are sufficient to constitute such offense will not be considered on habeas corpus.

Application by Hugh McCue for a writ of habeas corpus. Denied.

J. Wade McDonald, for petitioner. L. R. Kirby, Dist. Atty., and H. S. Utley, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Petitioner is serving a sentence imposed on account of a violation of subdivision 5, § 647, Pen. Code. This subdivision provides: "Every idle or lewd or dissolute person, or associate of known thieves, * * * is a vagrant." It is insisted that this subdivision is void, in that the constituent elements entering into the crime are not defined, and as a consequence one charged thereunder is subject to the arbitrary meaning given by the court to the words employed; that it denounces a penalty against one who is either idle, lewd, or dissolute, without reference to the circumstances or conditions or acts of such person, or their effect as injuriously affecting the public health or morals. We are inclined to the view that while idleness, whether it be that of the "idle rich" or "idle poor," is a prolific source of crime, still it is not competent for the Legislature to denounce mere inaction as a crime without some qualification. But this cannot be said of lewdness or dissoluteness, terms often used interchangeably, but each of which applies to the unlawful indulgence of lust, whether in public or private. "Any practice, the tendency of which, as shown by experience, is to weaken or corrupt the morals of those who follow it, * * * is a legitimate subject for regulation or prohibition by the state, * * * and unless it clearly appears that a statute enacted for this purpose has no real or substantial relation to these objects, and that the fundamental rights of the citizen are assailed under the guise of a police regulation, the action of the legislative department is conclusive." Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 590, 27 Pac. 934.

The elements of lewdness and dissoluteness, under the accepted definition of those terms, come directly within the inhibited practices and are proper subjects of regulation and prohibition. The statute, then, is a valid exercise of police power as to these elements, and it is within the power of the court to determine whether one charged comes within the class of lewd or dissolute persons. Ex parte Ah Fook, 49 Cal. 404. The constitutional right of due process of law will not be given such effect as will render impossible laws which are generally admitted to be essential to the safety and well-being of society. Lent v. Tillson, 72 Cal. 425, 14 Pac. 71. One charged, as was petitioner, with being an idle, lewd, and dissolute person, is sufficiently advised of the character of his offense. To say that the Legislature must specify the many evil and corrupt practices which might constitute one a lewd or dissolute person would often render the enforcement of a police regulation in connection therewith impossible, and this without considering the indelicacy and impropriety of expression which would often be necessary.

The amendment of the section by reference to its number is proper. People v. Oates, 142 Cal. 12, 75 Pac. 337.

The affidavit purports to state an offense of a kind of which the courts have jurisdiction. The question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on habeas corpus. Ex parte Ruef, 150 Cal. 666, 89 Pac. 605. The warrant designated the offense charged, which is all that is required by section 1427, Pen. Code.

The writ is denied.

HILL v. BARNER et al. (Civ. 410.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 7, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR — ISSUES IN LOWER COURT.

The defense of laches in a suit to quiet title, raised for the first time on appeal, cannot be considered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1106, 1107.]

2. EQUITY—LACHES—PLEADING.

Where laches is relied on as a defense, it must be pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 19, Equity, § 395.]

3. QUIETING TITLE — BURDEN OF PROOF — TITLE OF PLAINTIFF.

In a suit to quiet title, the burden rests upon plaintiff to establish his title by sufficient evidence; and hence, where plaintiff's title is deraigned from a purchaser at a sheriff's sale wherein a portion of the land was reserved, it is incumbent on plaintiff to show that the land which he claims was not within the reserved portion.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to quiet title, in which plaintiff claimed the land by deraining title from the purchaser at a sheriff's sale wherein a portion of the land was reserved, evidence considered, and held insufficient to show that the land was not within the reserved portion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Quieting Title, § 91.]

5. EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE—BOUNDARIES.

Where plaintiff in a suit to quiet title claims the land by deraining title from a purchaser at a sheriff's sale wherein a portion of the land was reserved, there being no showing that the land was not within the reserved portion, the court cannot sustain plaintiff's title by taking judicial notice of the exact boundary lines of the lands included within the reserved portion.

6. QUIETING TITLE—JUDGMENT—DESCRIPTION OF LAND—CERTAINTY.

In a suit to quiet title, in order to give stability to a judgment for plaintiff the judgment and the corresponding findings should describe the land with such definiteness as to enable the parties to know from such description the precise limits or the location of the boundary lines thereof.

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION — ACQUISITION OF RIGHTS BY PROPERTY SUBJECT TO RAILROAD CORPORATION — USE OF PROPERTY — STOCK CORRAL.

A stock corral is a necessary adjunct to the transportation business of a railroad corporation, and hence may be acquired by the corporation by adverse possession.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—BRIEFS—WAIVER—EXCEPTIONS.

The rule that where errors are assigned in the admission of evidence, but the reasons on which the rulings are claimed to be erroneous are not stated in the briefs, the rulings are not reviewable, does not preclude a review of such rulings if from only the necessary examination of the record it is apparent that they are prejudicial, especially where the error is pointed out in the oral argument.

9. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—LETTERS—PRELIMINARY PROOF — AGENCY OR AUTHORITY OF WRITER.

In a suit to quiet title, in which the land is claimed by plaintiff through a record title, and by defendant by adverse possession, the introduction of evidence by plaintiff of a letter making certain admissions as to the land in dispute, which purported to come from defendant railroad company, and signed by one R., is erroneous, in the absence of any evidence connecting R. with the corporation, or showing that he had authority to make such admissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Charles M. Head, Judge.

Action by Samuel Hill against Charles Barner and others to quiet title to land. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Sweeney & Tillotson and Reid & Dozier, for appellants Barner and others. W. M. Singer, Jr., Guy Shoup, and G. O. Perry, for appellant Central Pacific Railroad Company. T. W. H. Shanahan and Charles H. Braynard, for respondent.

HART, J. The court below gave plaintiff judgment quieting his title to the land in dispute, and it is from said judgment and the order of the court denying the defendants a new trial that this appeal is taken. A motion to dismiss the appeal herein was submitted by the respondent, but it is clearly without merit, and therefore does not demand extended notice. The motion is denied.

The premises in controversy are described in the complaint as follows: "Lots numbered 1, 2, and 6 situate in that certain block, which said block is bounded on the north by the northerly line of what is commonly known as and called Short street, on the east by the westerly line of Center street, on the south by the northerly line of Shasta street, and on the west by the easterly line of the right of way of the Central Pacific Railway Company, a corporation, as said lots and said block more fully appear, and as the same are designated by and upon the official map of said city of Redding now on file in the office of the county recorder of said county of Shasta."

Another appeal is pending before this court, and the same submitted with the case at bar, in which the respondent here is plaintiff and Joseph Hofer and others are defendants and appellants (No. 411, 96 Pac. 116), and which involves the title to lots numbered 3, 4, and 5 situated in the block described in the complaint in the case we are now considering. Counsel representing, respectively, the several parties to the case at bar, also represent in the same positions relatively the parties to case No. 411, and it was stipulated by said counsel that the evidence and the proceedings taken and had in the one case should be considered so far as applicable to the other. An examination of the records in both cases justifies us in saying that the evidence and proceedings in both are practically the same, and that, as in each case plaintiff undertakes to establish a record title and the defendant railroad company title to some alleged portions of the premises in dispute in both cases by adverse possession or prescription, the legal principles involved, and which we are required to consider, apply the same to the one case as the other.

The principal and important question presented in both cases, as we view the records, is, does the evidence support the material findings of the court? In order to a clear understanding of the situation presented by the record in the case before us some reference must necessarily be made to the facts brought out at the trial. The land in dispute is a portion of a Mexican land grant known as the Rancho Buena Ventura, situated in Shasta county, and granted by the United States government to one Pearson B. Reading; the patent therefor having been issued to said Reading confirming his title to said grant in the year 1856. Later J. B. Haggin became the owner of said grant by purchase at a sheriff's sale thereof; said sale having been ordered by the district court of the third judicial district of California in pursuance of a decree of said court foreclosing a certain mortgage on said grant executed by said Pearson B. Reading to one Samuel J. Hensley to secure a loan by the latter to the former of $34,438.32. The deed of the sheriff to Haggin, however, excepted and reserved from said sale a certain portion of said rancho, which said portion so excepted and reserved is described in said deed.

In September, 1872, Haggin conveyed by deed to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the predecessor in interest of one of the defendants herein (the Central Pacific Railway Company), a strip of land 100 feet wide, being a portion of the Rancho Buena Ventura in Shasta county, "upon the located line of the California & Oregon Branch of the Central Pacific Railroad Company's railroad, the full length of said line through said grant." In this connection it may be stated that the evidence shows that from and including the year 1888 to and including the year 1890 the railroad company was assessed on a right of way of 100 feet in width through the town of Redding, and that from and including the year 1891 to and including the year 1903, with the exception of the years 1892 and 1894, in which the assessment did not specify the width of the right of way through Redding, the width of the right of way through said town of Redding, as appeared by the assessment made by the state board of equalization was 400 feet. Portions of the premises in question were leased to a firm known as Kahny & Burgbacher and a firm known as Barner & Riebe. Said leases were executed by the Southern Pacific Company, lessee of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, to the firms mentioned. The lease to Kahny & Burgbacher was dated March 12, 1888. The lease to Barner & Riebe was dated February 11, 1896. Kahny & Burgbacher erected a wooden structure on the land leased to them in the year 1888, and used the same for the purpose of carrying on the beer bottling business, and in the year 1898 they erected a new wooden structure in the place of the old one, likewise using it for beer bottling purposes. This firm remained in possession of said premises under the lease from the Southern Pacific Company until the year 1900, when said firm transferred the possession of the building and premises to the San Francisco Breweries, Limited, a corporation, and one of the defendants in case No. 411. Barner & Riebe took possession of the premises under a lease from the railroad company to the Buffalo Brewing Company, one of the defendants in case No. 410, erected buildings thereon, and conducted a beer bottling business as agents of and for said Buffalo Brewing Company. The block in which the lots in dispute in both cases are situated is commonly known as the "Stockyard Block." The stockyards and corral used by the railroad company at Redding are, it is claimed by appellant, situated partly upon some of the lots in controversy.

In February, 1886, Haggin appointed and constituted one Edward Frisbie his attorney in fact, vesting him with full power to "bargain, sell, transfer, grant, and convey all his right, title, and interest to any and all lots, pieces, or parcels of land in the towns of 'Anderson and Redding.'" Said power of attorney was duly recorded. Frisbie for Haggin, on June 19, 1903, conveyed to the plaintiff and one Alva Gus Hart "lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, designated on the map of the original town of Redding filed in the office of the county recorder of Shasta county on September 25, 1872 as the 'Stockyard Block.'" On July 2, 1903, Hart conveyed all his right, title, and interest in and to said lots to the plaintiff. The stock corral was built in the summer of 1873, and has since been maintained and used as a stock corral by the railroad company.

The foregoing statement embraces, practically all the important uncontroverted facts brought out at the trial. As we have seen, the appellant railroad company contends that the width of its right of way through the city of Redding is 400 feet, to 300 feet of which title was acquired by adverse possession. The other defendants claim no interest in any of the land except as lessees of the railroad company.

It is also contended by said company that the plaintiff failed to connect himself with the Haggin title, through which he undertakes to deraign title to the lots in controversy, because: (1) He has not shown that said lots are within the boundaries of the grant; (2) that, if it appears that the lots are within the boundaries and a part of the rancho, he has not shown that they are not within the portion of the grant excepted and reserved from the sale under the foreclosure proceedings of said grant by the sheriff to Haggin, as evidenced by said sheriff's deed of conveyance. It is also declared that, if the judgment resting upon the facts as found by the court is permitted to stand, the railroad company will thereby be deprived of a portion of the right of way through the town of Redding granted to it by Haggin. It is further urged that the plaintiff is guilty of laches in the assertion of his claim of title; but as to this point we think there need be no discussion, as the proposition seems to have been raised for the first time in this court. We think it is well settled that, where laches is relied upon as a defense, it should be specially pleaded so that an issue as to such defense may be squarely presented to the trial court. There are other points urged and discussed by appellants, but it will not be necessary to specially notice all of them.

By a most careful examination and consideration of the evidence disclosed by the record we are forced to the conclusion that the contention of the appellants that the plaintiff failed to establish his title to the lots in dispute is well founded. In other words, we think that it is clear that he has not shown that the lots which are the subject of this litigation are not within the portion of the grant excepted and reserved from the sale evidenced by the deed from the sheriff to Haggin. That part of the deed declaring the exception and reservation mentioned reads as follows: " * * * Excepting, however, and reserving from said sale all that part of said rancho which is described as follows, to wit: Commencing on the north bank of Cottonwood creek, at the point where the west boundary line of said Rancho Buena Ventura intersects said creek, in section or subdivision 64, as shown on the private survey of said rancho made by the late P. B. Reading, the map of which is of record in the office of the county recorder of said county of Shasta, and running thence down said creek to the north bank thereof to the Sacramento river; thence along the west bank of the Sacramento river to the point where the line between fractional sections 60 and 61 of the survey aforesaid intersects said river; thence south 42 deg. 30 min. west following the line between sections 60 and 61 and between sections 59 and 62 and 58 and 63 to the western boundary line of said rancho at which point sections 58, 63 and 64 corner; thence south 13 deg. 45 min. east along said western boundary line to an established corner in said line; and thence south 6 deg. 30 min. along said western boundary line to the place of beginning on the N. bank of said Cottonwood creek, which said part of said rancho was set apart and reserved from said sale. * * * "

No evidence of whatsoever nature was introduced into the record identifying and locating the particular land embraced within the foregoing description. The map of the private survey declared in the foregoing to have been made by Reading of the land reserved from said sale, a copy of which it is declared in said deed "is of record in the office of the county recorder of said county of Shasta," was not offered or received in evidence. There is not, as we have declared, the slightest proof, either oral or documentary, which even remotely shows that the premises in dispute are not within that portion of the grant reserved from the sale to Haggin.

The burden rested upon the plaintiff to establish his title to the premises by sufficient evidence. He sought to deraign title from and through the patent from the general government to Reading. The deed under which Haggin became the owner of the grant reserved certain portions thereof from the sale to Haggin, and it was the duty of and incumbent on plaintiff, in order to trace his title to and identify it with the Haggin title to show that the lots were not within the excepted portion. Corinne Mill Co. v. Johnson, 156 U. S. 574, 15 Sup. Ct. 409, 39 L. Ed. 537; Maxwell Land Co. v. Dawson, 151 U. S. 586, 14 Sup. Ct. 458, 38 L. Ed. 279; Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347; Webb v. Phillips, 80 Fed. 959, 26 C. C. A. 272; Harman v. Stearns, 95 Va. 71, 27 S. E. 605. His failure to do this leaves a missing link in his chain of title.

The courts cannot take judicial notice of the exact location of the boundary lines of the lands included within the reserved portion. Goodwin v. Scheerer, 106 Cal. 690, 40 Pac. 18. So far as the record discloses and the knowledge gained therefrom, the very land excepted from the sale may include the lots in dispute. If so, of course the plaintiff cannot establish title to them, for the source of his title is Haggin's title, and upon that title he must stand or fall.

The findings are vague and indefinite as to the exact location of the lots with reference to the granted right of way of the railroad company. The evidence is equally so. The official map of the city of Redding, filed for record in the year 1890 (upon which no scale is indicated), furnishes the only evidence relative to the location of the premises in dispute, and even this is far from showing whether the lots are within the 100 feet originally granted to the company as a right of way, or without the exterior boundaries thereof, or partly within and partly without said right of way. The map in fact does not show the right of way of the company with the clearness and distinctness necessary to constitute it satisfactory evidence upon the point. Nor does it show upon what portions of the lots, if upon any part thereof, the stockyards and corral and the buildings are situated, or whether they are partly or entirely within the granted right of way of the company. It is practically impossible to determine from the findings, even viewed in the light of all the evidence presented by the records before us, whether the judgment includes a portion of the company's right of way as granted to it by Haggin. A blue print, made by and under the direction of the company's engineers, and received in evidence, shows the stock corral and the buildings to be situated partly within the company's granted right of way and partly without; but whether the court accepted or rejected the evidence thus produced we are unable to determine from its findings. True the plaintiff declares that he lays no claim to any portion of the 100 feet of which the granted right of way consists, but the evidence and findings are, as we have seen, so uncertain that it is impossible to determine even by reasonable approximation where the easterly line of said right of way is located. It is manifest that, if the easterly line of the right of way runs through and takes in a portion of the lots as they are described in the complaint, then title to such portion of said lots could not vest in plaintiff. It is said in the case of Porter and Russ v. Counts (Cal. App.) 92 Pac. 655—a case very much similar to this as to the general nature of the evidence, findings, and judgment—that "the premises should be so described that the record will furnish evidence of the limits to which title is established by the judgment as well as to point out to the sheriff who serves the writ of possession the extent and location of the land recovered"—citing Davis v. Judge, 44 Vt. 500, and Bricken v. Cross et al., 40 Mo. 166, 41 S. W. 735.

The language of the finding and of the judgment as to the description of the land is a repetition of that contained in the complaint, and is too general to furnish any definite idea of the exact location of the boundary lines of the lots. This is obviously insufficient. In order to give stability to the judgment it and the corresponding findings should describe the land with such definiteness as to enable the parties to know from such description the precise limits or the location of the boundary lines thereof. Porter et al. v. Counts, supra; Shaw v. Hill, 79 Mich. 86, 44 N. W. 422; Wickersham Banking Co. v. Rice, 137 Cal. 506, 70 Pac. 546. Measured by these tests, the findings and judgments in the cases at bar cannot for a moment be upheld.

Upon the point that the railroad company has acquired a title by prescription or adverse possession to 300 feet of land adjoining and contiguous to the 100 feet right of way granted to it by Haggin, we do not feel called upon to express an opinion since, as we have seen, it is impossible to ascertain from the findings and judgment whether the lots in controversy constitute a part of that portion of the grant expressly reserved from sale by the deed to Haggin, or are even within or without the boundaries of the granted right of way. If they are within the one or the other or both, then plainly the question of whether the company has acquired a prescriptive title to an additional 300 feet to its original right of way through Redding becomes immaterial. This much may be said, however, that if, upon a retrial, it is found that the land or any portion thereof upon which the stock corral is situated is without the limits of the granted right of way, then the undisputed testimony disclosed by the record clearly shows that the railroad has acquired title to so much of such land as is thus occupied, by adverse possession.

In this connection it is to be observed that according to the evidence the railroad company paid taxes on a 400-foot right of way from and including the year 1898 to and including the year 1903, and W. W. Douglass, deputy state controller, testified that the company had paid all the taxes levied and assessed by the state board of equalization against the right of way in the town of Redding of the Central Pacific Railroad Company and its successors for all the years from and including the year 1880 to and including the year 1902. It will be remembered that the width of the right of way of the company in Redding was specified in the assessment by the state board of equalization as 400 feet during all the years, with the exception of two (1892-1894), from and including the year 1891 to and including the year 1903. The undisputed testimony shows that the land used as the stock corral was inclosed for upwards of 30 years prior to the commencement of this action.

There is nothing in the point suggested by the respondent, so far as the stock corral is concerned, that the railroad company cannot acquire a prescriptive title to land devoted by it to a use not within the essential purposes of the corporation. A stock corral is as necessary an adjunct to the transportation business of a railroad corporation as a depot building or a ticket office. In fact a stock corral is absolutely necessary for the proper care of animals which are presented for carriage from point to point by a railroad company and also to facilitate the loading and unloading of such animals in and from the cars.

In rebuttal the plaintiff offered in evidence, and the court, over the objection of the defendants, allowed to go into the record, certain letters passing between the county assessor of Shasta county and one E. B. Ryan. The assessor in a letter addressed to the "Central Pacific Railroad Company, San Francisco," and dated March 12, 1904, asked said company to designate upon a blank assessment list inclosed in said letter such lands as the company owned in Redding, and to return the same to the assessor. It was suggested in that letter by the assessor that the block known as the "Stockyard Block" was claimed by "Hill and Hart." Said Ryan, evidently in reply to said letter, addressed a letter over his signature to the assessor in the following language: "Your letter addressed to the Central Pacific Railroad Company is referred to me. In the matter of the stockyard block in the city of Redding, we referred the matter to our engineering department, and they advised me that the stockyard does not belong to the Central Pacific Railway Company, but probably, as you say, belongs to Messrs. Hill and Hart; hence we do not claim the property." On May 29, 1904, Ryan wrote to the assessor again, saying, among other things, that "since my letter to you, I have ascertained that we do claim said block, and have paid taxes on the same." But it is declared by the respondent that, as the appellants have failed to refer to and point out in their briefs the reasons upon which they base the claim that the rulings of the court are erroneous, said alleged errors are deemed to be waived under the rule of this court, and that therefore the same cannot be reviewed. The rule referred to is designed for the convenience and aid of the reviewing courts, and to save such courts the time and trouble (which should rest upon the attorneys) of searching the record of a case for the purpose of determining whether complaints made by counsel are well founded or not. Where, as here, however, an alleged error is specified in the assignments of error, and it is apparent from only the necessary examination of the record that such error is prejudicial, we do not understand the rule to preclude a consideration of the same, and order a reversal thereof. The cases of Tapscott v. Lyon, 103 Cal. 312, 37 Pac. 225, and People v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 475, 39 Pac. 864, cited by counsel for respondent, justify under the rule a refusal by the court to notice alleged errors where the reasons why they are complained of are not pointed out in the briefs. But there is nothing said in those cases from which it may be gathered that the Supreme Court intended to lay down a "hard and fast" interpretation of the rule, of which the most that can be said in our opinion is that, if an appellate court desires to act upon the presumption of waiver of points not pointed out in the briefs, it may do so, and, e converso, if it is disposed to take up such points at the expense of the labor and trouble which the attorneys should have attended to, there is no reason why it should not do so. Moreover, the error under consideration was pointed out in the oral argument, and we think this is sufficient. The letters referred to were, as stated, objected to, and the rulings, to which exceptions were reserved, assigned in the record as error.

An examination of the record for the purpose of determining the main points discussed in the briefs was only necessary to demonstrate the utter incompetency of the letters as evidence and their prejudicial effect upon the railroad company, viewed by the light of the circumstances under which they were admitted. There is no evidence to show who "E. B. Ryan" is, and if it may be assumed from anything contained in the letters that he is an official of the company, there is nothing to show what particular duties are assigned to him as such, or whether whatever his duties he has any authority to bind the railroad company by his declarations. So far as the record discloses, "E. B. Ryan" may be a perfect stranger to the company, or an employé thereof having no authority to act and speak for and bind the company in the matter involved here. If it had been shown that Mr. Ryan was an official of the company, and as such authorized to bind it by declarations or negotiations involving its property rights, a much different question would be presented. The letters having undoubtedly been admitted upon the theory that Mr. Ryan was authorized to speak for the company upon the subject to which they relate, it may safely be assumed under the circumstances that the court considered the first letter as containing a significant authoritative admission, negating the claim made by the company in these actions. It was therefore, as stated, prejudicial.

The position of the defendants who erected buildings on portions of the lots in dispute that the circumstances displayed by the record are such as to entitle them in equity and good conscience, to compensation for the improvements thus bestowed by them upon the property, seems to be forceful, but beyond the scope of the records before us. These defendants, to have availed themselves of the equitable principle sought to be invoked, should have by appropriate averments in their answers, tendered an issue upon the proposition. This they failed to do, and therefore, as suggested, we are powerless to consider the point to any purpose.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order are reversed.

HILL v. HOEFER et al. (Civ. 411.)

(Court of Appeals, Third District, California.
April 7, 1908.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Charles M. Head, Judge.

Action by Samuel Hill against Joseph Hoefer and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, and motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Sweeney & Tillotson and Reid & Dozier, for appellant Hoefer. William Singer, Jr., Guy H. Shoup, and G. O. Perry, for appellant S. P. R. Co. T. W. H. Shanahan and Charles H. Braynard, for respondent.

HART, J. The facts and the law involved in this case are admittedly the same as those involved in Hill v. Barner et al. (No. 410, this day decided) 96 Pac. 111. A motion was made to dismiss the appeal in this case, but the same is without merit, and is therefore denied.

Upon the authority of Hill v. Barner et al., supra, and for the reasons therein stated, the judgment and order are reversed.

The fact that the judge, in proceedings for probate of a will, opposed on the sole ground of testamentary incapacity, added, in the facts found, after a verdict of the jury in favor of testamentary capacity, the formal finding, made ex parte, that testator was free from undue influence does not show his prejudice, requiring a change of venue in a proceeding to contest the will after probate, on the grounds of testamentary incapacity and undue influence.

The prejudice of a judge against a case, as distinguished from prejudice against a litigant, is not a basis for a change of venue or motion of the judge.

3. JURY—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

The right to a trial by jury, secured by the Constitution, does not extend to proceedings for the probate or the revocation of the probate of wills, since such proceedings are special, belonging at common law to ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and, in the absence of a statute providing for trial by jury, such proceedings must be heard by the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, § 111.]

4. SAME—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1312-1317, authorizing a jury trial in proceedings to contest the probate of wills, and sections 1327-1330, providing for contesting wills after probate, and declaring that, where the original probate was granted without a contest, a trial by jury may be had, as in cases of the contest of a petition to admit a will to probate, when considered in connection with the history of the legislation, as first enacted in the probate act of 1851 (St. 1851, p. 448, c. 124) and as amended in 1855, 1861, and 1868 (St. 1855, p. 132, c. 110; St. 1861, p. 628, c. 534; St. 1867-68, p. 628, c. 469), providing for contests for the probate of wills, and for contests after probate, and providing for jury trials in contests before probate, do not give one contesting a will, admitted to probate after a jury trial on the issues raised in the proceedings for probate, the right to a jury trial, notwithstanding sections 1716, 1717, providing for the trial, by the court, of issues of fact in probate proceedings, where no jury is demanded, since the latter sections are general; and under the general rule of statutory construction, as well as under Pol. Code, § 4482, declaring that, where the provisions of any chapter contravene the provisions of another chapter of the same title, the provisions of each chapter must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such chapter, those sections are controlled by the special provisions of the sections relating to will contests.

5. WILLS — CONTEST OF WILL ADMITTED TO PROBATE—SERVICE OF CITATION ON PARTIES INTERESTED.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1329, providing that, on filing a petition to contest a will after probate, a citation must be issued to the executor and to all the legatees and devisees mentioned in the will and heirs residing in the state, so far as known to the petitioner, etc., does not make a service of citation on all of the parties essential, and where personal service of citation was made on the executor and a number of legatees, and they answered, and petitioner was defeated, the failure of the court to direct the service of citation on one who took nothing under the will, but who would take as an heir on the probate of the will being revoked, did not affect him.

6. EVIDENCE—HEARSAY DECLARATIONS.

Objections to questions calling for hearsay declarations are properly sustained.

7. WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—CONTRADICTION—DECLARATIONS OF WITNESS.

Where a witness has failed to testify as expected, the deficiency cannot be made good by the offer, in evidence, of declarations made by the witness out of court, except where, to the surprise of the party calling the witness, the witness has given affirmative hostile evidence, in which case declarations are received to neutralize the effect of the hostile testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 1210-1219.]

8. SAME.

A witness, who had fully testified by deposition, was called by a party who contended that he was surprised at the hostile testimony given by the witness, though the testimony conformed to the deposition. The adverse party offered to strike out her testimony, but the offer was not accepted. Held, that the court properly sustained objections to evidence, admissible on the theory that the witness had given unexpected testimony hostile to the party calling the witness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1096.]

9. EVIDENCE—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

Where a witness was in San Francisco at the time another person met her death in New York, the court properly sustained an objection to questions propounded to the witness as to whether or not such other person had committed suicide, since the witness would only know the circumstances of the death from hearsay.

10. WILLS—CONTEST OF WILL ADMITTED TO PROBATE — EVIDENCE — DECLARATIONS OF LEGATEES—ADMISSIBILITY.

Declarations of a legatee are not receivable in evidence against other legatees, whether the evidence is addressed to the mental unsoundness of testator, or to the question of undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 821.]

11. NEW TRIAL — NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Motions for new trial, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, rest in the sound discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 10.]

12. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE.

Evidence, alleged to have been newly discovered, on a motion for a new trial in a proceeding to contest a will admitted to probate, held insufficient to show that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the motion.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Proceedings by Horatio Schander to contest the will of Bertha M. Dolbeer, deceased, instituted after the admission of the will to probate. From an order denying a new trial after verdict sustaining the will, contestant Schander appeals. Affirmed.

See 86 Pac. 695.

Darwin C. De Golia, Bart Burke, and Chas. J. Pence, for appellant. E. S. Pillsbury, Garret W. McEnerney, and Joseph H. Mayer, for respondent.

IIENSHAW, J. This was a contest of the will of Bertha M. Dolbeer, deceased, instituted after its admission to probate. The grounds of the contest were the mental incapacity of the deceased to execute a will, and alleged undue influence exercised upon the mind of the testatrix by Etta Marion Warren, the principal beneficiary of the testatrix's bounty. In Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695, this court considered the contest of Adolph Schander before the probate of Bertha Dolbeer's will. The present contest was instituted by another maternal uncle of Bertha Dolbeer, Horatio Schander. It was tried by the court without a jury, and determined adversely to contestant. From the judgment denying the petition for revocation, an appeal was taken, which appeal was by this court dismissed. The present appeal is taken from the order of the court denying petitioner's motion for a new trial because of asserted errors of law committed at the trial, and upon alleged newly discovered evidence.

For the history and facts in this matter reference may be made to the Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695. It may be added that, upon the question of the insanity of the deceased, the evidence in the present case is certainly no stronger, if not much weaker, than the evidence adduced upon the former contest. Of direct evidence touching undue influence there is nothing worthy of the name, and indeed there is nothing at all upon this branch of the case, other than the inferences which might be drawn from the two facts—the opportunity for exercising such influence, and the circumstance that the will makes Miss Warren the principal beneficiary. But these facts are wholly insufficient to support the charge, and, as was declared in the earlier contest, the will of deceased was not an unnatural one.

With this brief statement we come to a review of the alleged errors of law committed by the trial court, and the first of these is based upon the court's refusal to grant a change of venue. Judge Coffey presided over the department of the probate court before which the first contest, upon the admission of the will to probate, was heard and determined before a jury. The sole issue there presented was that on the mental capacity of the testatrix to execute a will. The jury found the testatrix, at the time of the making of the will, to be of sound and disposing mind. In the proof of facts found, the judge properly, indeed necessarily, added the formal finding, made ex parte (there being no controversy upon the question), that the testatrix was free from undue influence in the making of the will. The only pertinent allegations in the affidavits touching the disqualification of the judge are that the judge "has used language indicating that he has formed a fixed opinion concerning the validity of said alleged will of decedent," and further that the judge has "shown his position as to the merits of the affiant's contest, and shown his prejudice and bias against this affiant's said contest," by fixing the return day of the citation for a date 10 days after its issuance, notwithstanding the fact that Ida J. Moody, one of the heirs at law of Bertha M. Dolbeer, was at that time in Europe, and that service of said citation therefore could not be personally made upon her, and that since then the court has refused to delay the hearing of the case, by issuing an alias citation to bring Mrs. Moody into court, notwithstanding that application had been made therefor. It is to be here noted that it is not charged that the bias of the judge is directed against the contestant nor his attorneys, but simply that it is directed against the case. The return day of the original citation granted contestant reasonable time to serve all parties within the jurisdiction of the court, and the refusal to issue an alias citation for Mrs. Moody was, as will be considered hereafter, entirely proper. These alleged grounds of prejudice may at once be eliminated. The circumstance that the court, in its formal proof of facts, found, upon the former contest, that the will was executed by Miss Dolbeer when free from undue influence, can, under no circumstances, be the foundation for the imputation of bias or prejudice upon this account, since in that contest the question of undue influence was not in issue, and the court found merely upon the legal presumption of the absence of fraud or undue influence where there is failure of allegation and proof of either. There is thus left the single proposition that the judge was biased and prejudiced "against this contest" (wherein the probate of the will was sought to be revoked, upon the ground that the testatrix was insane), because before a jury a similar or like contest, upon the same ground, had been tried and determined in his court favorably to the proponents of the will. But this alleged prejudice of a judge against a case, as distinguished from prejudice against a litigant, has never been recognized as a sound basis for a motion for change of venue or the removal of a judge. Were it otherwise, it would prohibit any judge from sitting in the second trial of a cause which had previously been determined by him, since in the first trial he must have reached his own conclusions, as to the law and the facts, to the so-called prejudice of one or another of the litigants. Says the Supreme Court of Vermont: "There is no rule or principle that disqualifies the judge of a court from sitting in different causes in which the same legal rules and questions of fact, or either of them, are presented for consideration." Martyn v. Curtis, 68 Vt. 397, 35 Atl. 333. The same principle was enunciated by the Supreme Court of this state in Patterson v. Conlan, 123 Cal. 453, 56 Pac. 105. To the same effect may be instanced Western Bank v. Tallman, 15 Wis. 92; Fry v. Bennett, 28 N. Y. 324; Heflin v. State, 88 Ga. 151, 14 S. E. 112, 30 Am. St. Rep. 147; 23 Cyc. 586.

Contestant demanded a trial by jury, which the court refused to grant. Contestant here contends that he was legally and of right entitled to a jury, or that a trial by jury was certainly discretionary, and the court abused its discretion in not according it to him. The right to a trial by jury, secured by the Constitution, has no reference to or bearing upon proceedings in probate. "It has been held that the right of trial by jury is secured by the Constitution only in cases in which it had previously existed, in the administration of justice according to the course of the common law. Probate matters belong to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, where a jury was not a right. Such a proceeding is not really an action at law, as defined in the Code." In re Moore, 72 Cal. 335, 13 Pac. 880. A contest of a will and proceedings to revoke its probate are special proceedings. Estate of Joseph, 118 Cal. 660, 50 Pac. 768; Carpenter v. Jones, 121 Cal. 362, 53 Pac. 842. It follows, then, in the absence of a statute providing for trial by jury, probate proceedings have always been heard by the court, without the intervention of a jury. Only in those probate proceedings where the statute expressly confers a right to a trial by jury does the right exist. Wills v. Lochrane, 9 Bush (Ky.) 550; Moody v. Found, 208 Ill. 78, 69 N. E. 831; Page on Wills, § 331. Considering briefly the origin and history of our present code sections, it will be found that, in the probate act of 1851 (St. 1851, p. 450, c. 124), sections 20 to 24 provided for a contest of a will before probate, and sections 30 to 34 for a contest after probate. It will be found, moreover, that no jury was allowed by that act in a contest, either before or after probate. In 1855 sections 20 to 24 of the act of 1851, treating of a contest before probate, were amended, making a jury, in such cases, allowable upon demand. St. 1855, p. 132, c. 110; Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 495. In 1861 section 20 was again amended (St. 1861, p. 630, c. 534, § 9), so as to require that the demand for the jury should be filed at least three days before the date set for the trial in the probate court, and that the case should thereupon be immediately certified to the district court, which court alone, under the existing practice, had power to determine such controverted questions of fact. Pond v.

Pond, supra. In 1868 section 20 was once more amended (St. 1867-68, p. 628, c. 469, § 1), by providing that the jury trials in the contests therein contemplated should be heard and determined in the probate court, instead of being certified for determination to the district court. St. 1867-68, p. 628, c. 469. These were the only amendments to these sections 20 to 24 of the practice act up to the time when they were transferred to the Code of Civil Procedure and embodied substantially in sections 1312 to 1317 thereof.

Sections 30 to 33 of the probate act of 1851, relating to contests after probate, remained unchanged until re-embodied and re-enacted in sections 1327 to 1330 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But in re-enacting these sections into the code provisions, this declaration was added: "In all cases of petitions to revoke the probate of a will, wherein the original probate was granted without a contest, on written demand of either party, filed three days prior to the hearing, a trial by jury must be had as in cases of the contest of an original petition to admit a will to probate." Code Civ. Proc. § 1330. So far as this review has gone, it establishes that, by the probate act as amended in 1855, a jury trial was demandable only in the case of a contest before probate, and never in a case of a contest after probate, whether the will had been originally admitted to probate with or without a contest. When section 33 of the earlier practice act was re-enacted in section 1330 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the first time the significant addition was made of the clause above quoted, and the manifest purpose of this clause was to allow a contestant after probate a trial by jury, if the original probate was had and granted without a contest. While in terms the section does not declare that the contestant shall not be entitled to a jury if the original probate was had after contest, yet, as such contestant was only entitled to a jury in probate matters where the statute accorded it, and as the statute in this instance accorded no right, in any case, to a trial by a jury of a contest instituted after probate, it is natural to conclude that section 1330 operated to make an exception to the general rule denying a jury in a case of contest after probate, by awarding the right in the limited cases where the probate had been granted without previous contest. In re Robinson, 106 Cal. 493, 39 Pac. 862. And this, it may be said, was a very proper relaxation of the rule, it being considered by the Legislature proper that a jury might once be had to pass upon disputed issues of fact, but that, in the interest of expedition and the speedy disposition and distribution of estates, it was inexpedient that when these contested matters had once been passed upon by a jury, or when a right to a jury had once been accorded, a right to a second trial by jury, with its incident and consequent delays, should be allowed. But appellant places reliance upon sections 1716 and 1717 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These code sections are substantially re-enactments of section 294 of the probate act of 1851 (page 486, c. 124) as amended in 1855 (St. 1855, p. 300, c. 229, § 5), and again in 1861 (St. 1861, p. 653, c. 534, § 110). They have received consideration from this court in Re Moore, 72 Cal. 335, 13 Pac. 880. But no sound argument of a contestant's general right to a trial by jury after probate can be drawn from these sections. Their language is general. Their provisions are designed to lay down a rule with respect to cases concerning which no provisions elsewhere are found. Being general, they come under the established canon of construction that their language is controlled by the special provisions of the code sections touching the same general matter. Martin v. Election Commissioners, 126 Cal. 404, 58 Pac. 932. Moreover, the provision of section 1330 must be considered as the latest expression of the legislative will. It has been pointed out that it was a new provision, modifying the older sections of the probate act, and it is declared by section 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the provisions of this Code, so far as they are substantially the same as existing statutes, must be considered as continuations thereof, and not as new enactments. And, finally, upon this subject-matter, it may be added that section 4482 of the Political Code declares that, if the provisions of any chapter conflict with or contravene the provisions of another chapter of the same title, the provisions of each chapter must prevail as to all matters and questions arising out of the subject-matter of such chapter. Section 1330 of the Code of Civil Procedure is contained in article 4 of chapter 2, while sections 1716 and 1717 are contained in chapter 12. Chapter 2 deals with the probate of wills, and article 4 of that chapter deals with contesting wills after probate, while chapter 12 is devoted to the consideration of "orders, decrees, processes, minutes, records, trials, and appeals in probate matters." It is apparent that, when considering a case dealing with the probate of a will and with contesting wills after probate, which is the case here presented, the articles and chapters dealing specifically with these matters must prevail over the general provisions which may be deemed to have a bearing upon this subject-matter. It is thus concluded that contestant was not entitled, as of right, to a jury trial. And as to the second consideration which he advances, namely, that if the matter was one of discretion, it was an abuse of discretion in the court, in this instance, to refuse a jury trial, little need be said. It is the policy of the law to curtail dilatory proceedings in the settlement of estates. There had been a contest before probate, instituted by the brother of this contestant, and tried before a jury, resulting in a verdict sustaining the mental competency of the testatrix. The judgment which followed was sustained upon appeal.

With all of these facts this present contestant was familiar. There had been a full opportunity, given before probate, to have a jury determination of any and all matters of legitimate contest, and it is the policy of the law that where such a contest has been had, subsequent contests should be expeditiously dealt with by the court itself. It was, therefore, not an abuse of discretion, but within the well-defined policy of the law, to refuse a jury trial under the circumstances shown.

Complaint is made that the court refused to delay the proceedings by issuing an alias citation for Mrs. Ida J. Moody, an heir at law of the decedent, who, though a resident of California, was sojourning in Europe, and also upon certain other heirs at law, or successors in interest thereto. Mrs. Moody took nothing under the will, but would have taken as heir had probate of the will been revoked. Her financial interests were therefore with and not opposed to contestants. Section 1329 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not make a service of citation upon all of the parties essential. They may be proper parties, but are not necessary parties. The Code expressly provides that, at the time appointed for showing cause, personal service of the citation having been made upon any persons named therein, "the court must proceed to try the issues of fact joined in the same manner as in an original contest of a will." Personal service of the citation had been made upon the executor and a number of the legatees, and they had answered the petition for revocation, and were ready for trial. Nothing would have been gained by the issuance of an alias citation, except delay; and, although some of the persons interested were not served, since contestant has failed in his petition for revocation, it could not advantage him if they had been served. He has suffered no injury.

Miss Etta Warren was called as a witness for contestant. Her deposition had previously been taken, and with its contents contestant was unquestionably familiar. The objections to certain questions propounded to Miss Warren were sustained by the court. Generally speaking, these questions called for hearsay declarations, and were inadmissible upon that account. Certain others could have been admissible only upon the theory that the witness had given unexpected testimony, hostile to the party who called her. In view of the fact that Miss Warren had previously testified fully by deposition, it cannot seriously be contended that the testimony which she gave, conforming to her deposition, was matter of surprise to the contestant, who had placed her upon the stand. But, moreover, it is well settled that when a witness has failed to testify as expected, the deficiency cannot be made good by the offer, in evidence, of declarations made by that witness out of court. The exception being that above adverted to, where, to the surprise of the party, the witness has given affirmative hostile evidence, the declarations are received only for the purpose of neutralizing the effect of this hostile testimony so unexpectedly given. People v. Jacobs, 49 Cal. 384; People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101. In each instance where it was contended that the evidence of Miss Warren was thus unexpected and hostile, offer was made by counsel for the executors of the will to strike out her testimony, and thus eliminate any possible necessity for the introduction of these asserted declarations. Counsel refused to accept the offer, and the court thereupon sustained the objection. The ruling of the court, for both the reasons above given, was proper. The same may be said of the rulings touching questions propounded to the witness Mrs. Mai Watson, but, in addition to this, the questions themselves were shown to be plainly inadmissible. Thus, Mrs. Watson was asked whether or not Miss Dolbeer had committed suicide in New York. Counsel for respondent objected, and were permitted by the court to show that Mrs. Watson was in San Francisco when Miss Dolbeer met her death, and could only know from hearsay the circumstances of that death, whereupon the objection to the question was sustained. Mrs. Watson was further asked if she had not said to her sister that Miss Dolbeer had followed in the footsteps of her mother, meaning that she had committed suicide. This question was objected to, upon the ground that it was hearsay. The objection was well taken, and was properly sustained. The witness was further asked if she had not told her mother or sister that Miss Dolbeer had attempted to take her life by suicide when she was on an Alaska trip. It was not shown that the witness was with her on the trip, and it was shown that the testimony, if elicited, would be hearsay, and the objection was therefore properly sustained. Objection was also sustained to evidence touching certain purported admissions of Miss Warren, tending to show that Miss Dolbeer was of insane mind at the time of her death, and had committed suicide. For the reasons discussed in Estate of Dolbeer, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695, the rulings excluding these declarations were proper. On the former appeal it was held that these declarations were not receivable in evidence, because they could not bind the other legatees, and the same rule holds whether the evidence was addressed to the mental unsoundness of the testatrix, or to the question of undue influence. Eastis v. Montgomery, 93 Ala. 293, 9 South. 311; Dale's Appeal, 57 Conn. 127, 17 Atl. 757; Fothergill v. Fothergill, 129 Iowa, 93, 105 N. W. 377; McConnell v. Wildes, 153 Mass. 487, 26 N. E. 1114; Roberts v. Bidwell, 136 Mich. 191, 98 N. W. 1000; Schierbaum v. Schemme, 157 Mo. 1, 57 S. W. 526, 80 Am. St. Rep. 604; In re Campbell (Sup.) 73 N. Y. Supp. 753; Clarke v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 453; Chaddick v. Haley, 81 Tex. 617, 17 S. W. 233.

There have thus been considered all of the objections, presented by appellant, embracing the alleged erroneous rulings of law, and, as has been seen, no one of them has any merit.

The court refused to grant a new trial upon the issues upon the ground of newly discovered evidence. Passing over the objections of respondents to the consideration of these affidavits, upon the ground that they were not served or filed within the time allowed by law, and considering them upon their merits, there is nothing therein contained which would have justified the court in granting a new trial, still less to demand a reversal of its order refusing a new trial. Certain of the affidavits go to alleged visits of Miss Warren and Miss Dolbeer to a fortune teller known as Ismar. Some of these affidavits are of persons who saw one or two women, supposed to be Miss Warren or Miss Dolbeer, or both, go to the fortune telling rooms of Ismar. No one of these identifies them both. One of the affidavits declares that the affiant was introduced to Miss Warren. But, again, upon the other hand, Miss Warren denies that she was ever at the rooms of Ismar, with or without Miss Dolbeer, and denies the introduction, and the affidavit of Ismar is to the same effect. It further appears that, whatever may have been the merit or demerits of the Ismar matter, it was known to contestant and his attorney as early as September, 1904; moreover, that Miss Warren herself, upon the trial of the cause, was interrogated as to her dealings with Ismar. The whole question then is in dispute. It had no great significance, and there was a total lack of diligence established. A second matter relates to the affidavit of Dr. Fowler, a physician who attended Miss Dolbeer in New York just previous to her death. Dr. Fowler was dead when the motion for new trial came on to be heard, and any disclosures, in evidence by him, of information acquired as a physician, would have been in violation of subdivision 4 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The affidavit of Patrick L. Francis, a reporter upon a New York newspaper, simply related to certain circumstances that he observed and statements that were made at the coroner's inquest. If admissible at all, the testimony would have been without pertinency or value. Motions for new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence are always subject to careful scrutiny by the court, and the decision rests on its sound discretion. Spottiswood v. Weir, 80 Cal. 448, 22 Pac. 289; Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 Pac. 342. As has been said, there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion in this case.

For the foregoing reasons, the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; McFARLAND, J.

TAPSCOTT v. MEXICAN COLORADO RIVER LAND CO. et al. (S. F. 4,585.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1908. Rehearing Denied June 25, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS—SALE OF PROPERTY—STOCK HOLDERS' CONTRACT—EFFECT ON CORPORATION.

Plaintiff stockholder alleges that the corporation gave the lessee of its land an option to purchase; that the stockholders concurrently agreed that, on an exercise of the option, they would assign their shares of stock and control of the corporation; that the lessee's assignee exercised the option; that the corporation has carried out the terms of the agreement with all the stockholders excepting plaintiff, and has paid them their proportionate shares of the purchase money; that they have assigned their stock, but that he has not been requested to do so, and that he has not been tendered his share of the money; that the corporation has no property excepting such purchase money; and that the corporation intends to invest its funds in a foreign country, with intent to deprive him of such share. Held, that these allegations are insufficient to show that the stockholders' agreement binds the corporation so as to entitle plaintiff to sue it for his share of the purchase money.

2. SAME.

If the agreement did bind the corporation, the agreement is void as to the obligation sought to be imposed upon it, since it amounts to an agreement by the corporation, to divide its capital stock between its stockholders, in violation of Civ. Code, § 309, prohibiting a corporation from making dividends, except upon surplus profits, or from dividing the capital stock.

3. SAME.

That the corporation has distributed shares to other stockholders does not entitle plaintiff to his share, his recourse being to compel a restoration of the illegally distributed shares.

4. SAME.

"Capital stock," within Civ. Code, § 309, relating to the distribution of the capital stock of corporations, refers to the actual property of the corporation contributed by the shareholders.

Department Two. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by V. A. Tapscott against the Mexican Colorado River Land Company and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gillis & Tapscott and Jackson Hatch, for appellant. J. A. Stephens and Curtis L. Hillier, for respondents.

HEENSHAW, J. To plaintiff's complaint a general demurrer was sustained with leave to amend. Upon plaintiff's failure to amend, judgment passed for defendants, and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The material averments of his complaint are as follows: That the Mexican Colorado River Land Company, a defendant herein, is a corporation, organized and doing business under the laws of the state of California; that its capital stock was 40,000 shares, of the par value of 50 cents, and that plaintiff is a stockholder, owning about one-fifth of the capital stock, and is also a director of the company; that the Mexican Colorado River Land Company (which for convenience will be designated the California corporation) owned lands in the Republic of Mexico; that in June, 1902, defendant executed to Harrison Gray Otis a contract of lease, with an option to purchase these lands. By assignment Otis' rights were transferred to a corporation known as the Colorado River Land Company, Sociedad Anonima (which for convenience will hereafter be called the Mexican corporation); that the Mexican corporation in due course tendered to the California corporation the purchase money for the lands, as agreed upon in the original contract with Otis, amounting to $271,359, and the California corporation in turn accepted the money, and executed its deeds to the lands to the Mexican corporation. The complaint then further alleges: "That on the same day, and as a part of the same contract [between the California corporation and Otis], the stockholders of said corporation, the Mexican Colorado River Land Company, entered into a contract with said Harrison Gray Otis, in the words and figures following, to wit." This stockholders' contract or agreement with Otis recited that whereas Otis had leased the lands from the California corporation with the option and privilege of purchasing the same at a stated price "now, therefore, if said Otis, his heirs or assigns, should or shall exercise said privilege and buy said property and pay the purchase price as stipulated in said lease and contract, then and in such event we hereby severally agree and bind ourselves, our respective heirs and assigns, to indorse, turn over, and assign without cost and free from all charges and incumbrances, all of the shares of the capital stock of said corporation now belonging to us severally to wit: [here follows the names of the stockholders, with the number of shares respectively owned by them] and we further covenant and promise that, in addition to such transfer of stock, we will individually and collectively by resignation of old and election of new directors, turn over to said Otis, his heirs and assigns, all of the machinery and control of said corporation." This paper was signed by the stockholders (amongst them plaintiff) representing a great majority of the stock of the California corporation. The complaint then alleges that upon receipt of the $271,359 from the Mexican corporation, and upon the execution of the deeds by the California corporation, certain of the members of the board of directors of the California corporation resigned, and their places were filled with other directors chosen and serving in the interest of the Mexican corporation in fulfillment of that clause in the stockholders' agreement above quoted, whereby "all of the machinery and control" of the California corporation upon the purchase of this land was to be turned over to the purchaser. Plaintiff then, upon information and belief, alleges, and this seems to be the gravamen of his action, that the California corporation, of which he is still apparently a director, "has executed and carried out the terms of said contract with all of the holders of the stock of said corporation except this plaintiff, and has paid them their proportionate shares of said sum of $271,359, and that the said stockholders have severally indorsed, turned over and assigned, without cost and free from all charges and incumbrances, their said shares of the capital stock of said corporation, * * * but that plaintiff has never been requested nor has any demand been made upon him to do so, nor has any tender been made to him of his proportionate share of the moneys hereinabove referred to, based upon his stock and the amount thereof in said" California corporation. It is then averred that the California corporation has no property other than such money as it may still have, derived from the sales of its Mexican lands as above set forth, and that the corporation contemplates the investment of its funds in other lands, and alleges that "it is the intention of said board of directors to take action in relation to said matter, and to authorize the investment of said funds in properties and enterprises, which the president or secretary claim or may claim to have found, being situate in the Republic of Mexico, and to thereby remove the said funds from their immediate possession, and out of the state of California, and that they intend, and will in fact, deprive the plaintiff of his proportionate share thereof." Plaintiff, for specific relief on these facts, asks an award to him of the sum of $46,863.25, being his proportionate share of the amount for which the lands were sold. Ancillary to this, he asks that the corporation be restrained from disposing of the funds until this amount so due him be paid.

From even a cursory consideration of this pleading it is apparent that no legal connection is shown between the California corporation's contract to convey the lands to Otis and the independent stockholders' agreement to make over their stock in the event of such purchase. Whatever may have been the wisdom or unwisdom, the reason or want of reason, which induced the making of this stockholders' agreement, and, notwithstanding the fact that the pleader, for his purposes, treats this stockholders' agreement as the agreement of the corporation, as when he pleads that the corporation "has executed and carried out the terms of said contract with all the holders of the stock of said corporation except this plaintiff," nevertheless, in law, it is nowhere made to appear that this stockholders' agreement was, in any sense, manner, or form, binding upon the corporation. Moreover, if by the most liberal construction of this pleading it could be held, for the purposes of this demurrer, that this stockholders' agreement did bind the corporation in the sense for which plaintiff contends, then, it must unhesitatingly be said that, as to the obligation sought to be cast upon the corporation, this agreement is null and void, because it amounts to an agreement upon the part of the corporation to divide its whole capital stock amongst its stockholders by a method not in conformity with but in direct violence of the law. Section 309 of the Civil Code of California, so far as pertinent to this consideration, declares as follows: "The directors of corporations must not make dividends, except from the surplus profits arising from the business thereof; * * * nor must they divide, withdraw, or pay to the stockholders, or any of them, any part of the capital stock. * * * There may, however, be "a division and distribution of the capital stock of any corporation, which remains after the payment of all its debts, upon its dissolution, or the expiration of its term of existence." The capital stock thus referred to is the actual property of the corporation contributed by the shareholders. Excelsior Water & Min. Co. v. Pierce, 90 Cal. 131, 27 Pac. 44; Kohl v. Lilienthal, 81 Cal. 378, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520; Vercoutere v. Golden State L. Co., 116 Cal. 411, 48 Pac. 375; Schaafe v. Eagle Can Co., 135 Cal. 473, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759. It appearing that the California corporation has no property other than the money received from the sales of its Mexican lands, plaintiff's demand, in its essence, is that it shall divide its total capital stock, and give him his proportion, in violation of the provisions of the code section above quoted. The fact that he avers, on information and belief, that the corporation has done this as to certain of the stockholders affords no reason for his demand that it do so to him. The fact, if it be a fact, that the corporation has acted wrongfully in this matter as to certain of its stockholders is certainly no reason for asking equity that it should decree that the corporation should do another illegal act for plaintiff's benefit. Plaintiff's recourse is to compel the restoration of the funds which he alleges were thus illegally distributed.

No weight attaches to the allegation in the complaint that the California corporation purposes to reinvest these moneys in other Mexican lands. The purposes of the organization of the corporation are not in the complaint set forth. All that can be legitimately derived from the complaint is that the investment in transfer and sales of such lands was one of the very purposes of its organization.

For these reasons the order sustaining the demurrer was correct, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

BARRON v. BARRON. (Civ. 432, and S. F. 4,509.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 11, 1908.)

1. DIVORCE—INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT—VACATION AND DISMISSAL.

After the six months prescribed by Civ. Code, § 131, and Code Civ. Proc. § 473, within which appeal may be taken from or attack by other means inaugurated against an interlocutory judgment of divorce by default, has expired, plaintiff cannot, on an ex parte application, have the same set aside and the suit dismissed before expiration of the year during which such judgment must be in existence, under section 131, preceding entry of final judgment.

2. SAME—WAIVER OF RIGHT TO DIVORCE.

An interlocutory judgment of divorce provided for by Civ. Code, § 131, which becomes final by the lapse of six months from entry without appeal or motion to set it aside, merely establishes conclusively plaintiff's rights to a divorce, and it does not necessarily follow that he or she may not waive the exercise of such right and dismiss the action.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action for divorce by Rita A. Barron against George H. Barron. From an order denying a motion by plaintiff to dismiss a motion by defendant to set aside and vacate an order on motion of plaintiff, setting aside and vacating an interlocutory judgment for plaintiff, and from an order granting the motion of defendant sought to be dismissed, plaintiff appeals. On affirmance by the District Court of Appeal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following is the opinion of HART, J. (concurring in by CHIPMAN, P. J., and BURNETT, J.), in the District Court of Appeal.

"The plaintiff commenced a suit against the defendant for a divorce, in the superior court of the city of San Francisco, by filing a verified complaint in the office of the clerk of said court on the 1st day of June, 1904. On the same day summons was issued in said action, and on the 6th day of June, 1904, the same was served on the defendant in said city of San Francisco. The defendant did not answer the complaint within the time allowed him by law, and, accordingly, his default was entered on the 23d day of June, 1904. The cause was tried on the 25th day of June, 1904, the defendant not appearing at said trial, and, after hearing the proofs, the court granted an interlocutory judgment in favor of the plaintiff, as authorized by section 131 of the Civil Code. On the 6th day of April, 1905, something over nine months after the entry of the interlocutory judgment, plaintiff made an application to the court, in the form of a petition, in which all the proceedings theretofore had in the case were fully set out, for an order setting aside and vacating said interlocutory judgment. Said petition also alleged that it was the desire and intention of plaintiff, if said interlocutory judgment was set aside, to move for a dismissal of said action. No notice of this last-mentioned proceeding was served upon or given the defendant. 'On said 6th day of April, 1905, the said court read and heard said petition, and made an order and decree in said action vacating and setting aside the interlocutory judgment and decree made and entered on the 25th day of June, 1904, and dismissing the said action, and directing the clerk of said court to enter a dismissal thereof upon his docket.' This order of the court was entered on the 6th day of April, 1905. On the 31st day of May, 1905, the defendant, having by some means learned of the action of the court vacating the interlocutory judgment, gave notice of a motion for an order vacating and setting aside the said order of April 6, 1905, setting aside and vacating the interlocutory judgment made and entered on the 25th day of June, 1904. On the 2d day of June, 1905, the plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the last-mentioned motion by the defendant for an order vacating and setting aside the said order of April 6, 1905. On September 25, 1905, defendant's motion to vacate the order made on the 6th of April, 1905, and the plaintiff's motion to dismiss said motion of defendant, were heard by the court, and an order made and entered denying the motion of plaintiff to dismiss the motion of defendant, and granting the motion of defendant to set aside and vacate the order made on the 6th day of April, 1905, setting aside and vacating the interlocutory judgment entered on the 25th day of June, 1904. The plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from the order denying her motion to dismiss the motion of the defendant and from the order granting the defendant's motion to set aside and vacate the order vacating and setting aside the interlocutory judgment.

"The appellant contends that the court was without jurisdiction to make the order upon defendant's motion, as heretofore explained, because the action had been dismissed and was no longer pending in said court. On the other hand, the respondent contends that the court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the order setting aside the interlocutory judgment and the subsequent order dismissing the action after the lapse of six months after the entry of said interlocutory judgment. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court having any bearing upon the question, as we understand them, the contention of the respondent must be sustained. Section 131 of the Civil Code reads: 'In actions for divorce the court must file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases, and if it determines that no divorce shall be granted, final judgment must thereupon be entered accordingly. If it determines that the divorce ought to be granted, an interlocutory judgment must be entered, declaring that the party in whose favor the court decides is entitled to a divorce, and from such interlocutory judgment an appeal may be taken within six months after its entry, in the same manner and with like effect as if the judgment were final.' The exact question presented here is a new one in this state. By this we are to be understood as saying that whether a plaintiff who has obtained an interlocutory judgment by default in an action for divorce may, upon an ex parte application, have the same set aside and the suit dismissed at any time before the expiration of the year during which said interlocutory judgment must be in existence preceding the entry of final judgment, is a question upon which there are in this state no judicial precedents precisely in point.

"The policy of the law is not only to discourage divorces, but to encourage the reconciliation of married persons between whom some degree of estrangement has arisen which may likely or probably will lead to permanent separation and the restoration of the parties to the status of unmarried people through judicial determination. The institution of marriage constitutes one of the essential and strongest of the corner stones of the social fabric. While in a restricted sense it involves a contractual relation in which the immediate parties themselves are alone vitally interested, in a comprehensive sense it affects and permeates and is an indispensable part of the whole social system, and in that view becomes a question of vital public concern. Consequently, the public is in fact, if not in name, a party to every action for the dissolution of the marriage relation. Therefore the legislative policy has been, is, and always will be, so long as society is supported by its present standard, against allowing divorces for slight or trivial or capricious reasons, but strongly favors a prevention of them where it can be done consistently with the highest interests of the immediate parties and of society. Our present law is the fruition of many years of legislative effort to bring about the ends to which we have referred. First, it was thought that the interdiction of the marriage of the divorced parties within a year after the final decree would discourage, to some extent, the desire for legal separation for at least slight and capricious causes. This enactment proved futile for the purpose intended to be achieved, for the courts held that, while in this state a marriage contrary to the provisions of that law would be void, either party could avoid the effect of the law by having the marriage ceremony solemnized in another state at any time after the entry of the decree. The facility with which such persons could cross the California line, either into Nevada, Oregon, or Arizona soon demonstrated the utter impotency of the enactment to accomplish its principal design. Then the Legislature gave us the present law, by the provisions of which a final judgment must be predicated of an interlocutory judgment of one year's existence. Many specific reasons could be given why the Legislature has thus exercised such jealous solicitude over the institution of marriage as evidenced by the restrictions which it has thrown around the action for divorce. Among these it has been suggested that the provision for the postponement of a final decree of divorce for a specified time after the finding that a party was entitled thereto was founded upon the consideration that the parties might be reconciled during such time, and a final separation thus obviated. De Yoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 484, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73, per Mr. Justice Angellotti. And again, as is further suggested by the learned writer of the opinion in the case just cited, 'it might be contended with much force that such legislation was justified upon the theory that the postponement of the giving of final judgment for a specified time removes to some extent the temptation to resort to collusion or fraud, in order to obtain a speedy divorce and contract a new marriage.'

"We have thus referred to some extent to the nature of the contract of marriage and its peculiar relation to the state and its effect upon society, in order to show that the policy of the law is to discourage divorces and encourage reconciliation between the parties where divorces seem imminent, thus showing the reasons impelling legislation regulating the subject of marriage and divorce. And, it is upon the policy of the law against divorces that counsel for appellant builds almost the entire fabric of his argument in support of the principle for which he contends here, to wit: That the statute should be so construed as to sustain the action of the court in setting aside, on the motion of plaintiff, an interlocutory judgment in an action for divorce, at any time within the year during which such judgment must exist before the entry of a final judgment; that such a course would harmonize with the public policy upon the subject as expressed through the legislation thereon. But, the Supreme Court, in a very recent case, has used language which forbids such a construction of section 131 of the Civil Code as would authorize either party to a divorce suit, upon a mere ex parte application, to cause an interlocutory judgment therein to be set aside and vacated after the expiration of the time prescribed by said section within which an appeal may be taken from or an attack by any other means inaugurated against such interlocutory judgment. The statute provides, as will be observed, that an appeal may be taken from the interlocutory judgment in an action for divorce within six months after the entry of such judgment. Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure prescribes the same time limit within which proceedings under that section may be initiated. In the case at bar the motion to vacate the interlocutory judgment and to dismiss the action and the orders of the court to that effect were made over nine months after the entry of such judgment. In Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 260, 79 Pac. 897, the following plain, unambiguous, and unqualified language is used by Mr. Justice Shaw, speaking for the court: 'The judgment entered on September 4, 1903, therefore constituted a valid interlocutory judgment declaring the plaintiff entitled to a divorce. As such it was subject to be vacated on appeal, or on motion for a new trial, or by proceedings under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The time for all these proceedings having expired, and no such proceeding to vacate it having been instituted, the court thereupon lost all power by any proceeding in the case to modify or vacate the judgment, in so far as it constituted an interlocutory judgment.' (The italics are ours.) The foregoing language is, as already suggested, so clear and plain as to the meaning intended to be thereby conveyed that nothing can be added to make its meaning clearer. The proposition as thus declared is stated without qualification—that the time having expired within which proceedings to vacate such judgment could be instituted, and no authorized proceedings having been instituted within the time limited, the 'court thereupon lost all power by any proceeding in the case to modify or vacate the judgment, in so far as it constituted an interlocutory judgment.' Indeed, if this language cannot be clearly understood, then surely judicial opinions are of little force and practically of no use as precedents upon which nisi prius courts can rely to guide them to correct conclusions, or at least conclusions in harmony with the regularly authenticated views of the higher courts.

"But it will doubtless be argued that the proceedings authorized to be taken as against such interlocutory judgments are supposed to be initiated by the defendant in the action and not the plaintiff, and therefore the opinion of the Supreme Court from which we have quoted deals with the section as exclusively applying to and qualifying the rights of the defendant in such case, and that the opinion may be interpreted as having no application to a case, like the one here, where the plaintiff is merely attempting to recall her own act. The unequivocal language of the opinion, in no manner or degree or in any sense qualifying or attempting to qualify the proposition expressed thereby, will not, by even the most adroit or subtle interpretation, if indeed interpretation is necessary to gather its true meaning, support such a position. Besides, we think there are sound and unimpeachable reasons why the distinction suggested cannot be sustained. It is our opinion that when the six months have expired within which proceedings may be inaugurated, either by way of appeal or otherwise, against the interlocutory judgment, such judgment, if no such proceedings have been taken within the time prescribed, becomes a permanent interlocutory judgment and remains so until superseded by the final judgment, into which it finally merges. We think therefore the court's power over that judgment under such circumstances ceases to exist as clearly and conclusively as does the power of the court over a final judgment after the expiration of the time for an appeal therefrom. We are, of course, assuming the judgment in either case to be valid on its face. Has it ever been supposed for an instant that the court possesses the power to recall a final judgment, valid on its face, and vacate or modify it in any material respect, either upon its own motion or upon the application of one of the parties, after the time within which an appeal may be taken therefrom has elapsed, except where it appears that the judgment entered is not the judgment actually rendered, or some other clerical misprision affecting such judgment is apparent upon the face of the record? The very fact that the Legislature has fixed a time within which an attack by any authorized means upon an interlocutory judgment in an action for divorce must be made, if at all, necessarily implies that after the expiration of the time so limited an interlocutory judgment, as such, is as strongly intrenched against disturbance from any cause or any source, except where both parties join in a motion to set it aside, as is a final judgment after the time for appeal therefrom has passed.

"Again, let it be supposed that the plaintiff in the case at bar had, in addition to the allegations declaring the grounds upon which she sought a divorce, alleged that there were certain community property rights, as to which she prayed for an adjustment by the court. Suppose, further, that the defendant defaulted, or failed to answer the complaint or to appear at the trial, and that the court awarded the plaintiff the full relief called for by the allegations of the complaint and as prayed for. In such case, is it possible that more than six months after the entry of the interlocutory judgment, valid on its face, none of the authorized proceedings having been instituted against said judgment within that time, the plaintiff could by any proceeding of her own cause said judgment to be modified or vacated merely because she had been convinced or had convinced herself after the entry of the judgment that she had not, for some reason, thereby obtained a fair adjustment of the community property rights? We think no such contention would for a moment be made, and we think the supposititious case contains not an extreme but a conservative and fair illustration of the precariousness and instability of an interlocutory judgment in an action for divorce if the plaintiff were permitted for any reason to cause it to be set aside or modified after the time when the law contemplates that it is, for the purposes for which it is intended, as formidable as a final judgment.

"The interlocutory judgment in a divorce case is the result or crystallization in concrete form of all the material issues tendered and tried and presumptively covers and includes all such issues, and, after the time has passed within which it may be attacked, is, as such interlocutory judgment, if valid on its face, as impregnable against attack as a final judgment under similar circumstances.

"The final judgment in a divorce case is, practically and in reality, in our opinion, only the judicial declaration authorized to be made in accordance with the expressed legislative policy of the state against the marriage of married persons already found to be entitled to a divorce within a year from such finding that the interlocutory judgment shall become active and effective, and that the parties may exercise all the rights which such judgment declared them to be entitled to, and which rights, while actually existing, were only dormant because of the avowed policy of the law. These rights, we should say, in other words, became vested rights from the time of the entry of the interlocutory judgment, subject only to be modified or set aside by appeal or by other appropriate proceeding within the time prescribed, but their actual enjoyment postponed, for reasons of public policy, to a future determinate time. Laying aside a consideration of a right of appeal from the final judgment, the Legislature has in effect said that 'the interlocutory judgment shall go into effect and become final one year after its entry, unless an appeal within time has been taken therefrom and the same undisposed of at the expiration of the year.'

"If, for any reason, the contention of appellant were sustained, the result would be that, while the defendant could not, after he had allowed the prescribed time to pass without initiating any proceedings against the judgment, exercise any power over such judgment, the plaintiff would be without any restraint in that respect until the final judgment was entered. It is impossible that the law contemplates any such absurd situation.

"The court below, in making the orders appealed from, no doubt did so upon the theory that it was without jurisdiction to make the orders vacating and setting aside the interlocutory judgment and dismissing the action.

"As the action of the court as to the orders appealed from conforms to the views herein expressed, the said orders are affirmed."

F. A. Berlin, for appellant. Lynch & Drury, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In denying the petition for a rehearing of this cause we are not to be understood as approving that part of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal which implies that, after an interlocutory decree of divorce has become final by the lapse of six months from its entry without appeal or motion to set it aside, the plaintiff has not the right to dismiss his or her action at any time before the entry of a final decree. The interlocutory decree, when final, merely establishes conclusively the right of the plaintiff to a divorce. It does not necessarily follow that he or she may not waive the exercise of that right. Whether the plaintiff could have done so was not a question arising on this appeal, and it is not decided.

CASSIN v. COLE. (S. F. 4,613.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1908.
Rehearing Denied June 25, 1908.)

1. EASEMENTS — PRESCRIPTION — ADVERSE CHARACTER OF USE.

Use by a grantee of grantor's premises to reach a public road under permission to do so until the whole tract had been surveyed and a permanent road dedicated, and continued use of the old road after this had been done under permission to do so until the land should be devoted to other purposes than farming, gave no prescriptive right.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 24.]

2. SAME—WAYS OF NECESSITY.

A way of necessity, given grantee over grantor's premises until a permanent road had been dedicated, ceased on dedication of such road, notwithstanding the way of necessity was more convenient for grantee's purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 72½.]

3. TRESPASS — REAL PROPERTY — EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, in an action to restrain repeated trespasses on land and for damages, by plaintiff, that he did not put in an orchard because of the traveling across his land, that he lost the growth of the trees for two years, and was damaged $100, was not subject to the construction alone that he was damaged $100 because of the loss of the growth of the trees, but was open to the construction that he lost the growth of the trees, and in addition was damaged $100, and, so construed, it was the duty of defendant's counsel, if they questioned this estimate of damages, to have inquired on cross-examination as to the foundation on which the estimate rested, and, not having done so, the evidence was sufficient to support a judgment for $100, notwithstanding damages for the loss of the growth of the trees may not have been allowable in such an action.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Benito County; M. H. Dooling, Judge.

Action by Charles T. Cassin against D. W. Cole. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. C. Wyckoff, for appellant. Charles M. Cassin and Briggs & Hulner, for respondent.

plaintiff's land, and the existence of this right of way is the principal matter in controversy between the parties. After trial the court gave judgment for plaintiff as prayed for. The findings, which are supported by the evidence, though as to certain matters the evidence is conflicting, were to the effect that the defendant purchased a farm of 325 acres from Jesse D. Carr, who was the owner of a very large tract of land, at that time undivided. Defendant's land did not touch upon any public street. He explained this to Carr, who replied that he would give defendant an outlet. Defendant wanted Carr to include a right of way for a road in the deed, but Carr declined to do so, stating that he could not tell where the road designed for the land bought by appellant would be until the whole tract had been surveyed and subdivided. He told appellant, however, that he proposed to make a way out for everybody, and that every piece of land he sold should have a way to a road. Meanwhile he gave appellant permission to travel over his land until it was subdivided. Appellant was to travel where anybody was traveling on the ranch, so long as he did not interfere with the farming business. At no time did Carr tell appellant that he should have a right of way over any particular part of the land, but only that he should travel as other people traveled over the ranch. Entering the ranch by a gate, people traveled about as they liked, sometimes following one track, and sometimes another. This they did, without express permission; but nobody objected so long as the gates were closed. Appellant in traveling across the lands of Carr traversed lands subsequently purchased by this plaintiff. No objection was made to appellant's doing this while the land was used for farming purposes. In fact, the respondent informed appellant that he could continue using the road until respondent devoted the land to other purposes than farming. Some years after, Carr's land was finally subdivided, and a road laid out through the ranch along appellant's south line, which would give him access to the county road without traversing the land of any other person; but appellant continued to travel by the old route under this license from respondent, as it was more direct and convenient for his purposes, and some little labor and expense would be necessary in making the road dedicated by Carr suitable for travel. So things continued, appellant still driving with the respondent's permission over the latter's land, until respondent desired to plant the land to orchard trees, when he requested appellant to cease traveling over it. Appellant refused to do so, and here asserts his right to the old road which he used by prescription and as a road of necessity. The findings of the court, supported by the evidence, are destructive of the appellant's contention of prescriptive right. It is made to appear that the road which he traveled was used permissively until such time as his grantor should delimit and dedicate a permanent road for his purposes. After this was done, appellant's continued use of the old road was still, as found by the court, under revocable permission given by respondent.

The facts so found render unnecessary any consideration of the law governing rights of way by prescription, and as little force can be accorded appellant's contention that he acquired a perpetual right over the old way by necessity. It was shown that he was allowed to travel over any part of the ranch until such time as a specific road was described and dedicated to his use. A way of necessity arises from necessity alone, and continues only while the necessity exists. Unquestionably appellant had a way of necessity across his grantor's ranch until a road was dedicated to his use; but, when that was done, his right to a way of necessity ceased, and it matters not that the old road was more convenient for his purposes. When it ceased to be indispensable, the right ceased. Kripp v. Curtis, 71 Cal. 65, 11 Pac. 879; Carey v. Rae, 58 Cal. 163; Blum v. Weston, 102 Cal. 369, 36 Pac. 778, 41 Am. St. Rep. 188.

Upon the question of damages, plaintiff testified as follows: "I did not put in the orchard on account of his traveling through there. I did not want an orchard where a man was going through it. I lost the growth of the trees for two years and was damaged in the sum of $100. I don't know whether it is easy to get at damages of this kind." Upon this appellant contends that the damages awarded were because of the loss of the growth of the trees for two years, and insists that damages upon this account are not allowable in an action such as this. Dorsey v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 553; Chicago v. Huenerbein, 85 Ill. 594, 28 Am. Rep. 626. If this were the only legitimate and possible construction which could be put upon plaintiff's evidence above quoted, much force would attach to appellant's contention; but it is equally open to the construction that plaintiff meant that he lost the growth of the trees for two years, and in addition was damaged in the sum of $100. So construed, it was the duty of appellant's counsel, if they questioned the soundness of this estimate of damages, to have inquired upon cross-examination and shown the reasons and the foundation upon which the estimate rested. Razzo v. Varni, 81 Cal. 289, 22 Pac. 848. Failing to do this, the evidence of plaintiff is sufficient to support the judgment rendered.

The alleged errors of the court in ruling upon the evidence and in overruling appellant's demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint do not call for special consideration. The evidence which the court admitted was pertinent and proper, and its decision overruling the demurrer was sound. The complaint was in the usual and sufficient form for an injunction to prevent future trespasses and for the award of damages for trespasses already committed. Hughes v. Dun- lap, 91 Cal. 390, 27 Pac. 642; Jacob v. Lorenz, 98 Cal. 332, 33 Pac. 119. The judgment is not susceptible of the construction sought to be placed upon it by appellant. It does not limit his right to travel on Aromitas avenue to one direction only.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DORCY v. BRODIS et al. (S. F. 4,641.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1908.
Rehearing Denied June 25, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—DISCRETION OF COURT—NEW TRIAL—DILIGENCE.

A motion for a new trial is an independent proceeding in an action, in which the burden of acting is at all times upon the moving party; and it devolves upon him to proceed with diligence, and the determination of the question whether there has been due diligence is one necessarily largely within the discretion of the trial court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3860-3865.]

2. NEW TRIAL—PROCEEDINGS—DILIGENCE.

It is not an abuse of the trial court's discretion to dismiss a motion for new trial for lack of prosecution, where from the time amendments to the statement of the grounds in support of the motion were served, four months elapsed without the mover taking any action to have the statement of his grounds for new trial heard or settled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 238, 243.]

3. SAME—EXCUSES FOR DELAY.

Where sufficient delay has been made to authorize the dismissal of a motion for new trial, the fact that the mover filed an affidavit excusing his delay on grounds which were denied by counter affidavit is not sufficient to excuse the delay.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—RECORDS—PRESUMPTIONS—NEW TRIAL.

On appeal from the dismissal of a motion for new trial, where the record does not show that notice to fix the time for settlement of the statement of the grounds for new trial was given before the motion to dismiss was made, it will not be presumed that it was so given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3772-3776.]

5. NEW TRIAL—MOTIONS—DILIGENCE—DISMISSAL.

Where, by reason of delay, a party has the right to move to dismiss a motion for new trial, the fact that the court of its own motion fixed a day in which to settle the statement, or that the mover, by an ex parte application, secured the fixing of such day cannot affect the right to dismiss.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Suit to quiet title by Joseph M. Dorcy against Maria Brodis and others. From an order dismissing a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William A. Bowden and Charles M. Cassin, for appellant. Jas. Alva Watt, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order dismissing his motion for a new trial.

The action was brought to quiet title to a tract of land in the county of Santa Cruz, in which judgment was rendered in favor of the defendants and against plaintiff. In due time and on May 18, 1905, plaintiff gave notice of intention to move for a new trial. Thereafter, on June 1, 1905, his counsel served on the attorney for defendants what purported to be a statement in support of said motion. On the 31st day of August thereafter, defendants prepared and served upon plaintiff their proposed amendments to such statement, subject to objections interposed and saved therein against the settlement of said statement on the ground that it was a mere skeleton statement, inaccurate and incorrect in every material particular, and that it was sham and not prepared or proposed in good faith. Thereafter, defendants gave notice of a motion to dismiss plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the same grounds urged against the settlement of the statement. This motion came on to be heard on September 9, 1905, and was by the court denied. Subsequently, and on December 29, 1905, defendants again gave notice of motion to dismiss said motion for a new trial, to be heard January 2, 1906, and among other grounds, upon the ground that the plaintiff had failed to prosecute his motion for a new trial with due diligence. The matter was presented and heard upon affidavits of the respective attorneys in the action and the proceedings in the cause, and after due consideration was granted by the trial court, and plaintiff appeals. It is insisted by the appellant that the court abused its discretion in granting the motion to dismiss.

In Galbraith v. Lowe, 142 Cal. 296, 75 Pac. 831, it is said: "A motion for a new trial is an independent proceeding in an action, in which the burden of acting is at all times upon the moving party. * * * It is the moving party who is the actor in the proceeding and who is seeking the settlement of the bill of exceptions and the determination of the motion for a new trial, and it devolves upon him to proceed with diligence. * * * The power to dismiss a motion for a new trial on the ground that the same has not been prosecuted with due diligence being conceded, the determination of the question as to whether there has been due diligence is one necessarily largely within the discretion of the trial court." See, also, Boggs v. Clark, 37 Cal. 236; Hopkins v. W. P. R. R. Co., 44 Cal. 389. Applying this rule it appears that from the 31st day of August, 1905, when the amendments were served, up to the hearing of the last motion to dismiss which was granted, plaintiff had taken no action whatever to have the proposed statement heard and settled. It is true that in his affidavit counsel for plaintiff endeavors to excuse his delay upon the ground that he understood that there was an arrangement between himself and the attorney for defendants that the statement would be taken up at any time agreeable to both parties. But counsel for defendants, in a counter affidavit, deny any such agreement or understanding, and these conflicting affidavits were the only evidence upon that subject. The court was of the opinion that in this conflict there was no sufficient showing on the part of counsel for plaintiff excusing his delay in procuring the settlement of the statement, and so stated in disposing of the motion. The court could then only look, as it did, to the records in the case, which did not show any stipulations between the parties extending time or any orders of court having that effect. From the record it simply appeared that practically for four months after the statement and amendments should have been presented for settlement nothing was done by counsel for plaintiff to effect that end. The law required plaintiff as the moving party to proceed with diligence at the peril of having his motion for a new trial dismissed and an inexcusable inactivity for almost four months was sufficient to warrant the trial court in finding that the plaintiff had not proceeded with due diligence. Hence, there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the court in dismissing the motion for a new trial for that reason.

It is claimed by plaintiff that at the time the notice was given of the motion to dismiss, the court had already fixed the 3d of January, 1906, as the date for the settling of the statement. While it appears from the affidavit of plaintiff that the court had fixed that date for the settlement, there is nothing to show that the order fixing it was made prior to the filing of the notice of the motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial, or that that time was fixed by the consent of the parties. In the absence of such showing no presumption is to be indulged that the order fixing the date of the settlement was made prior to the filing of the notice of motion to dismiss. All that appears is that there was a day fixed by the court for the hearing of the statement, which was subsequent to the filing of the notice of motion to dismiss and the date fixed for hearing such motion. The right of the defendants to have the motion for a new trial dismissed on account of failure to prosecute it diligently by having the statement settled could not be affected by the action of the court of its own volition or by the ex parte application of the attorney for the plaintiff in fixing a day for the settlement. If there was inexcusable delay on the part of plaintiff the defendants had a right to move to dismiss for that reason, and the action of the court in fixing a day for settlement could in no respect interfere with that right.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

BECKER v. SCHMIDLIN. (S. F. 4,705.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1908.)

COSTS—SECURITY FOR COSTS—SLANDER—ALLOWING NEW UNDERTAKING—DISCRETION.

The jurisdiction of the court in an action for slander not being dependent on the filing before commencement of the action of the undertaking for costs, provided for by St. 1871, p. 533, c. 377, § 1, it is an abuse of discretion, where plaintiff in good faith believed his undertaking was sufficient, and the sureties thereon are present in court to justify, to refuse to allow a new undertaking to be filed, and to dismiss the action, especially where at such time the statute has run against the cause of action.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by A. Becker against Ida Schmidlin. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Will M. Beggs, for appellant. E. E. Cothran, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and order dismissing an action. The suit was brought to recover damages for slander, the complaint setting forth several causes of action, and it being alleged that the slanderous words were uttered by defendant of and concerning the plaintiff at various dates between the 1st day of December, 1904, and the 1st day of February, 1905. The complaint was filed October 16, 1905, and was accompanied by an undertaking in the sum of $500, filed on the same day, in favor of defendant as provided by statute. St. 1871, p. 533, c. 377, § 1. Upon January 26, 1906, upon notice of defendant excepting to the sureties on the undertaking filed and objecting to the undertaking itself and the manner of its execution and requiring that the sureties justify, that matter came up for disposition before the department of the superior court in which the action was pending. At the hearing counsel for defendant waived objection to the sufficiency of the sureties themselves, but objected that they had never executed any undertaking in the action. From the showing made it appeared that the undertaking in question had been executed by the sureties on October 9, 1905, for the purpose of being used in another action for slander between the same parties which was then pending in another department of the superior court of Santa Clara county. In that action an undertaking had been given which had been objected to, and it was intended to file the undertaking now under consideration in place thereof. The undertaking, however, was not used, the motion to permit it to be filed being denied and that action dismissed. Thereafter, the attorney for plaintiff, who was likewise a notary public before whom the sureties had verified the undertaking in question, being about to commence substantially the same action in another department of the superior court, saw the sureties, who consented that the undertaking they had signed might be used in this other contemplated suit. The notary thereupon changed the dates of the undertaking and of the verification from the 9th to the 11th day of October, 1905, and as so changed, filed it with the complaint in this present action.

These facts appearing, counsel for defendant immediately moved that the action be dismissed upon the ground that no undertaking had been filed as required by the statute. The matter of the sufficiency of the undertaking was thereupon submitted to the court, and the judge thereof stated that he was satisfied that the undertaking was insufficient. Thereupon, counsel for plaintiff moved for leave to file a new undertaking—no new undertaking being then presented—to which offer objection was made by counsel for defendant and the matter submitted to the court on briefs of the respective parties to be filed. Thereafter, on February 9, 1906, the motion of plaintiff for leave to file a new undertaking was denied, and the motion of defendant that the action be dismissed was sustained, and an order and judgment entered dismissing it. Exception was taken by plaintiff to the order denying the motion for leave to file a new undertaking and to the order dismissing the action, and under these exceptions the ruling and order of the court below are here for review.

It is insisted by the appellant that under the circumstances disclosed by the record it was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court to deny him permission to file a new undertaking, and to dismiss the action, and we are inclined to that view.

The jurisdiction of the court in an action for slander does not depend upon whether a sufficient undertaking is or is not filed at the time the suit is commenced. It has such jurisdiction even when no undertaking at all is filed, and may permit one to be filed subsequent to the commencement of the action, and, of course, may permit a new undertaking to be filed in lieu of a defective one. Dixon v. Allen, 69 Cal. 527, 11 Pac. 179; Stinson v. Carpenter, 78 Cal. 571, 21 Pac. 304; Smith v. McDermott, 93 Cal. 421, 29 Pac. 34.

It is true that a plaintiff neglecting to file a sufficient undertaking when suit is commenced incurs the danger of having his action dismissed upon the motion of the defendant for such failure, but when such motion is made and is well taken, the court may, nevertheless, in the exercise of a sound discretion, having jurisdiction of the action, permit the plaintiff to file a new and sufficient undertaking. The undertaking provided by the statute to be given runs in terms in favor of a defendant, and is intended to secure him in the costs and charges of the action which may ultimately be awarded him. The provision is for his sole benefit, and this being true, the discretion vested in the court of permitting plaintiff to file a new undertaking which will afford a defendant all the protection the law intends, should be exercised to effect that end. So exercised, it will permit the cause to be tried on its merits, which the law favors, instead of preventing it, which it discourages. Especially should this permission be granted where it appears that a party in good faith has originally endeavored to comply with the statute by filing an undertaking when the suit is commenced. This the plaintiff here did. We do not discuss the matter of the legal sufficiency of the undertaking which was filed, because that point is not involved on this appeal. But assuming that it was insufficient—or void as the trial court found—because executed to be used in another action, still the circumstances under which it was used in the present action, which disclose that it was with the express consent of the sureties who were admittedly financially responsible, indicated that counsel for plaintiff was, at least, acting in good faith under a belief that the undertaking was valid when he filed it. It further appeared at the hearing that the sureties on the undertaking were present in court offering to justify. One of them, the only one who testified, offered then to go on the undertaking, and it is to be inferred that the other who had consented to be bound before the undertaking was filed and was present in court to justify, would have been equally willing, and, hence, if plaintiff's application had been granted, it would have taken but a short time to have prepared a sufficient undertaking and filed it then and there. Aside from the fact, however, that the plaintiff was ready, able and willing to then furnish a good and sufficient undertaking, it further appears that when the court ultimately refused to permit him to do so, and dismissed the action, the statute of limitations had run against plaintiff's cause of action, and he was prevented from commencing a new suit. The result of the action of the court was, therefore, to defeat the assertion of any meritorious claim for damages which plaintiff might have had against the defendant.

Under these circumstances we are satisfied that the application of plaintiff should have been granted, as was done in the case of Dixon v. Allen, supra, where no undertaking had been filed at all, and on motion to dismiss the trial court properly allowed plaintiff to file one. And this court, in Smith v. McDermott, supra, makes no question but that it should be done, where it says: "When the motion to dismiss was made and the plaintiff's attention was directly called to the matter (the insufficiency of the undertaking) she might have asked, and doubtless would have obtained leave, to file an undertaking in due form as required by the statute."

There is nothing in the suggestion in respondent's brief that no new bond was presented to the court. Counsel for respondent offered to give one at the hearing, and, as we have said, the record discloses with almost a certainty that he was prepared then and there to do so. This was the very offer that was submitted on briefs and taken under advisement by the court, and it was not fatal to the claim of plaintiff of abuse of discretion by the court in denying it, that he did not actually tender an executed undertaking, when the court had under consideration the very matter of whether it would permit him to do so or not.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, with directions to set aside the order of dismissal, and grant leave to the plaintiff to file an undertaking as required by the statute within a limited time.

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO
v. BROWN et al. (S. F. 4,594.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 28, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT—VACATING—AUTHORITY OF COURT—TIME TO EXERCISE.

The rule that a motion to vacate a judgment cannot be made after six months from its entry has application only where the judgment which it is sought to vacate is the judgment which was actually rendered by the court.

2. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT—INVOLUNTARY—OPERATION.

A judgment of nonsuit, granted on defendant's motion, operates simply as a dismissal of the cause, and simply declares that plaintiff has failed to make proof of material allegations to sustain his cause, and decides nothing on the merits.

3. JUDGMENT—NONSUIT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A nonsuit, suffered from any cause, is not a bar to a suit subsequently brought on the same cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 1028-1045.]

4. EJECTMENT—TITLE TO SUPPORT ACTION—JUDGMENT OF NONSUIT—OPERATION.

In ejectment plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title, and when he fails to prove title, it is immaterial whether defendant has title or not; and therefore the granting of a nonsuit only determines the fact that plaintiff has not proven his case, and does not adjudge the rights of defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Ejectment, § 17.]

5. JUDGMENT—ENTRY BY CLERK.

The entry of a judgment by the clerk of the court is a ministerial act to be performed by the clerk, and it is his duty to enter only such judgment as the court rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 506.]

6. SAME—JUDICIAL ERROR—CLERICAL ERROR—CORRECTION.

Where, in ejectment, the court granted defendant's motion of nonsuit, the act of the clerk in entering a judgment adjudging that defendant is the owner of and entitled to the premises in controversy is a clerical and not a judicial error, which the court has the inherent power at any time to amend, so as to make the judgment entered conform to the judgment actually rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 598.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the City and County of San Francisco against Yankee Brown and others. From an order setting aside a final judgment in favor of defendants, they appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Ash, for appellants. Wm. G. Burke, City Atty., for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside and vacating a final judgment. The action was commenced in the district court of the Fourth judicial district on the 17th day of April, 1868, and was in ejectment to recover possession of certain premises in the city and county of San Francisco, of which plaintiff alleged it was the owner and entitled to the possession, and had been dispossessed by the defendants, and which property, the record on this appeal shows, was claimed to be a portion of Oregon street. In due time Charles P. Brown and Andrew V. Smith, impleaded with the other defendants under fictitious names, filed their answers, in which they denied the allegations of the complaint, and set up, as separate defenses, the statute of limitations and adverse possession for the requisite statutory period. The cause came on regularly for trial, without a jury, on the 16th of November, 1870, and, plaintiff resting after having introduced certain evidence, the defendants moved for a judgment of nonsuit. The minute orders of the court, with reference to the motion and disposition of it, were that certain named "witnesses for plaintiff were sworn and examined, and, plaintiff having rested his case, defendants moved for a judgment of nonsuit, which motion was taken under advisement by the court." This is from the minutes of the trial of November 16, 1870. On November 19, 1870, the following minute order was made by the court: "The motion on behalf of defendants for a judgment of nonsuit herein having been fully considered by the court, it is ordered that the said motion be and the same is hereby granted, and that a judgment of nonsuit be entered therein in favor of said defendants and against the plaintiff." No further proceedings seem to have been taken in the case until the 31st of March, 1905, when Robert Ash, Esq., attorney of record for appellant herein, without any stipulation or order of substitution as attorney for said defendant Brown, wrote in the request book kept in the county clerk's office the following: "Enter judgment as per memorandum filed. Robert Ash, Attorney." Thereafter, on April 4, 1905, the clerk, without any order or direction of the superior court, entered judgment in the cause, pursuant to the directions of said attorney who had requested it. The judgment recited that, the cause having come on regularly to be heard on the 19th day of November, 1870, "the parties thereupon introduced oral and documentary evidence, and there was thereupon put in issue, between the respective plaintiff and said defendant C. P. Brown, the title and possession of said parties, respectively, in and to" the land described in the complaint. It further recites that, "after said evidence had been closed, defendants moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that plaintiff had no title to said lot of land, which the court had granted, and rendered judgment in favor of said defendants and against said plaintiff for the possession of the * * * described premises." The judgment then "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendant C. P. Brown is the owner and entitled to the possession of said lot of land described, and entitled to recover his costs herein." On November 17, 1905, the said attorney of plaintiff, pursuant to notice regularly served on said Robert Ash, as attorney for defendants, moved in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, where such judgment had been entered, for an order vacating the judgment as entered in said action of April 4, 1905, and for a further order directing that judgment be entered in conformity with the decree of the district court rendered in said action November 19, 1870, on the ground that the judgment as entered on April 4, 1905, did not conform to the decision of the court rendered on November 19, 1870. After hearing, the court made the order as prayed for, to the extent of vacating the judgment of April 4, 1905.

The only question involved on this appeal is as to the jurisdiction of the superior court to make the order vacating the judgment. It is insisted by appellant, against such jurisdiction, first, that the court had no power, after the expiration of six months from the entry of the judgment April 4, 1905, to vacate it on motion; and, secondly, that if there was error in the judgment as entered, it was judicial error, and not clerical error or misprision, and, hence, could not be corrected by motion to vacate the judgment, but only on motion for a new trial or on appeal. Both propositions of appellant, in so far as they embrace rules of law, are correct, but we are satisfied that neither of them has application in the matter under consideration. The rule that a motion to vacate a judgment cannot be made after six months from its entry has application only where the judgment which it is sought to vacate is the judgment which was actually rendered by the court. But here it is apparent that the judgment which was entered was not the judgment rendered by the court. The judgment, as rendered, was one of nonsuit only, the effect of which was simply to declare that the plaintiff had failed to make proof of material allegations necessary to sustain his cause of action. It decided nothing on the merits of the controversy, and necessarily could not, as its effect was to virtually put the plaintiff out of court. It operated simply as a dismissal of the case. Wood v. Ramond, 42 Cal. 643. And a nonsuit suffered for any cause is not a bar to a suit subsequently brought on the same cause of action. Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 543. This being the law, a nonsuit, granted in an action of ejectment, determines nothing, save that the plaintiff has not proven his case as alleged. The plaintiff in such an action must recover on the strength of his own title, and failing in proof of his title, is subject to be nonsuited; but the presence or absence of title in the defendants does not enter at all in the determination as to whether such nonsuit should be granted, and is, of course, not considered or determined in the matter of the nonsuit. The defendant in an ejectment suit may have no title whatever, or right to possession of the property, but this is entirely immaterial, if the plaintiff proves no title or right of possession. He can only prevail by showing it in himself, and it is immaterial, for all purposes, if he fails in this respect, whether defendant has title or not.

Now, applying these principles to the matter under consideration. It may be that in fact the city of San Francisco had a perfect legal title and right to the possession of the premises in controversy, but may have failed, on the trial, in making the necessary proof in that respect. The nonsuit did not determine that it had no such title or right, but only that, if it had, it had not proven it, and went out of court for that reason. This was, however, by no means an adjudication that the title to the premises was in Brown, for a judgment of nonsuit could be entirely proper, and Brown have no shadow or pretense of title. If it could be held that the nonsuit was determinative of title in Brown, then it would be necessarily res adjudicata on the subject of title, and would be a bar to the maintenance by plaintiff of another action of ejectment for the recovery of the property. This, however, could not be, because it is fundamental that the doctrine of res adjudicata has no application to judgments of nonsuit. Merritt v. Campbell, supra. Or, again, as far as the necessity of proof of title on the part of plaintiff is concerned, it might have been that the nonsuit was properly granted, because the title appeared from the proofs of plaintiff to be in a stranger to the action, or in one of the other defendants who had appeared in the case, either Eliza Brown or A. V. Smith. It is thus apparent that the judgment of nonsuit, in an action of ejectment, determines nothing, except that the plaintiff has not proven his right to recover as alleged, and his action is dismissed, and he is sent out of court for such failure. It determines nothing whatever as to title, nor is it conclusive in any respect upon that question. This being the effect of the order for a nonsuit by the district court on November 19, 1870, the judgment entered thereon, by the clerk at the direction of Attorney Ash on April 4, 1905, adjudicating that the appellant Brown was the owner, and entitled to the possession, of the premises described in the complaint, was essentially a different and distinct judgment from that which was rendered by the district court, and was entered unauthorized.

Concluding, then, that the judgment entered was different from that which was rendered, brings us to a consideration of the second contention of appellant, namely, that if there was any error in entering the judgment, it was not a clerical error or misprision, but a judicial error, which was subject to correction on motion for a new trial, or on appeal, only. We cannot perceive how any claim that the entry of the judgment was judicial is maintainable. There was no error in the judgment as rendered. The error was in entering a different judgment from that which the court had ordered. The entry of the judgment was a matter with which the court had nothing to do. It was a ministerial act to be performed by the clerk, and his duty was to enter only such judgment as the court had rendered. Counsel for appellant cites several cases, which he claims support his contention that the entry was judicial error. The only ones which have any relevancy to the point are Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 21, 27 Pac. 22, First Nat. Bank of Fresno v. Dusy, 110 Cal. 69, 42 Pac. 476, and Byrne v. Hoag, 116 Cal. 1, 47 Pac. 775. An examination of these cases shows that they are not authority for the proposition he advances, but inferentially are authorities against him. In all those cases the judgments were entered exactly as the court had ordered them, and the language used in Byrne v. Hoag, supra, "the judgment was entered by the clerk exactly as the court ordered it to be entered, in the surest way in which the judge could express his intention," is applicable to them all. Certainly such authorities can have no bearing where it is clear that the clerk entered a judgment entirely different from what the court had rendered. This is what the clerk did here, and it is clear from the authorities that, in entering judgment, the clerk acts in a purely ministerial capacity, and that no judicial function is exercised. On this point it is said in Kelly v. Van Austin, 17 Cal. 565: "The clerk, in entering judgments upon default, acts in a mere ministerial capacity. He exercises no judicial functions. The statute authorizes the judgment, and the clerk is only an agent by whom it is written out and placed among the records of the court. He must therefore conform strictly to the provisions of the statute, or his proceedings will be without any binding force." In Crim v.

Kessing, 89 Cal. 488, 26 Pac. 1074, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491, it was held: "The entry of a judgment after it has been rendered by the court is but the ministerial act of the clerk. The judgment, when entered, becomes the record of what the court has determined, and then becomes as binding upon the parties as if entered immediately upon its rendition. 'The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act; its entry upon the record is merely ministerial.' Freeman on Judgments, § 38." As the court has nothing to do with the entry of a judgment, that being a duty devolving solely on the clerk of the court, it follows, under the authorities cited, that the act of the clerk in the matter at bar, in entering a judgment at the request of the attorney different from that which had been rendered by the court, was not a judicial error, but strictly a clerical one.

This being true, the rule is unquestioned that a court of record has the inherent right and power at any time to correct or amend its judgment, which has been entered as the result of clerical error or misprision, in order to make it conform to the judgment which was actually rendered by the court, and so as to speak the truth in that respect. "A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court or competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury." To be valid, it must be given by a competent judge or court, at a time and place appointed by law, and in the form it requires, and is usually entered up by the clerk, under the supervision of the court. Our statute, like that of many states, has introduced a new rule, adapted to the convenience of the public, and pronounces a judgment of law upon a certain state of facts, which, when duly authenticated, authorizes the clerk to enter judgment thereon. If a judgment is pronounced by a court having jurisdiction, no matter how irregular it may be, it must stand until set aside or reversed on appeal; but when entered by a mere ministerial officer, without authority of law, it is wholly void." Stearns v. Aguirre, 7 Cal. 449. "Clerical errors and misprisions may occur in respect of entries of judgments, which it is competent for the court to order amended or supplied; and this may be done even though the term when the error or mistake happened may have passed, provided the party moving proceeds with due diligence." Hegeler v. Henckell, 27 Cal. 491. "It is well settled that clerical errors in a judgment, where they are shown by the record, may be corrected at any time so as to make the judgment entry correspond with the judgment rendered. Swain v. Naglee, 19 Cal. 127; Freeman on Judgments, §§ 70, 71. And this may be done even after an appeal and affirmance of the judgment. Rousset v. Boyle, 45 Cal. 64." Dreyfuss v. Tompkins, 67 Cal. 340, 7 Pac. 732. "Courts have the power at all times to allow amendments to judgments, for the purpose of having the judgment as entered express that which was rendered, so that the record shall contain the actual decision of the court; and such amendment can be made after the expiration of six months from the entry of the judgment. Where the clerk fails to enter judgment as it was pronounced, the court has always the power to correct the matter, and order the proper entry to be made." Egan v. Egan, 90 Cal. 15, 27 Pac. 22. "Every court of record has the inherent right and power to cause its acts and proceedings to be correctly set forth in its records. The clerk is but an instrument and assistant of the court, whose duty it is to make a correct memorial of its orders and directions; and, whenever it is properly brought to the knowledge of the court that the record made by the clerk does not correctly show the order or direction which was, in fact, made by the court at the time it was given, the authority of the court to cause its records to be corrected in accordance with the facts is undoubted. Matter of Wight, 134 U. S. 136, 10 Sup. Ct. 487, 33 L. Ed. 865; Balch v. Shaw, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 282; Fay v. Wenzell, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 315; Frink v. Frink, 43 N. H. 508, 80 Am. Dec. 189, 82 Am. Dec. 172; *Crim v. "A court may at any time amend a judgment where the record discloses that the entry on the minutes does not correctly give what was the judgment of the court. Morrison v. Dapman, 3 Cal. 255." Scamman v. Bonslett, 118 Cal. 97, 50 Pac. 272, 62 Am. St. Rep. 226. These are quotations from but a few of a long line of authorities in this state, uniformly sustaining the doctrine which these quotations announce, and under them it is quite evident that the judgment entered by the clerk on April 4, 1905, was not the judgment rendered by the court on November 19, 1870. It was clerical error on the part of the clerk to so enter a different judgment, and the court was authorized, and had jurisdiction on motion of plaintiff, to set it aside, in order that a judgment conformable to that which was in fact ordered might be actually entered.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

STEVENSON v. BOYD et ux. (S. F. 4,429.)
(Supreme Court of California. May 26, 1908.
Rehearing Denied June 25, 1908.)

1. TENANCY IN COMMON—RIGHTS OF CO-TENANTS—PURCHASE OF OUTSTANDING TITLE.

A co-tenant cannot, by purchasing an outstanding incumbrance against property held by him in common with another, assert it against his companion in interest.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Tenancy in Common, §§ 55-59.]

2. SAME.

A co-tenant, by purchasing an outstanding incumbrance against property held by him in common with another, holds the title acquired by the purchase for the equal benefit of himself and his co-tenant, upon condition that the latter shall contribute or offer to contribute his portion of the purchase money.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Tenancy in Common, §§ 55-59.]

3. EQUITY—LACHES.

Though mere delay to commence a suit for a period less than the statutory period is not a sufficient reason for dismissing the suit, still courts of equity will, where the delay in commencing the suit is unreasonable, refuse to entertain it, even though it is brought before the expiration of the period of limitations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 19, Equity, § 242.]

4. SAME—EXTENT OF DELAY.

To warrant a court of equity in refusing to entertain a suit because of delay in commencing it for a period less than the statutory period of limitations, there must be something more than a mere passive neglect; in addition thereto facts amounting to an acquiescence in the acts complained of, or other circumstances which, coupled with the delay, will render the granting of the relief inequitable must be shown.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 19, Equity, § 242.]

5. SAME.

The principal factors in determining whether a plaintiff in equity has been guilty of laches are acquiescence and lapse of time, but other circumstances are also material; such as, that a change in the value or character of the property has taken place.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 19, Equity, § 192.]

6. SAME—DETERMINATION AS TO LACHES—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The determination of whether plaintiff, in a suit in equity, has so long delayed his suit as to be guilty of laches, precluding him from maintaining it, is within the discretion of the chancellor in each case.

7. TENANCY IN COMMON—RIGHTS OF CO-TENANT—ACQUISITION OF OUTSTANDING TITLE.

The right of a co-tenant to share in the benefit of a purchase of an outstanding claim is dependent upon his having, within a reasonable time, elected to bear his portion of the expense necessarily incurred in the acquisition of the claim, and whatever delay he may have occasioned must be entirely consistent with fair dealing on his part, and in nowise attributable to an effort to retain the advantages while he shirks the responsibilities of the new acquisition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Tenancy in Common, § 59.]

8. SAME—ACTIONS BETWEEN CO-TENANTS—LACHES.

Where one co-tenant, with knowledge of a purchase of an outstanding claim by another co-tenant, for more than four years neglected to elect to bear her portion of the expense incurred in making the purchase and to claim the benefits, and in the meantime the land had been greatly improved, and more than doubled in value, the trial court was justified in finding that the delay was unreasonable, and constituted such laches as barred a suit to obtain the benefits of the purchase.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by Melissa J. Stevenson as trustee, etc., against Thomas M. Boyd and wife to compel the conveyance to plaintiff of an undivided one-half interest in certain property.

From a judgment for one of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frohman & Jacobs, for appellant. M. K. Harris, Frank H. Short, and F. E. Cook, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Thomas Boyd, now deceased, was the father of Melissa J. Stevenson, the plaintiff, Thomas M. Boyd, one of the defendants, George Culberson Boyd, and Mary Alice Zinns. In December, 1892, Thomas Boyd and his son, the defendant Thomas M. Boyd, each then owning an undivided one-half of an 80-acre tract of land situated in Fresno county, executed a deed of trust of said real property to E. R. Hamilton and W. P. Coleman, as security for the payment of their promissory note for $3,200, payable two years after date to the Sacramento Bank. In October, 1897, Thomas Boyd, the father, conveyed his undivided one-half interest to the plaintiff in trust, to receive the rents and profits, and to pay them to the use of the grantor, Thomas Boyd, during his life, and in case George Culberson Boyd should survive his father, to apply such rents and profits for his support and maintenance during his life. The deed of trust gave plaintiff power to sell, mortgage, or lease said real estate, and provided that, if the property was not sold by plaintiff, in pursuance of said deed of trust, it should, upon the death of Thomas Boyd and George Culberson Boyd, be vested in the plaintiff and Mary Alice Zinns, share and share alike. In July, 1897, Thomas M. Boyd married his co-defendant, Josephine Porter Boyd. Some months thereafter the Sacramento Bank, the holder of the note secured by the deed of trust to Hamilton & Coleman, requested payment of the note. Some attempt was made to raise the money, but it was not paid, and the bank finally directed the trustees to sell. The sale was originally advertised to take place in March, 1898, but Mrs. Stevenson, the plaintiff, secured from the bank a postponement for six months. In August, 1898, the defendant Thomas M. Boyd made arrangements with the Bank of Selma to pay off the loan of the Sacramento Bank, which at that time amounted to about $3,400. Of this amount, some $1,800 was furnished by the defendant Josephine Porter Boyd, and the balance by the Bank of Selma. The note was assigned by the Sacramento Bank to the Bank of Selma, and the latter directed the trustees, Hamilton & Coleman, to make a sale. On October 15, 1898, the trustees did sell the property for $3,500—a little more than the amount due on the note. The purchaser at the sale was the Bank of Selma, which immediately conveyed to T. M. Boyd and Josephine Porter Boyd, the defendants. On February 21, 1901, Thomas M. Boyd conveyed to his codefendant, Josephine Porter Boyd, an undivided one-half interest in the ranch for $7,500, of which $500 was paid in cash and the balance in installments, evidenced by notes. Some of these notes were paid by Mrs. Boyd to her husband.

On October 13, 1902, 2 days less than 4 years after the sale by the trustees to Thomas M. and Josephine Porter Boyd, and over 19 months after the conveyance from Thomas M. Boyd to Josephine Porter Boyd, this action was brought by the plaintiff. The complaint alleged that, prior to the trustees' sale, the defendants, in pursuance of a conspiracy to that end, did, by threats of violence and otherwise, prevent the plaintiff from raising the money necessary to pay off her one-half of the indebtedness to the Sacramento Bank, and that they procured the Bank of Selma to take an assignment of the note, and to direct a sale of the property by the trustees, Hamilton & Coleman, for the purpose of destroying the rights of plaintiff under the deed from Thomas Boyd. It is alleged that the Bank of Selma, in taking the assignment of the note from the Sacramento Bank, was acting as agent for the defendants, and not in its own interest. In the complaint plaintiff offers to pay to the defendants such portion of the indebtedness paid to the Sacramento Bank, and to make such allowance to the defendants, for the cultivation of the property since the sale, as the court may deem equitable. She asks for an accounting of the profits, and prays judgment that it be decreed that she is the owner, as trustee, of an undivided one-half interest in said real property, and that defendants be compelled to convey to her such interest free of incumbrance, except for her just share of the indebtedness to the Sacramento Bank. Thomas M. Boyd and his wife, Josephine Porter Boyd, answered separately. Each of the answers denies that the defendants had conspired or contrived to defeat the deed of trust under which plaintiff claims, or to deprive the plaintiff, as trustee, of her interest in the property, or that plaintiff was prevented by any act of the defendants, or either of them, from raising the money necessary to pay her share of the indebtedness. The defendant Josephine Porter Boyd set up a special defense of laches, alleging that, at the time the land was sold by the trustees to the Bank of Selma, and by the Bank of Selma to the defendants, its value did not exceed $5,000; that on February 21, 1901, Thomas M. Boyd sold his interest in the land to Josephine Porter Boyd for the sum of $7,000, more than $3,000 of which has been paid in cash and the balance in notes secured by mortgage; that since said sale by the trustees to the Bank of Selma, and by the Bank of Selma to the defendants, the land has greatly increased in value, and is now of the value of about $15,000; that the defendant bought the interest of her codefendant in good faith, and paid and obligated herself to pay the full increased value thereof to said codefendant Thomas M. Boyd; that plaintiff made no claim to any interest as trustee or otherwise in or to said property, and took no steps and made no effort to subject said property to any claim until it had greatly increased in value. The defendant further alleges, on information and belief, that the plaintiff would not have made any such claim had the property not increased in value, and that at the time the defendant Josephine Porter Boyd bought the said property the same was of little value, and yielded very little income, and that in buying the same the defendants ran the risk of losing the money paid upon the purchase price thereof. It is further alleged that ever since the sale the defendants have cultivated the land, and been in charge thereof, and have improved and increased the value of said property. The answer of Thomas M. Boyd, in addition to its denials of many of the allegations of the complaint, set up a claim, as against his wife, the codefendant Josephine Porter Boyd, his contention being that the $1,800 belonging to Josephine Porter Boyd, which went into the purchase of the property at the time of the trustees' sale, was a loan to him, and that the conveyance of the undivided one-half interest to said Josephine Porter Boyd was made as security for such loan. The trial resulted in findings and judgment in favor of the defendant Josephine Porter Boyd. The court found against the allegations of the complaint regarding a conspiracy between the defendants, found against the allegation that the sum of $1,800 paid by Josephine Porter Boyd was a loan to her codefendant, and found that the conveyance of October 19, 1898, from the Bank of Selma to Thomas M. Boyd and Josephine Porter Boyd, conveyed to each of said defendants an equal undivided one-half interest in and to said property, and that the defendant Josephine Porter Boyd, in consideration of said conveyance, paid, as a part of the purchase price for said land, the sum of $1,800. It was found that Josephine Porter Boyd did not take the title of such one-half interest as security for any loan to her codefendant Thomas M. Boyd. The allegations of the answer of Josephine Porter Boyd, with reference to the defense of laches, are all found to be true, except that the court finds that the value of the property at the time of the conveyance to the defendants was $6,000, instead of $5,000, as alleged in the answer. As conclusions of law, the court found that the plaintiff should take nothing against Josephine Porter Boyd, and said Josephine Porter Boyd should have judgment against plaintiff and her codefendant for her costs. Judgment was entered accordingly. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

Thomas M. Boyd has not appealed; and, so far as concerns the issues raised by the pleadings between himself and his codefendant, the finding that the payment of $1,800 by the respondent, Josephine Porter Boyd, was not made as a loan to her husband stands unquestioned.

The appellant's position is that, inasmuch as she and defendant Thomas M. Boyd were co-tenants in the property, the latter could not purchase, for himself alone, the outstanding interest vested in the trustees Hamilton & Coleman, but was bound to hold any title, acquired on such purchase, for the equal benefit of himself and his co-tenant, upon condition that the latter should contribute, or offer to contribute, her portion of the purchase money. This is undoubtedly the general rule as to co-tenants. "A co-tenant cannot take advantage of any defect in the common title by purchasing an outstanding title or incumbrance, and assert it against his companions in interest. The purchase is, notwithstanding his design to the contrary, for the common benefit of all the co-tenants. The legal title acquired by him is held in trust for the others, if they choose, within a reasonable time, to claim the benefit of the purchase, by contributing or offering to contribute, their proportion of the purchase money." Freeman on Co-Tenancy and Partition (2d Ed.) § 154. The respondent contends that this principle applies only where the co-tenants hold under the same instrument. Whether or not the rule is subject to this qualification is a question which has given rise to a considerable conflict of authority. It need not, however, be here decided. Assuming that the plaintiff (regardless of her allegations that the defendants prevented her from paying off her share of the debt to the Sacramento Bank) was entitled, as against her co-tenant and his wife, to claim the benefit of the purchase by them of the interest sold by the trustees, she must still fail, for the reason that the court below found that her cause of action was barred by laches. This finding is fully sustained by the proofs offered and the principles of law applicable.

The plaintiff's delay in seeking relief in the courts had not lasted for such a period as to make the statute of limitations available as a bar to the suit. Undoubtedly mere delay to commence the suit for a period less than that of the statute of limitations is not a sufficient reason for dismissing the proceeding. Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674. It is well settled, however, that courts of equity will often refuse relief, even where the statutory time of limitation has not run. "There must be something more than a mere passive neglect. There must be, in addition, a showing of facts amounting to acquiescence in the acts complained of, or of other circumstances which, coupled with the delay, will render the granting of the relief inequitable." Lux v. Haggin, supra. In Chapman v. Bank of California, 97 Cal. 155, 159, 31 Pac. 896, the court says: "Regardless of the question as to whether there has been a plea of the statute of limitations, a court of equity will refuse to entertain a suit brought after unreasonable delay. Harris v. Hillegass, 66 Cal. 79, 4 Pac. 987; Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 287, 14 Pac. 791, 2 Am. St. Rep. 791. The refusal to grant relief is not put upon the presumption of payment or analogy to the statute of limitations, but upon considerations of public policy, and the difficulty of doing entire justice between the parties in consequence of the unreasonable delay. The principal factors in determining whether the plaintiff had been guilty of laches are acquiescence and lapse of time; but other circumstances are also material; such as, that a change in the value or the character of the property has taken place. The matter is one which is left to the sound discretion of the chancellor in each case."

These principles have been applied with, perhaps, more than ordinary strictness to the case of a co-tenant demanding the benefit of a purchase by the other co-tenants. "The right of a co-tenant to share in the benefit of a purchase of an outstanding claim is always dependent upon his having, within a reasonable time, elected to bear his portion of the expense necessarily incurred in the acquisition of the claim.

* * * The co-tenant asking a court of equity to award him the benefit of a purchase must show reasonable diligence in making his election. Whatever delay he may have occasioned must be entirely consistent with perfect fair dealing on his part, and in no wise attributable to an effort to retain the advantages while he shirks the responsibilities of the new acquisition." Freeman on Co-Tenancy and Partition (2d Ed.) § 156. In Mandeville v. Solomon, 39 Cal. 125, this court said. "Equity does not deny to a tenant in common the right to purchase in an outstanding or adverse claim to the common property. It, however, deals with the tenants after such a purchase is made. While it will not permit one of them to acquire such a title solely for his own benefit, or to the absolute exclusion of the other, it, at the same time, exacts of that other the exercise of reasonable diligence in making his election to participate in the benefit of the new acquisition; and having, upon its own principles of fair dealing, compelled the purchasing tenant to allow his co-tenant this opportunity, the latter will not be permitted to equivocate or trifle with the position thus afforded him, or to make it a means of speculation for himself, by delaying, until the rise of the land or some event, yet in the future, shall determine his course. Unless he make his election to participate within a reasonable time, and contribute, or offer to contribute, his ratio of the consideration actually paid, he will be deemed to have repudiated the transaction, and abandoned its benefits." See, also, 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 679; Stevens v. Reynolds, 143 Ind. 467, 41 N. E. 931, 52 Am. St. Rep. 422; Reed v. Reed, 122 Mich. 77, 80 N. W. 996, 80 Am. St. Rep. 541; Buchanan v. King's Heirs, 22 Grat. (Va.) 414; Morris v. Roseberry, 46 W. Va. 24, 32 S. E. 1019; McFarlin v. Leaman (Tex. Civ. App.) 29 S. W. 44.

We think the facts shown in the case at bar are clearly sufficient to justify the conclusion of the court that, so far as the defendant Josephine Porter Boyd is concerned, the delay of the plaintiff was so great as to deprive her of the right to seek the relief here demanded. It is not disputed that the plaintiff knew of the trustees' sale and of the conveyance by the Bank of Selma to the defendants at the time these transactions took place. In the meanwhile the respondent has purchased the interest of her co-tenant, has cultivated and cared for the land, has made some improvements upon it, and taken the risks of declining values and failure of crops. It is in evidence, and it is found by the court, that property of this character was in little demand at the time of the sale. Since such sale it has increased greatly in value, until, at the time of the trial, it had more than doubled in value. We cannot doubt that the court below was fully justified in finding that a delay of almost four years was unreasonable under these circumstances. To permit the plaintiff now to reinstate herself as the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the land, upon payment of one-half of the amount paid at the trustees' sale, thereby securing to herself the full benefit of the increase in the value of the land, without having undergone any of the risks connected with its holding and cultivation, would manifestly be inequitable. The appellant points out certain facts, which, it is alleged, should have been held to have excused the delay in seeking relief. But whether or not, under all the circumstances, the delay has been such as to render it inequitable to grant the relief is, in the first instance, a question for the trial court, the determination of which is left, as is said in Chapman v. Bank, supra, "to the sound discretion of the chancellor in each case." The matters relied on by appellant as explaining her delay were proper to be considered by the court below; but, without stating them at length, we are compelled to say that, giving due effect to all of them, they were not of such character as to require that court to conclude that, at least as against the respondent Josephine Porter Boyd, the plaintiff had not slept on her rights to such an extent as to justify the denial of relief.

Our views on this point make it unnecessary to consider any of the other contentions urged by counsel.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHEESEBOROUGH et al. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.
(S. F. 4,538.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1908.)

1. TAXATION — CORPORATE STOCK — DOUBLE TAXATION — "PROPERTY."

The Constitution requires all property not exempt under the federal laws to be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law, and defines "property" as including corporate stock. Pol. Code, § 3627, requires taxable property to be assessed at its full cash value. Section 3608 provides that since stock has no intrinsic value above the actual value of the corporation's property, and the taxation of the stock and the property would be double taxation, corporate property, excepting that of national banks, etc., shall be taxed, but that stock except that of national banks, etc., shall not be. Held, that under these provisions stock held by citizens is taxable at full value to the extent that its value exceeds the value of the corporation's property taxed in the state; that property situated in another state is taxed there, not making taxation of the stock double, since the inhibition of double taxation applies only to such taxation in the same state or government.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5693, 5728; vol. 8, pp. 7768, 7770.]

2. CORPORATIONS—SHARES OF STOCK—NATURE.

Shares of corporate stock represent the value of all the assets of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 162-164.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION.

When a statute is susceptible to two constructions, one making it constitutional and the other unconstitutional, the former must be adopted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 46.]

4. TAXATION — CORPORATIONS — STATUTES — "PROPERTY" — "CASH VALUE."

Though the constitutional provisions that all property not exempt shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law, and defining "property" as including corporate stock, are not self-executing, any deficiency was supplied by Pol. Code, § 3627, requiring property to be assessed at its full cash value, and section 3617 defining that cash value to be the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 998, 999; vol. 8, p. 7597.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by H. C. Cheeseborough and others, executors, against the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Partly affirmed, and partly reversed, with directions to enter a judgment for defendant.

Wm. G. Burke, City Atty., Percy V. Long, City Atty., A. S. Newburgh, Asst. City Atty., Jesse H. Steinhart, Asst. City Atty., and W. I. Brobeck, Asst. City Atty., for appellant. Jordan, Treat & Brann, Jordan & Brann, and Jordan, Rowe & Brann, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by the plaintiffs as executors of the estate of Charles Hanson, deceased, to recover from the defendant the sum of $5,765.26 paid under protest for taxes on certain shares of stock assessed to said estate. The action arose out of a state of facts set forth in the findings of the court, and which in substance are as follows: The Tacoma Mill Company is a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of this state, having its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco, with a capital stock of $500,000 divided into 10,000 shares of the par value of $50 per share. Charles Hanson, the deceased, at the time of his death, was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, and owned 9,998 shares of said corporation, which had an actual par value of $499,900. It was further found by the court that the Tacoma Mill Company owned and possessed property in the state of Washington on the first Monday of March, 1902, at 12 o'clock noon of said day, of the actual value of $400,000 and over; that said Tacoma Mill Company further owned and possessed in San Mateo county in this state property which was assessed by the assessor of that county and was of the value of $21,100; that said Tacoma Mill Company further owned property in the city and county of San Francisco which was of the actual value of and assessed for $150, making the value of the corporation's California property $21,250. The assessor of the city and county of San Francisco assessed said shares of the Tacoma Mill Company owned by Charles Hanson in his lifetime to his estate at a valuation of $350,000, and there was levied thereon the amount of taxes, for the recovery of which this suit is brought. Plaintiffs paid said taxes under protest, and thereafter brought this action for the recovery of the amount so paid. Judgment was rendered against defendant, the superior court holding that the assessment of said stock belonging to the estate of Charles Hanson, deceased, by the assessor of the city and county of San Francisco, and the subsequent collection of the taxes levied thereon by the tax collector of said city and county were illegal and void acts, in violation of the Constitution of the state of California, and section 3608 of the Political Code of the state, and constituted illegal and double taxation of the property belonging to said estate. This appeal is taken from the judgment.

We are at a loss to understand upon what legal basis under the facts in this case it can be asserted that the assessment of this stock to the estate of Hanson constituted double taxation. The Constitution of this state declares that all property in the state not exempt under the laws of the United States shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law, and that the word "property" includes shares of stock. The Legislature has declared that taxable property shall be assessed at its full cash value (Pol. Code, § 3627), and that cash value means the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt due from a solvent debtor (Pol. Code, § 3617). Under these provisions of the law it is the duty of the assessor to assess shares of stock at their full value, unless there is something in the provisions of the Code which exempts them from such taxation. The only section of the Code under which it can be claimed that such exemption exists is section 3608 of the Political Code, which provides: "Shares of stock in corporations possess no intrinsic value over and above the actual value of the property of the corporation which they stand for and represent; and the assessment and taxation of such shares, and also all the corporate property, would be double taxation. Therefore, all property belonging to corporations, save and except the property of national banking associations not assessable by federal statute, shall be assessed and taxed. But no assessment shall be made of shares of stock in any corporation, save and except in national banking associations, whose property, other than real estate, is exempt from assessment by federal statute." The purpose and meaning of this section is, however, plain. Shares of stock represent the value of all the assets of the corporation. People v. National Bank of D. O. Mills & Co., 123 Cal. 60, 55 Pac. 685, 45 L. R. A. 747, 69 Am. St. Rep. 32. As the shares of stock represent no value independent of the corporate property, when all such property is assessed to the corporation, it would be double taxation to assess the shares as well as the corporate property. As said in Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 601: "To assess all of the corporate property of the corporation, and also to assess to each of the stockholders the numbers of shares held by him, would, it is manifest, be assessing the same property twice, once in the aggregate to the corporation, the trustee of all the stockholders, and again separately to the individual stockholders, in proportion to the number of shares held by each." But, as was said in that case, this result of double taxation could only follow where all the property of the corporation was assessed. It could not apply where none or only a portion of the property of the corporation going to make up the value of the stock was taxed. While the value of shares of stock is determined by the aggregate value of the corporation property, the property which goes to make up such value may or may not be within the jurisdiction of this state. If it is within the state and assessed to the corporation, then the shares of stock may not also be assessed to the stockholders, as that would clearly constitute double taxation. But section 3608 cannot be extended so as to exempt such shares from taxation when all the assets of the corporation are not taxed in this state by reason of the fact that some of them are beyond its jurisdiction. Neither is it of moment that the tangible property of the corporation is situated in some other state and has there been taxed. The fact that some of the property of the corporation is assessed in another state or country is no prohibition of the taxation of the shares of stock held here. This does not constitute taxation of all the property of the corporation within the terms of the section. The inhibition of double taxation only applies to such taxation in the same state or government. Section 3640 of the Political Code, until repealed, and its place taken by section 3608 of that Code, provided: "The owner or holder of stock in any firm or corporation, the entire capital or property whereof is assessed, must not be assessed individually for his stock in such firm or corporation." This and section 3608 declared the same legal principle against double taxation.

It is held by this court in City and County of San Francisco v. Fry, 63 Cal. 470, that section 3640, cited above applied only to corporations whose property is situated in this state. The court there said: "It is further urged that to tax the shares in this state when the property of the corporations is taxed in the state of Nevada would be double taxation. But the inhibition of double taxation only applies to such taxation made by the same state or government. There is a double taxation or 'duplicate taxation,' as it is styled by Judge Cooley, which is wholly inadmissible under any Constitution requiring equality and uniformity in taxation. 'By duplicate taxation in this sense,' says the learned author above named, 'is understood the requirement that one person, or any one subject of taxation, shall directly contribute twice to the same burden while other subjects of taxation belonging to the same class are required to contribute but once.' Cooley on Taxation, p. 164. It will be seen that in this state the shares of the corporation alone are taxable. Its property is not here assessed. Conceding that taxation of the shares and property of a corporation by the state of California would be double taxation, there is here no taxation of that kind."

In the case of City and County of San Francisco v. Flood, 64 Cal. 504, 2 Pac. 264, it is also declared: "As to sections 3640 and 3641 of the Political Code, relied on to show that the shares above mentioned are not taxable, in our opinion section 3640 by its express terms only exempts the shares from assessment where the entire capital or property of the corporation in which the shares are owned is assessed, and it does not appear that the corporation or corporations in which the shares here assessed were owned were assessed at all during the fiscal year for which the assessment herein was made."

There is no difference between the former section 3640 and the present section 3608 as far as the application of the doctrine there laid down is concerned. Under either section the exemption of the stock of a corporation from taxation only exists where there is assessed in this state to the corporation all the property thereof, the value of which is represented by the shares of stock. Section 3608, while declaring that no shares of stock shall be assessed, is to be read in the light of the preliminary language of the section declaring the reason why it should not be, and was intended to mean only that as shares of stock represent the value of the property of the corporation, so when all the property of the corporation in the state is taxed it would be double taxation to assess both, and that, where all the property of the corporation was assessed, the shares of stock should not be. It was not meant or intended that if less than the aggregate value of the property of the corporation was assessed in this state the actual value of the corporate stock in excess of the value of the corporate property so assessed should not be taxed here. It means only that when the aggregate property of the corporation is assessed in this state shares of stock of the corporation shall not be assessed, but that, if all such property is not here assessed, the actual value of such stock, less the value of the corporate property which is assessed here, shall be taxed. Property of the corporation located outside of the state, and over which the state cannot exercise its sovereign power of taxation, is not to be taken into consideration in diminishing the actual value of the stock held here for purposes of taxation.

In the case of Commercial National Bank v. Chambers, 21 Utah, 324, 61 Pac. 560, 56 L. R. A. 346, in the Constitution of which state provisions are found relative to the taxation of stock such as are in our Constitution, it is said: "In the case at bar deductions were made from the value of the stock of the value of all real estate owned by the bank which is situate within the limits of the state, but deductions for its real estate without the state were refused by the assessor and board of equalization, but the court below ordered that the value of the real estate situate in other states should also be deducted from the value of the stock. In this we think the court erred. * * * The state has a right to fix a particular situs as to such stock (corporate stock) for the purposes of taxation, and its value for such purposes cannot be diminished by deducting therefrom the value of property not situated or taxable within the state, and over which the state can exercise no control. The bank, therefore, had no right to have the value of its real estate situate without the state deducted from the value of the stock. 'The true criterion, as fixed by the statute, is the true value of the stock, without reference to the question where, or in what manner or nature of property or security, the capital stock may be invested. Whether that be invested in real estate or other property beyond the jurisdiction of this state, the latter having control over the shares and their true value, the peculiar nature and value of the investment of the capital stock of the corporations beyond the limits of the state can form no proper subject for specific deduction or abatement from the true value of the shares of stock when presented to be assessed for purposes of taxation. It is exclusively with the shares of stock and their true value as representing the entire corporate assets that the tax commissioner has to deal, and not with the nature and locality of the investment of the capital stock of the corporation, except as to the real estate of the company situate within this state.' American Coal Co. v. Allegany County, 59 Md. 185; Dwight v. Boston, 12 Allen (Mass.) 316, 90 Am. Dec. 149; Nevada Bank v. Sedgwick, 104 U. S. 111, 26 L. Ed. 703; Kelley v. Rhoads, 7 Wyo. 237, 51 Pac. 593, 39 L. R. A. 594, 75 Am. St. Rep. 904, affirmed in 9 Wyo. 352, 63 Pac. 935, 87 Am. St. Rep. 959." See same case, 188 U. S. 1, 23 Sup. Ct. 259, 47 L. Ed. 359; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Chambers, 182 U. S. 556, 21 Sup. Ct. 863, 45 L. Ed. 1227.

If section 3608 were to be given any other construction than as heretofore suggested, it would be unconstitutional. We have seen that the Constitution declares that shares of stock are property, and that it requires all property to be assessed in proportion to its value to be ascertained as provided by law. Shares of stock when held in this state by our citizens are subject to the taxing power of the state as personal property following the person of the owner, and are taxable at their full value, and under the constitutional provisions above referred to they must be so taxed. No property is exempt from taxation except as declared in the Constitution, which, of course, does not include shares of stock. If section 3608 is to be construed as a direction to the assessor that shares of stock in a corporation are not to be assessed, and the effect of that direction is to exempt, when all the property of the corporation is not assessed in this state, shares of stock from taxation, it would be unconstitutional. Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575-588, 87 Pac. 102. For, assuming that 10,000 shares of stock in a domestic corporation of the actual par value of $100,000 were held in this state, and that the assets of the corporation contributing to that value were located, 25 per cent. thereof in this state assessed to the corporation, and 75 per cent. located outside of the state and beyond our jurisdiction for taxation purposes, it is quite clear that, if the stock held here is not assessed, $75,000 worth of property, which the Constitution requires should be taxed at its full value, has been exempted from taxation. Only 25 per cent. of its value has been taxed by the taxation of the corporate property in this state. The other 75 per cent. is represented by the assets outside of the state, and to that extent the actual value of the stock, will be exempt from taxation. Or, to illustrate further, if no property is assessed here to the corporation, and the stock cannot be assessed, it necessarily follows that $100,000 worth of property is exempt under the section in question.

If this were the effect which must result from a literal construction of section 3608, it would clearly be unconstitutional as exempting property from taxation which the Constitution requires shall be taxed. But we are not compelled to so construe it. When a legislative provision is capable of two constructions, one consistent, and the other inconsistent, with the provisions of the Constitution, it is a well-recognized principle of construction that the statute should be given that construction which will make it harmonious with the Constitution, and comport with the legitimate powers of the Legislature. People v. Frisbee, 26 Cal. 135; Jacobs v. Supervisors, 100 Cal. 121, 34 Pac. 630; In re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 384, 52 Pac. 799. Applying this principle to the section in question in connection with the constitutional provisions requiring the taxation of all property, including shares of stock, at its full value, and it must be taken to mean that, when the property of the corporation in the state is taxed directly to the corporation, the shares of stock held here and subject to taxation shall not, to the extent that the property represented by it is taxed, be thus taxed. This exemption can only be extended, however, to deductions from the value of the shares of stock, the corporate property of which is situated in this state and directly taxed to the corporation. It is the purpose of all revenue laws as nearly as possible to impose upon all property its just proportion of taxation, and a construction of the statute should not be had which will permit shares of stock held here of vast value in domestic corporations whose properties are located beyond the state to escape their just proportion of such taxation. Under these views the shares of stock of the Tacoma Mill Company held by the estate of Hanson, except to the extent that the property of the corporation in this state was actually assessed and taxed to the company, were taxable to their full value.

It is, however, insisted by respondent that, while the Constitution has declared shares of stock to be property and to be taxed in proportion to their value, to be ascertained as provided by law, still the Legislature has not provided a method of ascertaining the taxable value of such shares as shall be paid by the individual stockholders which does not violate those provisions of our law now in force prohibiting double taxation and requiring that all property shall be assessed at its full cash value. We do not think this position well taken. While these provisions of the Constitution are not self-executing, the Legislature immediately subsequent to the adoption of that Constitution supplied any deficiency by providing a standard under which values could be measured by passing sections 3617 and 3627 of the Political Code defining cash values, and declaring that all property should be assessed thereat. Crocker v. Scott, supra.

The method of taxation adopted by the assessor was to deduct from the value of the shares held by the estate of Hanson the value of the corporate property situated in this state and taxed directly to the corporation. This is the only method he could have adopted in order to avoid double taxation of the property which is prohibited by section 3607 of the Political Code, and conforms to the provisions of the sections above cited. It is made the duty of assessors to assess the property of corporations in the counties where found. Section 3641, Pol. Code. The assessors of San Mateo and San Francisco counties found property of the Tacoma Mill Company within their respective counties, which they assessed to that corporation at its actual cash value, aggregating $21,250. The assessor of San Francisco found shares of said Tacoma Mill Company owned by the estate of Hanson in the city and county of San Francisco, which it was his duty to assess at its full cash value (Pol. Code, §§ 3607, 3617, 3627), unless he found, as we have construed section 3608 to mean, that the corporation property which they represented was fully taxed in the state. As he did not find the corporate property so fully taxed, it was the duty of the assessor to assess these shares of stock. In doing so it was necessary to avoid a double taxation. Obviously the only way he could avoid it, and at the same time carry out the mandate of the law requiring the taxation of the property of the corporation and the taxation of the shares of stock at their full cash value, was to deduct the value of the corporate property actually assessed in the state from the value of the shares, and tax the stock as of the value diminished by the deduction. Under our view of the construction to be given to section 3608, taking into consideration with it the other provisions of the Political Code and those of the Constitution, this was the only legal method the assessor could have adopted to avoid double taxation, and in our judgment was the proper one.

As to whether in adopting this method the shares of stock were assessed at their full cash value. As has been seen, a share of stock represents no value outside of the actual value of the property of the corporation it stands for and represents. Pol. Code, § 3608; Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 601. In the cited case of Burke v. Badlam it is said that "when all the property of the corporation is assessed, then all of the stock of the corporation is assessed, and the mandate of the Constitution is complied with." See, also, Crocker v. Scott, supra. These being judicial and legislative declarations on the subject, it necessarily follows, as tersely and logically put by one of the counsel for appellants in his brief: "That if the constitutional provision demanding the taxation of the shares of stock at its full cash value is satisfied when no part of the stock is taxed, and when all of the property of the corporation is taxed, this constitutional provision must necessarily be satisfied when a part of the stock is taxed and the rest of the tax levied against the corporation property. This is taxation of all the property at its full cash value." Upon both these propositions urged by respondents we are satisfied that, in order to have assessed the shares of stock in harmony with the Code and constitutional provisions, the method adopted by the assessor was the only one whereby the full cash value of the shares could be ascertained for the purposes of taxation and to have avoided double taxation. Com. Nat. Bank v. Chambers, supra. It follows that the trial court was in error in holding that the assessment of these shares of stock as made was violative of either the constitutional provisions or of section 3608 of the Political Code, or that the assessment of said shares and the levy of a tax thereon constituted double taxation.

As to the order to be made on this appeal. The appeal is from the judgment alone. The judgment involved two causes of action. As to the first, appellant consented to a judgment in favor of respondents in the court below. This appeal involves only the judgment on the second cause of action, and to which our consideration has been addressed. In the view we take of it, the judgment should have been entered on the findings by the trial court for the appellant. It is therefore ordered that the judgment as to the first cause of action consented to by appellant in the court below be affirmed. As to the second cause of action, the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter a judgment upon the findings in favor of the appellant as to said second cause of action. Appellant is also awarded costs on this appeal.

153 Cal. 551

SALSTROM et ux. v. ORLEANS BAR
GOLD MINING CO. (S. F. 4,652.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 12, 1908.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS—OPERATION OF MINES—RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES INCIDENT TO WORKING—ACTIONS.

Plaintiffs and defendant owned adjoining lands fronting on a creek. Defendant, in making a large prospect cut in its land, had thrown a large quantity of gravel, boulders, and earth into the creek, forming a bar therein, and in operating a placer mine above plaintiffs' premises had caused a large amount of boulders, gravel, detritus, and debris to be placed in the creek, all of which were prevented from being carried down stream by reason of the bar; the result being that the waters of the creek were diverted from their natural channel and thrown with great force upon plaintiffs' land, washing away a portion thereof with a growing crop of grain thereon, and covering the land with a deep deposit of gravel and boulders. In an action for damages to the land, the court charged that one engaged in mining may deposit his tailings in a running stream to a reasonable extent, but may not flood a lower owner's land and by depositing tailings thereon substantially injure such land, even though he uses all reasonable means to prevent such damage, and therefore, if defendant obstructed the creek by a mass of earth, gravel, and boulders, which caused the waters of the creek to flow upon plaintiffs' land, washing it away and injuring it, and if defendant, after such obstruction, commenced mining operations upon its land and placed in the creek a quantity of detritus, debris, rocks, tailings, etc., which was carried down stream to the obstruction and thereby diverted upon plaintiffs' land, injuring it, a verdict should be rendered for plaintiffs. Held, that the charge was not objectionable for being outside the issues.

2. SAME.

The instruction was not objectionable in ignoring the question of negligence on defendant's part, for, no matter how careful the miner may conduct his operations, he has no right to flood or wash away his neighbor's land, or deposit debris thereon to his injury, and, if by the deposit of debris in the stream he causes such result, he is liable for the resulting damage.

3. SAME.

The instruction was not argumentative or contradictory and confusing.

4. DAMAGES—INJURY TO LAND—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

In an action for damages to land fronting on a creek caused by an adjoining landowner's mining operations, which resulted in an obstruction in the creek, so that plaintiffs' land was flooded, and its soil washed away, and a great quantity of tailings and debris deposited thereon, there was evidence showing that the land damaged was more than eight acres, that, on account of the mining debris deposited thereon, it would cost from $1,000 to $1,250 an acre more to mine the land than it would otherwise have cost, that the value of the land for mining purposes was sufficiently great to warrant such increased expenditure, and that the growing crop washed away was of the value of $200. Held, that it cannot be said that the evidence was insufficient to support a verdict of $9,000.

5. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for damages to land fronting on a creek caused by an adjoining landowner's mining operations, which resulted in an obstruction in the creek so that plaintiffs' land was flooded and soil washed from some of it, destroying a growing crop, and a great quantity of tailings and debris deposited all over it, the evidence showed that the land for agricultural purposes was worth $500 per acre, that, on account of the mining debris deposited on it, it would cost from $1,000 to $1,250 an acre more to mine than it would otherwise have cost, and that its value for mining purposes was sufficient to warrant such increased expenditure. The court instructed that the jury might consider the character of the soil for farming purposes and the value thereof, and also the land for mining purposes prior to the injury, and the depreciation caused by the acts of defendant, if any, and that, if plaintiffs were entitled to recover at all, the jury should determine the value of the crop washed away and the difference between the value of the land for any and all purposes prior to the injury and its value after the injury; such difference being the measure of damages. Held, that the instruction was erroneous, using the land for agricultural purposes and for mining purposes being absolutely incompatible, so that the most plaintiffs could recover in addition to the value of the growing crop would be the amount of injury based on the availability of the land for the most valuable use for which it could be used.

6. SAME—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In such a case, the true rule as to the measure of damages would be: First, that plaintiffs were entitled to the value of the growing crop destroyed; then, as to the land available exclusively for mining purposes, if the cost of repairing the injury by removing the debris would amount to less than the value of the property prior to the injury, plaintiffs were entitled to such cost, but, if such cost would exceed such value, the plaintiffs were entitled to the value of the property; and, lastly, as to the land used for agricultural purposes, if such land had a greater value for mining than for agricultural purposes, the rule as to the land exclusively used for mining purposes would apply, but if, on the other hand it was more valuable for agricultural than mining purposes, it having been absolutely destroyed for agricultural purposes, plaintiffs were entitled to its value for such purposes.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR—DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—MODIFICATION—REDUCING AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

In an action for damages to land caused by an adjoining landowner's mining operations, plaintiffs recovered a verdict of $9,000, which amount was reduced by the court to $7,000. On the trial erroneous instructions were given, the utmost effect of which was to improperly increase the verdict by $2,550. Held that, not knowing upon what theory the trial court reduced the verdict, such reduction cannot be held to have obviated in any degree the effect of the erroneous instructions, but that, as such effect may be absolutely obviated by deducting $2,550 from the $7,000 judgment, and as the proceedings were correct in all other particulars, plaintiffs should not be compelled to try the case again in the event of their willingness to make such deduction.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Jonas Salstrom and wife against the Orleans Bar Gold Mining Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed, provided plaintiffs consent to a specified reduction in the amount of the judgment; otherwise reversed.

L. F. Puter and Denver Sevier (Page, McCutchen & Knight, of counsel), for appellant. Gillett & Carter and F. A. Cutler, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment and an order denying a new trial in an action brought by plaintiffs for damages to their land, alleged to have been caused by unlawful acts of defendant in conducting its hydraulic mining operations. There was a verdict in plaintiffs' favor for $9,000. On motion for new trial, the trial court ordered that the motion be granted, unless plaintiffs remitted all over and above $7,000, and costs of suit, in which event the motion was to be denied. This plaintiffs did by filing their written consent to the modification of the judgment within the time and in the manner prescribed by the trial court.

Plaintiffs were the owners of a tract of land containing about 78 acres, in Humboldt county, extending on the easterly side to and there fronting on Camp creek for a considerable distance. The defendant owned land adjoining plaintiffs' land on the creek frontage and running northerly along said creek for a considerable distance above plaintiffs' lands.

The theory of plaintiffs' case as shown by the complaint was that defendant, in making a large prospect cut in its land opposite plaintiffs' land, had thrown a large quantity of gravel, boulders, and earth into the creek, forming a bar therein, and that, in operating a placer mine above plaintiffs' premises, it had caused a large amount of "boulders, gravel, detritus, and debris" to be placed in the waters of Camp creek, which were prevented from being carried down said creek past plaintiffs' land solely by reason of said bar; the result being that the waters of the creek were diverted from their natural and ordinary channel and thrown with great force against and upon plaintiffs' land, washing away a portion thereof, with a growing crop of grain thereon, and covering such portion with a deep deposit of gravel and boulders.

1. There was evidence sufficient to sustain the conclusion of the jury that the injury to plaintiffs' land and crop was solely due to the acts of defendant so alleged in the complaint. This was not questioned in defendant's opening brief, which was devoted exclusively to the discussion of alleged errors in instructions given to the jury and the claim that the damages awarded were excessive. An attempt is made in the closing brief to show that the evidence demonstrates that the injury was in part caused by mining operations by plaintiffs themselves and others; but the record shows that the evidence was conflicting on this proposition, and that there was evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the acts of plaintiffs and others in no degree contributed to such injury.

2. Complaint is made of the following instruction given to the jury at plaintiffs' request: "One engaged in mining has a right to deposit his tailings in a running stream to a reasonable extent, but he has no right to flood a lower owner's land, and by depositing tailings and debris thereon to substantially injure or ruin the latter's property, although he may have used all reasonable means to prevent such damage. No person or corporation has a right, directly or indirectly, to cover his neighbor's land with mining debris, sand, and gravel, or other material so as to injure or damage the same. So I instruct you that if you find upon the evidence that the plaintiffs are in the possession of the land described in the complaint, and were in such possession at and during the times therein mentioned, and if you further find that while they were in such possession the defendant caused to be placed in the channel of Camp creek and upon the lands of plaintiffs a large obstruction, by placing in said creek and upon said land a large mass of earth, gravel, rocks, and boulders, which caused the waters of said creek to flow upon and against plaintiffs' land, washing it away and damaging and injuring it, and if you further find that said defendant, after making such obstruction, commenced mining operations by the hydraulic process upon its land and above plaintiffs' land and in so doing caused to be placed into Simm's Gulch a large mass of earth, detritus, debris, gravel, rocks, and boulders, tailings from its mine, and if you further find that said detritus, debris, gravel, rocks, and boulders came down said gulch into Camp creek and were thence carried by the waters of Camp creek down stream to said obstruction and were there by reason thereof diverted to and upon the said land of plaintiffs, damaging and injuring the same, then you should render a verdict for the plaintiffs." It is said that a portion of this instruction was outside the issues; but we think the whole thereof was pertinent to the issues and in line with the theory of plaintiffs' case, which was that by reason of the bar placed by defendant in the creek, and its deposit of debris in the creek above such bar, it caused a portion of plaintiffs' soil to wash away, and deposited on the subsoil remaining and on other adjoining land of plaintiffs a large amount of debris. The instruction is not objectionable in that it ignores the question of negligence on defendant's part. It is thoroughly established that, no matter how carefully the miner may conduct his operations, he has no lawful right to flood or wash away his neighbor's land, or deposit mining debris thereon, to its injury, and that, if by the deposit of mining debris in the stream he causes such a result, he is liable for the resulting damage. The fact that he uses all the care for the protection of his neighbor's property consistent with the successful conduct of his mining operations is immaterial. See 2 Lindley on Mines, § 843; Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 481; Robinson v. Black Diamond Coal Co., 57 Cal. 412, 40 Am. Rep. 118; Hobbs v. Amador, etc., Co., 66 Cal. 161, 4 Pac. 1147; Fitzpatrick v. Montgomery, 20 Mont. 181, 50 Pac. 416, 63 Am. St. Rep. 622. The instruction was not objectionable on the ground that it was argumentative or contradictory and confusing.

3. It cannot be held that the evidence was not sufficient to support a conclusion that the damage to plaintiffs amounted to $9,000, which was the amount of the verdict. The evidence on this point was given entirely by plaintiffs' witnesses; defendant making no attempt to contradict such witnesses, and contenting itself with its effort to show that the damage was not caused by its acts. There is some difference between counsel on this appeal as to the quantity of land destroyed and injured; defendant's counsel asserting that only some three acres were thus affected, while plaintiffs declare the quantity to have been over eight acres. There was ample evidence to sustain plaintiffs' counsel in this regard. Plaintiff Jonas Salstrom testified that the portion of his land available for agricultural purposes and which he was engaged in farming extended to a certain line pointed out by him on the ground to a surveyor, and that the soil so available had been washed away as a consequence of defendant's acts to the present line of his agricultural land. The surveyor testified that the amount of land between these lines was 5.10 acres. It was further made to appear that, extending from the original line of such farming land to Camp creek, there were about four acres of mining ground included in plaintiffs' lines, as stated in the complaint, only one of which had been mined, leaving three acres still available for mining purposes. Whatever uncertainty there may have been in the complaint in this regard, there can be no doubt that the case was tried upon the theory that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover for all damage caused by defendant to any portion of the tract described in the complaint, which necessarily included, in addition to the portion devoted to farming purposes, the portion in front thereof extending to the creek. As to these three acres, there was evidence to support a conclusion that the land had been so covered with mining debris by the acts of defendant that it would cost from $1,000 to $1,250 an acre more to mine the land than it would otherwise have cost, and that the value of the land for mining purposes was sufficiently great to warrant such increased expenditure, or, in other words, that the value of the land for mining purposes was reduced by from $1,000 to $1,250 per acre by the acts of defendant. The same is true as to the 5.10 acres used for agricultural purposes, as to which there is testimony to support a conclusion that the value for mining purposes was the same as that of the other three acres. There was in this warrant for a conclusion that the damage amounted to from $1,000 to $1,250 per acre for the whole 8.10 acres, and the growing crop destroyed was shown to be of the value of $200.

4. A more serious question is presented by certain instructions on the measure of damage. After correctly instructing the jury in the general language of section 3333, Civ. Code, that the amount to be awarded to plaintiffs in the event of a recovery was such amount as would compensate them "for all the detriment proximately caused" by the acts of defendant, not exceeding the amount named in the complaint, the court, at the request of plaintiffs, instructed the jury as follows: "In passing upon the question of damages, if you should find that plaintiffs are entitled to recover in this action, you may take into consideration the character and quality of the soil for farming purposes and the value thereof, and also the land for mining purposes prior to the injury complained of and what depreciation in the value thereof has been caused by the acts of defendant, if any." Of its own motion the court gave this further instruction on the same subject: "If you believe from the evidence that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover, then, in ascertaining the amount of damages, you will determine from all the evidence as near as may be the value of the crop, if any, on the land washed away, and the difference between the value of their land for any and all purposes, prior to the injury and the value of the same after the injury, and this difference would be the measure of damages to which they would be entitled for permanent injury to their lands." These were the only instructions given upon this particular matter, except a general instruction that the jury must use their best judgment in assessing damages to do what was right and fair and just. Plaintiff's claim, sustained by his evidence, was that the 5.10 acres were worth $500 per acre for farming purposes, to which use they were then, and had been for several years, devoted. The effect of the defendant's acts, according to plaintiff's claim, was necessarily to destroy the land so far as agricultural purposes were concerned; the soil adaptable to such use having been entirely washed away, and mining debris having been deposited thereon to such an extent that it would cost from $1,000 to $1,250 per acre more to mine the land than it would have cost had this change not been effected. The theory of learned counsel for plaintiffs, as indicated by his brief, appears to be that plaintiffs were entitled to recover as damages both the value of the land for farming purposes, $500 per acre, and the increase in the cost of mining the land, $1,000 to $1,250 per acre. It appears manifest to us that this cannot be so. No part of the land could be mined except by a process that would entirely destroy it for agricultural purposes; it being absolutely essential to completely remove the upper soil by what is known as ground sluicing in order to get at the gold distributed in the ground beneath. As long as any of the land was used for agricultural purposes, it could not be used for mining purposes, and, when used for mining purposes, its value for agricultural purposes was destroyed. The two uses were necessarily absolutely incompatible. Under such circumstances, the most that a plaintiff can rightfully claim is that the amount of injury be determined upon the basis of the availability of the land for the most valuable use for which it can be used. The two uses being absolutely incompatible, the property cannot well have a higher market value than its value for the most valuable use to which it is adapted. To hold otherwise would necessarily give double compensation to the owner of the land to the extent that the amount awarded exceeded the value for the most valuable purpose for which the land could be used. See Northern Pacific & M. Ry. Co. v. Forbis, 15 Mont. 452, 39 Pac. 571, 48 Am. St. Rep. 692, and cases there cited; also, Spring Valley W. W. v. Drinkhouse, 92 Cal. 528, 28 Pac. 681. The true rule as to the measure of damages in the case at bar was this: Plaintiffs were first entitled to the value of the growing crop destroyed. As to the land available exclusively for mining purposes, if the cost of repairing the injury by removing the debris deposited by defendant would amount to less than the value of the property as it was prior to the injury, such cost would be the proper measure of damage; but, if such cost of repair or of restoration would exceed such value, then the value of the property would be the proper measure. See Hartshorn v. Chaddock, 135 N. Y. 116, 31 N. E. 997, 17 L. R. A. 426, and cases there cited. As to the land used for agricultural purposes, if such land had a greater value for mining purposes than agricultural purposes, the same rule would apply as in the case of the other land; and, on the other hand, if it was more valuable for agricultural than mining purposes, it having been absolutely destroyed for such purpose, plaintiffs would be entitled to the value, testified by plaintiff to be $500 per acre. Defendant's claim is that the instructions on the subject of damage hereinbefore set forth were in line with the theory of counsel for plaintiffs as we have stated, and practically told the jury that they could allow plaintiffs both the amount that the land was worth for farming purposes, and the damage to it as mining property. This we are satisfied was, under the circumstances of this case, and in the absence of other instructions more precisely defining the rights of the parties, the effect of the instructions complained of, the sense in which the jury were reasonably warranted in taking them and in which they probably did take them. They were therefore prejudicially erroneous. The utmost possible effect of such instructions was to improperly increase the verdict against defendant by $2,550. It is impossible for us to say upon what theory the learned judge of the trial court reduced the verdict from $9,000 to $7,000, and consequently such reduction cannot be held to have obviated in any degree the effect of such error. As such effect may be absolutely obviated by a remission of such amount, and as the proceedings were correct in all other particulars, so far as this record shows, plaintiffs should not be compelled to try the case again in the event of their willfulness to remit such amount.

It is ordered that in the event that plaintiffs, within 30 days from this date, file with the clerk of this court their written consent to a modification of the judgment in their favor by the deduction of $2,550, leaving the same to stand for $4,450 and costs of suit, said judgment shall be modified accordingly, and the order denying a new trial shall be affirmed; but that, in the event that said consent be not so filed within said time, the judgment and order denying a new trial shall be reversed.

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1908.
Dissenting Opinion, June 12, 1908.)

1. MORTGAGES—ASSIGNMENT OF DEBT AND MORTGAGE—RIGHTS OF SECOND ASSIGNEE—OPTION TO FORECLOSE ON DEFAULT AS TO INTEREST.

In an action by the second assignee and pledgee of a note and mortgage securing the same, the note giving the holder thereof the option to declare the whole principal and interest due for nonpayment of interest, even if such second assignee could not exercise the option on a failure to pay interest, because the note and mortgage were in the actual possession of the first assignee thereof, the exercise of the option by the latter would inure to the benefit of the second assignee, so as to entitle him to foreclose the mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, §§ 1163, 1231, 1232.]

2. SAME—FORECLOSURE BY ACTION—PARTIES—PLAINTIFFS—FIRST ASSIGNEE.

In an action by the second assignee and pledgee of a note and mortgage, to foreclose the mortgage, where the first assignee, the mortgagee, and grantee of the mortgage were made parties defendant, the grantee of the mortgage may not insist that the first assignee should have been a party plaintiff instead of defendant; such first assignee not having objected, and all those interested in enforcing the mortgage lien being before the court, either as parties plaintiff or defendant.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—PARTIES—JOINDER.

In an action by the second assignee of a note and mortgage, to foreclose the mortgage for nonpayment of interest, where the first assignee, the mortgagee, and the grantee of the mortgage were made parties defendant, and after a demurrer to the complaint had been overruled, the first assignee filed a cross-complaint, alleging practically the same facts showing the default, etc., and praying foreclosure, even if the first assignee was misjoined as a party defendant, such defect was obviated by the subsequent filing of the cross-complaint, whereby it became a plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4069-4074.]

4. SAME—DEFECT SUPPLIED BY SUBSEQUENT PLEADINGS.

A judgment will not be reversed for a ruling on demurrer for nonjoinder or misjoinder of parties, where, for all the purposes of the action, the defect has been supplied or removed by subsequent pleadings.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4069-4074.]

5. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE BY ACTION—DEFENSES—WANT OF CONSIDERATION—DEFENSE BY PURCHASER OF PROPERTY SUBJECT TO MORTGAGE.

Failure or want of consideration, as between the parties as to a mortgage, cannot be set up by the purchaser of lands subject to the mortgage which is a part of the consideration, whether he expressly assumed the mortgage as a part of the purchase money or not; and in an action by the second assignee of a note and mortgage, to foreclose the mortgage, where defendant had purchased the mortgaged property long after the execution of the note and mortgage, and as a part of the consideration therefor had agreed to pay two notes, to secure the payment of which the note and mortgage sought to be foreclosed were assigned to the first assignee and to plaintiff, and had also agreed in writing with the first assignee of the note and mortgage that the mortgage should be a lien on the property for the assigned note, defendant may not set up a want of consideration to the mortgagor for the note and mortgage.

6. SAME—PLEADING—COMPLAINT—NONPAYMENT AND ELECTION TO FORECLOSE—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATION.

In an action by the assignee of a note and mortgage to foreclose the mortgage, the note giving the holder thereof the option to declare the debt due for nonpayment of interest and elect to foreclose, the allegation in the complaint that default in the payment of interest had been made, and because of such default plaintiff had elected to exercise the option, was a sufficient averment that the option was exercised when the interest became due, and could not be construed to mean that plaintiff had elected to exercise the option only at the time of filing the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 1312.]

7. SAME—NONPAYMENT OF INTEREST—TENDER—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATION.

While the tender by the mortgagor of interest, due on a note secured by a mortgage, would have defeated the right of the holder of the note to elect to declare the interest and principal due for nonpayment of interest, if the tender was made before the latter had elected to exercise his option on default of payment in interest, where, in an action to foreclose the mortgage for nonpayment of the note, the complaint alleged that defendant defaulted in paying the interest, and plaintiff had elected to declare the note due, and the answer only alleged that defendant had tendered his interest on a certain date, which was after the interest became due, and plaintiff had exercised his option to declare the note due, the answer raised no issue as to plaintiff's exercise of his option to declare the whole debt due on default in payment of interest, as it showed that the tender was made after default in payment, it being necessary that defendant, if it desired to raise such issue, should allege the tender was made before the exercise of the option.

8. SAME—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—MATTERS NOT IN ISSUE.

In an action to foreclose a mortgage securing a note, which gave the holder of the note the option to declare the principal and interest due on default of the payment of interest, where the complaint alleged default in payment of interest, and that plaintiff had elected to foreclose, and this was not denied in the answer, no issue as to the exercise of the option was made, and there was no necessity of introducing evidence upon that allegation in the complaint.

9. SAME—NONPAYMENT OF INTEREST—RIGHT TO FORECLOSE ON DEFAULT—RELIEF AS FROM FORFEITURE—"WILLFUL."

Civ. Code, § 3275, provides that whenever a party incurs a forfeiture by the terms of an obligation, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty. A note, secured by a mortgage executed by defendant's grantor, provided that upon nonpayment of interest the holder of the note might elect to declare both the principal and interest due, which was done by plaintiff, as the assignee of the note and mortgage, upon default of payment in interest. Defendant alleged that, before such default, plaintiff had expressed to defendant its intention of being indulgent as to the payment of the note and mortgage, which lulled defendant into a sense of security, and that defendant, by circumstances over which it had no control, was prevented from paying the interest when due, until it subsequently made tender thereof; but the court found against these averments, on evidence sustaining the findings. Held, that defendant, having shown no justification or excuse for its omission to make payment when due, was not entitled to relief.

10. SAME—FORECLOSURE BY ACTION—COSTS—ATTORNEY'S FEES—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The amount which will be allowed as attorney's fees on foreclosure of a mortgage rests on the discretion of the trial court, as that court is familiar with the pleadings and proceedings on the trial, and may better determine what is the reasonable compensation.

11. SAME—AMOUNT.

The amount of compensation to be allowed for attorney's fees upon the foreclosure of a mortgage depends upon the extent of the responsibility assumed, by reason of the amount involved in the proceedings, together with the actual services in the foreclosure proceedings; and, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, where the pleadings were simple, and the actual trial of the case took but a short time, the mortgage debt amounting to about $38,000, it cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the trial court abuses its discretion in allowing a counsel fee to plaintiff of only $600.

Beatty, C. J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by H. S. Patten and others against the Pepper Hotel Company, German-American Savings Bank, a corporation, and others, in which the bank filed a cross-complaint, to foreclose a mortgage. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-complainant, decreeing the foreclosure, one of defendants appeals. Plaintiffs also appeal from a portion of the judgment allowing attorney's fees. The judgment against defendants, as well as that portion of the judgment appealed from by plaintiffs, affirmed.

The following is the opinion of LORIGAN, J. (concurred in by HENSHAW and McFARLAND, JJ.), filed April 29, 1908, in department:

"This action was brought by the plaintiffs, as second assignees and pledgees of a note and mortgage, to foreclose said mortgage. The complaint alleged that on August 25, 1903, Coonrod Smith (not a party to the action) executed to the defendant Abbie E. Barr a promissory note for $60,000, payable five years after its date, and to secure its payment also executed a mortgage in her favor on the property described in the complaint. The note set forth in the complaint provided for the payment of interest quarterly, and contained an option, in favor of the holder of the same, to declare the whole principal and interest due in case of default in payment of the interest. It is then alleged that, subsequent to the execution of said note and mortgage, said defendant Abbie E. Barr made two assignments thereof, in pledge, however, one to secure the payment of an indebtedness, then owing by the defendant Barr Realty Company to the defendant German-American Savings Bank on the promissory note of said company, in the sum of $35,000, the other assignment being in pledge to secure an indebtedness due to the plaintiffs from the said Barr Realty Company in the sum of $33,340.60, evidenced by a promissory note of said realty company; that said second assignment to plaintiffs was subject to the pledge of said note and mortgage in favor of the defendant bank; that default in the payment of the interest due on said promissory note of said Smith had been made, and because thereof the German-American Savings Bank, as the owner and holder of the same, had elected to exercise the option in said note contained, and declared the whole of said note, principal and interest, due and payable; that because of said default, the plaintiffs also had elected to declare the whole of said note executed by Smith due and payable. It is then alleged that the defendant Pepper Hotel Company, by mesne conveyances since the execution of said mortgage by Smith, had become and was the owner of the real estate covered by said mortgage. The prayer was for a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises; and that the proceeds of said sale be applied, first, to the payment of the note of the Barr Realty Company to the defendant bank; and, second, for the application of the balance of the proceeds to the payment of the promissory note executed by said Realty Company in favor of plaintiffs. The defendant Pepper Hotel Company demurred to the complaint, challenging the sufficiency of the facts stated to warrant relief, and asserted, as a further ground, that there was a defect and misjoinder of parties plaintiff and defendant. The demurrer was overruled, and thereafter an answer and cross-complaint was filed by the defendant German-American Savings Bank. The answer admitted all the allegations of the complaint. The cross-complaint set up substantially the same facts that were contained in the complaint relative to the assignment and pledge of said Smith note to the bank by the defendant Abbie E. Barr, to secure payment of the note of the Barr Realty Company; that default in the payment of interest on both notes had been made; that it had elected to exercise the option provided for in the Smith note, and had declared the whole of said note, principal and interest, due and payable, and concluded with a prayer similar to that in the complaint for the foreclosure of the mortgage and application of the proceeds. The Pepper Hotel Company, by its answer, as a defense to the claim of both the plaintiffs and the cross-complainant German-American Savings Bank, averred that the note and mortgage, from Smith to the defendant Abbie E. Barr, was without consideration, and that the plaintiffs and the said bank took their assignments thereof with notice of that fact. By way of relief against a foreclosure of said mortgage it was averred that the Pepper Hotel Company was willing and able and intended to pay the interest, which fell due on the Smith note on July 12, 1905 (and for default in the payment of which the option was exercised), but that circumstances over which it had no control prevented it from so doing until about the 20th of July, 1905; that on said date said hotel company offered to pay the cross-complainant bank all accrued interest on said note, and that on the 25th of July, 1905, a similar offer was made by the defendant. It was then averred that, if a foreclosure be ordered, it will entail great financial sacrifice on said hotel company to meet the judgment; that if said note were permitted to run to maturity according to its terms, said hotel company would meet the payments thereof without such great loss; that the said mortgaged premises were ample security for said debt, were worth the sum of $90,000, and that cross-complainant is in no danger of loss because of insufficient value of said property. The prayer is that the note and mortgage be declared void for want of consideration, or that, if held to be valid, and a valid lien against the property of the hotel company, said company be relieved from the penalty of having the principal of said note declared due and payable; that said defendant cross-complainant bank be required to accept said interest, and that the action be dismissed. The German-American Savings Bank and the Pepper Hotel Company were the only defendants who answered; the others making default. The findings of the court were in favor of the plaintiffs and the cross-complainant bank, and a judgment decreeing a foreclosure and sale and application of the proceeds as prayed for by them was ordered entered thereon. The Pepper Hotel Company appeals from said judgment, and also from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The plaintiffs also appeal from that portion of the judgment which allows them but $600 as attorney's fees. Both appeals will be disposed of herein.

"As to the main appeal by the Pepper Hotel Company. Several grounds are urged by it for a reversal of both the judgment and the order, but there are only a few which we think merit consideration. It is insisted, on the appeal from the judgment, that the court erred in overruling the demurrer of appellant to the complaint. Its position in that respect is, first, that plaintiffs had no right to bring the action because, not being the holders of the note, they could not exercise the option to declare the principal due, as it is provided in the note that such option must be exercised by the holder thereof, and that the German-American Savings Bank, and not the plaintiffs, had the actual control and exercised dominion over said note and mortgage as a pledge; second, that, plaintiffs and the German-American Savings Bank being united in interest, there was a nonjoinder of parties plaintiff in not making the bank a plaintiff, and a misjoinder of parties defendant in making the bank a defendant, without alleging that the bank refused to join as a plaintiff. In support of the second point appellant cites section 382 of the Code of Civil Procedure. While it is true that the plaintiffs did not actually hold the note and mortgage of Smith, they being held by the defendant bank as the first assignee and pledgee thereof, it is not questioned but that the plaintiffs had such an interest in said note and mortgage as would entitle them to maintain an action for foreclosure, but it is insisted that the complaint does not disclose a present right to do so, nor did the plaintiffs attempt to enforce such right by proper pleadings, and hence, the demurrer should have been sustained upon all the grounds urged. We cannot agree with this view. From the allegations in the complaint itself it appears that there is nothing in the point made by appellant that the plaintiffs, not being the holders of the note, could not exercise the option to declare it due. It is alleged therein, not only that the plaintiffs had exercised the option, but that the bank, the actual holder of the note when the action was commenced, had also done so. If it be conceded that the plaintiffs, not being the holders, could not exercise the option, still no question can be made but that the bank could do so, and that its action in that respect would inure to the benefit of plaintiffs.

"As to the other point urged, of defect and misjoinder of parties. There are, at least, two sufficient reasons why the point is untenable. It will be observed that the bank, as first assignee of the note and mortgage, and the mortgagee Abbie E. Barr were both made parties to the action as defendants. All those, therefore, who were interested in enforcing the lien of the mortgage were before the court, either as parties plaintiff or defendant. This was all that the appellant, as successor in interest to the mortgagor, could insist on. It was immaterial to the appellant, as such successor, whether the bank, as first assignee of the note and mortgage, was a party plaintiff or defendant. If the bank did not object, it did not lie with appellant, as successor of the mortgagor, to raise the question. This same point urged here was before the Court of Appeals of New York in Simson v. Satterlee et al., 64 N. Y. 657, where the decision of the Supreme Court in the same case (6 Hun, 305) was affirmed. That action was to foreclose a mortgage for $4,000 from the defendants Satterlee to the plaintiff's testator, and assigned by said testator to the defendant Martling to secure payment of $1,000. The complaint alleged the assignment, that the debt for which the mortgage had been pledged had been unpaid, and prayed that from the proceeds of the sale the amount thereof should first be satisfied. The defendants Satterlee—the mortgagors—demurred to the complaint, on the ground, among others, that the defendant Martling should have been made a plaintiff instead of a defendant. The demurrer was overruled, and on appeal it was held by both courts that, while in such actions the pledgee is a necessary party, still, as far as the mortgagor or other parties in interest are concerned, it is immaterial whether he be made a party plaintiff or defendant; that so long as the assignee was a party, and did not object to his position under the pleadings, the mortgagor could not raise the question. See, also, Burlingame v. Parce, 12 Hun, 149. There is no difference between the case at bar and the cases referred to, as far as the principle announced in the latter is concerned. Aside from this, however, and as an additional reason why the point urged is untenable, it appears that, after the demurrer was overruled, the defendant German-American Savings Bank filed a cross-complaint, in which it alleged practically the same facts as were contained in plaintiffs' complaint, among others, a default in the payment of the interest on the $60,000 note, and that it had elected to exercise the option contained therein of declaring the whole amount due, and sought a foreclosure of the mortgage. So that, in effect, it joined with the plaintiffs in the action to foreclose; and hence, if there was any merit in appellant's point as to a defect or misjoinder of parties, it was subsequently obviated by the filing of the cross-complaint, in which the bank became a plaintiff in the case. A judgment will not be reversed for a ruling on demurrer for nonjoinder or misjoinder of parties, when it appears from subsequent pleadings, that, for all intents and purposes of the action, the defect complained of has been supplied or removed.

"Now as to the appeal from the order denying the motion of appellant for a new trial. It is insisted, first, that the court erred in refusing to allow appellant to offer evidence with a view of showing that the Smith note and mortgage were made wholly without consideration. As heretofore stated, Smith, the maker of the note and mortgage, was not a party to the action. Nothing whatever was sought against him. The attack upon the note and mortgage was sought to be made by the appellant as successor in interest of Smith to the mortgaged premises. Under the conceded facts in the case, however, appellant had no right to make such attack. It appears from the evidence that appellant purchased the property mortgaged from the Barr Realty Company, the successor in interest of Smith, long after the execution of the note and mortgage by him, and that, as part of the purchase price thereof, appellant assumed the payment of an indebtedness of $102,000; that this consisted of several amounts contained in a certain schedule introduced in evidence. From the schedule it appeared that, among the other items of indebtedness represented by this $102,000 so assumed, and to be paid by appellant, were the sums due to the bank and the plaintiffs on the notes of the Barr Realty Company, to secure the payments of which the assignments of the $60,000 note and mortgage were made by the defendant Abbie E. Barr. It further appeared, by the terms of an instrument executed between the appellant and the said bank, having reference to the said two notes, to secure which the assignment of the Smith note and mortgage had been made by the defendant, that it was expressly agreed by the appellant that the mortgage should be a lien on the real property, described therein as security for the payment of said $60,000 note. Under these conceded facts the appellant had no right to attack the note and mortgage of Smith for want of consideration. It assumed the payment and discharge of them as part of the purchase price. If under the circumstances the attack, which the appellant was attempting to make, were permitted, it would be, in effect, to hold that, notwithstanding appellant, as purchaser, retained $60,000 of the purchase price of the land, under an express agreement to pay it to plaintiffs and the bank in discharge of a note and mortgage on the purchased premises, still it might show that there was no consideration for said note and mortgage, and thus defeat the loan and retain the money. This would be clearly inequitable, and the law does not permit it, to be done. The rule is that failure or want of consideration, as between the parties to a mortgage, cannot be set up as a defense by a purchaser of the lands subject to the mortgage, which is, in fact, part of the consideration, whether he has expressly assumed the mortgage, as a part of the purchase money or not. Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 1491; Pratt v. Nixon, 91 Ala. 192, 8 South. 751; Freeman v. Auld, 44 N. Y. 50; Price v. Pollock, 47 Ind. 362.

"The next point raised is as to one of the findings of the court upon the exercise of the option contained in the note. The court found that the interest on the $60,000 note, which was due on July 12, 1905, had not been paid, and that 'on account of such failure to pay said interest, said defendant and cross-complainant German-American Savings Bank and said plaintiffs thereupon elected to declare, and did declare, the whole of the principal of said $60,000 note and the interest thereon due and payable.' The appellant claims that the portion of the finding which we have quoted was not sustained by the evidence; that the uncontradicted evidence shows that when appellant offered to pay the bank the interest on the $60,000 note on July 28, 1905 (the bank having agreed that the appellant might have until the 12th of July, 1905, to pay it), the option, which it was provided might be exercised on default of payment of interest, had not, in fact, been exercised. But we do not think under the pleadings that this point is available to appellant. The complaint of plaintiffs and the cross-complaint of the defendant bank alleged that, because of default in the payment of interest on said $60,000 note, they had both elected to exercise the option provided for therein, and had declared the whole of said note principal, and interest due and payable. These allegations were not denied by the appellant, either in its answer to the complaint or cross-complaint, so that neither evidence in their support, nor finding upon them, was necessary. As we understand the briefs of appellant, it is not claimed that there was any specific denial of these allegations as to the exercise of the option. Its position is that, taking the allegations of the complaint and the cross-complaint in connection with the averments in the answer of the tender of interest to the bank at the dates therein alleged, an issue was raised as to the right of plaintiffs and the cross-complainant bank to exercise the option, and was equivalent to a denial of its exercise prior to the tender. But this position of appellant can only be sustained upon the theory that the allegations in the complaint and the cross-complaint, as to the exercise of the option maturing the indebtedness, must be construed to mean that at the time of and by the filing the complaint and cross-complaint only (on September 5 and October 5, 1905, respectively), the plaintiffs and the cross-complainant bank elected to exercise the option; that these allegations do not amount to a statement that the option had been exercised prior to that date. But the allegations in the complaint and cross-complaint are not subject to that construction. In Fletcher v. Dennison, 101 Cal. 292, 35 Pac. 868, an action to foreclose a mortgage, it was alleged 'that on the failure of the defendants to pay the installments of interest which by the terms of said promissory note and said indebtedness became and was due on the 21st day of October, 1902, the plaintiffs elected to declare and did declare the said principal and the interest thereon due and payable.' The action was brought some 39 days after default in payment of interest, and when the option might have been exercised. A general demurrer to the complaint was interposed and overruled. On appeal from the judgment by the defendants it was urged that the option to declare the whole note due under the allegations of the complaint was not exercised until the filing of that pleading; and, as the complaint was not filed until 39 days after the right to exercise the option had accrued, the plaintiff had waited an unreasonable time, and hence had waived his right to exercise the option. It was held by this court that the allegation of the complaint which we have quoted, 'as against a demurrer, was a sufficient averment of election at the time the interest became due.' The allegations in the complaint and cross-complaint as to the exercise of the option are in no respect materially different from the allegation construed in the case cited. Here plaintiffs alleged that because of default in the payment of interest, plaintiffs and the cross-complainant bank have elected to exercise the option, and have declared all the indebtedness due, and, under the authority of the case cited, this was a sufficient averment of the exercise of the option at the time the interest became due and when default was made in its payment. As this was the effect of the allegations, it was incumbent upon the appellant, in order to raise an issue as to the exercise of such option, to deny the allegations as broadly, at least, as they were made. This, it is clear, it did not do. While it is true that a tender of interest by appellant, prior to the exercise of the option provided for in the note in question, would, if properly pleaded, have defeated any right of the plaintiffs or cross-complainant to subsequently elect for that default to exercise such option (Trinity County Bank v. Haas, 91 Pac. 385), still the answer here, as framed, does not present that defense. It does not aver that the tender of interest was made prior to the exercise of the option. The allegations being, as we have seen, a sufficient averment of the election to exercise the option at the time default was made in the payment of the interest, it is clear that the answer makes no denial of such alleged election at that time, nor do the averments of tenders of interest, which appellant contends amounts to a denial of the right to exercise such option, have that effect. The averments in the answer are that the appellant tendered the interest on the 20th of July, 1905, and again on the 25th of that month—8 and 13 days, respectively, after the interest fell due and when the right to exercise the option accrued. Such averments clearly raise no issue upon the allegation of the exercise of the option as made by the complaint. In fact they show that these tenders were subsequent to the exercise of the option, which, under the allegations of the complaint, must be taken to have been exercised as of the date when default in the payment of interest occurred. It was incumbent on the appellant, if it desired to interpose as a defense the tender of interest prior to the option as alleged in the complaint and cross-complaint, to have averred that such tenders were made prior to the alleged exercise of such option. No such averment was made, and hence no issue upon the subject was raised by the pleading. There was no necessity of introducing evidence upon an allegation which was not denied, as it was clearly unnecessary for the court to have found upon it.

"We now approach the last point made by appellant, which we think merits consideration. It insists that the exercise of the option provided for in the note imposed terms upon the appellant, in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture, which should not be enforced by a court of equity, and from the effect of which, under the evidence in the case, the trial court should have relieved it. As to this contention, it may be said in passing that it is quite apparent, from the averments of the answer relating to the tender of the interest by appellant and the other averments setting forth matters in excuse of its non-payment, when due, that these averments were made in support of its prayer for relief from the option, alleged in the complaint and cross-complaint to have been exercised, and were not intended to raise an issue as to whether the exercise of the option was, in fact, made as alleged, which latter point we have just had under consideration. However, as to the right of appellant to be relieved from what it denominates the penalty or forfeiture imposed under the option provided for in the note, it insists that it should have been accorded such relief under the general principles of equity, and under section 3275 of the Civil Code, which provides that: 'Whenever, by the terms of an obligation, a party thereto incurs a forfeiture, or a loss in the nature of a forfeiture, by reason of his failure to comply with its provisions, he may be relieved therefrom, upon making full compensation to the other party, except in case of a grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty.' Now, if it be conceded that the option provided for in the note was such a penalty or forfeiture, from the effect of which the appellant might be relieved, still before it could be entitled to relief it was essential to support, by proof, the averments in its answer, under which it sought to bring itself within the provisions of the section. In this regard it alleged that the defendant bank had, in February, 1905, expressed to appellant its intention of being indulgent in the matter of the payment of the note and mortgage, which expressions lulled appellant into a sense of security; and that, by reason of circumstances over which it had no control it was prevented from paying the interest due July 12, 1905, until it made the tender thereof on July 20th and again on July 25th of that year. The court, however, found that no tender of interest was made by the appellant until July 28, 1905. It also found against the other averments of the answer as to the alleged expression of a desire, by the bank, to be indulgent to appellant, and against the appellant upon its claim that it was prevented from making the payment of the interest by circumstances which it could not control. As to the latter averment the court found 'the fact to be that the appellant carelessly and negligently omitted to pay said interest on said 12th of July, 1905, and forgot to attend to the payment thereof.' Hence it will be observed that, as to all the averments upon which appellant bases its application for relief, the court found against it, and the evidence sustains the findings. Under these circumstances appellant was entitled to no relief. It showed no justification or excuse at all for its omission to make payment when due. But it is claimed by appellant that, as the finding does not show that its failure to pay the interest when due was the result of a 'grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty,' it was entitled, as of right under the section, to relief. The exception in the section, prohibiting the granting of relief when noncompliance with the provisions of an obligation occurs through gross negligence, or willful or fraudulent breach of duty, is not to be construed as entitling a party to relief under all other circumstances. There must be some showing of matters which afford some substantial excuse for the omission, and none was made here. Aside from this, we think that the evidence shows that the omission to pay the interest was willful, as that word was used in the section; that the finding that appellant was careless and negligent and forgot to pay it had that effect. A variety of meanings has been given to the word 'willful,' depending a great deal upon the nature of the statute in which it is found, whether penal or not. It is construed in different senses, depending upon the connection in which it is used, and as used in the section in our Code in question, we think it was intended to mean where the omission is without sufficient justification or excuse.

"These are the only points which we deem necessary to discuss on the appeal of the defendant Pepper Hotel Company. We have examined the other points which are made, and are satisfied that they are without merit.

"As to the appeal of the plaintiffs from that portion of the judgment allowing them attorney's fees to the extent of $600 only. No evidence was introduced as to what would be a reasonable attorney's fee. That matter was left to the determination of the court, with the above result. It is claimed that it was an abuse of discretion, on the part of the court, not to have made a larger allowance. We do not perceive in the record anything which discloses any abuse of discretion, and before we would be warranted in interfering with the award, that must affirmatively appear. The amount which will be allowed as attorney's fees on the foreclosure of a mortgage rests peculiarly in the discretion of the trial court. That court is familiar with the pleadings and proceedings on the trial, and is in the best position to determine what is, in the light of the facts, a reasonable amount of compensation to be paid for attorney's fees. From the record before us it appears that the pleadings were simple, and that the actual trial of the issues in the case could have taken but a short time. It is true, as stated by appellant, that a large amount of money was involved, and that this should be taken into consideration in determining the amount of compensation. So it should, and doubtless was, but the compensation to be awarded is not to be determined by a percentage calculation on the amount of the mortgage debt. It is the extent of the responsibility, which an attorney assumes by reason of the amount involved in foreclosure proceedings which he is conducting, that is to be taken into consideration, together with his actual services in the foreclosure proceedings, for the purpose of fixing his compensation. These matters were all taken into consideration by the trial court, and it cannot be said on the record before us that the allowance as made was unreasonably low, or that there was any abuse of discretion in fixing it at the amount which the court did.

"The judgment and order appealed from by the Pepper Hotel Company are affirmed, as is also that portion of the judgment appealed from by the plaintiffs."

PER CURIAM. The petition for a rehearing, filed by the Pepper Hotel Company, is denied.

The opinion disposing of the appeals is modified by striking therefrom the following paragraphs:

First: "As to the latter averment, the court found 'the fact to be that the appellant carelessly and negligently omitted to pay said interest on said 12th of July, 1905, and forgot to attend to the payment thereof.'"

Second: "But it is claimed by appellant that, as the finding does not show that its failure to pay the interest when due was the result of a 'grossly negligent, willful, or fraudulent breach of duty,' it was entitled, as of right under the section, to relief. The exception in the section prohibiting the granting of relief when noncompliance with the provisions of an obligation occurs through gross negligence, or willful or fraudulent breach of duty, is not to be construed as entitling a party to relief under all other circumstances. There must be some showing of matters which affords some substantial excuse for the omission, and none was made here. Aside from this, we think that the evidence shows that the omission to pay the interest was willful, as that word was used in the section; that the finding that appellant was careless and negligent and forgot to pay it, had that effect. A variety of meanings has been given to the word 'willful,' depending a great deal upon the nature of the statute in which it is found, whether penal or not. It is construed in different senses depending upon the connection in which it is used; and, as used in the section in our Code in question, we think it was intended to mean where the omission is without sufficient justification or excuse."

The first portion stricken out was the portion of a finding made by the trial court, which was entirely outside the issues. The second portion is stricken out because the construction of the language of section 3275 of the Civil Code, which is there discussed, was not involved in the disposition of the case, and is eliminated in order that any future consideration of the matter may not be affected by its presence in the opinion.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). Having dissented from the order of the court denying a rehearing of this cause, I desire very briefly to state the grounds of my dissent. The case of Fletcher v. Dennison, 101 Cal. 292, 35 Pac. 868, does not, in my opinion, support the construction given to the allegations of the complaint and cross-complaint in this action, as to the date of the election to treat the whole amount of the mortgage debt as due for default in the payment of interest. The allegation, in respect to this matter in the case cited, is quoted in the opinion of the court. The allegations of the complaint and cross-complaint in this action are simply (in the first) that, "these plaintiffs have elected to exercise the option in said note contained, and have declared and hereby do declare the whole of the principal of said $60,000 note * * * due and payable"; and (in the second) "that default has been made in the payment of interest on said $60,000 note, and because thereof this cross-complainant has, as the owner and holder of said note last mentioned, elected to exercise," etc. These allegations, according to their grammatical and logical construction, mean nothing more than that the option of the respective assignees of the mortgage was exercised at the time of filing their several complaints, and by that means. So construed, it was impossible to deny them, and the hotel company did all that it could do, and all that was necessary to raise the material issue, by alleging a tender on the 25th of July, which was more than a month before the commencement of the action. The evidence very clearly shows that the tender was made as early as the 28th of July, and prior to any notice of an election to treat the whole debt as due. This was a complete defense to the action. Trinity County Bank v. Abrahm & Karsky Co., 91 Pac. 385.

I think, also, that if section 3275 of the Civil Code applies to cases of this character, the offer to pay at the time it was made should have been held to relieve the penalty or forfeiture of the credit. The court found the neglect to pay the interest on the day it was due to have resulted from carelessness and forgetfulness, but it did not find that the negligence was gross, and, if not, it would not uphold the forfeiture, or justify the imposition of the penalty.

MARINOVICH v. KILBURN. (S. F. 4,692.) (Supreme Court of California. May 26, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—INDEPENDENT STIPULATIONS.

Defendant sold plaintiff certain shares of stock and agreed, if the stock did not pay a certain annual dividend, to pay plaintiff that sum, and further agreed, upon default in the payment of such dividend stated, to purchase the stock from plaintiff at the price paid therefor. Held, that defendant was bound absolutely by the contract to purchase the stock, upon the failure of the company to pay the dividend stated, if requested to do so, and not merely upon the failure to pay the dividend and his own failure to make it good, as the two provisions in the contract related to different events and were independent of each other.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 762, 763.]

2. SAME—CONSIDERATION—PRE-EXISTING LIABILITY.

Civ. Code, § 1605, provides that any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise. Plaintiff bought certain stock and paid part of the purchase price, but refused to pay the rest, whereupon defendant, a director of the company, to induce plaintiff to pay the balance on his stock, agreed to pay him a certain sum if the yearly dividends did not amount to that sum, and further agreed to repurchase the stock from plaintiff if the dividends did not amount to the sum stated. Held, that there was no consideration to support defendant's agreement to repurchase the stock or guarantee the dividends, since plaintiff was already bound to pay the purchase price therefor, and the statute did not apply, since no benefit would accrue to defendant by the payment of plaintiff's subscription beyond that to which he was already entitled, and no prejudice would have been suffered by plaintiff by the payment of his subscription except that which he was then obliged by the contract to suffer.

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

Plaintiff purchased certain stock from a company in which defendant was a director, paying part of the purchase price, and defendant thereafter, to induce him to pay the remainder, guaranteed that the stock would pay certain dividends and to repurchase it if it did not. There was some testimony that defendant represented at the time that no promotion stock would be issued, and that plaintiff refused to pay the remainder on the stock because the company had issued such stock. The trial court instructed that, if defendant made such representations to plaintiff, which he believed and acted upon, and would not have otherwise subscribed for the stock, and if the promotion stock was thereafter issued by the corporation, then there was a sufficient consideration for defendant's agreement by which he induced plaintiff to pay the remainder on his stock. Held, that the instruction was erroneous in that it directed the jury that the mere fact that plaintiff was induced to buy the stock by defendant's misrepresentations constituted a sufficient consideration for defendant's subsequent agreement, as the proper question for the jury was whether plaintiff's refusal to pay for the stock was based on his complaint of fraud in inducing him to purchase it, or upon other reasons not connected with the fraud.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by F. P. Marinovich against F. A. Kilburn. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

H. C. Wyckoff and J. E. Gardner, for appellant. Chas. M. Cassin, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal by the defendant from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

On July 21, 1903, the defendant executed the following contract in writing: "Whereas, F. P. Marinovich is the owner of fifty shares of the capital stock of the Watsonville Transportation Company, for which he has paid the sum of $3,000.00, or $60.00 per share, in full payment therefor: Now, these presents witnesseth: That in the event of the nonpayment of an annual dividend of not less than three and one-half per cent. upon the purchase price of said stock, I hereby agree to pay to F. P. Marinovich that sum, viz., three and one-half per cent. upon his investment of $3,000.00, in said stock, myself. I further agree that in the case of any default in the payment of an annual dividend of not less than three and one-half per cent. upon each of the fifty shares of said stock owned by said F. P. Marinovich, to purchase the same at any time he may request me to do so, after such default, and to pay therefor the sum of $60.00 per share spot cash, upon the delivery to me of the certificate of stock properly indorsed." The company never paid any dividend upon the stock, whereupon, on March 30, 1905, the plaintiff tendered to defendant his certificate of stock, properly indorsed, and demanded that defendant then and there repurchase said stock and pay plaintiff $3,000 therefor. Defendant refused, and the plaintiff began this action to recover the price so agreed upon. The action was tried by a jury, which returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $3,000.

The complaint declared upon the above contract according to its legal effect, averring, in substance, that the defendant thereby agreed to purchase the 50 shares of stock in question at the price of \$3,000, if the company did not pay an annual dividend of not less than $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon said stock. Upon the trial, the introduction of the contract in evidence, in support of the allegation, was objected to on the ground that there was a variance between the contract alleged and that offered in proof, and the objection was overruled. The claim that there is a variance is made upon the theory that the agreement does not bind Kilburn to buy the stock, except upon the failure of the company to pay an annual dividend equal to \$105, and his own failure to make it good. It cannot properly be so construed. Kilburn agreed to make the yearly dividend good to the extent of \$105, or $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of \$3,000, in the event that the company failed to pay a dividend of that amount upon plaintiff's stock of the par value of \$5,000. He agreed to buy plaintiff's stock, not upon the failure of the company to pay an annual dividend of \$105 upon that stock, coupled with his own failure to make it good, but upon plaintiff's request "in the case of any default in the payment of an annual dividend of not less than three and one-half per cent. upon each of the fifty shares of said stock owned by" plaintiff, without any reference to the added failure of Kilburn to make it good to the extent of \$105. The two provisions relate to different events and are independent of each other. The payment claimed to have been made by Kilburn of a sum equal to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the \$3,000 invested by Marinovich, on failure of dividends by the company, as provided in the first clause of the agreement, did not relieve him of his obligation to buy the stock, imposed on him by the last clause in case of such failure by the company. Plaintiff's right to insist on the sale to Kilburn was made to depend solely on the failure of the company to pay the required dividend, and not at all upon the added failure of Kilburn to make good the company's default. There was no variance.

The defense chiefly relied on was want of consideration. The plaintiff had bought the stock from the company, at the price of $3,000, paying therefor at the time of purchase the sum of $750. In July, 1903, the company was urging Marinovich to pay the $2,250 remaining unpaid upon the purchase price, and plaintiff refused to pay it, stating as his reason that he had heard that there was going to be promoters' stock issued. The defendant was a director of the company and much interested therein. He thereupon, in order to induce plaintiff to pay to the company the balance of his stock subscription, executed the contract sued on, and plaintiff, in consideration thereof, paid said sum of $2,250 to the company and thereupon his certificate was by the company indorsed as full-paid stock. The principal contention of the plaintiff, upon this appeal, is that the fact that the plaintiff was unwilling to perform his contract to pay to the company the balance of his subscription, and was refusing to do so, and the fact that he agreed to, and did, perform it because of the agreement sued on, constituted a sufficient consideration for the agreement on the part of Kilburn to buy the stock and pay him $3,000 therefor. We think this proposition is not tenable. This court has said: "It is well settled that neither a promise to perform a duty, nor the performance of a duty, constitutes a consideration of a contract." Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 193, 33 Pac. 862. In Ellison v. Jackson Water Company et al., 12 Cal. 553, Ellison was bound by contract to do certain work for the Jackson Water Company. Thereafter one Bayerque, a defendant in the action, promised that, if Ellison would proceed with the work he (Bayerque) would pay to Ellison the amount due under the contract. The court says: "A promise to Bayerque to perform this contract could furnish no consideration for a promise by him. The consideration of the original contract could not attach to the subsequent promise." (The italics are ours.) In Schuler v. Myton, 48 Kan. 282, 29 Pac. 165, the principle is thus stated: "An agreement to do, or the doing of, that which one is already bound to do, does not constitute a consideration for a new promise." To the same effect, see 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 752, 9 Cyc. 354, and many cases cited therein. In the case at bar the plaintiff was already under obligation to the company to pay the balance of his subscription. According to this contention, all he agreed to do in consideration of the agreement of Kilburn was to pay the obligation to which he was already bound. The case comes precisely within the principle above stated. We cannot perceive anything in section 1605 of the Civil Code contrary to the principle just stated. Upon the theory we are now discussing, no benefit would accrue to Kilburn by the payment of the stock subscription, beyond that which he was already entitled to as a stockholder in the company, and no prejudice would be suffered by Marinovich by such payment of his stock subscription except that which he was already bound to suffer. The plaintiff, in support of his contention, cites the case of Abbott v. Doane, 163 Mass. 433, 40 N. E. 197, 34 L. R. A. 33, 47 Am. St. Rep. 465, and other cases in Massachusetts and in England. These cases support the proposition as contended for, but they are contrary to the general current of authority and to the decisions above quoted in this state. 9 Cyc. 354; 6 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 752.

Plaintiff further claims that the evidence shows that he was induced by fraud to buy the stock from the company; that he was claiming a right to refuse to complete his purchase because of this fraud; that Kilburn by the agreement sued on induced him to waive his objections and any defense founded on such fraud and forthwith to pay the balance due on his subscription; and that upon this theory there was good consideration for the agreement. It may be conceded that there was some foundation in the evidence for this claim. It is not necessary here to recite the evidence nor to consider its sufficiency upon the subject, for we find that the court gave the jury an erroneous instruction relating thereto. After correctly stating to the jury that, if the only consideration for Kilburn's contract to buy the stock of plaintiff was the payment by plaintiff to the company of the balance of his stock subscription for which he was already bound, then there was no sufficient consideration for Kilburn's agreement, the court added the following: "However, if you find that the defendant represented to the plaintiff, before the plaintiff subscribed for any stock of the Watsonville Transportation Company, that there would not be issued any promotion stock, and that said plaintiff believed said representation and acted upon it and by reason thereof subscribed for said 50 shares of stock, and would not have subscribed for them but on account of said representations, and if you further believe that a large amount of promotion stock was issued and delivered by said corporation to different persons, then I instruct you that there was a sufficient consideration for the execution of said agreement." The vice in this instruction is that it directs the jury that the mere existence of the fact that plaintiff was induced to buy the stock from the company solely by the fraud of the defendant constituted a sufficient consideration for the defendant's subsequent agreement to buy the stock from plaintiff. This could not be a correct proposition of law as applied to this case unless the fraud referred to was in some way connected with Kilburn's agreement, as, for example, that plaintiff, in consideration of that agreement, waived his claim that he had a good defense against his obligation to pay for his stock and made such payment accordingly. But upon this point the evidence was conflicting. The testimony of the plaintiff tended in some degree to support the proposition, but there was other evidence to the effect that the plaintiff based his refusal to pay for the stock solely upon the ground that he thought it was a poor investment. Conceding, but not deciding, that there was evidence sufficient to establish the fraud referred to, the question whether or not his refusal to complete the contract was based on his complaint of fraud in inducing him to purchase it, or upon other reasons not connected with the fraud, should have been submitted to the jury.

Certain errors in rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence are complained of; but in view of the fact that the case must be reversed and remanded for a new trial, and it is not probable that the rulings will be repeated, so we think it unnecessary to consider them.

The judgment and order are reversed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SLOSS, J.

MONTGOMERY v. DE PICOT et al.
(L. A. 1,994.)

153 Cal. 509

(Supreme Court of California. May 5, 1908.
On Rehearing, June 4, 1908.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—ACTION BY VENDEE'S ASSIGNEE.

Under Civ. Code, § 1457, providing that the burden of an obligation may not be transferred without the consent of the party entitled to its benefit, where a contract for the sale of land calls for the delivery of the purchaser's notes for deferred payments, the purchaser's personal liability is a controlling element, and the tender of notes of an assignee of the purchaser does not satisfy the contract; but under a contract for a conveyance to the purchaser, his assigns, etc., upon an additional payment of $10,000, $1,500 having been paid by the purchaser, or his assigns, the remaining $33,500 to be evidenced by "a promissory note" secured by a mortgage on the premises, the purchaser's assignee could enforce the contract by making the required payment and tendering her note secured by the required mortgage, though she was not financially responsible.

2. ASSIGNMENTS—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

The intention of the parties to a contract must be gathered from a consideration of the terms and the tenor of the entire contract, and if it appears that the contract calls for the performance of an obligation purely personal in its nature, the general rule is that the obligation cannot be assigned without the consent of the party to be benefited.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Assignments, §§ 28-31.]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONTRACT TO PURCHASE—TENDER—SUFFICIENCY—ESTOPPEL.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, providing that one to whom an instrument is tendered must specify any objection to it, or be deemed to have waived it, and that if an objection be to the terms of the instrument, he must specify the terms he requires, or be precluded from objecting afterwards, where, on the assignee of the purchaser under a contract for a conveyance of land tendering a note, partial payment of the price, etc., as required by the contract as a condition precedent to the conveyance, the vendors did not specifically object to the tender, and assigned no other reason for refusing it than that they did not want the money, they could not thereafter, on the assignee suing to specifically perform the contract, question the sufficiency of the tender.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Action by S. V. Montgomery against Susana O. De Picot and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying their motion for a different judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Denis & Loewenthal, for appellants. W. R. Hervey, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action for specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. The contract, which was the basis of the action, related to a purchase by W. G. Bradshaw of a tract of land in Los Angeles county owned by defendants, and was executed by defendants and said Bradshaw on November 25, 1904, the defendants being designated therein as the parties of the first part, and Bradshaw as party of the second part. The portions of the contract material for consideration on this appeal are as follows: "That in consideration of the payment to them by the party of the second part of the sum of $1,500.00, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said parties of the first part hereby agree to sell and convey * * * unto the said party of the second part, his heirs, executors and assigns, all that certain real property situated in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, described as follows, to wit: * * * upon the following terms and conditions: For the total price of $45,000.00, $1,500.00 of which has been paid by the party of the second part as above recited, $10,000.00 to be paid by the said party of the second part, or his heirs, executors or assigns, on or before May 31, 1905, * * * and the remainder of the said purchase price, to wit: the sum of $33,500.00 on or before May 31, 1910, the said last mentioned sum to bear interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, interest to be paid quarterly. And the said last deferred payment, to wit: the sum of $33,500.-

00 to be evidenced by a promissory note dated June 1, 1905, bearing interest at the rate aforesaid, to wit: 9 per cent. per annum until paid, payable on or before May 31, 1910, secured by a mortgage upon the above described property * * * deed of said property to be delivered by the first parties to the second or assigns concurrently with the said second payment of $10,000.00."

Subsequent to the execution of this contract Bradshaw assigned nine-tenths of his interest therein to divers other parties, who, with himself, thereafter assigned the same to plaintiff. It is conceded that the plaintiff was a stenographer in the office of Mr. Hervey, an attorney at law, who in the transactions relative to said contract represented Bradshaw, his assignees, and plaintiff, and that the assignment to plaintiff of said contract was for the convenience of Bradshaw and his assignees, and that plaintiff claimed no ownership or beneficial interest under the assignment, and was not financially responsible. Sometime before the date fixed in the contract therefor, Mr. Hervey, in the interest of the plaintiff and her assignors, and accompanied by the latter, went to the residence of defendants, and there tendered the personal note of plaintiff, secured by a mortgage on the land, conditioned as and for the amount provided in the contract, and likewise tendered defendants at the same time the $10,000 in coin which the contract provided should be paid. The defendants refused to accept either the note or the mortgage or the money tendered. Thereafter, this action was commenced by plaintiff against the defendants to obtain a decree of specific performance. A demurrer to the complaint—general and special—was interposed by the defendants and overruled. They answered, and after trial judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the relief prayed for. The defendants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a different judgment made under sections 663 and 663½ of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

It is insisted by appellants that their demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, on the ground that the facts alleged showed that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief prayed for. In other words, that the complaint does not show that the plaintiff offered to observe or comply with the terms of the contract upon which suit is brought. In support of this contention it is claimed that the contract did not provide that the note of plaintiff should be given in satisfaction of it as tendered; that the contract provided and meant that the note of Bradshaw, and no other person, should be given; that it called for the personal obligation and liability of Bradshaw himself, and that his assignee could not substitute her personal liability for that of Bradshaw, and compel specific performance upon tender of her own note. It is undoubtedly true that where a contract for the sale of land calls for the delivery of notes on the part of the vendee for deferred payments of the purchase price, the personal liability of the latter enters as a controlling element into the contract, and the offer or tender of notes of an assignee of the original vendee does not satisfy the terms of the contract, nor warrant such assignee in asserting a right of specific performance based upon such a tender. As said in Arkansas Valley Smelting Co. v. Belden Mining Co., 127 U. S. 379, 8 Sup. Ct. 1308, 32 L. Ed. 246: "Every one has a right to select and determine with whom he will contract, and cannot have another person thrust upon him without his consent. In the familiar phrase of Lord Denman, 'you have the right to the benefit you anticipate from the character, credit, and substance of the party with whom you contract.'" And, as declared in our Code, the burden of an obligation may not be transferred without the consent of the party entitled to the benefit. Civ. Code, § 1457. Whether a given contract is assignable or not is a question of construction. Now, as to the contract at bar. The reading of it discloses that by its terms it was assignable. It provides for a conveyance by defendants of the property to "said party of the second part [Bradshaw], his heirs, executors and assigns" upon the fulfillment of certain conditions by Bradshaw or his "heirs, executors or assigns." These, however, are general provisions of the contract, and are not conclusive upon the subject of assignability. The use of such language in a contract is not in every case absolutely determinative of its character. Swarts v. Electric Light Co., 26 R. I. 436, 59 Atl. 111. Notwithstanding its use the intention of the parties must be gathered from a consideration of the terms and entire tenor of the contract, and if upon such consideration it appears that the contract calls for the performance of an obligation purely personal in its nature, the rule in general is that the obligation, if personal, cannot be assigned without the consent of the party to be benefited. Bethlehem v. Annis, 40 N. H. 34, 77 Am. Dec. 700; Ice Co. v. Potter, 123 Mass. 28, 25 Am. Rep. 9; Arkansas, etc., v. Belden Mining Co., supra.

In Rice v. Gibbs et al., 33 Neb. 460, 50 N. W. 436, an optional contract for the sale of land was involved, wherein it was provided that the covenants and agreements should extend to and be obligatory upon the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the respective parties. The contract provided for a deed to be made by the vendor on the payment of a certain specified amount in money, other payments to be made within one and two years after the making of the deed, such deferred payments to bear interest. An assignee of the original vendee tendered the money in due time, and notes for the deferred payments, but not made by the original vendee. It was held that, notwithstanding the language of the contract, an assignee, financially irresponsible, could not substitute his own personal liability for that of the original vendee; that in a contract of sale, where payment of a portion of the purchase price is deferred, and there is no provision for securing such payment, it is a necessary inference that the character and solvency of the vendee was an inducement of the contract, and the contract cannot be assigned so as to permit the assignee to enforce it, and compel the vendor to substitute the obligation of any other person than the one with whom the contract was made. In that case, however, the notes for the deferred payments were not to be secured by any lien or mortgage upon the property to be conveyed. The contract did not so provide. The vendors obligated themselves to an absolute disposition of the property on the execution simply of promissory notes for the deferred payments, and obviously the financial responsibility of the original vendee must have entered as a controlling inducement to the contract. In this very essential respect that case differs from the case at bar. In the contract here, notwithstanding the provisions for assignability, if it appeared from a consideration of the whole contract that the personal financial responsibility of Bradshaw was a distinctive feature of it, and appeared to be the material inducement to the contract, then under the general rule it would not be assignable without the consent of the vendors, and the assignee would have no right to enforce it. But it seems quite plain from an examination of the contract that the personal financial responsibility of Bradshaw was not a material inducement for its execution. What was really relied upon was a mortgage upon the property for the unpaid portion of the purchase price, and "a promissory note" evidencing this indebtedness was to be given. It is matter of general knowledge that, upon sales of real estate, a mortgage back for a portion of the purchase price is one of the most common methods of dealing in such transactions. The mortgage is the main thing relied on, and when a substantial prior payment, as in this case, is made on the purchase price, the financial responsibility of the vendee, on the note itself evidencing the debt for the balance, is a matter of very little importance to the vendor. And in contracts for the sale of real property, which in terms run in favor of assignees, and which provide for a promissory note and mortgage to secure the balance of the purchase price, the general construction will be that the promissory note is a mere incident to the transaction, and that the principal thing relied on is the mortgage. It is a very easy matter, when reliance is intended to be placed on the financial responsibility of the original vendee, to specify in the contract that, in addition to the mortgage, his personal obligation shall be given. When this is not done, and a mortgage to secure "a promissory note" is alone called for, as in the contract here, such provision will be construed as making the giving of a mortgage, not the giving of a note, the material inducement to the contract; that under such circumstances the obligation is not personal, and may be assigned, and specific performance on proper tender had at the suit of the assignee.

Aside from this, however, it appears from the record that the defendants are estopped from questioning the sufficiency of the tender made by plaintiff. The evidence in that regard is that the agents and attorney of plaintiff within the time limited in the option—in fact fully eight days before it would have expired—made a tender at the residence of defendants some miles outside of the city of Los Angeles, in which they complied in all respects with the conditions of the contract, save that the note tendered was that of the plaintiff, and not of Bradshaw. They not only made an actual tender, but delivered also to defendants a written offer, notice, and demand covering the terms of the contract. When the actual tender was being made, defendants said they did not want the money, and did not want to hear the papers read—the note, mortgage, and deed—but at last consented to have the matter explained to them. The upshot of the effort on the part of plaintiff to have the defendants accept the tender was that they flatly refused to accept anything, or to do anything in the matter. After refusing to do so they requested Mr. Hervey, representing plaintiff, to take the papers to Mr. Denis, who was their attorney. On the following day Mr. Hervey left the papers with the latter. Subsequently, and during the eight days prior to the date limiting the exercise of the option, no word was heard concerning the matter from either appellants or their attorney. When the tender was made to the defendants at their residence, no objection to it was made on account of any noncompliance with the terms of the contract; it was not claimed or intimated that the promissory note should have been signed by Bradshaw, or that the defendants were entitled to or wanted Bradshaw's note, or that they refused the tender because the note offered was that of plaintiff, and not Bradshaw. They simply refused to accept the note or mortgage or make the deed, without assigning any other reason than that they did not want the money, and would not do so. It is provided that "the person to whom a tender is made must at the time specify any objection he may have to the money, instrument or property, or he must be deemed to have waived it, and if the objection be to the amount of money, the terms of the instrument or the amount or kind of property, he must specify the amount, terms or kind he requires or be precluded from objecting afterwards." Code Civ. Proc. § 2076. This section is applicable to the facts recited, and defendants were estopped from asserting any objection to the tender which they could or should have made at the time it was offered. Had the objection now urged been asserted then, and the tender refused on that ground, it might have been possible for the plaintiff to have obtained a tender of the note of Bradshaw. There was ample time after the tender, and before the option expired, to have done so. It appears, too, as a certainty from the record that she could have done so had it been objected that she did not. No objection having been made on that score when it should have been made, the defendants were precluded from asserting it upon the trial, or from insisting upon it now.

No other points urged for a reversal are in our judgment tenable.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied, but in disposing of it it may be said that the offer of the note of an insolvent person, made with design to escape personal responsibility, would perhaps make the contract unfair to the extent that equity would not enforce it. But this objection was fully removed by the tender of the note of Bradshaw, the original vendee, which was made at the trial, and the defendant having then refused to accept the same, the court below was fully justified in rendering the decree for performance upon making of the cash payment and giving the note of the plaintiff.

HOME & FARM CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. FREITAS. (S. F. 4,667.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 29, 1908.)

1. DEEDS—REFORMATION—MISTAKE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, in an action to reform a deed, held to show a mutual mistake whereby more land than contemplated was conveyed by an erroneous description.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 643.]

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—EVIDENCE.

While, to justify a court of equity in decreeing reformation of an instrument for mistake, proof of the mistake must be clear and convincing, a mere conflict of testimony does not necessitate a denial of the relief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Reformation of Instruments, §§ 157-193.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding on conflicting evidence on an issue of mistake in an instrument sought to be reformed for such mistake is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

4. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—DEEDS—DESCRIPTION—EFFECT.

Though a description by metes and bounds in a deed conveys the legal title to all land embraced thereby, regardless of the acreage specified, such description does not preclude a court of equity from reforming the deed so as to express the true intent of the parties.

5. SAME—DEMAND—NECESSITY FOR.

Defendant, having refused to reconvey to plaintiff land deeded to him by mistake on the ground no mistake was made, cannot complain that a demand for reformation was necessary before plaintiff could sue to reform its deed to defendant.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thomas J. Lennon, Judge.

Action by the Home & Farm Company of California against M. T. Freitas. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Cochrane and James C. Sims, for appellant. William Singer, Jr., and Guy Sharp, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to correct and reform a deed to certain lands situate in the county of Marin, upon the ground of a mutual mistake of the parties, whereby some 16 acres of land more than contemplated by the parties were conveyed by erroneous description. Judgment passed for plaintiff, and from that judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

His principal contention upon appeal is that the mistake was not mutual; that whatever may have been in the mind of the grantor, as to himself, the grantee, he received only such land as he understood he was to receive. Plaintiff most satisfactorily established the following facts, many of them from the mouth of defendant himself, others undisputed by him: Defendant had negotiated with Mr. Chatfield, a real estate agent, for the purchase of certain of plaintiff's lands. The negotiations resulted in an agreement for the purchase and sale of the following lands, at the prices given:

140.25 acres, lot 11, division B, at $54 per acre	$7,573 50
30 acres, hill land, division B, at $12 per acre	360 00
60 acres, lot 12, division C, at $12 per acre	720 00
Total	$8,653 50

After this agreement had been entered into, it was discovered by Mr. Chatfield that there had been sold to other persons part of the 30-acre tract of hill land in division B, which reduced the acreage of that tract about half. Then, in order to make up the 171 acres in division B which Mr. Freitas desired, the surveyor was instructed to take an equivalent quantity of adjoining lands in division B. This he did, but in so doing it was necessary to substitute for the 15 or 16 acres of hill land at $12 per acre an equal amount of level reclaimed land valued at $54 per acre. Plaintiff then caused its deed to be prepared upon March 31st, conveying to defendant:

156.71 acres at $54, division B	$8,462 34
14.29 acres at $12, division B	171 48
60.00 acres at $12, division C	720 00

Total $9,353 82

While under the deed thus tendered defendant Freitas was to have received the exact amount of acreage provided for by his contract with Mr. Chatfield, the cost of the land, by reason of the substitution of 15 acres of reclaimed land for the hill land was $700.32 more than the purchase price originally agreed upon. Upon this Mr. Freitas refused to accept the deed and pay the money, demanding title to the land for which he had originally contracted. Plaintiff explained its inability to make conveyance because of the sale of 15 acres of the hill land, and offered to restore the deposit paid by Freitas, which he refused to accept. Eventually, and at Mr. Freitas' demand, the matter was adjusted. In Mr. Freitas' own language: "I got to thinking the matter over, and I says: 'You got 55 acres of land there adjoining lot 12, division C. If you would sell me that land for $12 per acre, just as I paid for the 60 acres adjoining, I would take that extra land of that survey and pay you the price, and I don't want any more difficulty about the surveys.' * * * Mr. Perkins requested me to wait a few minutes; that he would communicate with Mr. Mills again. I did so, and his reply was that Mr. Mills refused to sign such an agreement, and then I told Mr. Sims I wanted him to file a complaint compelling those people to live up to their agreement. * * * The next day Mr. Sims telephoned me that he had a message from Mr. Mills stating that rather than go to law he would let me have this land as it was surveyed off by Mr. Lepoids, and the 60 acres, and 55 acres of lots 12 and 13, division C, for the lump sum of $10,013 and some odd cents, according to the proposition which I made to Mr. Perkins. He wanted to know if it was satisfactory to me. I said: 'Yes, go ahead and have deeds made to that effect.'" It thus appears from the defendant's testimony that he agreed to take the following land at the following prices:

156.71 acres, division B, at $54 per acre	$ 8,462 34
14.29 acres, division B, at $12 per acre	171 48
60.00 acres, division C, at $12 per acre	720 00
55.00 acres, division C, at $12 per acre	660 00
286.00	Total.... $10,013 82

In accordance with this agreement a deed was prepared and executed by the Home & Farm Company to Freitas, which was accepted by him. In the map, however, which was used, and which was supposed accurately to follow the survey by Mr. Lepoids, plaintiff's engineer, a false line had been drawn, not in accordance with the surveyor's notes. The description in the deed followed the boundaries as shown upon the map, and in so doing included some 15 or 16 acres more than was called for by the true survey—more than the 286 acres actually purchased by defendant. This error in delineating the course, lines, and distances of the survey upon the map is clearly shown and established by a comparison between the field notes and the map, and by the testimony of Mr. Gibbs, who actually drew the map. The result was that in division B, of which division under his deed Freitas was to take 156.71 acres at $54 an acre, and 14.29 acres at $12 an acre, there was an excess over this amount of land of 15 or 16 acres. This is admitted by appellant. The location of the faulty line is shown also by the evidence, and thus is established the situs of the excess acreage. This error was soon discovered by plaintiff, and it prepared and presented to Mr. Freitas a deed for his execution, reconveying this excess land so by mistake conveyed to him. Mr. Lepoids, the engineer of plaintiff, saw Mr. Freitas and explained to him the mistake. He was referred by Mr. Freitas to Mr. Sims, his attorney. Mr. Lepoids with his map and deed went to Mr. Sims, explained the matter, and offered the correction deed. The defendant's answer does not deny that he refused to correct the mistake, but expressly alleges that no mistake was made.

That the statement above given establishes a clear case of mistake is at once apparent. The only question upon this point is whether there was such mutuality in the mistake as to authorize a court of equity to correct it. But in this connection it is to be remembered, as was said by this court in Sullivan v. Moorhead, 99 Cal. 157, 33 Pac. 796, that while, to justify a court of equity in decreeing the reformation of a written instrument on the ground of mistake, the proof of the mistake must be clear, convincing, and satisfactory to the court, "yet a mere conflict of testimony as to the mistake does not necessitate a denial of the relief (Hutchinson v. Ainsworth, 73 Cal. 452, 15 Pac. 82, 2 Am. St. Rep. 823; Wilson v. Moriarity, 88 Cal. 211, 26 Pac. 85), and the decision of the trial court upon such conflict of evidence is conclusive upon this court." The most that can be said for Freitas' position, which is to the effect that no mistake was made, and that he "paid the balance of that $700.32 for the extra acreage they claimed was on lot 11, division B," is that it is against the weight of evidence. Plaintiff was not claiming extra acreage in division B. It was asking for the substitution of an equivalent acreage of greater value. It is a mere coincidence that this substituted acreage amounted to about 15 acres, while the deed actually made conveyed about 15 acres excess. It is shown throughout that the tracts, pieces, and parcels of land were not valued as a whole, but were specifically and differently valued in acreage valuations in accordance with the quality and location of the land. Mr. Freitas' own testimony is that it was agreed that he was to have the land "as it was surveyed off by Mr. Lepoids." Mr. Lepoids' survey was correct. The error that occurred originated in the draftman's mistake which was carried into the deed. As shown by the transaction, Mr. Freitas had never sought for nor contracted for more than 171 acres in division B, and yet he is seeking to hold 16 acres more than it was ever in contemplation that he should purchase. In emphasizing the fact that the defendant obtained more than the exact acreage which he had contracted to purchase, we are not unmindful of the principle that a description of land in a deed by metes and bounds conveys the legal title to all of the land embraced within such boundaries, regardless of the acreage which may be specified in the deed; but nevertheless it is true that such a description does not preclude a court of equity from reforming such a deed so as to express the true intent of the parties. 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 826; Kocher v. Hayford, 59 Cal. 316; Stevens v. Holman, 112 Cal. 345, 44 Pac. 670, 53 Am. St. Rep. 216; Capelli v. Dondero, 123 Cal. 324, 55 Pac. 1057. The court's finding of the mistake and of its mutuality is well supported and will not be disturbed. Where a defendant in such an action is seeking to hold more than he is justly entitled to, and where the very issue in the action is the mutuality of the mistake, the trial court is compelled to decide upon conflicting evidence, and, if a mere denial of the defendant that he was mistaken is to suffice, it must result in every case that where such denial is made the plaintiff must fail of relief. Such, as has been above shown, however, is not the law.

As to the further propositions advanced by defendant, the one that a demand for reformation was necessary before action commenced (Black v. Stone, 33 Ala. 327; Brainerd v. Arnold, 27 Conn. 617), it is sufficient to say, as pointed out above, that a request for a correction deed reconveying the property was made by the engineer and surveyor of plaintiff upon defendant, by defendant referred to his attorney, and by both refused, as appears by the answer, upon the ground that no mistake had been made. As to the final proposition advanced, that the court in reforming and correcting the deed erred in segregating the specific tract of land which it decreed had been erroneously conveyed, it is made apparent by the pleading just what the error in the deed was and the exact description of the land erroneously conveyed. These allegations of the complaint are abundantly supported by the evidence, so that the specific acreage was clearly shown. It was this acreage as to which the court decreed a reformation of the deed.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

In re WICKERSHAM'S ESTATE.

(S. F. 4,720.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 19, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—LIBERAL CONSTRUCTION.

By the express provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 452, in the construction of a pleading, for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 66-75.]

2. SAME—CONCLUSIONS.

A pleading showing the consideration of a contract need not aver that it was full and adequate, as this would be but the conclusion of the pleader, and useless.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 12-28½.]

3. CONTRACTS—SUFFICIENCY OF CONSIDERATION.

The will of one leaving a widow and four children and an estate of $612,000 gave to his son F. only $5, and recited that he had advanced to him $100,000, which was to be in full of all his interest in the estate. F. instituted a contest on the ground of incompetency of testator, and undue influence. Outside of her interest in her husband's estate the widow had only $15,000. In consideration of the release of a claim for $15,000 owed by F. to his father, and of one for $3,500 owed his mother, and the payment to him of $28,000 by his mother, brother, and sisters, he surrendered all interest in his father's estate, and all prospective interest in his mother's estate, and agreed not to contest any testamentary disposition of her property. Held, on a contest of her will by his heirs, that the consideration was adequate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 231, 232, 291-295.]

4. WILLS—CONTEST—CONTINUANCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The matter of postponing hearing of a will contest till final distribution of the estate of another is in the discretion of the trial court.

5. SAME—JURISDICTION—PROBATE COURT.

The trial of the question of whether one petitioning for revocation of probate of a will is interested, and so entitled, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, to contest the will, or whether he lost all by a conveyance of his expectant estate, is within the jurisdiction of the probate court.

6. CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—PUBLIC POLICY.

A conveyance of a prospective interest in the estate of an ancestor, and an agreement not to contest a testamentary disposition thereof by the ancestor, is not against public policy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 498-509.]

7. JURY—WAIVER OF RIGHT—DELAY IN REQUEST.

A request for a jury after the trial of the issue had begun is too late.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, §§ 159-165.]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

The court having subsequently rightly concluded that one petitioning for revocation of probate of a will had no interest in the estate, and so was not entitled to contest the will, there could be no error in its denial of his application for a jury to try the validity of the will.

9. CONTRACTS—CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE.

A contract reciting very fully the negotiations leading to its execution, and its consideration and purpose, is prima facie evidence of all the facts necessary to its validity, including its consideration.

10. TRIAL—FINDINGS OF FACT.

A finding of the facts bearing thereon, without an express finding on the question of consideration, is sufficient.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

That the evidence is conflicting, as to the making of false representations, is sufficient to prevent revision of the finding thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

12. JUDGMENT.

Any adjudication on appeal from a decree of distribution of the estate of W. as to the right of his son F. in that estate cannot be res judicata as to his right to inherit from his mother.

13. APPEAL AND ERROR—LAW OF THE CASE.

Any remarks in the opinion on appeal from decree of distribution of the estate of W. cannot be the law of the case in a proceeding to contest the will of his widow.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4369-4379.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Petition by Cora L. Wickersham and another against Lizzie C. Maclay and others, proponents of the will of Lydia C. Wickersham, deceased, to revoke probate of the will. From an adverse judgment, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Francis J. Heney and Cowan & Julliard, for appellants. Lippitt & Lippitt, Campbell, Metson & Campbell, Thomas J. Geary, and Thomas H. Breeze, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from a judgment declaring the appellants estopped from asserting any interest in the estate of the deceased, adjudging that they are not interested in said estate, and dismissing their petitions to revoke the probate of the will of said deceased.

Lydia C. Wickersham died on February 10, 1900, leaving as next of kin four children, namely, Frank P. Wickersham, Frederick A. Wickersham, Lizzie C. Wickersham, and May L. Bergevin. On March 27, 1900, the will of said deceased was duly admitted to probate by the superior court. Frank P. Wickersham died on March 14, 1900, leaving surviving as his sole heirs at law the appellants Cora L. Wickersham, his widow, and I. G. Wickersham, his minor son. Thereafter petitions of the appellants to revoke said probate were filed, and the respondents filed answers thereto. The questions for decision upon this appeal arise out of the allegations of the paragraphs numbered 1 in the answers to the respective petitions of the appellants to revoke such probate, and upon the judgment of the court rendered upon the trial of the issues presented by said paragraphs. The purport of the part of the answers in question is that the appellants are not persons interested in the estate of the deceased Lydia C. Wickersham, because of the fact alleged that Frank P. Wickersham, prior to the death of his mother, executed to his mother Lydia C. Wickersham and to his brother and sisters, the respondents herein, a contract whereby he conveyed to his said brother and sisters all his prospective right, title, interest, and estate as heir, legatee, or devisee of Lydia C. Wickersham in and to all of the property of which she might die possessed, and agreed with all of said parties that he would not thereafter assert any right, title, or interest as heir or otherwise of the said Lydia C. Wickersham to the estate owned or possessed by her at her death, nor in any manner or to any extent question, dispute, or contest any disposition of her property made by her by deed, contract, or will. The due execution of this contract was admitted. The court found that it was valid and binding upon the appellants, and thereupon it adjudged that they were not persons interested in the estate of Lydia C. Wickersham, deceased, and entered the judgment above mentioned, dismissing their petitions.

The appellants demurred to this paragraph of the answer on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense or to show that the appellants are not persons interested in said estate. The principal defect urged to the sufficiency of this part of the answer is that it does not appear therefrom that the consideration paid to said Frank P. Wickersham for the contract set forth therein was adequate. Their contention is that a contract of this kind, whereby an heir conveys his prospective interest in the estate of his ancestor, or agrees not to contest or question the disposition thereof made by the will, is invalid unless it is founded upon a full and adequate consideration, and is entered into fairly and freely by the party against whom it is asserted, and that a person who seeks to enforce such a contract against an heir or his successors, or to estop such heir or successors from claiming their share of the estate, or from contesting a disposition by will, must allege and prove that the consideration was full and adequate, and that the contract was fairly obtained. It must be conceded that this is the general rule applicable to ordinary cases where the heir conveys his expectancy to a third person, or agrees with the other heirs before the death of the ancestor not to contest a testamentary disposition. 2 Pom. Equity, § 953; 5 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 769. The leading case on the subject in this state is Estate of Garcelon, 104 Cal. 570, 38 Pac. 414, 32 L. R. A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134. In that case the particular point of the inadequacy of the consideration was not raised, but in the discussion the necessity of an adequate consideration is fully recognized. We think, however, that upon a fair construction of the portion of the answer relating to this subject it will be found sufficient in that respect. It is often said that a pleading is to be construed most strongly against the pleader. This is the usual expression of the rule, but the true and accurate statement thereof, and the one binding upon courts, is that contained in section 452 of the Code of Civil Procedure: "In the construction of a pleading, for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties." There is no direct averment that the consideration to Frank P. Wickersham was full and adequate. Such a statement would have been useless, for it would have been a mere conclusion of the pleader. The adequacy of the consideration must appear from the facts stated. White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 616, 87 Pac. 193; Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 171, 66 Pac. 231.

The answer relating to this estoppel shows that the entire estate of Lydia C. Wickersham, with the exception of some $15,000, which was her separate property, consisted of her interest in the estate of her husband, I. G. Wickersham, who died on June 20, 1899, leaving an estate of the value of $612,163. He left a will bequeathing to Frank P. Wickersham the sum of $5, and declaring that he had advanced to him about $100,000, which was to be in full of all his interest in his father's estate. On June 26, 1899, this will was filed for probate, and on July 10, 1899, Frank initiated a contest thereof, upon the grounds that I. G. Wickersham was incompetent, of unsound mind, and under the undue influence of his brother Fred and his sister Lizzie at the time the will was executed. His mother, brother, and sisters were much grieved and mortified at the allegations of his written opposition to the probate of the will, and eager and desirous to avoid publicity and the notoriety which would result from the trial of the contest and the scandal of a family quarrel. Frank was at that time indebted to his father's estate in the sum of $15,000 and to his mother in the sum of $3,500. Thereupon negotiations were entered into between him and his mother, brother and sisters to compromise the contest of the will of his father and to effect a final settlement and adjustment of all title of Frank to the property constituting the estate of his father and all his prospective interest in the estate of his mother, to avoid a family quarrel and dissension, to preserve and protect the name and memory of the father, to avoid the expense of protracted litigation, to secure the speedy distribution of the estate of his father, and to guard against similar attacks by Frank or his heirs upon any disposition that might then or thereafter be made by Lydia C. Wickersham, his mother, of her estate. Frank took an active part in the negotiations, was assisted therein by the appellant Cora L. Wickersham and by the attorney he had employed to prosecute his contest, and at all times consulted with them. All the data, memoranda, books of account, records, facts, and things whereby he could ascertain the nature and situation of the property constituting the estate of his father and of his mother and could ascertain the value thereof were at all times during and pending said negotiations at the disposal and subject to the inspection of Frank and his attorney, and they made careful and diligent search and inquiry concerning the same, and knew the exact nature, location, and value of each piece and parcel of property belonging to both of said estates. As a result of these negotiations, the compromise and family settlement of all the matters under consideration was effected. Lydia C. Wickersham agreed to release to Frank his indebtedness to her and to the estate of his father, and to surrender and deliver the notes given by him for said debts, and to pay him $28,000 in cash, upon condition that he would dismiss his opposition to the probate of his father's will, and accept said release, surrenders, and moneys in full and complete satisfaction and settlement of all right, title, and interest in his father's estate, would grant, bargain, and sell unto his mother, brother, and sisters whatever interest he had therein, and all prospective interest in the estate of his mother, and would agree not to question, dispute, or contest any testamentary or other disposition of her property made by her. In pursuance of this agreement the contract in question was executed on August 29, 1899, embodying the terms agreed on as above stated. This contract is made a part of the answer, and is set forth in full therein. It declares that at the time of executing it Frank P. Wickersham was not under duress, menace, or in any wise coerced or forced into the making thereof by any cause or person whatever, and that he made the same with a full knowledge of the value of the property conveyed. Thereupon he dismissed his opposition to the probate of the will of his father, the indebtedness owing by him was released, and his mother, brother, and sisters paid him the sum of $28,000 as agreed upon. No part or portion of the money thus paid has ever been restored or offered to the respondents, or to Lydia C. Wickersham, or to her personal representatives. At the time the answer in question was filed the time for filing claims against Frank's estate had expired, and no claim for the indebtedness above mentioned had ever been filed or presented. His estate was, therefore, effectually released from the payment of the said debts.

The total amount received by Frank P. Wickersham as a consideration for this conveyance and agreement was $46,500, aside from the accrued interest upon his debts. Adding to the estate of the father the $100,000 advanced to him would make $713,000 for division among the four children in the event that both his father and mother had died intestate. His one-fourth interest in this would be $178,000, of which there would be due him, after deducting his advancements, $78,000. The amount he received was therefore some $31,500 less than he might have received had he been successful in contesting the wills of his father and mother respectively. In this adjustment the two estates are considered as one, the advancement added to the total, and charged against Frank in the division. It is just and equitable to do this for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of the consideration. If nothing more were to be considered than these bare figures, it would be obvious that the consideration received by him was not adequate. But very much more than this is involved. His father had made a will practically disinheriting him. He was fully advised of all the facts relating to his proposed contest, and must be presumed to have been well advised by his attorney as to his prospect of success. His mother was living and had the full right to follow her husband's example, and dispose of her property without giving him any share thereof. The answer does not contain any averments as to the mother's disposition towards him, aside from the fact that she agreed to the compromise that was made, and presumably insisted upon the terms there stated. It may be assumed, therefore, that this contribution from her estate to him was all that she desired to give him. His chance of obtaining any part of her estate was, at best, remote and contingent. He had in advance received $11,000 more than his due share as heir of his father. He was about to enter upon a protracted and expensive litigation, involving all the bitterness and feeling, passion, and strife usually engendered by such family contests, and this settlement was intended, not only to give him a share of the estate, but to settle all these disputes, to end litigation, and prevent further dissension, bad feeling, and quarrels. It appears from the allegations that it was satisfactory to him, that he had full knowledge of all the facts, and that he acted freely and without coercion. It is claimed by the respondents that it is not necessary to show the adequacy of the consideration in cases where the contract is made with the ancestor, and in support of this position they cite the decision of Estate of Edelman, 148 Cal. 237, 82 Pac. 962, 113 Am. St. Rep. 231. This seems to be the effect of the decision in that case, but it is not necessary to rest our decision upon that ground, inasmuch as we think that, under the circumstances, it must be conceded that the answer sufficiently shows a reasonably adequate and full consideration for the conveyance of his interest in his mother's estate and for his agreement not to dispute the validity of her will. The demurrer was properly overruled.

The appellants contend that the court abused its discretion in denying their application to postpone the hearing of the contest until after the determination of the proceedings then pending for the final distribution of the estate of I. G. Wickersham, deceased. This was a matter that was entirely within the discretion of the trial court. We can see nothing in the facts which show any abuse of that discretion. There is nothing in the contention that the court had no jurisdiction to try the issue of estoppel based upon the conveyance of the expectant interest of Frank P. Wickersham to the respondents. The Code provides that, when a will has been admitted to probate, "any person interested may, at any time within one year, after such probate, contest the same or the validity of the will." Code Civ. Proc. § 1327. In order to be entitled to make this contest, therefore, the petitioner must show that he is interested in the estate of the deceased. This statement that he is interested may be denied by the respondents and an issue will thus be raised, which the court must necessarily decide, either immediately before proceeding with the contest, or simultaneously with the decision of the issues raised as to the validity of the will. It is within the discretion of the court to control the order of proof and require the contestant first to establish his interest. Estate of Edelman, 148 Cal. 236, 82 Pac. 962, 113 Am. St. Rep. 231. The court had jurisdiction of the contest of the will, and it must, therefore, have jurisdiction to determine all preliminary matters relating thereto and concerning the right and interest of the contestant. The opinion in Estate of Ryder, 141 Cal. 368, 74 Pac. 993, is not contrary to this proposition. That case related to the power of the court in proceedings upon distribution of an estate to determine an issue attempted to be made between the grantee of an heir apparent and an heir as to the validity of the deed under which the grantee claimed. It was there held that the jurisdiction of the superior court in probate was entirely statutory, and that the statute relating to distribution did not give the court power to entertain or decide such questions in connection with the making of distribution; that the statutory method was to distribute the estate to the heir apparent, and leave him and his grantee to settle the question of the validity of the conveyance of his interest in any appropriate manner, by a distinct suit in a court of competent jurisdiction. The proposition that a conveyance of a prospective interest in the estate of an ancestor, and an agreement not to contest any disposition thereof made by the will of such ancestor, is not against public policy, but is valid and binding, if founded on an adequate consideration, was fully settled by this court by the decision in Estate of Garcelon, supra.

After the court had begun the trial of the preliminary issue as to the interest of the contestants and the evidence of the proponents on that question was closed, the contestants demanded a trial by jury of the issues arising upon the petition of the contestants and the answer thereto. The court denied the application, and this ruling is assigned as error. If the contestants intended thereby to obtain a trial by jury of the issues with respect to their interest in the estate, the request was properly denied, because it came after the trial had begun. If their purpose was to secure a trial by jury of the issues arising with respect to the validity of the will of the deceased, there could be no error in refusing it, inasmuch as the court rightfully, as we have concluded, held that they had no interest, and that there would be no trial of the contest attempted to be initiated by them.

The proponents, upon the trial of their answer in estoppel, introduced in evidence the contract set up therein, and thereupon rested their case upon that issue. The contestants then moved for judgment in their favor upon the plea of estoppel, upon the ground that it had not been shown that the consideration paid by the contract was adequate, or that it was fair, just, and equitable as to Frank P. Wickersham, or fairly obtained from him. The motion was denied, and this ruling was also assigned as error. We think there was no error in this ruling. The contract recited very fully the negotiations leading up to its execution and the consideration, purposes, and intention of the agreement, and was prima facie evidence of all the facts necessary to give it validity and effect.

It is earnestly contended by the contestants that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the court that the contract was fairly obtained, or that it was just and reasonable and founded upon an adequate consideration. There was in our opinion sufficient evidence to support the findings in these particulars. There is no express finding that there was an adequate consideration for the contract. The facts alleged in the answer bearing upon that subject are repeated in the findings, however, and this, as before stated, makes a sufficient showing on that point. It is claimed that the evidence shows, without conflict, that the contract was obtained by means of false representations made to Frank to the effect that his mother had at that time executed a will, and that his father's estate was separate property. The evidence is conflicting as to the making of the representations referred to, and this is sufficient to prevent a revision of the finding of the court on the subject. Furthermore, there is evidence tending to show that Frank did not make the agreement on the theory that his father's property was separate estate, but that, for the purpose of adjusting the amount to be paid him, all the parties assumed that it was community property. There is also sufficient evidence to show that at the time of the negotiations leading up to the contract his mother had in fact made an oligraphic will disinheriting him.

It is contended that the statements of this court in the opinion in the case of Estate of Wickersham, 138 Cal. 355, 70 Pac. 1076, 71 Pac. 437, constitute some sort of an adjudication that Frank in his lifetime and after his mother's death still held the legal title to his interest as heir in her estate, notwithstanding his previous conveyance thereof to his brother and sisters. The point is not very important, inasmuch as it is the equitable right thereto and not the legal title which is here in controversy. But it is impossible that the opinion in that case could have the effect claimed. That case was an appeal from a decree of distribution of the estate of I. G. Wickersham, and the only right involved, so far as Frank was concerned, was his right to that estate. His right of inheritance from his mother was not involved and could not be adjudicated. Nor could any remarks in the opinion in that case constitute the law of this case, so as to be binding on this court regardless of its legal soundness. Not being a former appeal in the same case, the doctrine of the law of the case does not apply.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NILSON v. SARMENT. (S. F. 4,530.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1908.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE—"COMMUNITY PROPERTY"—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE—PRESUMPTION—"SEPARATE PROPERTY."

Civ. Code, §§ 162, 163, define the separate property of the spouses as that owned by them, respectively, before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, and section 164 declares that all other property acquired after marriage by a husband or wife or both is community property. This section was amended in 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219) by the addition of a provision that, whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title vests in her as her separate property. Held that, prior to the amendment, the presumption was that the property conveyed to either husband or wife after marriage by a conveyance other than a deed of gift vested the title in the community.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Husband and Wife, §§ 913-914.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1343, 1344; vol. 8, p. 7608; vol. 7, pp. 6415, 6417; vol. 8, p. 7797.]

2. SAME—STATUTES—RETROACTIVE OPERATION. St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219, amending Civil Code, § 164, providing that, whenever property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is vested in her as her separate property, was not retroactive and had no application to property acquired by husband or wife before its enactment.

3. SAME—CONVEYANCE TO WIFE—REQUISITES. To make land conveyed to a married woman her separate property, it is necessary either that it should have been acquired with her separate funds or should have been given to her.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Husband and Wife, §§ 424-429.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—RECITALS IN DEED.

Where land in controversy was purchased by a husband for a home for himself and family, the title being taken in the name of the wife, the fact that the deed described the land as incumbered by a mortgage on which $2,900 (the entire purchase price) was due and to be paid by the wife was insufficient to show an intention on the part of the husband to give the land to the wife or that the land was the wife's separate property, it appearing that no part of such consideration was ever paid by the wife, and that in fact $1,200 of the amount had been paid by the husband before the deed was delivered.

5. SAME—INSURANCE—DEEDS OF TRUST—RECITALS.

Where property in question was conveyed to a wife, the fact that insurance was effected thereon by the husband and the loss made payable to the wife, and that deeds of trust made by the husband and wife to secure loans of money provided for a reconveyance to the wife on payment of the loans, was not evidence that the husband recognized the property as the separate property of the wife, rather than as belonging to the community.

6. SAME—CLAIMS OF WIFE.

A wife's claims of ownership of land as her separate property were not binding on the husband except in so far as made with his knowledge and assented to by him.

7. SAME—ADMISSIONS.

That plaintiff's wife owning title to certain land in her own name told him within a year before the sale to defendant that she would like or was about to sell the property, to which plaintiff objected, saying she could not sell it unless he signed the deeds, was not an admission by plaintiff that the land was the wife's separate property, or that she had any right to sell it.

8. SAME—EVIDENCE—FINDINGS.

Evidence held insufficient to warrant a finding that a husband directed a conveyance of land purchased with community funds to be made to his wife with intent to vest her with the title as her separate property.

9. SAME—ESTOPPEL.

A provision in a deed of trust of land, the title to which stood in the name of a wife, but which was, in fact, community property, that, in case of a sale of the land on foreclosure of the deed, a surplus of the proceeds, if any, should be paid to the wife, was insufficient to estop the husband, as against the purchaser of the land from the wife with notice that she was a married woman, to claim that the land was community property.

10. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

Where, after separation of husband and wife, she conveyed the homestead, the title to which was in her name, to defendant, who had notice that she was a married woman, and that the husband was actually residing on the property, but made no inquiry from him as to the state of the title, taking, instead, a warranty deed from the wife which was unusual, he was not a bona fide purchaser.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Carl August Nilson against Antonio A. Sarment. From a decree in favor of defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Fred L. Stewart and C. E. Arnold, for appellant. Sam Bell McKee (F. L. De Freitas, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to quiet title to a parcel of land in the city of Oakland. The complaint alleges that plaintiff and Emma Christina Nilson were married in 1877, and ever since have been husband and wife; that in July, 1884, plaintiff purchased the land in question from one John Ziegenbein; that the deed from Ziegenbein named Emma Christina Nilson, as sole grantee, but that the whole consideration for the conveyance was paid by plaintiff out of moneys earned by him during his marriage; and that the deed was taken in the name of Emma Christina Nilson, as grantee, for the marital community of plaintiff and his said wife. It is further alleged that in January, 1905, Emma Christina Nilson executed and delivered to defendant an instrument purporting to convey said land to him, and that defendant claims an interest in the land by virtue of said instrument. The answer alleges that Emma Christina Nilson purchased the property with her separate funds, that the deed to her was made with plaintiff's consent; and that plaintiff, at the time of the purchase from Ziegenbein, gave to his wife whatever interest he had in the property. It is further averred that Emma Christina Nilson entered into possession and retained possession of the property until her deed to defendant; that during all that time she, with plaintiff's knowledge, approval, and consent, asserted her separate ownership of the land and dealt with it as her separate property; that she insured the building on the land, and had the loss mentioned in the policies made payable to her; and that on various occasions she borrowed money, giving as security therefor deeds of trust executed by herself and the plaintiff, such deeds of trust providing that, in the event of payment, the property should be reconveyed to her, and, in case of default and sale, any surplus of the proceeds should be paid to her. The defendant alleges that the plaintiff's wife represented to him that the property was her separate property, that he caused the title to be searched and was advised that the title was in her, and, upon careful inquiry as to the ownership, learned that she had, with plaintiff's consent, claimed the property as her own and dealt with it as her separate property, whereupon the defendant purchased it of her, paying her the sum of $2,300. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint, asking judgment for the possession of the property and damages for its withholding. The court found against plaintiff's allegation that the land was, or ever had been, the community property of himself and his wife. It found that the whole consideration was paid by plaintiff out of moneys earned by him during his marriage with his said wife, but that plaintiff directed Ziegenbein to execute the deed to Emma Christina Nilson and gave to her whatever interest he had in said property. Judgment in favor of defendant quieting his title against plaintiff and awarding him the possession of the premises, together with the value of their use and occupation, followed. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The principal point urged by appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the property was not community property, but that it was the separate property of plaintiff's wife. Sections 162 and 163 of the Civil Code define the separate property of the spouses as that owned by them, respectively, before marriage, and that acquired afterward by gift, bequest, devise, or descent. By section 164 all other property acquired after marriage by husband or wife, or both, is declared to be community property. In 1889 this section was amended by the addition of the words, "but whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing, the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property." Prior to the adoption of this amendment the presumption was just the opposite; that is to say, property conveyed to either husband or wife after their marriage by a conveyance (other than a deed of gift) was presumed to have vested the title in the marital community. Tolman v. Smith, 85 Cal. 280, 24 Pac. 743; Smith v. Smith, 12 Cal. 224, 73 Am. Dec. 533; Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 247, 73 Am. Dec. 538; Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 38, 87 Am. Dec. 103; Morgan v. Lones, 78 Cal. 58, 20 Pac. 248; Jordan v. Fay, 98 Cal. 264, 33 Pac. 95; Gwynn v. Dierssen, 101 Cal. 563, 36 Pac. 103; Lewis v. Burns, 122 Cal. 358, 55 Pac. 132. The property in question was acquired by the Nilsons (or one of them) in 1884. It is thoroughly settled that the amendment of 1889 is not retroactive, and has no application to property acquired by husband or wife before its enactment. Jordan v. Fay, supra; Gwynn v. Dierssen, supra; Lewis v. Burns, supra. In Jordan v. Fay the court, speaking of this amendment, said: "But the rule declared by the statute was more than a rule of evidence. It was a rule of property as well; and we do not think the Legislature intended or had the power to change it so that it would be retroactive in effect and disturb titles already vested."

Was the finding as to the separate character of the property in question supported by any substantial evidence tending to overthrow the presumption resulting from the conveyance to a married person? To make the land the separate property of the wife, it was necessary, either that it should have been acquired with her separate funds or that it should have been given to her. It is to be remembered that the court finds, contrary to the averment of the answer, that the property was paid for with community funds, and the conclusion that it became the separate property of the wife must, therefore, rest upon the further finding that plaintiff gave to his wife whatever interest he had in said property. There is nothing in the evidence before the court to show that any such gift was ever made. It appears that plaintiff's wife left his home about the time she made her deed to defendant, and she was not a witness at the trial. Nor was any testimony given by Ziegenbein, the original grantor. The only witnesses who could give direct testimony regarding the circumstances surrounding the making of the deed in 1884 were the plaintiff and his brother. Both testified that the deed was made to run to Emma Christina Nilson at the suggestion of Ziegenbein, who said that "it would make no difference," and that neither she nor the plaintiff could sell the land without the signature of the other. This explanation, which is not in itself improbable, was not contradicted, but, even if we disregard it, we are left with the deed itself, which, if unexplained, raises the presumption that the land became community property, notwithstanding the fact that the wife was named as grantee. The plaintiff testified that he bought the property for a home for himself and his family, and that it was not his intention to make a gift of it to his wife. This clear and positive testimony regarding the transaction is not directly contradicted, and there is no support for the finding against it unless it can be found in some circumstances which are claimed to justify the inference that the land became the separate property of the wife.

Much stress is laid on the fact that Ziegenbein's conveyance described the land as "incumbered by a mortgage * * * on which there is now due the sum of $2,900 to be paid by the party of the second part." The party of the second part was the wife, and it is argued that this shows that the wife became bound to pay the mortgage, and thus tends to support the contention that the husband intended to make the property hers. It appears however, that the entire purchase price was only $2,900. Nothing was to be paid over and above the face of the mortgage, and, in fact, $1,200 of this had been paid by plaintiff before he ever received the deed. The most that can be claimed for the clause quoted is that it shows that the consideration was to be paid by the wife from her separate property. In view of the uncontradicted evidence that no part of the consideration was so paid, but that the plaintiff paid part of it before the execution of the deed, and eventually paid it all with community property (as is found by the court), the insertion of this clause by the grantor cannot be regarded as supporting the finding that the land was the separate property of the wife. It certainly does not tend to show a gift, which alone can be contended for under the findings. No greater force is to be attributed to the evidence that insurance was effected by the plaintiff, and that by the policies the loss was made payable to the wife. In view of the fact that the title stood of record in her name, this was the natural and ordinary course to pursue. If the house and lot, although standing in her name, were not her separate property, the circumstance that insurance money would have been payable to her in the event of loss by fire would not make that money her separate property any more than the burnt house was. In Lewis v. Burns, supra, assessment lists, assessing certain lots to the wife, were sworn to by the husband. This was held not to be an admission that they were her separate property. The method of insuring in this case stands on the same ground. The same reasoning applies to the deeds of trust made by plaintiff and his wife to secure loans of money. The provision for reconveyance, or any reconveyance actually made, had no legal effect beyond that of making the record title clear, since upon payment of the debt the purposes of the trust ceased, and the property at once, without any reconveyance, re-vested in the party or parties who had owned it before. Tyler v. Currier, 147 Cal. 31, 81 Pac. 319; MacLeod v. Moran (Cal.) 94 Pac. 604. The provisions for reconveyance or payment of surplus, contained in these deeds of trust, like the mode of effecting insurance, merely indicated that it was not desired to change the record title. That title was in the wife, but these instruments are no evidence that she held it, or that her husband recognized her as holding it, as separate rather than as community property.

The only other circumstance relied on by respondent is that the wife claimed the land as her separate property. Her claims are, of course, in no way binding on the plaintiff, except in so far as they may have been made with his knowledge and assented to by him. All that appears in this connection is that plaintiff's wife told him several times within a year or two before her sale to defendant that she would like or was about to sell the property, to which he had objected, saying that she could not sell it unless he signed the deed. This cannot be construed as an admission on his part that the land was her separate property or that she had the right to sell it. It is not questioned that where a husband purchases property with community funds, and directs the conveyance to be made to his wife, with the intent to make it her separate property, the deed will operate to vest the property in her as her separate estate. Peck v. Brummagim, 31 Cal. 441, 89 Am. Dec. 195; Woods v. Whitney, 42 Cal. 358; Jackson v. Torrence, 83 Cal. 521, 23 Pac. 695. But, to have that effect, there must in the case of a deed executed before the amendment of 1889 have been something more than the mere fact that the wife was named as grantee. There must be something appearing either in the deed or elsewhere to show an intent to make the property the separate estate of the wife. Here we find that the plaintiff, desiring to purchase a home for himself and family, bought the land in question, there being a house upon it; that, at the suggestion of the vendor he took the deed in the name of his wife; that, with his family he occupied the premises continuously from the time of the purchase; that he paid, out of his earnings the purchase price of the property, the premiums on insurance, and all loans secured by the property. He testifies that he never intended to make a gift to his wife. His dealings with the property were such as would, in the ordinary course of business, be dictated by the fact that the record title stood in his wife's name, and were in no way inconsistent with the community character of the property. There is no substantial evidence tending to show that he made a gift to his wife of his interest in the property, and the presumption that it was community property, aided, as it was, by the undisputed testimony of a party to the transaction, cannot therefore be said to have been overthrown.

It is urged that plaintiff is estopped, as against defendant, to show that the property is community property. This contention is based in part on the provision in the deeds of trust that, in case of sale, the surplus, if any, should be paid to the wife. Such provision was held, in Hoeck v. Greif, 142 Cal. 119, 75 Pac. 670, to constitute an estoppel in favor of the wife. But this ruling was not necessary to the decision, and this court in denying a rehearing in Tyler v. Currier, 147 Cal. 31, 81 Pac. 319, so stated, adding that in its opinion what was said in this connection in Hoeck v. Greif, was "not a correct statement of the law." Indeed, it seems clear that neither the execution of the deed of trust nor any of the other dealings of plaintiff with the property should be held to estop him from asserting its character as community property. Apart from other considerations, two essential elements of an estoppel are, first, that the party asserting it must have been ignorant of the true state of facts and of the means of acquiring knowledge of them; and, second, that he must have relied upon the statement or admission of the party whom he seeks to bind by such statement or admission. Biddle Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279. Neither of these elements existed in this case. The respondent knew from the Ziegenbein deed, which was of record, that his grantor was a woman. He had actual notice that she was a married woman. This was enough to put him on inquiry, and to compel him to ascertain, at his peril, whether the property was community property. Ramsdell v. Fuller, 28 Cal. 44, 87 Am. Dec. 103; McComb v. Spangler, 71 Cal. 418, 12 Pac. 347. Furthermore, plaintiff was actually residing on the property, but defendant, before purchasing, made no inquiry of him as to the state of the title. Nor did the defendant in fact rely upon any supposed admissions of plaintiff that the property belonged to his wife in her separate right. He took from Mrs. Nilson a deed containing a covenant of warranty of title. It is a matter of common knowledge that such deeds are unusual in this state. A real estate agent who represented the defendant in the transaction with Mrs. Nilson testified that he had drawn the deed, and that the reason he had made it in the form of a warranty deed was because Mr. Nilson did not sign it. There could be no stronger proof that the defendant (who was bound by the knowledge and the acts of his agent) knew that Mrs. Nilson had a husband who might have some claim upon the property, and that, instead of relying upon any representation that she was the sole owner of the property, he tried to protect himself against a possible claim on the part of her husband by taking a warranty deed. Under these circumstances there is no ground for a claim of estoppel.

It is unnecessary to consider the other points made by appellant.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

ANGELLOTTI, J. I concur.

SHAW, J. (concurring) I concur solely because under the decision in Tolman v. Smith, and the other cases cited in the opinion of Judge SLOSS, it has become settled law that the presumption was that property conveyed to the wife with the knowledge and consent of the husband was community property; that the fact that the conveyance was so made to her with his consent did not raise an inference that it was intended by him as a gift to her, or, at all events, that such inference was not sufficient to overcome the said presumption; that this had become a rule of property; and that the amendment of 1889 (St. 1889, p. 328, c. 219) to section 164 of the Civil Code, declaring that a conveyance to the wife should be presumptive evidence that the property conveyed is her separate estate, is not retroactive, and does not apply to conveyances previously made. Were it an original question, I should say the rule, prior to the amendment, should have been that such conveyance to the wife with the husband's consent was prima facie evidence that he intended the property to be a gift to her, and that the property thereby vested in her as her separate estate, that this was a rule of evidence, and that the effect and purpose of the amendment of 1889 was to declare the correct rule of evidence and abrogate the false rule previously followed by the courts, and hence that said amendment was applicable to prior transactions and was so intended. If the law had not thus been settled, it seems clear that the natural inference that a gift was intended, arising from the conveyance to the wife in this case would be presumptive evidence thereof and would support the conclusion of the trial court, notwithstanding the testimony of the husband, manifestly to his interest, that it was not so intended.

153 Cal. 585

GERMAIN FRUIT CO. v. J. K. ARMSBY CO. (L. A. 2,132, 2,139.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 15, 1908.)

1. SALES—REMEDIES OF BUYER—ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT—DAMAGES—PROFITS.

Plaintiff purchased of defendant a quantity of apricots, for shipment to and sale in Philadelphia, for the sum of $4,352.25. On arrival in Philadelphia the apricots proved not to be up to sample, and were sold in the market for $3,225.78 over and above the freight and expenses of making the sale. Had the apricots been according to sample, they would have sold in Philadelphia at the time they were sold for $4,974 in excess of freight and expenses. In an action to recover damages, the court found that plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $1,748.22, $1,126.47 being actual loss, and $621.75 being the profits which would have been made on resale if the apricots had been as warranted, and judgment was given for the actual loss and denied as to the profits. Held, that the segregation of the damages into actual loss and profits was not necessary, and that, under Civ. Code, § 3300, making damages for breach of an obligation the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, and section 3313, providing that the detriment caused by the breach of warranty of the quality of personal property is the excess of the value which the property would have had at the time to which the warranty referred over its actual value at that time, plaintiff was entitled to recover for loss of profits if the quality of the apricots was warranted to be up to sample.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 1284-1301.]

2. SAME—PLEADING.

As a purchaser of personal property who purchases for the purpose of selling the same may recover from the seller, if the property is warranted as to quality, not only the actual loss between the amount paid the seller and the amount for which the property sold, but may also recover the loss of profit, and recover both as general damages, it is not necessary that he allege a specific amount as profits in an action to recover damages for breach of warranty.

3. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE AFFECTING WRITINGS—ADDING TO TERMS OF WRITING—CONTRACTS OF SALE—WARRANTY.

Plaintiff purchased a quantity of apricots from defendant under the following written agreement: "This agreement made by and between the J. K. Armsby Co. and the Germain Fruit Company, witnesseth: That the said J. K. Armsby Co. has this day sold and the said Germain Fruit Company has this day bought twenty-five hundred boxes apricots, more or less, consisting of: Lot A, 287 boxes, Lot K, 104 boxes, Lot C, 1400 boxes, Lot E, 715 boxes, at seven (7) cents per pound plus one per cent net cash f. o. b. cars at Pomona, on surrender of bill of lading; shipment to be made during the month of October, 1901." Held, in an action to recover damages for breach of warranty as to quality, that parol evidence that it was agreed that the apricots were to be equal in quality to the sample used in making the sale was inadmissible.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the Germain Fruit Company against the J. K. Armsby Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying its motion to vacate the judgment and enter a judgment for an increased amount, and defendant appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. Judgment reversed on appeal of defendant.

L. A. No. 2,132: Herbert Cutler Brown, for appellant. Max Loewenthal, for respondent.

L. A. No. 2,139: Max Loewenthal, for appellant. Herbert Cutler Brown, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The appeals in this case, of which there are two, were originally presented to the district court of appeal for the Second Appellate District, but, the judges thereof being unable to agree in a judgment therein, the appeals were ordered to this court for disposition. Accompanying such order are the opinions filed by the respective judges of the district court of appeal. One of said opinions is as follows:

"Judgment was for plaintiff and both parties appeal. In view of the conclusion reached and the order made, it is deemed advisable to consider the two appeals together. Plaintiff's appeal (No. 149) is from an order denying its motion to vacate and set aside the judgment in the cause and to enter a different judgment, increasing the amount thereof. Defendant's appeal No. 154 is from the whole judgment and from an order denying its motion for a new trial. The action was brought to recover damages for breach of warranty of quality of dried apricots sold by defendant to plaintiff. The damages claimed ($1,748.22) were alleged in the amended complaint to be $1,126.47 for the loss actually sustained by the breach complained of, and $621.75, profits which plaintiff alleges it would have made if the goods had been as warranted. The contract between the parties, which was reduced to writing, was silent as to any warranty of the goods, but parol evidence was admitted by the court, on behalf of plaintiff, for the purpose of establishing that the sale was made upon an express warranty by sample. It is claimed by defendant that this was error, and that the findings upon which the judgment is based are unsupported without this parol evidence.

"The findings material here show: The plaintiff purchased a lot of dried apricots from defendant to be resold in the markets in cities east of the Rocky Mountains. The defendant, knowing such purpose, warranted said fruit to be according to certain samples delivered to plaintiff. The fruit was in Pomona and the sale took place in Los Angeles and plaintiff relied upon such samples for quality and weight (the number of boxes being given) and had no opportunity to inspect the bulk of the fruit. Plaintiff paid to defendant the full amount of the purchase price, to wit, $4,352.25, and delivery for shipment was made f. o. b. cars at Pomona, as agreed. Plaintiff, without examination, shipped the fruit to the city of Philadelphia for sale, where its representative, on inspection, discovered it to be inferior in quality to the samples shown, and light in weight. After notice to defendant and the refusal of the latter to take any action in the matter, plaintiff sold the apricots in the market at Philadelphia for $3,225.78 over and above the freight and usual and necessary expenses of making the sale, which was the best price obtainable for such apricots. Had the apricots been of the quality of the samples exhibited to plaintiff, they could and would have been sold by it in Philadelphia for the sum of $4,974, in excess of freight and expenses of sale. As an inference from these facts, the court finds that by reason of such breach of warranty plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $1,748.22; $1,126.47 being actual loss and $621.75 being the profits which would have been made on resale if the apricots had been as warranted. Judgment is then given for $1,126.47 and denied as to the $621.75, profits. Argumentatively, and as a conclusion of law based on specific findings made, the reason for not including the 'profits' in the judgment is stated by the court in its findings to be 'that defendant did not have notice that plaintiff intended to sell said apricots in any specific market, or at any definite price.' Plaintiff claims that on the findings of fact made it was entitled to a judgment for $1,748.22.

"Plaintiff's Appeal (No. 149).

"Considering first the plaintiff's appeal (No. 149), which involves but one question and must be determined from the judgment roll, we are of the opinion that the segregation of the damages into actual loss and profits in such a case as this is not necessary under the statute. 'Speculative' profits are one thing and that portion of the price of goods having an actual value in the market above what was paid for them is another. The goods delivered in Philadelphia were actually worth only $3,225.78 over and above freight and expenses of sale. Had they been according to sample, they would have been of the value of $4,974 over freight and expenses at the same place. That is, the same quantity of apricots purchased by plaintiff of defendant of the quality of the samples shown were actually worth $4,974 in Philadelphia at the time the ones delivered to plaintiff by defendant were sold for the smaller sum named. There is nothing 'speculative' about these differences of value. The findings to this effect are express, and may be considered independent of the finding upon the theory of a resale which also fixes the last-mentioned value at the same amount ($4,974) for that purpose. Defendant sold goods to plaintiff which it knew the latter would have no opportunity to inspect until they reached some Eastern market. The court finds Philadelphia to be one of the places that must be included in the term 'Eastern market.' The inspection at that place disclosed goods worth $3,225.78, instead of $4,974. The reason for the difference was the failure and breach of defendant's warranty. If there had been any element of special additional damage by reason of plaintiff's inability to make good some contract of sale made by it, at the time of, or prior to, the purchase from defendant, and the fulfillment of such contract had been dependent upon the goods being up to sample, notice to defendant of such special sale at a definite price would have been necessary in order to hold it for such special damages. No damages are asked here for profits on a contract for resale at an advanced price. Damages for breach of an obligation are measured by the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things will be likely to result therefrom. Civ. Code, § 3300. 'The detriment caused by the breach of a warranty of the quality of personal property is deemed to be the excess, if any, of the value which the property would have had at the time to which the warranty referred, if it had been complied with, over its actual value at that time.' Civ. Code, § 3313.

"The cases cited by both parties relating to the interference with, discontinuance of, or destruction of a business, or the prevention of one from pursuing a vocation, and dealing with the question of what profits are too remote, or speculative or uncertain to be included in an action for damages for such interference or destruction, only indirectly aid in solving the question here under consideration and are to be distinguished from this case. In Hughes v Bray, 60 Cal. 284, an instruction to a jury was sustained which uses the following language: 'You should ascertain * * * what portion of the barley delivered, if any, was of an inferior quality, and, in the second place, you should award to the plaintiff the difference between the market value of such portion, and the market value of an equal quantity of barley of the same quality as the sample, at the time of delivery.' In Shearer v. Park Nursery Co., 103 Cal. 415, 37 Pac. 412, 42 Am. St. Rep. 125, the time of the breach of warranty was held to mean the time at which the breach was discovered, or with ordinary care and attention might have been discovered by the purchaser. That is, at the time at which, under the circumstances of the case, it reasonably should have been discovered. In the case at bar this could not have been expected to occur until the goods reached the place to which they were shipped. The same rule has been applied in this state in case of an implied warranty, under section 1771 of the Civil Code, that merchandise inaccessible to the examination of the buyer is warranted to be merchantable. Silberhorn v. Wheaton (Cal. Sup.) 51 Pac. 689. If the opinion in English v. Spokane Com. Co., 57 Fed. 451, 6 C. C. A. 416, be in conflict with this, it must give way to the local authority decided under our statute. But I think the same rule of damages is declared in that case, and the same distinction made as to 'profits on resale.' The rule adopted in English v. Spokane is from Schouler's Personal Property, and is quoted as follows: "The measure of damages recoverable for breach of warranty of quality is, in general, the difference in value between the article actually furnished and that which should have been furnished under the contract at the time and place agreed upon. * * * The rule of damages for breach of warranty is the difference between the sound value of the thing as warranted and its actual value." The federal court, in considering the place at which the value was to be ascertained, says: 'As the sale was made at Omaha and the goods were to be delivered at Spokane, the defendant was entitled to recover the difference between the contract price and the value of the goods in the market at Spokane at the time of the delivery.' The place of delivery being the same as the place of inspection and resale, there was no reason for the application of the rule declared in Shearer v. Park Nursery Co., supra. The damages which plaintiff sues for in this case may all be recovered as general damages, and it is not necessary that the 'profits' be specially alleged. Tahoe Ice Co. v. Union Ice Co., 109 Cal. 249, 41 Pac. 1020. As the conclusion reached on defendant's appeal will require a new trial of the case, it is not necessary for us to consider whether or not the amended complaint and the findings of fact would support the judgment here indicated as proper on the case made. The foregoing opinion will suffice to guide the parties as to all matters affected by this appeal, if a new trial be had. By the opinion filed in appeal No. 154, it being held that the evidence was insufficient to support the findings made in the case, it would be idle to make an order overruling the trial court's action in denying plaintiff's motion. This appeal, therefore must be governed by the order made in No. 154.

"Defendant's Appeal (No. 154).

"The real question to be determined on this appeal relates to the admissibility of the parol evidence to affect the terms of the writing executed by the parties at the time said dried apricots were sold. This writing was as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 19, 1901.

"This agreement made by and between the J. K. Armsby Co. and the Germain Fruit Company, Witnesseth:

"That the said J. K. Armsby Co. has this day sold and the said Germain Fruit Company has this day bought twenty-five hundred boxes apricots, more or less, consisting of:

Lot A	287 boxes
Lot K	104 boxes
Lot C	1400 boxes
Lot E	715 boxes

at seven (7) cents per pound plus one per cent net cash f. o. b. cars at Pomona, on surrender of bill of lading; shipment to be made during the month of October, 1901.

"Signed in duplicate.

"The J. K. Armsby Company

"By A. B. Miner.

"Germain Fruit Company,

"By Eugene Germain."

"Measured by the criterion that the completeness of a written contract, as a full expression of the parties, is the writing itself, the writing appears upon its face to contain all the necessary elements of a complete contract of sale. The description of the property sold is admittedly incorrect, and it contains no express warranty of quality of the goods sold, but contracts of sale may be complete without the latter. The contract calls for apricots, while the evidence shows and both parties admit that dried apricots were the subject of the agreement. It is conceded that this defect of description may be supplied by parol. Respondent contends that the same rule warrants the introduction of parol evidence to determine what apricots were intended to be described by lot 'A,' lot 'K,' lot 'C,' and lot 'E,' and also to identify them by sample. There is no question as to the former proposition, and in a proper case and under proper circumstances the latter would no doubt be true. For instance, if the fruit itself, the label on the box, the package, or the method of packing were peculiar, or so different in character from other fruit or packages of dried apricots, as generally prepared for market, that the sample box would serve to identify or aid in identifying the goods from which the box was taken, such evidence might be admissible for the purpose of identifying the subject-matter of the written contract. 'Lot A, 287 boxes,' does not so clearly describe the goods sold as to preclude the admission of evidence for purposes of identification, if necessary. Ontario D. F. G. Ass'n v. Cutting F. P. Co., 134 Cal. 21, 66 Pac. 28, 53 L. R. A. 681, 86 Am. St. Rep. 231.

"No effort, however, was made to show such circumstances as would warrant the introduction of the samples or the testimony in relation thereto upon this theory. If the facts had been such as to make the evidence proper upon this theory alone, the purpose of its introduction should have been limited so as to exclude its consideration in connection with the question of warranty of quality. On the contrary, the very purpose of its introduction was apparently to add to the written contract of sale another term, a parol warranty of quality by sample. The court permitted the introduction of parol evidence as to sample, and applied it on the theory that it was competent proof of a warranty. It expressly found such a warranty, and the judgment for damages rests upon its breach. There is no other evidence to support the finding, except the inferences to be drawn from plaintiff's Exhibit 5. This was a receipted bill showing on its face words and figures, which taken with plaintiff's explanation of them served to corroborate plaintiff's testimony that the sale was made by sample. Alone it was insufficient as evidence in writing to justify a finding to that effect. The finding and judgment therefore rest on the parol evidence.

"It is urged by respondent in support of the court's action that an ambiguity or uncertainty appearing in the language of the instrument by the use of the terms 'Lot A, 287 boxes,' etc., the matter is open for explanation by parol evidence; and that such ambiguity or uncertainty may as well be removed by showing the term was intended to mean 'according to sample A' as by showing that it was intended to mean some certain pile of 287 boxes marked 'A,' or designated as 'A' in some other manner for purposes of description or identification. In other words, that the term being ambiguous, there is no good reason why such ambiguity may not be resolved upon the assumption of an ambiguity in expressing the warranty as well as upon the theory of an ambiguity in description. There is much weight in this contention. We must, however, bear in mind that the law permits no new term to be introduced into a written contract by parol, while it does permit such evidence for the purpose of making certain an ambiguous description or for purposes of identification. To hold that the words, 'Lot A, 287 boxes,' considered either in their ordinary use or as used in a commercial way, relate to warranty rather than identification, would do violence to the use of language. It would amount to what the rule does not permit even in cases of description the supplying by parol of something not expressed in the instrument in any manner. Neither the grammatical construction of the language used in the contract nor the definition given to the word 'lot' by the lexicographers justifies attributing to it a meaning which imports quality or warranty. While from the parol evidence introduced the inference may be drawn that the parties intended the sale should be on a warranty by sample, we cannot permit any bias or knowledge of the fact to lend weight to the construction of the instrument. Admitting that such was the intention, an examination of the writing shows that, if this were the case, there was an entire failure to embody such intention in the contract. The language used was unfit and inappropriate to express a warranty of quality by sample or otherwise, being language importing description and identity only. 'Lot' is not an ambiguous word of warranty, but a word used solely to describe and identify. All definitions of the word display its derivation from 'share, portion or parcel.' See Century Dictionary. There are well-considered cases holding that an express warranty can be proven by parol evidence where the contract of sale is silent in this respect. The decisions in these cases are based upon the principle that a warranty is not one of the essential elements of a sale, but is a mere collateral undertaking. Chapin v. Dobson, 78 N. Y. 74, 34 Am. Dec. 512.

"This view, however, is not in harmony with the cases upon which the latest declarations of the law on this subject by our Supreme Court rest. In Thompson v. Libby, 34 Minn. 377, 26 N. W. 2, it is said: 'When made, a warranty is a part of the contract of sale. The common sense of men would say, and correctly so, that when, on a sale of personal property a warranty is given, it is one of the terms of the sale and not a separate and independent contract.' To justify the admission of parol evidence on the ground that it is collateral, it must relate to a subject distinct from that to which the writing relates. Where the written sale contains no warranty or expresses the warranty that is given by the vendor, parol evidence is inadmissible to prove the existence of the warranty in the former case or to extend it in the latter. Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 181, 3 Pac. 625; citing Benj. on Sales, 621. 'If it [the writing] imports on its face to be a complete expression of the whole agreement,—that is, contains such language as imports a complete legal obligation—it is to be presumed that the parties have introduced into it every material item and term; and parol evidence cannot be admitted to add another term to the agreement, although the writing contains nothing on the particular one to which parol evidence is directed. The rule forbids to add by parol when the writing is silent, as well as to vary where it speaks.' Harrison v. McCormick, 89 Cal. 330, 26 Pac. 830, 23 Am. St. Rep. 469; citing Thompson v. Libby, supra, and Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. Law, 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380. The effect and limitations of Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786, and Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 518, and the cases citing them, have been clearly distinguished in Bradford Inv. Co. v. Joost, 117 Cal. 204, 48 Pac. 1083, and they are not authority here. See, also, Board of Education v. Grant, 118 Cal. 44, 50 Pac. 5. The rule declared in Harrison v. McCormick was affirmed in Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 313, 81 Pac. 964, and finds abundant support elsewhere. Wilson v. New U. S. Co., 20 C. C. A. 241, 73 Fed. 994; Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 63 C. C. A. 224, 128 Fed. 672; Day Leather Co. v. Michigan Leather Co., 141 Mich. 533, 104 N. W. 797.

"Even Mr. Wigmore, who in his work on Evidence argues most strenuously for an extension of the rule relating to the admission of parol evidence, so that, what he calls 'all the terms of the contract' may be considered by the court, recognizes a distinction in the application of the rule to the matter of warranty and its application to matters of description. Sections 2401, 2434, and 2465. We cannot help suggesting, however, that in his discussion on this subject Mr. Wigmore has not given sufficient weight to the possibility, or rather probability, that the extension urged might result in the admission not only of 'all the terms of the contract,' but some additional ones, and, in rare cases, might even result in removing from the written contract some of the most important terms that had been formally, carefully, and intentionally put down therein. To hold parties to diligence and care in reducing their negotiations to writing, and to hold the writing to be subject to attack only by specific allegations of fraud or mistake, appears to be the better rule, and is now supported by the weight of authority. Like the statute of frauds, this rule is founded upon long and convincing experience that written evidence is more certain and accurate than 'slippery memory.' So long as the rule is applied, the actual contract made can be preserved without fear of its being affected in its terms by the frailties of an interested human recollection. That sometimes the written contract does not include all the terms intended by reason of neglect or oversight, and injustice is thereby done in particular cases, does not justify the abandonment of the rule. To construe it away is to destroy one of the greatest barriers against fraud and perjury. Without specially indicating the rulings to which this opinion is applicable, it is sufficient to say that the admission of testimony to show a sale by sample for the purpose of establishing an express warranty of quality of the apricots sold was error. The finding of such a warranty was without competent evidence to sustain it, and the case was tried on an erroneous theory inconsistent with the rule declared in Gardiner v. McDonogh, supra.

"The other points made by appellant on this appeal need not be considered further than they come within the reasoning in appeal No. 149."

We are satisfied that the foregoing opinion correctly states the law applicable to the points presented on both appeals, and we adopt it as the opinion of this court.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

SHAW, J. I concur in the judgment, on the authority of the decision in Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 313, 81 Pac. 964. I do not agree to all that is said in the opinion adopted by the court, as I understand it. I can conceive of a sale of goods in bulk, of varying quality, in which the different qualities might be represented by samples shown to the purchaser, the goods being absent, and in which an estimate would be made by the seller of the quantities of each kind comprised in the whole bulk corresponding to the samples shown, the samples being marked as "lot A," "lot B," etc. In such a case a writing, such as that here in question, purporting to agree to sell "500 boxes lot A, and 600 boxes lot B" if construed with reference to the circumstances attending its execution, would properly be held to mean that a sale was made of 500 boxes of the quality of the sample marked as lot A and 600 boxes of the quality of the sample marked as lot B. Such evidence would, in my opinion, be competent to point the meaning of the writing. I do not understand that the opinion intends to express anything contrary to this, but I think some of its language might be so understood. The evidence admitted by the court below and here held incompetent, however, shows a mere sale by sample, and, according to that evidence, the designations "lot A," etc., refer to certain lots stored in a warehouse, and not to the respective samples exhibited to the purchaser. The case falls precisely within the rule established in Gardiner v. McDonogh, which is now to be considered as the settled rule of this court.

O'SULLIVAN v. GRIFFITH. (S. F. 4,621.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 12, 1908.)

Application for rehearing. Denied.

For opinion in department, see 95 Pac. 873.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). Having dissented from the order denying a rehearing of this cause, I will here briefly state the grounds of such dissent: A street railway franchise is created and granted by the same act. If, in a case like this, no franchise is granted, it is because no franchise is created. The defense to the action was not merely that the assignors of plaintiff had no title to the franchise, but that there had never been a franchise, and this was what the defendant offered to prove. If he had been allowed to make, and had succeeded in making, the proof that no franchise ever came into existence, the case would have been materially different from that arising upon the conveyance of all one's right, title, and interest in a tract of land. There would have been the wide difference between the conveyance of a thing in existence, and of a thing nonexistent, and the authorities cited to the proposition that the purchaser of a possible title to a tract of land cannot avoid payment of the agreed price by proving that the vendor had no title seem to me to have no application to an action to recover the agreed price of a thing which the vendor represented to be in existence, but which in fact never did exist.

8 Cal. App. 103

NONREFILLABLE BOTTLE CO. v. ROBERTSON (Civ. 438.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 14, 1908.)

1. TRIAL — MOTION FOR NONSUIT — QUESTION FOR COURT.

A motion for a nonsuit, practically operating as a demurrer to the evidence, must assume the truth of the evidence supporting the material allegations of the complaint, and hence presents for the decision of the court a pure question of law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 372.]

2. SAME.

A motion for a nonsuit, made at the close of plaintiff's case, must be denied, if the evidence tends to establish the averments of the complaint, or makes out a prima facie case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 373, 374.]

3. SAME.

Upon a motion for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case, all the relevant evidence received must be given the effect of its full probative force, regardless of whether it has been erroneously admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 373, 374.]

4. BILLS AND NOTES — ACTION ON NOTE — PLAINTIFF'S OWNERSHIP — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

In an action on a note, evidence that it was executed by defendant at the time, and for the sum indicated upon its face, for 100 shares of stock in plaintiff corporation; that after its execution the payee assigned it by indorsement, and delivered it to plaintiff; that the payee was plaintiff's general manager, that the stock was sold from plaintiff's treasury stock for the corporation; that the payee accepted the note as plaintiff's property, and that he was authorized to sell the stock by resolution adopted by plaintiff, made out a prima facie case for plaintiff as to its ownership.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by the Nonrefillable Bottle Company against Helen H. Robertson. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

F. A. Berlin, for appellant. Lucius L. Solomons, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action on a promissory note, negotiable in form, for the sum of $500, executed by the defendant in favor of and delivered to one Max Axelrood, in the city of San Francisco, on the 12th day of August, 1904. Said note called for interest on the principal sum at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, and was made payable after the 19th day of August, 1904. The complaint alleges that on the 17th day of August, 1904, for value received, said Axelrood "duly indorsed, assigned, transferred, and set over to the plaintiff the said promissory note, and all moneys due, or to become due, thereon, and that the said plaintiff is now the owner and holder thereof." The plaintiff is alleged to be a corporation duly incorporated, organized, and existing under and in pursuance of the laws of the state of California, having its office and principal place of business in the city of San Francisco. The defendant at the trial admitted this allegation to be true. A jury was impaneled and sworn to try the issues; but, upon the close of plaintiff's case, the court, on motion of the defendant, granted a nonsuit. It is from the judgment of nonsuit that this appeal is taken. The ground upon which the court granted the nonsuit was that "the plaintiff had not proved that it was the owner of the said promissory note, and that it had no right to sue thereon."

In her answer the defendant admits the execution of the note, and that it was given in consideration of an indebtedness due from her to Axelrood, in the sum appearing upon the face thereof, for 100 shares of stock purchased by her from said Axelrood in the plaintiff corporation; but she sets up the special defense of want of consideration, in that said note was obtained through misrepresentation and deception, etc. In support of this defense she alleges that Axelrood represented to her that the stock in plaintiff corporation was very valuable, and that a certain nonrefillable bottle, for which the plaintiff had secured a patent right from the United States government, was of great value, and that a large sum of money had been offered by different parties for the same; that Axelrood represented to her that he contemplated going to Canada, where he intended to introduce the patent, and that he would give defendant's son a lucrative position with plaintiff if she would buy the 100 shares, which he declared represented nearly all the stock that was then for sale. She alleges that, within 12 days after the execution and delivery of the note, she learned that she had been deceived, defrauded, and imposed upon, and that, immediately thereafter, "and long before this action was commenced, to wit, on the 24th day of August, 1904, she offered, in writing, to return said stock and the certificate given in evidence therefor," and demanded of said Axelrood a return of said note, and a rescission of the contract of purchase and sale of said stock, "and did thereupon rescind the same, but the said Axelrood and said corporation refused to deliver up said note, and refused to accept said certificate of stock, or consent to said rescission of the contract of sale." Defendant then "offers to return said stock to plaintiff or to said Axelrood."

The only question presented here is, was the court justified under the evidence, as presented by plaintiff, in granting defendant's motion for a nonsuit? "A motion for a nonsuit, in purpose and effect, practically operates as a demurrer to the evidence, and must therefore assume that all the facts given in evidence to support the material allegations of the complaint speak the truth. The consequence of the rule as thus stated is that a motion for a nonsuit presents for the decision of the court, a pure question of law."

Archibald's Estate v. Matteson (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 725; Cravens v. Dewey, 13 Cal. 41; Donahue v. Gallavan, 43 Cal. 576; Schroeder v. Schmidt, 74 Cal. 460, 31 Pac. 243; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 311, 27 Pac. 737; Goldstone v. Merchants' etc., Co., 123 Cal. 631, 56 Pac. 776; Wright v. Roseberry, 81 Cal. 87, 22 Pac. 336. The settled rule is that, upon a motion for a nonsuit made upon the close of plaintiff's case, if the evidence tends to establish the averments of the complaint, or is sufficient to make out a prima facie case under the allegations of the complaint, it is the duty of the court to deny the same. Janin v. London, etc., Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82. It is also a rule that, upon a motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case, all the relevant testimony received must be given the effect of its full probative force. This is true, whether the evidence has been erroneously admitted or not, if it bears relevantly upon the issues, for error in admitting evidence for the plaintiff cannot be reviewed on a motion for a nonsuit (Archibald's Estate v. Matteson, supra, and O'Connor v. Hoffer, 102 Cal. 528, 36 Pac. 939), and must, as suggested, for the purposes of the motion, be considered as evidence properly admitted, and be given the full benefit of its probative power.

Measured by the foregoing well-settled rules, was the court justified in its decision that, as a matter of law, the evidence of plaintiff does not tend to prove the material allegations of the complaint? Or, to reduce the proposition to the exact point upon which the motion was granted, does or does not the evidence tend to prove that plaintiff was the owner of the note upon which suit was brought? The respondent has not filed a brief, the case having been submitted on the record and the brief of appellant, and we are therefore without light upon the precise position of respondent in the case. The evidence, however, briefly presented, shows: That the note was executed by the defendant at the time and for the amount indicated upon the face thereof; that it was given as evidence of the sum of $500 due Axelrood in consideration of the sale and delivery to the defendant of 100 shares of stock in the plaintiff corporation; that it was executed in favor of Axelrood; that after its execution Axelrood assigned and transferred by indorsement, and delivered the note to the plaintiff; that Axelrood was the general manager of the plaintiff; that the stock sold to defendant by him was from the treasury stock of the plaintiff, and that the sale was, as a matter of fact, made for said corporation; that the note was made in Axelrood's name, and he accepted the same as the property of the company; that he (Axelrood) had been given authority to sell the stock by a resolution adopted by the plaintiff. Axelrood further testified that he did not own the stock, but that he sold it for the plaintiff, and for that reason transferred the note to the plaintiff; it being the real owner thereof. Axelrood, who was one of only two witnesses for plaintiff, was cross-examined quite fully as to the circumstances of the transaction by which the defendant executed and delivered to him the note, and declared that there was no fraud, no deceit, no misrepresentation, involved in the transaction on his part; that he told the defendant the truth about the affairs of the plaintiff, etc. We think the evidence was sufficient to and did make out a prima facie case for plaintiff. That the note was duly assigned and transferred to plaintiff by Axelrood, and that at the time of the commencement of the action and at the trial plaintiff was the owner thereof, there is no room for doubt under the testimony.

The motion for a nonsuit should not have been granted.

The judgment is reversed.

NEEDHAM v. CHANDLER. (Civ. 450.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 16, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS—RECORD—NECESSITY.

A contract, whereby plaintiff agreed to construct a building, to exceed $1,000 in cost, for defendant, in consideration of a commission of 10 per cent. of the cost of construction, was, in effect, merely an authorization in writing, by which plaintiff was to act as defendant's agent, and was not required to be recorded.

2. SAME — PLEADING — PERFORMANCE — STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 457, in pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing such performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part; and, if such allegations be controverted, the party pleading must establish on the trial facts showing such performance.

3. SAME—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY.

A finding that all the allegations of the complaint are true is sufficient, such finding negating the denials of the answer as to the allegations of the complaint, and if the effect of an affirmative allegation, following and in connection with a denial, is but to emphasize the denial of the answer, it is not necessary that there should be a finding on such affirmative allegation; and hence, where in an action on a contract, whereby plaintiff agreed to draw the plans and construct a building for defendant in consideration of a commission on the cost of construction, plaintiff alleged that he had complied with all the terms and conditions of the agreement, etc., and the answer denied that plaintiff complied with the contract on his part, and averred that plaintiff employed unskilled workmen, and left unfinished certain portions of the building, that the floors were improperly laid, etc., specifying certain defects, such averments were but another way of denying that plaintiff complied with the contract, and a finding that the allegations of the complaint were true was sufficient.

4. TRIAL—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

Findings should be so construed as to support the judgment where it can be done, and if apparently consistent, they should be reconciled if reasonably possible to do so. If on an immaterial issue they should be disregarded, and if, taking them as a whole, in view of the entire record, they fairly dispose of the material issues raised by the pleadings on which evidence was offered, the judgment will be upheld.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by W. G. Needham against Jessie A. Chandler. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. H. Hurd, for appellant. Waite, Keyes & Martin, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover a balance of $1,559.17 for money paid out and expended and commissions earned by plaintiff, under a contract for the construction of a building for defendant. The case was tried before the court, findings filed, and judgment entered thereon in favor of plaintiff. This appeal is from the judgment.

The contract, out of which the controversy arose, was made May 29, 1905, and was in writing. It provided that, in consideration of a commission of 10 per cent. of the cost of construction of the building, the plaintiff would draw all plans and specifications, and, when completed, turn over all bills properly signed; that plaintiff would procure all materials at the lowest possible cost to defendant, and in every way possible save expense to defendant; that the defendant should advance the money in four payments of about $1,000 each, the first payment to be made when the frame was up, the second payment when the brown mortar was on, the third payment when the building was completed, and the fourth payment when all bills were paid. There was in the contract no limitation in the cost of the structure, except the reference to the four payments of about $1,000 each, as before stated. It was clearly agreed that the plaintiff was to be paid by a percentage of the actual cost of the building. It is stated in defendant's brief that plaintiff "offered and introduced in evidence the contract set forth in his amended complaint, and testified that he had complied with all the terms and conditions of the same, and performed all of his obligations thereunder. He also introduced evidence and vouchers, showing on their face the payment of the various sums testified to by him." We have found no testimony, and none has been pointed out to us, tending to contradict the payment of the amounts as stated in the vouchers, or that the several amounts so paid were not the reasonable value of the items represented by the vouchers.

It is claimed that the court should have found upon the defense set up by defendant, to the effect that the contract was in writing, exceeded $1,000 in amount, and that it was not recorded. In our opinion it was wholly immaterial as to whether or not the contract was filed for record. The controversy is between the original parties to the agreement. It does not involve any question as to a lien for material, labor, or the claim of a third party. The contract, in effect, was merely an authorization in writing, by which plaintiff was to act as agent for defendant for a compensation named in the writing. The law does not require such contract to be recorded. Camp v. Behlow, 2 Cal. App. 699, 84 Pac. 251.

It is claimed that the court failed to find upon the issues raised by certain affirmative allegations contained in the answer. It is not clearly pointed out as to the issues raised by the answer on which the court should have found. We have very carefully examined the answer, and we find that, after denying that the plaintiff complied with the contract on his part, or that he completed or fulfilled the terms and conditions of the contract, the defendant avers: "That plaintiff employed unskilled and incompetent workmen to perform the work and labor of constructing said building, and left unfinished and carelessly done certain portions of said building, and through incompetence and mismanagement made it necessary that a certain stairway and rooms be altered and rearranged at great delay and much additional expense; that the floors in certain rooms were improperly laid and roughly made; that the basement was not hard-coated on the outside, and, in consequence thereof, leaked and became damp and useless; that he did not build a fence about said premises." The court found that all the allegations of the amended complaint are true, except as to the amount alleged to have been paid out and expended by plaintiff under his contract with defendant, which amount the court found to be $23 less than that named in the complaint. The complaint alleges that plaintiff, in accordance with the terms of the agreement, contracted for, purchased, and used materials and labor in the erection and construction of the building, the value of which was $4,959.36; that the building was completed, and occupied by defendant, on or about the 9th day of September, 1905; that after deducting the amounts paid by defendant, there remained due to plaintiff from defendant the sum of $1,063.23, for money actually expended by plaintiff for materials and labor used and employed in the erection of the building, together with $495.94 due as commission under the contract; "that plaintiff has complied with all the terms and conditions of the said agreement, has completed and fulfilled his part thereof in every way whatsoever." It is provided in the Code that, in pleading the performance of conditions precedent in a contract, it is not necessary to state the facts showing such performance, but it may be stated generally that the party duly performed all the conditions on his part; and if such allegations be controverted, the party pleading must establish on the trial facts showing such performance. Code Civ. Proc., § 457.

In the case at bar the plaintiff complied with the above-quoted section in his pleading. The allegations were controverted by defendant by a positive denial that the plaintiff had "complied with all the terms and conditions of his contract, or that he has completed or fulfilled his part thereof in every way whatsoever or in any manner or at all"; and in the same paragraph of the answer containing the above denial occur the quoted, affirmative averments upon which it is claimed the court failed to find.

In our opinion the affirmative averments were but another way of denying that the plaintiff had complied with the terms and conditions of the contract. The answer was sufficient without the affirmative matters stated, and the issue was squarely made as to whether or not the plaintiff had properly completed the building, and expended the money as alleged. If the plaintiff complied with all the terms and conditions of his contract (which the court finds that he did do), it necessarily follows that he did not employ unskilled and incompetent workmen; that he did not leave the building unfinished; that the floors in certain rooms were not improperly laid and roughly made, and so of the other alleged failures to comply with the contract. A finding that all the allegations of the complaint are true is sufficient. Such finding has always been held to negative the denials of the answer as to the allegations of the complaint. If the effect of an affirmative allegation, following and in connection with a denial, is but to emphasize the denial of the answer, it is not necessary that there should be a finding on such affirmative allegation. The object of pleadings is to arrive at the issue or issues on which the cause of action or the defense thereto depends. The object of findings is to determine such issue or issues. Findings should be so construed as to support the judgment where it can be done. If apparently inconsistent, they should be reconciled if reasonably possible to do so. If upon an immaterial issue, they should be disregarded. If, taking them as a whole, in view of the entire record, they fairly dispose of the material issues raised by the pleadings on which evidence was offered, the judgment will be upheld.

Applying the above principles to the case at bar we are of the opinion that the findings are sufficient. The evidence was conflicting as to certain portions of the work and finish of the building, and as to whether or not it was done in a workmanlike manner. The trial court heard the evidence, saw the witnesses, and appears to have patiently and carefully considered the case. It found in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant on such conflicting testimony. The defendant understood the findings, and they support the judgment.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

LEWIS v. AGOURE. (Civ. 476.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 21, 1908. Rehearing Denied
June 18, 1908.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—SALE OF PROPERTY—CANCELLATION OF LEASE

An option to cancel a lease, in the event of a sale during the term, may be exercised by the lessors by giving the required notice and tendering the amount agreed to be paid, notwithstanding they no longer had the title, which was conveyed to the purchaser.

2. SAME—LACHES.

Prior to the date when it was possible for the lessors to put a purchaser in possession by the exercise of an option to cancel a subsequent lease, by giving notice and tendering an agreed amount, the purchaser informed the lessee that he would want possession, and would cancel the subsequent lease, so that it would never take effect, and requested lessee to retain the amount necessary to make good the exercise of the option out of the rent due on the old lease, under which the lessee then held, and lessee stated that there would be no trouble about it, and they would settle up in the fall. Thereafter the required notice was served by the lessors and their grantee, and the required amount tendered pursuant to the terms of the subsequent lease. Held, that there was no waiver and no laches to defeat the right of the lessors to exercise their option to make good their transfer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by Joseph F. Lewis against Pierre Agoure. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clarke & Farrand and Wellborn & Wellborn, for appellant. I. W. Stewart and Orestes Orr, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to quiet title against tenant in possession of real property, under lease claimed to have been canceled. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals from judgment and order denying motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff holds title in fee simple to about 8,000 acres of the Rancho Guadalupe, situate in the county of Ventura, acquired by him from M. L. Wolff et ux., by deed dated February 27, 1906. Wolff acquired title from Sarah Sloss and Hannah Gerstle, by deed dated February 19, 1906. On the 21st day of August, 1905, said Sarah Sloss and Hannah Gerstle executed to defendant (who was then in possession of said premises under a prior lease) a lease of said lands for the term of three years, from January 1, 1907, to December 31, 1909, at an annual rental of $3,000, payable semiannually in advance. This lease contained a stipulation that the lease might be declared null and void "at the option of the parties of the first part, in the event that said parties of the first part shall sell the within-described property or any portion thereof at any time during the existence of this lease." Upon cancellation of the lease the first parties agreed to pay to the second party, if canceled during the first year, $1,000, if during the second year, $750, and during the third year, $500. In the event of such cancellation "the party of the second part agrees to vacate the premises herein demised within ninety (90) days after receipt of written notice from the parties of the first part." In addition to the deeds mentioned the lessors (Sloss and Gerstle) assigned the lease and their rights thereunder by indorsement to Wolff, and Wolff transferred his right therein to plaintiff in the same manner. On June 1, 1906, plaintiff notified defendant orally that he would cancel the lease and want possession of the premises on January 1, 1907. On or about July 1, 1906, defendant paid to plaintiff the last semiannual installment of rent due on the "prior lease," at which time plaintiff advised defendant he need pay only $500, and suggested that he retain the other $1,000 in consideration of the cancellation of the lease, to take effect on the 1st day of January following. Defendant declined to do this, and paid the $1,500 in full. On December 6, 1906, plaintiff served on defendant a written notice, signed by Sarah Sloss, Hannah Gerstle, M. L. Wolff, and himself, declaring the lease canceled under the option above mentioned, and demanding possession of the premises, and, on the 21st day of December, 1906, tendered to defendant the $1,000 provided to be paid upon cancellation of the lease. The latter refused to receive the money, and also refused to deliver possession of said lands to plaintiff, hence this action.

Appellant contends that the option to cancel the lease cannot be exercised, because it was a collateral covenant, and not one running with the land, and, the covenantees having conveyed the property without exercising the right, they no longer had any interest in the premises, and could not give the notice provided to be given—citing Griffin v. Barton, 22 Misc. Rep. 228, 49 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Wheeler v. Dascomb, 3 Cush. (Mass.) 285. Furthermore, that even if the parties to the lease intend to create a covenant to run with the land, the effort was ineffectual, as such a covenant could not be created by agreement of parties; the law having declared that only certain enumerated covenants shall run with the land. Civ. Code, § 1460 et seq. The rights of the parties under the lease must be determined by their intentions and purpose in making it, and in entering into its respective covenants, if such purpose were not illegal nor in contravention of public policy. The evident purpose of the clause in the lease in question was to confer upon the lessors, upon sale of the premises, the right to deliver possession to the purchasers. The option could be exercised only in the event of a sale. Not until the sale had been consummated could the lessee be compelled to relinquish possession upon notice and payment of the amount provided to be paid. Unless a sale had actually been made, which necessarily included a conveyance of the ranch, the lessee might well deny the right of the lessors to cancel his lease, and compel him to deliver up the possession of the premises. To say then that the covenant could not be exercised after the conveyance by the lessors would be to hold that such an agreement could not be made, and that the clause was mere surplusage in the contract. The event, upon the happening of which the lessors would be entitled to possession, after 90 days' notice, occurred, and they exercised their option by giving the notice and tendering the amount, agreed to be paid "during the first year of the lease," $1,000. That they no longer held the title was not material, since by the terms of the agreement that was the time fixed for exercising the option. The title and possession were presumed to pass by the conveyance, and if the grantee failed to acquire the latter by reason of any act or omission of the grantors, the latter would be liable; and the contract was a reasonable and proper one for them to enter into with the lessee in order to protect themselves against the liability resulting from such a condition. It was a contract to deliver the possession of real property, for a valuable consideration agreed upon, and could be enforced. By the exercise of the option and the tender of the money the cancellation became complete, leaving only the 90 days after notice in which to deliver possession.

There was no waiver and no laches to defeat the right of the lessors to exercise their option and make good their transfer to their grantee and his successor. The evidence shows that, seven months before the defendant could have taken possession under the lease, the purchaser of the property informed him that he would want possession of the property, and would cancel the lease, so that it would never take effect. A month later he again informed him of his intention, and requested him to retain the amount necessary to make good the exercise of the option during the first year of the lease, out of the semiannual rent then due on the old lease, under which defendant then held. At both of these times defendant stated that there would be no trouble about the matter (possession), and they would settle it up in the fall. Thus, action on the part of plaintiff, in requiring the lessors to exercise their option for plaintiff's benefit, was tolled along until December 6, 1906, when a written notice was served, and on December 21, 1906, the $1,000 tendered, in accordance with the requirements of the lease. All this was done prior to the date that it was possible for the lessors to put plaintiff, their grantee, in possession, since the defendant held under a prior lease containing no provision for the surrender of possession upon notice. There was no laches in asserting the right. The lease having been canceled, and no right thereunder remaining in the lessee, the plaintiff, being the owner of the legal title, and entitled to the possession of the land, was entitled to a decree. The decree entered on the 2d day of April, 1907, recognized the right of defendant to remain in possession of the premises until March 6th, 90 days after service of the notice required by the lease, and quieted plaintiff's title subject to this right of defendant. A supplemental complaint was, by leave of the court, filed on the 19th day of March, and issues as to the rights of the parties, as of that date, were included in the trial of the cause.

There is evidence to sustain the finding attacked, and the decree is supported by the findings. Judgment and order affirmed.

DICKINSON v. KINGSBURY. (Civ. 474.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 24, 1908.)

RECORDS—TAKING FROM FILES—INJUNCTION.

Where the only interest claimed by petitioner in public records proposed to be temporarily removed from the state for use in a federal court, and the only damage averred was that she and all other citizens and taxpayers of the state would be deprived of their use and of the right to inspect them, and that petitioner desired to examine and inspect them in order to show the deraignment of title to lands, and that there was no other method whereby she could secure the facts and information contained in the records, she was not entitled to an injunction restraining their removal.

Original application by S. Dickinson for an injunction to restrain W. W. Kingsbury, as surveyor general and ex officio register of the State Land Office, from removing certain public records from the state, and to compel him to permit petitioner to inspect them. Writ denied.

Chas. H. Fairall, Archibald Yell, and A. M. Seymour, for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Malcolm S. Glenn, and Robert T. Devlin, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for an alternative writ commanding the defendant, as surveyor general of the state of California and ex officio register of the State Land Office, to desist from removing certain public records from the state and to permit plaintiff to inspect the same.

It appeared at the hearing that certain criminal actions are now in progress of trial at the city of Washington, District of Columbia, before a United States court, wherein the United States is plaintiff and certain citizens thereof are defendants, in which said actions the defendants are charged with violating certain of the laws of the United States; that the United States made application to the said court, pursuant to the practice in said court in such cases made and provided, that a subpoena duces tecum issue to the defendant in the present proceeding commanding him to appear before said court, as a witness in said criminal actions, and bring with him certain official documents, papers and records in said subpoena designated and also referred to in the petition herein, and that at the hearing of said application the parties to said criminal action appeared, and that said court, after due deliberation, duly made and entered its order directing said subpoena to issue; that the defendant herein is about to and will obey said subpoena unless restrained from so doing by this court.

At the hearing of the petition herein, the Attorney General of the state appeared and opposed the granting of said writ, and made no objection to the defendant's proceeding at once to obey said subpoena. The only interest in said records which plaintiff alleges she has, and the only damage averred in her petition that she will suffer by their temporary removal, are set forth as follows: "That plaintiff and all other citizens and taxpayers of the state of California will be deprived of the use of said records and of the right to inspect the same;" and also that "plaintiff desires to examine and inspect said records in order to show the deraignment of title to said lands and that there is no other method or means known whereby the plaintiff can secure the facts and information contained in said records."

It may well be doubted whether under any circumstances this court should interpose to arrest, in the way here proposed, the orderly procedure in a United States court, acting within its powers conferred by the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress. But, however this may be, we are fully satisfied that we should not do so upon the showing here made.

The writ is denied.

GIANELLA v. GRAY et al. (Civ. 457.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 25, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court June 24, 1908.)

INJUNCTION — COMPLAINT — SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS—GENERAL DEMURRER.

A complaint alleged plaintiff's right to the exclusive use and occupation of land bordering on a navigable river and extending to low-water mark; that defendants had entered thereon, though prohibited to do so by plaintiff's agent, and had occupied the land above low-water mark, taken down fences, and had threatened to do so, and camped thereon, and had crossed over the land, leaving gates open, and made preparations to remain thereon, in violation of plaintiff's rights; that owing to the great number of defendants, and their repeated acts of trespass, the law furnished plaintiff no adequate protection, and that he was compelled to resort to equity to avoid a multiplicity of actions. Defendants' insolvency was alleged, and that, unless restrained by injunction, they would enter upon and occupy the land in violation of plaintiff's rights, causing irreparable injury to the lands, and compel plaintiff to bring a multiplicity of actions. It was also rather vaguely averred that the low lands lying immediately along the river bank overflow at times of high water, and are separated from the higher land by fences, and that at such times plaintiff's stock would drown unless removed to the higher land. Held, that, though the complaint was not clear and distinct in its averments, from which the court might determine whether the threatened injury complained of was likely to be irreparable, or that an adequate remedy at law was not available, it was good as against a general demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; John C. Gray, Judge.

Action by V. Gianella against Charles Gray and others. Judgment for plaintiff restraining defendants from committing alleged acts of trespass, and from an order denying a motion to dissolve the injunction, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph T. Matlock, Jr., for appellants. Guy R. Kennedy, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to restrain defendants from trespassing upon plaintiff's land. The amended complaint alleges plaintiff's right to the exclusive use and occupation of certain land, particularly described in the complaint, bordering on the Sacramento river at a point where the same is navigable, and that his said right extends to low-water mark of said river; that defendants heretofore "have entered upon the above-described land, though prohibited so to do by the agent and attorney of the plaintiff, have taken down fences, and camped and occupied said land above low-water mark of said Sacramento river, and that they, and each of them, threaten to remain and use said land and premises, in violation of the rights of the plaintiff, and have built and are maintaining camp and camps thereon, and have taken down fences thereon, and have threatened so to do, and have taken a horse across said land, and have said horse now on said land, above low-water mark of said Sacramento river, and have crossed through and over, and have left gates open, and are maintaining and making preparations to remain on said above-described land above low-water mark of said Sacramento river, in violation of the rights of plaintiff herein; that owing to the great number of defendants, and their constant, continuous, and repeated acts of trespass, the law furnishes plaintiff no adequate protection through the ordinary process, and he is compelled to resort to equity for relief, so as to avoid the bringing of a multiplicity of actions." Insolvency of defendants is alleged, and it is alleged that, "unless restrained by injunction, the defendants will enter upon, use, and occupy said lands and premises in violation of the rights of plaintiff, causing irreparable injury to said lands, and to the property of the plaintiff used in connection with said lands, and compel plaintiff to bring a multiplicity of actions against said defendants, and each of said defendants." It also appears from the complaint, by rather vague averments, that the low lands lying immediately along the river bank overflow in times of high water, and are separated from the higher land by fences, and that in times of high water plaintiff's stock would drown unless removed to said higher land. The court made and entered its order, restraining defendants from committing the alleged acts of trespass, on March 14, 1907, and on the same day entered its judgment to like effect. The amended complaint was filed April 11, 1907, and on the 12th defendants filed a general demurrer thereto, and on the same day served and filed a notice of motion to dissolve said injunction on the grounds set forth in the demurrer. On April 15th the court overruled the demurrer, with 20 days' leave to answer, and on April 24th the court denied defendants' motion to dissolve the injunction. Defendants made no answer, and the appeal is from this latter order. Appellants cite Bishop v Owens (Cal. App.) 89 Pac. page 844, and other cases in which the principles governing this class of cases are fully stated and applied; and it is claimed that, when these principles are properly considered, the complaint will be found to be wholly insufficient. It must be conceded that the complaint is not only artificially drawn, but is not clear and distinct in its averments from which the court must determine whether the threatened injury complained of is likely to be irreparable, or that an adequate remedy at law is not available to plaintiff. A special demurrer pointing out the deficiencies in the complaint would doubtless have been sustained, but we cannot say that, upon general demurrer, it should be held to be wholly insufficient. For like reason we cannot say that the injunction is without support in the complaint.

The order denying the motion to dissolve the injunction is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. April 23, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — ENFORCEMENT — GIST OF ACTION.

The gist of an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien for money due upon the building contract is the breach of the contract, and unless there is an allegation of nonpayment the complaint is demurrable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 504.]

2. PLEADING—WAIVER OF OBJECTIONS—FAILURE TO STATE CAUSE OF ACTION—TIME FOR OBJECTION.

If a complaint makes no attempt to aver a necessary allegation the objection that it does not state a cause of action may be urged at any time even without demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 1366.]

3. SAME — DEMURRER — SPECIAL DEMURRER — DEFECTIVE STATEMENT OF NECESSARY ALLEGATION.

Where a complaint in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien for money due on the building contract does not entirely fail to make the necessary allegation of nonpayment, but makes a defective averment thereof, the defect can be reached only by special demurrer directed to that point.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 513.]

4. CONTRACTS — BUILDING CONTRACTS — SUBMISSION OF DISPUTES TO ARBITRATION — WAIVER OF RIGHT

If a building contract provides for the submission to arbitration of disputes between the contractors and the owner, the owner waives his right to such submission by accepting the building.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by E. V. Burke against F. M. Dittus and others to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William H. Johnson, for appellants. Will M. Beggs, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. A special demurrer to the complaint was overruled, after which the defendant answered. Thereafter a jury trial was demanded, and the court, at the request of the defendant, submitted to the jury one issue—"Was the building contract as modified, between plaintiff's assignors and the defendant F. M. Dittus substantially performed on the part of plaintiff's assignors prior to the 31st day of August, 1905?" The jury brought in a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and the court thereafter adopted this verdict, and, upon the hearing of further testimony, rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant F. M. Dittus. From this judgment, and from an order denying the motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted.

The appellant contends that the complaint is fatally defective for a number of reasons, the first of which is that the complaint, being for money due upon contract, does not aver nonpayment, the allegation in that behalf being that "the whole amount due * * * is the sum of twenty-four hundred and forty dollars." Appellant's position is that this allegation is not equivalent to an averment of nonpayment; that it is a mere conclusion of law and not an averment of fact. In an action of this character the gist of the action is the breach of the contract, and unless there is an allegation of nonpayment the complaint is demurrable.

The demurrer in this case, however, is special, and does not embody as one of its grounds this particular defect. If there had been no attempt to aver nonpayment, either by an allegation amounting only to a conclusion of law, or otherwise, the complaint would not have stated a cause of action; and this could be urged at any time, even without demurrer. Rickards v. Travelers'

Ins. Co., 80 Cal. 505, 22 Pac. 939; Hurley v. Ryan, 119 Cal. 71, 51 Pac. 20; Dodge v. Kimple, 121 Cal. 581, 54 Pac. 94; Code Civ. Proc. § 434. But where, as here, there is not an entire failure to state nonpayment, the averment is simply defective, and can be reached only by special demurrer directed to that point. Grant v. Sheerin, 84 Cal. 199, 23 Pac. 1094; Bliss v. Sneath, 103 Cal. 44, 36 Pac. 1029.

To support his contention appellant cites Ryan v. Holliday, 110 Cal. 337, 42 Pac. 891, and Knox v. Buckman Contracting Co., 139 Cal. 598, 73 Pac. 428. In the former of these cases the allegation was that a specified sum "is now due," etc., and the court held that this allegation was a mere conclusion of law and not a statement of fact, and held that it was insufficient to support even a default judgment. But this case was overruled in Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 290, 67 Pac. 772, where it was held that an averment that a specific sum "is now due and owing," etc., though a statement of a legal conclusion, was sufficient to support a judgment by default. In Knox v. Buckman Contracting Co., supra, the action was upon several promissory notes. The only allegation of a failure to pay one of these notes was "that the whole of said note is owing from said defendants to said plaintiff." The demurrer interposed was general. The court held that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and stated that the case of Ryan v. Holliday, supra, was overruled by Penrose v. Winter, supra, "only so far as it applied * * * to a default judgment," which, the court says, "is different from a case where a plaintiff had been put on his guard by a demurrer to his complaint." The statement of the breach of the contract in that case was a conclusion of law; yet, as from it the material allegation of nonpayment was inferable, and as the defect was not raised by a special demurrer, the case would seem to be in conflict with the cases of Bliss v. Sneath and Grant v. Sheerin, supra. Here, however, the pleader was not, as in the case of Knox v. Buckman Contracting Co., put upon his guard by the demurrer, but on the contrary the demurrer being special, and directing the attention of the pleader to other matters exclusively, led him to believe that in all other matters the complaint was good. Moreover, the circumstances of this case bring it within the rule laid down in Bliss v. Sneath and Grant v. Sheerin, supra.

The contract sued on provides that, if any dispute shall arise between the parties thereto regarding the completion, construction or acceptance of the building, or the value of any extra work, such matters should be submitted to arbitration; and appellant contends that there is no allegation in the complaint showing a compliance with this provision of the contract, and that, without such an allegation, the complaint fails to state a cause of action. There is no doubt in respect to such agreements, that the rule is "that if the agreement is in such terms that a reference is a condition precedent to the right of a party to maintain an action, he is not entitled to maintain it until the condition is complied with." 3 Cyc. p. 595; also Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 311, 38 Am. Rep. 54. In this connection, however, the complaint here avers in substance that immediately after entering into the contract plaintiff's assignor went to work upon the same, and furnished all the materials necessary to fully complete and carry out said contract, and that the contract was completed, whereupon the buildings were accepted by the defendant. The complaint does not disclose that any dispute ever arose between the contractors and owner about any matter which was required by the terms of the contract to be submitted to arbitration. Furthermore, if there was such a dispute appellant waived his right to have it settled by arbitration by accepting the buildings.

There are other objections to the complaint pointed out in the brief of appellant; but they are all without merit, and discussion of them in detail is unnecessary. The same may be said of the contention that several of the findings are not sustained by the evidence. We have carefully examined the record, and conclude that there is sufficient evidence to support the findings attacked.

From what has been said, it follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

WILEY v. McNAB & SMITH. (Civ. 446.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 17, 1908.)

1. NEGLIGENCE — PERSONAL INJURIES — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action by a gate keeper for injuries from the fall on him of the gate and adjoining fence which were broken down by the negligent driving by defendant, where it is fairly debatable whether the conduct of plaintiff under the circumstances was that of a reasonably prudent and cautious person, the question of contributory negligence is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 279-302.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR—QUESTIONS OF FACT—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

The verdict of the jury on a question of fact is binding on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3912-3924.]

3. SAME — GIVING AND REFUSING INSTRUCTIONS—EXCEPTION TO RULINGS.

The giving or refusing of instructions to which no exception was taken in the trial court cannot be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1516.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by G. H. Wiley against McNab & Smith, a corporation, for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas, Gerstle & Frick, for appellant.
Francis Dunn and Beatty & Sanderson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an action for damages, the gist of which is shown by the following allegation of the complaint; "That on the 10th day of July, 1904, defendant was the owner of a certain truck and team of horses; that on said day, while passing through a gateway, on Bryant street, near Tenth, San Francisco, defendant managed said truck and team negligently and with want of ordinary care and skill, so that, by reason of its negligence and want of ordinary care and skill, defendant knocked the gate and adjoining fence down upon plaintiff." Plaintiff was quite severely injured, but the jury found a verdict in his favor for only $250.

The only question seriously discussed by appellant involves the contention that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. We think it is fairly debatable whether the conduct of said plaintiff under the circumstances was that of a reasonably prudent and cautious person, and therefore its determination was properly submitted to the jury, whose conclusion is binding here.

It cannot be said as a matter of law that the position behind the gate assumed by respondent was one of danger. As declared in his brief: "He had worked seven days continuously as gate keeper. During that time many teams passed in and out daily, and no accident occurred. He concluded that any reasonably skillful and careful driver could enter the gate without accident. A position is not one of danger if a person occupying it can come to harm only through lack of ordinary skill and care on the part of another." It is true that the gate had been struck by other vehicles, but there is nothing to show that it was not the result of carelessness or inefficiency on the part of the driver, and plaintiff had no knowledge of such an occurrence. The gate was wide enough for the easy entry of the truck. Respondent was at a convenient place for the discharge of his duties as gate keeper, and where he was accustomed to stand while the gate was being used, and we cannot say that an ordinarily prudent and cautious person would have taken his station at some other point or would have anticipated such an accident.

Some criticism is made of the action of the court in giving and refusing instructions. But from the condition of the record we have a right to assume that all the instructions given were requested by appellant and that no requested instruction was refused. Besides, no exception seems to have been taken, and hence the point suggested cannot be considered.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WRIGHT v. COUNTY OF SONOMA.
(Civ. 392.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
February 18, 1908.)

COURTS—JURISDICTION OF APPELLATE COURT —TRANSFER OF APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT.

Where the ad damnum clause of the complaint in an action to recover for supplying water asks for judgment in the sum of $8,600, the cause is beyond the jurisdiction of the appellate court as conferred by Const. art. 6, § 4, and the appeal will be transferred to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Courts, § 1303.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Albert G. Burnett, Judge.

Action by Sampson B. Wright against the county of Sonoma. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Appeal transferred to Supreme Court.

T. J. Butts, for appellant. Clarence F. Lea and G. W. Hoyle, for respondent.

HART, J. This is a direct appeal to this court from the judgment and the order denying a motion for a new trial. The plaintiff brought the action to recover judgment for the sum of $8,600, alleged to be due him from the defendant for supplying the latter with water to be used on certain public highways in said Sonoma county during certain seasons of the years 1903 and 1904. It is plainly apparent from the ad damnum clause of the complaint that the case is, by direct appeal, beyond the appellate jurisdiction of this court. Article 6, § 4, Const.

It follows that we are required to transfer the appeal to the Supreme Court. Such is the order.

BECKER v. NYE, Controller. (Civ. 440.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 17, 1908.)

1. TAXATION—LEGACY OR INHERITANCE TAX—PAYMENT.

Inheritance Tax Act (St. 1905, p. 345, c. 314), § 11, requires the administrator or executor to pay to the county treasurer all money coming into his hands as tax on property, and it is the duty of the treasurer to give the administrator or executor duplicate receipts for such payment, one of which the executor or administrator shall send to the State Controller, whose duty it shall be to charge the treasurer receiving the tax with the amount thereof, the Controller being required to seal said receipt and countersign the same, and return it to the executor or administrator, whereupon it shall be a proper voucher in the settlement of his account, and the estate shall not be distributed until the executor or administrator shall produce a receipt so sealed and countersigned by the Controller. Section 16 (page 347) provides that the superior court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions in relation to the tax arising under the provisions of this act. Held, that where the court has heard and determined the matter as to the amount of inheritance tax, its order or judgment is conclusive, and the State Controller has no discretion in the matter, and cannot refuse to seal and countersign a receipt by a county treasurer made pursuant to an order of court.

2. SAME—DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT OF TAX —APPEAL.

The state, being an interested party, may appeal from the determination by the superior court of the amount of an inheritance tax.

Petition by Amelle Auguste Mathilde Becker, executrix of Chas. H. Becker, deceased, against A. B. Nye, State Controller, for a writ of mandate to compel defendant to countersign a receipt for inheritance tax. Writ granted.

B. F. Driver and Wm. M. Sims, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Malcolm C. Glenn, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Petition for writ of mandate to compel defendant to countersign receipt for inheritance tax. The facts appearing by the petition are as follows: Charles H. Becker, plaintiff's testate, died in April, 1906, naming plaintiff as executrix of his will. All his property was community property, and plaintiff was named as sole devisee. She was duly appointed and is now the acting executrix of said will. The final account of the executrix was filed on August 13, 1907, and was settled and allowed on September 10, 1907, and "the total amount of said estate, which came into the hand of said executrix as per said final account, is the sum of $63,402.74," and on August 13, 1907, she filed a petition for distribution of the estate. This petition came on to be heard on October 7, 1907, and on that day the court made and entered its order, reciting, among other things, that in her said petition for distribution the executrix "asked the court to fix the amount of inheritance tax due from those entitled to distribution of said estate," and that the amount of said estate coming into the hands of the executrix was as above stated. The court, at the hearing and by its order, made on October 7, 1907, fixed the amount of the tax, but refused to distribute the estate until the executrix had presented her receipt for the tax duly countersigned by the Controller. It further appeared from this order that the amount of $63,402.74 came into the hands of the executrix, as shown by her final account, and that before the settlement and allowance of said final account, the sum of $3,360 was allowed the widow for support and maintenance; that the item of real property in said account (describing the land), "valued in said account and the inventory and appraisement at the sum of $19,200, together with the improvements thereon, valued in said account and in said appraisalment at the sum of $3,500, was set aside to her as a probate homestead, and excluded from further administration; that among the items in said account the item of $1,376.04 was for grain planted, raised, and harvested on the real property of said estate after the death of decedent"; that the costs of administration, including attorney's fees, also the debts of decedent paid by said executrix, including funeral expenses of deceased and expenses of last illness, amounted to the sum of $2,133.80. After reciting the foregoing facts, the court adjudged that the real property set aside as a homestead, with its improvements, amounting to $22,700, the family allowance of $3,360, the costs of administration, etc., $2,133.80, the grain planted and harvested, $1,376.04, and the exemption of $10,000 allowed by the inheritance tax law, making in all $39,569.84, should be and are exempt from the payment of inheritance tax, leaving the sum of $23,832.90 subject thereto, as follows:

$15,000.00 at one per cent.....	$150 00
8,832.90 at one and one-half per cent.	132 50
Total	$282 50

It was further ordered that the said Amelie, the person entitled to have the residue of said estate distributed to her, pay to the county treasurer of Solano county the said sum of $282.50, as the inheritance tax, and that the hearing of the petition for distribution be continued to the 14th day of October, 1907. It further appears that said executrix, in accordance with the terms of said order, on October 7, 1907, paid to the county treasurer of said county the said sum, and he accepted the same as the amount of inheritance tax due to the state from said legatee, and issued to her, as executrix of said estate, a receipt therefor in duplicate, as required by law; that thereafter, on October 12, 1907, the said executrix presented said receipt to said Controller with the request that he countersign the same, and place the seal of his office thereon, but said Controller refused, and still refuses, to comply with said request.

The plaintiff contends: First. That the superior court having adjudged the question as to the amount of the inheritance tax, its judgment is conclusive upon all persons, including the State Controller, and that the Controller has no power to question the action of the court, but must sign the receipt of the county treasurer when presented to him; his duty being merely ministerial. Second. That the grain planted and harvested after the death of the decedent, the family allowance, the expenses of administration, the probate homestead set aside to the widow, and the $10,000 exempted by the statute, must be excluded from the total value of the property of decedent coming into the possession of the executrix, in computing the tax thereon. It appeared that the court did not fix the amount of the tax upon any appraisalment of the value of the estate, as provided for in the inheritance tax act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 341, c. 314), nor was it fixed prior to or at the time of settling and allowing the final account, but it was determined some time later, when the petition for distribution was noticed for hearing, and then only upon the showing made in the previously settled final account, and apparently upon values as shown in the inventory and appraisalment of the estate, made under the general provisions of the probate law.

Section 11 of the act of 1905 provides: " * * * An executor, administrator, or trustee shall not be entitled to credits in his account nor be discharged from liability for such tax, nor shall said estate be distributed unless he shall produce a receipt so sealed and countersigned by the Controller, or a copy thereof, certified by him, and file the same with the court."

Section 1669 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1905 (St. 1905, p. 83, c. 85), provides: "Before any decree of distribution of an estate is made, the court must be satisfied, * * * that all state, county and municipal taxes * * * and any inheritance tax which is due and payable, have been fully paid."

Before distribution can be had the tax must be paid, and until that is done the estate is not in a condition to be closed. Est. of Lander (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 202. The final account must be rendered, settled, and allowed before final distribution, and we do not see how such an account can be rendered and settled until after the amount of the tax is finally determined, so that its payment can be made to appear in the final account. And at the time the account is settled, the receipt for such payment should show that it has been countersigned by the Controller. A settlement and approval of the final account, without such action by the Controller, would, in our opinion, be premature.

Section 5 of the inheritance tax law of 1905 provides for the ascertainment of the taxable value of life estates, and estates determinable upon future events, by an appraiser to be appointed by the court. As to all other property or interests, no provision is made to determine the value of the estate, except where it is uncertain, in which case an appraiser is to be appointed by the court to determine such value. Section 14. Section 11 of the act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 196, c. 168) seems to have required appraisalment in all cases. Why this change in the statute is not apparent. The practice throughout the state has not been uniform—some judges taking the inventory and appraisalment as the basis, while others cause an appraisalment to be made under the inheritance tax law, and still others resort to both methods. It would seem to be the better and more equitable course to appoint appraisers, for by that means all interested parties, including the state, are served with notice, and are given opportunity to be heard in the important matter of fixing a basis for the tax. But however this may be, section 16 of the act provides that the superior court "shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions in relation to the tax arising under the provisions of this act," and when the court has heard and determined the matter, its order or judgment has the qualities of other orders or judgments, and is conclusive, subject only to be reviewed on appeal. That an appeal may be taken from such order was decided in Cross v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. App. 342, 83 Pac. 815; and that the state, through the district attorney or Attorney General may avail itself of the appeal we do not doubt, since the state is an interested party. Whether the question presented by counsel may still be reached by appeal from the order fixing the amount of the tax, or from the order settling the final account, or from the decree of distribution when entered, is not for us to say.

Section 11 of the act of 1905 requires the administrator or executor to pay to the county treasurer all money coming into his hands as tax on property, and it is made the duty of the treasurer to give the administrator or executor duplicate receipts for such payment, "one of which receipts said executor * * * shall immediately send to the Controller of the state, whose duty it shall be to charge the treasurer so receiving the tax with the amount thereof, and said Controller shall seal said receipt with the seal of his office, and countersign the same, and return it to the executor, * * * whereupon it shall be a proper voucher in the settlement of his accounts." The law contemplates the payment of the tax by any legatee or heir of the amount due from him, so that he may presently come into possession of his legacy or inheritance, and the receipt attesting its payment should be countersigned by the Controller and should be allowed in the executor's account. In other words, the law does not require that all the taxes from all beneficiaries should be paid at one time, and the payment represented in one receipt, as is the case here. But this section of the statute confers no judicial discretion upon the Controller by which he may exercise the right to refuse to countersign a receipt, as therein directed. Nor is there any other provision by which any revisory power is given to the Controller in the matter of fixing the amount of the tax or determining whether the court has rightly fixed it. In countersigning the receipt he decides nothing, nor should the receipt be so framed as to bind the state or conclude its right to have the question reviewed on appeal, should the state desire to appeal from the action of the court. The receipt is and should be only for so much money on account of the tax.

The object in requiring this officer to countersign the receipt is probably to give him a check upon the county treasurer, and to aid in the settlement of the latter's accounts. Ample provisions are made in sections 17 and 18 for the collection of the tax should there be failure in payment, but the duty is devolved upon the county treasurer and the district attorney; and by section 23 the county treasurer is given authority to appoint a special attorney, "who shall have all the authority conferred upon the district attorney by sections seventeen and eighteen." The Controller is given no authority anywhere in the act beyond that already pointed out, and does not figure in any part of the machinery provided for the collection of the tax or its enforcement.

The question as to whether the homestead, family allowance, expenses of administration, and debts of decedent—either or all—should be excluded from the value of the estate, and the balance only made the subject of the tax, is much argued in the briefs. The question is one of construction of the statute, and has never been decided by our Supreme Court. The decisions in other states, influenced, no doubt, by divergencies in the statutes themselves, are not harmonious, some holding that only the exemptions enumerated in the statute should be deducted, others holding that debts, but not the other items, should be exempt, and still others that all the above items should be exempt. There is likewise some disagreement as to whether the rents, issues, and profits should be taken into account, and the state given a tax upon accumulations. There is also a question as to what point of time should be taken for the valuation of the estate—whether at the death of decedent, at which time the right of the state is vested, under our law, or at the time of the appraisal. All these questions may arise in the proceedings now pending in the probate court, and as the appeal in all probate proceedings is to the Supreme Court, and not to this court, we deem it best to express no opinion upon them.

Our conclusion is that the Controller should countersign and affix his seal to a receipt showing a payment to the county treasurer of $282.50, on account of inheritance tax in the matter of said estate, bearing date October 7, 1907. Such is the effect of the receipt shown in the petition.

Let the writ issue.

WORCESTER v. KITTS et al. (Civ. 462,
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 25, 1908. On Rehearing, May 25, 1908.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS — PATENTS FROM STATE — CONCLUSIVENESS—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A state patent under which one claims land is conclusive as to the character and condition of the land, and cannot be collaterally attacked.

2. QUIETING TITLE—CROSS-COMPLAINT—ISSUES.

In a suit to quiet title to land claimed by plaintiff under a state patent, title to land claimed by defendant, not included in the patent, cannot be litigated by way of cross-complaint.

3. SAME—JUDGMENT.

In a suit to quiet title to land claimed by plaintiff under a state patent, which conclusively established title in him as against a collateral attack, defendant could not complain of the failure of the court to include in the judgment certain of the patented lands.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—RECORD—JUDGMENT—CORRECTION.

Where, in a suit to quiet title, it appeared that the judgment copied into the transcript did not correctly describe the land, as shown by the judgment rendered and entered, and that the latter correctly described the land claimed by plaintiff in his complaint, the judgment in the transcript would be amended, so as to describe the land mentioned in the complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; F. F. Nilon, Judge.

Action by Joseph Worcester against Charles W. Kitts and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles W. Kitts, for appellants. Thos. S. Ford, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff brings the action to quiet his title to certain portions of section 16, township 16 north, range 8 east, Mount Diablo base and meridian, alleging that defendants claim an interest therein adverse to plaintiff, without right, etc. Defendants, answering, deny plaintiff's alleged ownership to said lands, and aver title in defendants to certain particularly described portions thereof, and pray that they may be adjudged to be the owners of the land claimed by them, and that plaintiff has no right, title, interest, or estate in or to the same. Plaintiff had judgment in his favor as to a portion, not all the lands claimed by him, but the judgment included some of the lands claimed by defendants. Defendants appeal from the judgment, on the judgment roll alone.

The judgment contains the following recital: "The above-entitled cause was heard upon the plaintiff's complaint, filed October 4, 1904, and the amendment thereto, filed November 29, 1904, and the amended answer to the amended complaint, filed June 26, 1905, and the court, being fully advised in the premises, decrees and adjudges as follows." The judgment then describes certain of the land mentioned in the complaint, adjudging plaintiff to be the owner thereof. "It is further adjudged that defendants, and each of them, are hereby enjoined from setting up or claiming any title, possession, or right of possession to said property." It is claimed by defendants that the cause was submitted to the court, and was heard and decided upon the pleadings alone. Plaintiff denies this, and claims that the record does not show this to be the fact, and defendants cannot assume it to be as claimed by them. There is nothing in the record, except the recitals of the judgment, from which the fact can be determined. We think the record sufficiently shows that the cause was heard upon the pleadings.

In his original complaint plaintiff pleaded patent from the state to one Farrar, and deed from Farrar to plaintiff, also patent from the state to plaintiff, but did not otherwise show title. These instruments are set out in the complaint, and their execution is not denied.

The sole question in the case is, are the state patents, under which plaintiff claims, conclusive as to the character and condition of the land? Concededly, the learned trial judge decided the case upon the authority of Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 Pac. 656. In that case the land had been surveyed in 1870, and the survey approved and official plat filed. In this official plat the section was marked, and returned as agricultural land and unoccupied. In 1884 the United States certified, through its proper officer, to the state of California, that the land was unoccupied, and that there were no valid claims thereto adverse to the state. The land had been surveyed and returned by the government as agricultural in character, and so certified by the government, 20 years before the state sold it, and the purchaser had occupied it for six years before any claim was made that it was mineral. The case referred to decided that it was too late to inquire into the character of the land, and that, upon the facts as shown, the patent was a conclusive determination of the question. The facts here are wholly different. Without stating all the allegations of the answer, it was shown that most of the land in question was mineral land, and well known so to be before the grant to the state; that when it was surveyed in 1867 some of the land was occupied, and being mined for gold under mineral locations; that the survey and report and plat filed in the United States land office showed the land to be mineral; that subsequently many mineral locations were made, and were being worked up to the time this action was commenced, and after the patents issued; that the land never was certified to the state as nonmineral or agricultural, and has never been listed to the state as school land, or at all. The case, then, is altogether different in its facts from the facts in Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., supra, and it is contended, therefore, that it should not be governed by the latter case.

But this is a collateral attack upon a state patent, which takes it out of the rule in Hermocilla v. Hubbell, 89 Cal. 5, 26 Pac. 611, relied on by appellants. Besides, that case was practically overruled in Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co., and it was therein pointed out that a very important question was overlooked in Hermocilla v. Hubbell, namely: "By whom, and at what time, are the facts to be ascertained and determined as to the character of the land at the time of the grant, whether mineral or nonmineral? And another question of equal importance is as to the effect of the patent, issued by competent authority, purporting to convey the land." The court proceeds to show, by adopting the rule laid down in Dreyfus v. Badger, 108 Cal. 58, 41 Pac. 279, and other cases quite fully commented upon, that "where a patent, regular on its face, has been issued by the government (federal or state) for land which it owns, under a law providing for a disposal of the land patented, upon the ascertainment of certain facts, the officers of the land department of the government have jurisdiction to determine such facts, and the issuance of a patent is, upon collateral attack, a conclusive declaration, as against all claiming under said government, that the facts have been found in favor of the patentee. And this rule applies to the determination of the particular character of the land which is the subject of the patent." In the Dreyfus Case the issue was between a state patent to lieu land and a claim under the pre-emption and homestead acts. Mr. Lindley states that "the land department of the government, in recent years at least, by a uniform line of decisions, has held that mineral lands did not pass to the state under the school grants." 1 Lindley on Mines, § 136. Still, the question must be determined by appropriate proceedings, and may not be by collateral attack. Strong as the facts are as set forth in the answer, and conclusive as they might be if shown to be true, on a direct attack, we do not think they can be advanced in this action to overthrow the state patent. Saunders v. La Purisima, etc., Co. seems to so hold, and if the doctrine of that case is to be modified, it must be by the court that enunciated it.

An examination of the pleadings and judgment shows the following condition of the record: The plaintiff claims the north half of section 16, the north half of the south half and 30 acres in the south half of the south half, to wit, the north half of the southwest quarter and the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, in all 450 acres. The judgment gives him but 130 acres, all in the southwest quarter of the section, and makes no disposition of plaintiff's claim to the north half of the section. In the description of land included in the judgment, 20 acres are twice described, to wit, the north half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and in the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter is included a tract of 10 acres, which is not included in plaintiff's patents, to wit, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter. It also appears that defendants claim some lands which are not included in plaintiff's patents, to wit, the south half of the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and also claim the 10-acre tract above mentioned, to which plaintiff is given judgment, but which is not included in plaintiff's patents. It appears, also, that defendants claim most of the land in the north half of the section to which plaintiff has patent, but of which the judgment makes no disposition. The title to lands claimed by defendants, not included in plaintiff's patents, cannot be litigated by way of cross-complaint in this action. The title set up by defendants to lands included in plaintiff's patents presents no issue, because defendants' alleged title cannot be asserted against plaintiff's patents, which latter we hold to be conclusive upon a collateral attack; and it is immaterial that the court did not give plaintiff judgment for all his patented lands. Plaintiff is not appealing, and defendants are not injured by the failure of the court to include in the judgment certain of the patented lands, since, as we have just remarked, defendants cannot in this action be heard to attack the patents.

For the reason that the court awarded land to the plaintiff not included in his patent, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Upon petition for rehearing our attention is called to the fact that the judgment copied into the transcript, by inadvertence did not correctly describe the land as shown by the judgment in fact rendered and entered by the trial court, and that the latter correctly describes the land claimed by plaintiff in his complaint and none other. These facts appear by the certificate of the clerk of the lower court. In view of the foregoing it is ordered that the judgment as shown in the transcript be so amended as to describe the land mentioned in the complaint and that the last paragraph of the opinion filed April 25, 1908, be stricken out and the following inserted in lieu thereof, to wit: The judgment is affirmed.

ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN BANK, Limited, v.
GRISWOLD et al. (S. F. 4,689.)(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1908.
Rehearing Denied July 2, 1908.)1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT—WANT OF JURISDICTION.

Where defendants served with process executed and delivered to plaintiff within three months after the commencement of the action an instrument reciting: "To the Clerk of Said Court: You will please take notice that we and each of us herewith enter our appearance * * * and consent that judgment may be entered in favor of plaintiff * * * as prayed for in said complaint"—an appearance was made within Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, declaring that a defendant appears in an action when he gives plaintiff written notice of his appearance, and a failure to file the appearance within three years did not warrant the dismissal of the action under section 581, subd. 7, providing that actions may be prosecuted where appearance has been made within three years, without service of process, especially where the instrument was filed, evidence taken, and cause submitted for judgment before a motion to dismiss was made.

2. SAME—WANT OF PROSECUTION.

In an action to foreclose mortgages executed by husband and wife, the wife for herself and as executrix of her husband's estate assented to the judgment actually given. Plaintiff prosecuted the action to judgment before a motion to dismiss was made. The wife recognized the justice of plaintiff's claim and its right to a judgment. The reason of the delay in the prosecution of the action was explained. Held, that the court abused its discretion in dismissing the action for want of prosecution.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmett Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, against Norman W. Griswold and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jesse W. Lilienthal, for appellant. Walter H. Robinson and Jordan & Brann, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal upon the motions of William C. Spencer and Eliza S. Eldridge, under the authority of subdivision 7, § 581, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also upon the ground that "plaintiff has abandoned the prosecution of said action and has failed to prosecute the same with due or any diligence." The action is to foreclose mortgages upon real estate executed by Norman W. Griswold and Anna E. Griswold, his wife. These mortgages were in the form of deeds absolute. The complaint was filed April 26, 1898, and summons then issued. In the moving affidavits it is alleged, upon information and belief, that the summons was not served. This is expressly denied by the affidavits filed on behalf of the plaintiff, whereby it is established that the summons was served upon the Griswolds, and that upon July 14, 1898, they executed and delivered to plaintiff the following: "To the Clerk of Said Court:

You will please take notice that we and each of us herewith enter our appearance in the above-entitled action and consent that judgment may be entered in favor of plaintiff herein as prayed for in said complaint. Dated July 14, 1898. Norman W. Griswold. Anna E. Griswold."

It is further shown by plaintiff that the Griswolds had requested the plaintiff not to proceed with the foreclosure, in the hope and expectation that the mortgaged property might increase in value so that they would be able to pay the mortgage debt from the proceeds of sales of parts of it. Thus, upon June 7, 1899, the Griswolds executed to plaintiff an authorization "to sell or convey any and all pieces of property heretofore conveyed to you by us, or either of us, to any party or parties you may decide, and at such figures or upon such terms as you may determine, crediting all proceeds from the sale of said property to our or either of our indebtedness to your bank, and we hereby ratify and confirm any sales or conveyances you may make under this authorization." So, whatever the delay in bringing plaintiff's action to a judgment, it was attributable solely to the defendants' instance and request. It was granted out of consideration for them and for what they believed to be their best interests. In June, 1899, W. C. Spencer, one of the movants herein, commenced his action against the Griswolds to foreclose his mortgage lien upon some of the property affected by plaintiff's suit. In that action this plaintiff filed its answer, setting up its mortgages. Spencer seems to have regarded the pleading of this plaintiff in his action as a cross-complaint, since he filed a reply thereto which he styled "Plaintiff's answer to defendant's cross-complaint." Negotiations followed between this plaintiff and Spencer, to the end that the mortgages should all be foreclosed in the same action. The Spencer suit remained pending from June, 1899, to August, 1905. When it came to trial, upon August 16, 1905, objection was made to the foreclosure in the Spencer suit of plaintiff's mortgages. Then immediately, upon the afternoon of that day, this plaintiff brought this cause to a hearing, introduced evidence in its support, and introduced in evidence and filed in court the appearance of the Griswolds above set forth. After taking evidence the trial judge directed that a form of minute order and decree be prepared and presented to him. Norman W. Griswold at this time was dead, and his wife was executrix of his last will and testament. Communication was had by plaintiff with Mrs. Griswold and her attorney, and her consent was obtained to be substituted as executrix in the plaintiff's action in the place of her deceased husband; it being agreed that no deficiency judgment should be taken. Appellant then prepared a form of decree and minute order in conformity with this understanding, which met the approval of Mrs. Griswold and her attorney, and thereafter submitted these papers to the trial judge for signature. Thus plaintiff's action had been brought to trial and was ready for decision three months before the motion to dismiss was made. As to the interest of the moving parties, Spencer's claim to relief is sufficiently outlined. He became the successor to the Griswolds' title under his foreclosure proceedings. Mrs. Eliza S. Eldridge asserts she is a creditor of the estate.

Respondents' first contention in support of the dismissal which they obtained is one of strict law, based upon what they assert to have been plaintiff's failure to comply with the mandatory provisions of subdivision 7, § 581, Code Civ. Proc. An appearance in an action under the laws of this state is defined by section 1014, Code Civ. Proc.: "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him." It appears indisputably that the Griswolds gave to plaintiff a formal notice in writing addressed to the clerk of the court, not instructing the clerk to enter an appearance, but declaring that "herewith we do enter our appearance," and this appearance was coupled with the consent that judgment might be entered in favor of plaintiff as prayed for in the complaint. Here was a strict compliance with the provisions of section 1014. The defendants gave to plaintiff written notice of their appearance. The only default, then, so far as subdivision 7 of section 581 is concerned, was in the failure of plaintiff to file this appearance within three years. But in terms this subdivision does not require a filing. It declares: "But all such actions may be prosecuted if appearance has been made by the defendant or defendants within said three years, in the same manner as if summons had been issued and served." The appearance was made within three months after the commencement of the action, by the giving to plaintiff of the written notice of appearance. Neither section 1014 nor section 581 required that the appearance should be filed within three years, or within any specified time. The time limited by section 581 is for the making of an appearance, which, we repeat, is made when written notice of appearance is given to plaintiff.

Of course, jurisdiction of a defendant is not acquired until the filing of such appearance in court (Cooper v. Gordon, 125 Cal. 300, 57 Pac. 1006), but the principal purpose of section 1014, Code Civ. Proc., is served in that, after giving written notice of appearance to plaintiff, the defendant is entitled to notice of all subsequent steps and proceedings in the action. In Cooper v. Gordon, supra, it was held that a stipulation by defendant consenting that plaintiff might take judgment, though not filed until long after the three years, was, when filed, an appearance and a waiver of the provisions of subdivision 7, § 581, Code Civ. Proc., and estopped the defendant from moving to dismiss under the provisions of this section. In Roth v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 147 Cal. 604, 82 Pac. 246, the parties entered into a stipulation extending the defendant's time to plead. This stipulation was not filed, and the time was further extended by verbal stipulation until more than three years after the commencement of the action. The summons was never returned, and after the expiration of the three years defendants moved to dismiss, whereupon, in answer to the motion, plaintiff filed the stipulation. This court declared the unfiled stipulation to be an appearance, saying: "The stipulation, signed as it was by petitioner's attorneys in the action, was a virtual appearance, and none the less so because it was not filed." The case at bar is much stronger. Here the stipulation had been filed, evidence taken, and the cause submitted for judgment months before the motion to dismiss was made. Even if it be conceded (though it is not decided) that subdivision 7, § 581, contemplates that such appearance shall be filed within three years, yet the failure in this instance was, as in the cases above cited, justified and excused. If, then, the trial court dismissed this action in the belief that the language of subdivision 7, § 581, made it mandatory to do so, it follows from what has been said that the court fell into error in so doing. As pointed out in Cooper v. Gordon, supra, even the mandatory terms of the statute would not justify a dismissal in all cases as against the protest of the defendant who desired a trial.

Even less merit attaches to the second position taken by respondent that the court was justified in dismissing the action because plaintiff had abandoned the prosecution and had failed to prosecute it with diligence. Plaintiff had prosecuted the case to judgment before the motion was made, and assent to the judgment was actually given by Mrs. Griswold for herself and as executrix of her husband's estate. The reason of the delay was fully explained, as has above been set forth, and the attitude of the Griswolds themselves, the only defendants in the action, is sufficiently evidenced by the conduct of the widow. She manifestly recognized the justice of plaintiff's claim and its right to a judgment. It was an abuse of discretion therefore for the court to have dismissed upon the ground last indicated.

For which reason the judgment of dismissal is reversed, and the cause remanded.

NAPA STATE HOSPITAL v. DASSO (S. F. 4,566.)(Supreme Court of California. June 4, 1908.
Rehearing Denied July 2, 1908.)1. INSANE PERSONS—INQUISITION—COLLATERAL ATTACK—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

An order of commitment to the state hospital for the insane, made by the judge of the superior court, authorized to hold examinations and determine the question of insanity, and commit to the hospital persons adjudged insane, and which shows from its recitals that the court had jurisdiction of the alleged insane person, is not subject to collateral attack, the order being no more subject to collateral attack than the orders of the superior court, acting in a proceeding by virtue of special authority.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Insane Persons, § 35.]

2. NAMES—IDEM SONANS.

Whether one name is idem sonans with another is a question of pronunciation, not of spelling, and though a name be incorrectly written, still if when pronounced it conveys to the ear a sound practically similar to the correct name when pronounced, the rule of idem sonans obtains, and identity of person will be presumed from the similarity of sound in the pronunciation of the names.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Names, §§ 12–15.]

3. SAME.

Whether the name "Dasso" is idem sonans with the name "Tasso" is for the court, after hearing the pronunciation of the name "Dasso" by the witnesses, the letters "T" and "D" being considered as interchangeable, so as to apply to their use the doctrine of idem sonans.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Names, §§ 12–15.]

4. INSANE PERSONS—COMPENSATION FOR SUPPORT IN HOSPITALS—STATUTES—ACTIONS.

Under the insanity law (Act March 3, 1897; St. 1897, p. 311, c. 227), declaring that the treasurer of Napa State Hospital shall have legal capacity to sue on any cause of action accruing to the hospital, an action for the support of one confined in the hospital as an insane person, may be brought in the name of the hospital by its treasurer, and the action need not be brought by the trustees thereof.

5. SAME.

An action for the support of defendant, confined in the Napa State Hospital as an insane person, by virtue of an order of commitment made by the judge of the superior court, begun in 1901, while the insanity law (Act March 31, 1897; St. 1897, p. 311, c. 227), providing for the care of insane persons, etc., was in force, may be maintained notwithstanding Act March 26, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 485, c. 364), which repeals the act of 1897, and which expressly declares that any action commenced may be prosecuted to final determination, etc.

6. STATUTES—GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS—"CORPORATIONS"—INCORPORATION—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 12, § 1, provides that corporations must be formed under general laws, and not by special act when considered in connection with section 4, declaring that the term "corporation," as used in the article, shall include all corporations having any powers or privileges as corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships, etc., and when considered in relation to the entire article, refers to private corporations, and has no relation to corporations like state hospitals for the insane, which are public corporations under the control of the state, and created and acting merely as state agencies for the protection of society and the betterment of the condition of the insane.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1608–1621; vol. 8, pp. 7619–7620.]

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS—CLASS LEGISLATION.

Act March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 311, c. 227), providing for the care and custody of the insane and the commitment of insane persons to state hospitals, and declaring that the estate of an insane person shall be liable for his maintenance, etc., is not objectionable as class legislation.

Department Two. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Napa State Hospital by C. B. Sealey, treasurer thereof, against Emanuello Dasso. From an order denying a motion for a new trial after judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto & Richardson, for appellant. John W. Stetson and Attorney General U. S. Webb, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover a specified sum for the care, support, and maintenance of Emanuello Dasso, alleged to be confined in the Napa State Hospital as an insane person by virtue of an order of commitment, duly made and given by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco after proceedings regularly had, and is maintained by plaintiff under the act of the Legislature known as the "Insanity Law," approved March 31, 1897, St. 1897, p. 311, c. 227. A judgment was rendered for plaintiff, and this appeal is taken by defendant from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is first insisted that the court erred in the admission of evidence. On the trial plaintiff offered, and the court admitted in evidence over the objection of defendant, an order of commitment, dated February 2, 1897, made by one of the judges of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, reciting that Emanuel Tasso had been personally brought before said judge for examination on a charge of insanity, and that, upon examination of the witnesses called, and after a personal examination, he was found to be insane by said judge, and by him ordered committed to the insane asylum at Napa. It is asserted that the court erred in overruling the objection of appellant that no proper foundation had been laid by respondent for the admission of the order. While it is claimed by appellant that proceedings in matters of insanity were at the date of the commitment here in question, required to be had under section 2168 of the Political Code, and by the respondent that they were to be had under section 17 of an act providing for the management of the Napa State Asylum for the Insane (St. 1875–76, p. 137, c. 135), it is not questioned by appellant but that under either provision of the law (and they are substantially the same) the judge of the superior court had power and jurisdiction to order the commitment of insane persons to the Napa Asylum. The point made is that plaintiff should have offered in evidence the affidavit charging insanity, the warrant of arrest, the record of the examination, and all the other preliminary proceedings required to be taken, and upon which the commitment was based, before the commitment itself was admissible in evidence. We do not think this point well taken. It will be observed that this attack upon the order of commitment is a collateral one, made many years subsequent to the making of the order. Under the law the judge was vested with power to make such commitments, and hence had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. The order shows that the examination, which eventuated in the commitment here in question, was had while Tasso was personally before the judge at the hearing. From the recitals it sufficiently appears, as against a collateral attack, that the court had jurisdiction of the alleged insane person; and, in the absence of any showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the preliminary steps which the law required to be taken in order to warrant the adjudication of insanity were regularly had. It is of no moment that the proceedings here in question were before a judge of the court acting by virtue of a special power conferred, and not a proceeding in court under the general jurisdiction of such tribunal. Power having been conferred upon the judge to hold such examination and determine the question of insanity and commit to an asylum, his orders, made by virtue of such authority, and which, from the recitals upon their face and the legal implications arising therefrom, show jurisdiction, are no more subject to collateral attack than the orders of a superior court acting in a proceeding by virtue of special authority, which it must be conceded are not. Matter of the Application of Clary, 149 Cal. 732, 87 Pac. 580. To allow orders made by competent authority to be attacked collaterally at any time would be to defeat the object sought in conferring it, and practically to ignore it. Van Fleet on Collateral Attack, p. 902. The ruling of the court under the objection we are considering was therefore correct.

But it is further insisted that the order was inadmissible, because it purported to be the commitment of one Emanuel Tasso to the asylum, and there was nothing in evidence to show that Emanuel Tasso and Emanuello Dasso, the defendant and appellant, were the same person. Of course, as far as the name Emanuel or Emanuello is concerned, no point is made, as the one is the English and the other the Italian method of spelling. The stress of the objection, however, is laid on the surnames Tasso and Dasso, the claim of appellant being that each represents a separate and distinct family name, pronounced entirely different. If this is true there was no evidence of it. The trial court undoubtedly considered the names Tasso and Dasso as idem sonans. Whether one name is idem sonans with another is a question of pronunciation, not of spelling. Strict accuracy in the spelling of names is not required in legal proceedings. Though a name be inaccurately written, still, if, when pronounced it conveys to the ear a sound practically similar to the correct name when pronounced, the rule of idem sonans obtains, and identity of person will be presumed from similarity of sound in the pronunciation of the names. The letter "T" is convertible with the letter "D," and is at most but a mute articulation (Webster's Dic., letters T and D), and these letters have by the courts been considered as interchangeable, so as to apply to their use the doctrine of idem sonans. For example, "Hudson" for "Hutson" (State v. Hutson, 15 Mo. 512); "Witt" for "Wid" (Veal v. State, 116 Ga. 591, 42 S. E. 705). As to the use of the letters D and T in the cases cited, it was held that the only difference between them was the very slight difference in the articulation of the letters, and that idem sonans applied. It was therefore for the court to say, after hearing the pronunciation of the name "Dasso" by the witnesses in the case, whether, though incorrectly spelled "Tasso" in the order of commitment, it conveyed to the ear when pronounced practically the same sound as would be conveyed by the pronunciation of the name if correctly written "Dasso." It undoubtedly concluded that it did, and, under the cases cited, was warranted in doing so.

These are the only points made by the rulings of the court in the admission of evidence.

At the conclusion of respondent's case the appellant moved for a nonsuit, among other grounds insisting that the plaintiff had no legal capacity to maintain the action, and that the act of March 31, 1897, under which it was brought, was unconstitutional for various reasons. The nonsuit was denied, and it is urged here that it should have been granted. We think not. The points that are made, as to want of legal capacity in the plaintiff to maintain the action, are, first, that the action was commenced while the insanity law of March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 311, c. 227), was in force, and under its provisions; that said act was repealed by the act of March 26, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 485, c. 364), creating the State Commission of Lunacy and defining its powers; that the repeal of the act of 1897, giving the right of action, operated as an extinguishment of that right, and no law thereafter existed authorizing a judgment to be rendered against defendant; secondly, that if this was not the effect of the repeal, nevertheless the action should have been brought by the trustees of Napa State Hospital, and not by the plaintiff as treasurer thereof. This second point, made by appellant, is disposed of adversely to him, in Napa v. Yuba County, 138 Cal. 378, 71 Pac. 450, where it is expressly held that such a suit is properly brought by the treasurer of the hospital. As to the first point, it is equally disposed of adversely to appellant by the statute of 1903, repealing the act of 1897, because that act expressly provides that: "No action or proceeding commenced before this chapter, or any amendments thereto, takes effect, and no rights accrued are affected by its provisions. Any action or proceeding commenced * * * may be maintained and prosecuted to final determination in the manner and form in which the same was brought." As this action was commenced in 1901, and before the repeal of the act of 1897, it comes within the benefit of the reservation in the act of 1903 immediately quoted.

As to the constitutional objections raised to the act of 1897, it is claimed that this act, establishing the Napa State Hospital, was unconstitutional, as violative of section 1, article 12, of the Constitution, declaring that no corporation can be created by special act. This section reads as follows: "Corporations must be formed under general laws, and shall not be created by special act. * * *" Section 4 of this same article defines the term "corporation," as used in section 1, to be as follows: "The term 'corporation' as used in this article shall be construed to include all corporations or stock companies having any powers or privileges as corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships. * * *" It is apparent from these sections quoted, considered by themselves, and in relation to the entire article 12 of the Constitution dealing with corporations, that the corporations thus referred to are private corporations. They have no relation to corporations, such as state hospitals for the insane, which are public corporations, under the control and government of the state, and created and acting merely as state agencies for the protection of society and the betterment and amelioration of the condition of those citizens of the state who have the misfortune to be insane. These are created to discharge a purely beneficent and governmental function, pertaining to the care and treatment of unfortunate members of the community, and exist for governmental purposes solely. They are strictly public institutions, whose maintenance is provided for by legislative appropriations on the part of the state, whose trustees or managers are appointed by the governor, and are, in fact, public officials, whose duties are fixed by express provisions of law, and whose conduct and management is under the exclusive control of the state. They are entirely distinct from either private or municipal corporations, constitute purely public corporations acting as agencies of the state for governmental purposes exclusively. They need not have been created as corporations at all, and their creation as such, and endowment with corporate powers, was in order that the duties imposed upon the official thereof and the administration of such institutions might be discharged more conveniently and effectually. So the Napa State Asylum, being a public corporation under the act, created solely as an agency of the state for governmental purposes, the section of the Constitution relied on by appellant can have no application to its creation as a corporation. On the subject of the nature of such corporations, see White v. Alabama Insane Hospital, 138 Ala. 479, 35 South. 454; Maia's Administrator v. Dir. of Eastern State Hospital, 97 Va. 507, 34 S. E. 617, 47 L. R. A. 577.

As to the other constitutional objection, that the act in question is, as to the right to recover from the estates of insane persons confined in the state hospital, class legislation because providing a right of action against the estates of those confined therein only, and inapplicable to estates of those not confined therein, it is effectually disposed of in People ex rel. Moore v. King, 127 Cal. 570, 60 Pac. 35, and in the Estate of Yturburru, 134 Cal. 567, 66 Pac. 729, and a reference to those cases is all that is necessary to be said on the subject. While other constitutional objections are also made, we deem them untenable.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Shaw and Henshaw, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Susie G. Coutts and another against Carolina M. Winston and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Daney & Lewis and Bicknell, Gibson & Trask (Dunn & Crutcher and Edward E. Bacon, of counsel), for appellants. Stearns & Sweet, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. In 1902 the plaintiffs executed and delivered to the defendant Carolina M. Winston a deed of certain real property in San Diego county. This action was brought to have that deed declared a mortgage, and to redeem the land. The defendants answered, denying that the instrument was intended as a mortgage, and filed a cross-complaint praying judgment for possession of the premises. Upon a trial, the findings were in favor of the plaintiffs, and they had judgment granting them the right to redeem. Appeals are taken from the judgment and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial.

The only contention made by appellants is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding of the court that the deed from plaintiffs to Carolina M. Winston was intended to be, and in fact was, a mortgage. It is no doubt the law, as repeatedly declared in our decisions, that clear and convincing evidence is required to justify a court in finding that a deed which purports to convey the title to land in fee simple was intended to be a mortgage. "That a deed purporting on its face to convey the title absolutely may be shown by parol evidence to be something else—namely, a mortgage—is a striking exception to the general rule, and it has been universally held that the character of the instrument cannot thus be changed except upon clear and convincing evidence." Woods v. Jensen, 130 Cal. 201, 203, 62 Pac. 473. See, also, Mahoney v. Bostwick, 96 Cal. 53, 30 Pac. 1020, 31 Am. St. Rep. 175; Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 Pac. 797; Ahern v. McCarthy, 107 Cal. 382, 40 Pac. 482; Sheehan v. Sullivan, 126 Cal. 189, 58 Pac. 543; Emery v. Lowe, 140 Cal. 379, 73 Pac. 981. But whether or not the evidence offered to change the ostensible character of the instrument is clear and convincing is a question for the trial court. Brison v. Brison, 90 Cal. 323, 334, 27 Pac. 186; Mahoney v. Bostwick, supra. In such cases, as in others, the determination of that court in favor of either party upon conflicting or contradictory evidence is not open to review in this court. Sherman v. Sandell, supra. If therefore the evidence offered by plaintiffs, taken by itself, was sufficiently "clear, satisfactory and convincing" to satisfy the trial court that the deed was in fact a mortgage, the finding made cannot be overthrown merely because numerous witnesses, whose character is not impeached, gave positive testimony to the contrary effect. As was said in Wad- leigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 637, 87 Pac. 93, 98, the appellate court "will not disturb the finding of the trial court to the effect that the deed is a mortgage, where there is substantial evidence warranting a clear and satisfactory conviction to that effect. All questions as to preponderance and conflict of evidence are for the trial court." Reading the record in the light of these rules, we cannot say that the finding declaring the deed in question to be a mortgage was without sufficient support in the evidence.

The land in controversy is a tract of 233 acres, the greater part of which is farming land. The plaintiff John F. Coutts had resided on the property for a number of years. The defendant Carolina Winston is his sister. In 1898 John F. Coutts and his wife, the co-plaintiff, executed a mortgage of the property to the German American Savings Bank to secure a loan of $1,500. In 1902 the bank commenced suit to foreclose its mortgage. Coutts testified that, while this suit was pending, he wrote to John B. Winston, the husband of his sister Carolina, asking him for help, and offering to secure him with a deed if he would loan the money required to pay the mortgage. Winston replied in a letter in which he said, among other things: "If you care to accept, on the proposition to deed over the property as you suggested, I can offer you $2,000." Coutts then went to Los Angeles, the home of the Winstons, to close the matter up. He told Mr. Winston, as he testifies: "It was very nice of him to help me. If he was going to lend that money, I would deed him the property, you know, that when the time came, if he had to have his money, there would not be any trouble between us. He could have the right to sell the property and pay himself, and if I didn't have the money, and he had to have his settlement with the bank (from which he was borrowing the money), I would get out of there and give him a quitclaim deed. * * * He said he hated to go into debt, but he would do it for me." On the same day the parties met at the office of Winston's attorneys, and steps were taken for consummating the transaction. It was finally concluded in this form: The plaintiffs executed and delivered to Carolina M. Winston a grant, bargain, and sale deed purporting to convey the property subject to the lien of the mortgage of the German American Savings Bank, and of unpaid taxes. The deed recited a consideration of $200. Mrs. Winston executed and delivered to the plaintiff Susie G. Coutts an instrument, in form a lease of the property for one year from September 19, 1902, in which Mrs. Coutts agreed to pay the sum of $150 as rent, and was given, on condition of her paying the rent of $150, the option of purchasing the property at any time before the 19th day of September, 1903, for $2,150. This amount of $2,150 was actually paid out by Mrs. Winston. She satisfied the mortgage of the German American Savings Bank, expending $1,950 for this purpose, and paid $200 in cash to Coutts. The $200, as Coutts says, is an amount which he asked Winston to loan him over and above what was needed to pay the bank. It was to pay other debts owing by Coutts. The rent of $150 fixed in the "lease" is 7 per cent of $2,150, and this was the rate of interest paid by Mrs. Winston on the loan negotiated by her to raise this money. The plaintiffs remained in possession of the property. At the end of the year Coutts paid to the defendants $200, and received an extension of the option for one year. In the following year, 1904, Coutts sought a further extension, and this was granted by the Winstons for a period of six months. No payment was made by the plaintiffs within the time as so extended; their efforts to make a sale of the property having been unsuccessful. In August, 1905, the plaintiffs tendered to Mrs. Winston the amount advanced by her, with interest and costs, and demanded a reconveyance. This tender and demand were refused. At the time of the execution of the deed, in September, 1902, the land in controversy was worth, with improvements, some thousands of dollars in excess of the debt to the German American Savings Bank.

Much of the foregoing statement is based on the testimony of the plaintiff John F. Coutts. In some particulars it is corroborated by other witnesses. In many important respects it is flatly contradicted by the defendants' witnesses. But, as we have said, questions of weight or preponderance of evidence are not for this court. The trial court had the right to accept Coutts' testimony as true, and evidently did so. Thus accepted, it was plainly sufficient to justify the finding that the deed in question was intended as a mortgage to secure a loan of $2,150 made by the defendant Carolina M. Winston. It is urged that there is no direct evidence of a promise by either of the plaintiffs to repay the amount advanced, and that there can be no mortgage if there is no indebtedness. Ahern v. McCarthy, supra; Henley v. Hotelling, 41 Cal. 28. But if, as Coutts says, he applied to the defendants for a loan, and they acceded to his request, a promise on his part to repay the money advanced in consequence of these negotiations is to be implied in fact as well as in law. The circumstances of the whole case, if we accept the testimony acted on by the trial court, are entirely consistent with the view that the parties, while in fact agreeing on a loan to be secured by mortgage, were desirous, for reasons of their own, of giving the transaction a different appearance. The plaintiff John F. Coutts, being unable to pay the mortgage upon his home, which was of much greater value than the debt, applied to his sister and her husband for help. They furnished the money necessary to pay the mortgage and other pressing debts, taking a deed of the land, and giving a paper by which the plaintiff was bound to pay interest on the amount furnished, and was given the right to get his land back within a year upon payment of the principal sum. Mrs. Winston had theretofore had unpleasant relations with a sister, from whom she had taken a mortgage which she had been compelled to foreclose. She was particularly desirous of avoiding foreclosure proceedings. Under these circumstances, it was not unreasonable for the trial court to conclude that the defendants agreed to lend Coutts the money upon the security of his land, and attempted to put the transaction in such form that no foreclosure would ever become necessary. Coutts' promise to give the Winstons a quitclaim deed if he did not have the money does not conflict with the theory of a loan secured by mortgage. It was merely an additional assurance to the defendants that they would not have to resort to a foreclosure to bar the plaintiff's title. Indeed, the fact that such deed was thought necessary tends to show that the plaintiffs understood that they were retaining an equity which would not be lost by the mere failure to pay within the time specified in the lease.

On the whole case, we are satisfied that the court was justified in making the finding assailed.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 150

GAZOS CREEK MILL & LUMBER CO. v.
COBURN et al. (S. F. 4485.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 18, 1908.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—TIMBER AND EASEMENTS—JUDGMENT TOO BROAD.

Under a contract entitling plaintiff to cut, etc., timber on defendants' lands, and, in connection therewith, to operate a wagon road over, and to maintain a sawmill on, such lands, on quieting plaintiff's title to such rights it was improper to "perpetually" estop defendants from asserting any adverse claim, though the last contract, which supplemented the first, provided that it should remain in force until all the stumps should have been cut, since plaintiff has not an indefinite time or forever in which to remove the timber, it being presumed that it was intended that plaintiff should act with reasonable diligence, and its title to the easement to build the road and to erect a sawmill should have been quieted only during the time necessary for plaintiff to remove the timber and products from the land, and the court should have fixed the time within which plaintiff would be allowed to remove the timber.

2. CONTRACTS—ENFORCEMENT.

The law will enforce a contract as made by the parties, regardless of the hardships caused thereby, if it is supported by sufficient consideration, and the parties are competent, in the absence of fraud, duress, or mistake.

3. QUIETING TITLE—WHEN SUIT MAINTAINABLE.

One having a right to cut growing timber and easements in connection therewith can quiet his title.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—PROCEEDINGS AFTER REVERSAL—ORDER CONSTRUED.

An order of the District Court of Appeal, reversing a judgment for plaintiff and remanding the cause for further proceedings according to the opinion, does not preclude the parties from amending the pleadings as they may be advised, or from trying any issues made by the pleading as amended.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by the Gazos Creek Mill & Lumber Company against L. Coburn and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and from another denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

The following is the opinion of COOPER, P. J. (concurred in by KERRIGAN and HALL, JJ.), in the District Court of Appeal:

"The complaint alleged that plaintiff is the owner and in possession of a right of way to construct and operate a wagon road over the route described in the complaint across the lands of defendants; also, the right to maintain a sawmill upon the lands of defendants adjacent to the described right of way; also, the right to cut the growing timber situate upon the lands described in the complaint, and manufacture the same into lumber, railroad ties, posts, shingles, wood, and other things; that the defendants claim some interest or rights in or to the said right of way and the other rights claimed in the complaint, adverse to plaintiff, but that said claim of defendants is without right and wrongful. Judgment is prayed that defendants be compelled to set forth their claims, that such claims and rights may be determined, and that plaintiff's title be quieted as against defendants. The defendants in their answer deny that plaintiff is or ever was the owner or in possession of the right of way described in the complaint, of the right to erect and maintain the sawmill, or of the right to take the timber and stumpage from defendants' lands. They admit that they claim an adverse interest in said alleged easements for the wagon road and to construct a sawmill, and in the alleged rights set forth in the complaint. They aver affirmatively that defendant Coburn is the owner 'in fee absolute of the lands designated in the complaint, and the plaintiff has no easement, right, or interest therein.' The pleadings are verified. The case was tried before the court, and at the conclusion of the evidence the court found that the plaintiff is the owner and in the possession of the right of way to construct a wagon road as set forth in the complaint, and of the right to construct, maintain, and operate a sawmill upon the lands, and of the right to cut the timber and stumpage upon the said lands; that defendants claim an interest in and to the said right of way, the right to construct and maintain a sawmill, and the right to cut and manufacture the said growing timber. Judgment was accordingly entered: 'That all adverse claims of the defendants and each of them, and all persons claiming or to claim said premises or any part thereof adversely to plaintiff's claims and rights as set forth in its complaint, through or under said defendants or either of them, are hereby adjudged and decreed invalid and groundless, and that plaintiff be, and it is hereby declared and adjudged to be, the true and lawful owner of all the property rights, privileges, and benefits set forth and claimed in its complaint in and to the land hereinafter described, and every part and parcel thereof, and that the title of plaintiff thereto be and the same is hereby adjudged to be quieted against all claims, demands, or pretensions of the defendants or either of them, who are hereby perpetually estopped from setting up any claims thereto or to any part thereof.' Defendants made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial.

"It is claimed by the defendants that the judgment, which declares and adjudges that the plaintiff is the owner of all the rights and privileges set forth in the complaint, the right to construct the wagon road, the right to construct and operate the sawmill, the right to cut and take off the timber from the lands described, and 'that the title of plaintiff thereto be and the same is hereby adjudged to be quieted against all claims, demands, or pretensions of the defendants or either of them, who are hereby perpetually estopped from setting up any claim thereto or to any part thereof,' is too broad, and gives the plaintiff greater rights than are warranted by the evidence. After careful consideration, we conclude that the contention of defendants in this regard is correct and must be sustained.

"When the plaintiff sought the aid of a court of equity to prevent it from being harassed and annoyed by adverse claims to its easements and rights, it asked the court to protect and quiet its title against wrongful claims, and not against any legal rights of others. When it filed its complaint, it asked that the alleged claims of defendants be adjudicated and determined. Thus all parties were before the court with their grievances and alleged rights and wrongs. The rights of the respective parties depended upon two certain contracts in writing, which it is necessary to set forth in order to fully understand the questions involved. The first one is as follows: 'This agreement entered into this 2d day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one, in Pescadero, San Mateo county, state of California, by and between Loren Coburn and Miss Sitara S. Upton, parties of the first part, of the town of Pescadero, county of San Mateo, state of California, and D. W. Grover and C. L. Littlefield, of the city of Santa Cruz, county of Santa Cruz, state of California, parties of the second part, witnesseth: Whereby the parties of the first part do by these presents agree to let the parties of the second part build a wagon road commencing on the Clark ranch at a point at the mouth of the Gazos Gulch at the commencement of the woods of timber land on the Clark ranch, owned by Miss S. S. Upton, thence up the gulch going to and past the Gazos mill, now standing by the Gazos creek, up said gulch, and take and haul out from land of said Loren Coburn about forty thousand split railroad ties, more or less, and sell said ties to the best advantage and highest price that said parties of the second part can get for them, and take the proceeds of said sale and pay for building said wagon road before mentioned, and after paying for said wagon road to take what moneys there may be left and repair and put the sawmill standing on land of Loren Coburn in the Gazos creek gulch, in running order, build skid roads and start the mill up and go to sawing lumber. Said money received from sale of said railroad ties being money belonging to said Loren Coburn, and being used to improve the property of said Loren Coburn, and put it on a paying basis, viz., the following agreement, to wit, witnesseth: Whereby the parties of the first part, being Loren Coburn and Miss S. S. Upton, do by these presents bargain for themselves, their heirs and assigns, to sell to the parties of the second part, they being D. W. Grover and C. L. Littlefield, themselves, their heirs and assigns, the stumpage on all the land owned by them on the Gazos creek, being about four thousand acres more or less, all the timber, oak for wood, pine for wood, that won't make lumber, tan-bark and the tan-bark wood after the bark is peeled from the trees, redwood for wood that won't make lumber; also the timber used to make split railroad ties, split pickets, split posts, split shingles and sawed shingles, lumber measure in the following way, to wit, for clear and common lumber, one dollar per thousand feet, split ties, split posts, split pickets to be measured same as lumber by the thousand feet, split shakes, 1,000 feet lumber measure making 10,000 sawed shingles. The logs are to be scaled before sawing them at the mill, and the amount of feet sawed by scale measure to be kept on a book for that purpose. And the amount of feet sawed to be given to parties of the first part each and every week. The stumpage upon redwood and upon wood being 50 cents per cord, the stumpage on tan-bark being $2.50 per cord, the stumpage on oak wood and tan-bark oak wood being $1 per cord. The stumpage on all above-named lumber wood, ties, posts, pickets, shakes, shingles to be paid for as fast as sold at Pigeon Point, where the lumber, posts, pickets, shakes, shingles and wood are to be for sale. It is further agreed by the parties of the first part, Loren Coburn and Miss S. S. Upton, and D. W. Grover and C. L. Littlefield, parties of the second part, that this agreement shall be in force from and after the signing of same by all parties aforesaid for a term of two years from October 2, 1901, to October 2, 1903, with the privilege of a continuance of five years more from the expiration of the first two years. [Signed] Loren Coburn. S. S. Upton. D. W. Grover. C. L. Littlefield.'

"The second writing was made the following April, and is as follows: 'This agreement made this 25th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and two, between Loren Coburn, of the town of Pescadero, county of Santa Cruz, in the state of California, party of the first part, and D. W. Grover and C. L. Littlefield, of the city of Santa Cruz, county of Santa Cruz, in the state of California, party of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part agrees to sell unto the the said parties of the second part all the stumpage of all kinds for manufacturing purposes on his land in the county of Santa Cruz, township 7 south, range 4 west, Mount Diablo Meridian, on sections 1, 25, 26, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, at the prices agreed upon with the said parties of the second part, in an agreement before made, the said agreement being dated the 2d day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one, and the said parties of the second part agree to buy the above said stumpage on the said land aforesaid, at the prices agreed upon on the said land above described in an agreement under date of October 2d in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and one. And this agreement shall hold good until the said stumpage shall all have been cut off of the said land before described. It is mutually agreed by and between the parties hereto that all the agreements and conditions hereof shall be binding upon the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of the respective parties to the above agreement. In witness whereof, the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year first above written. [Signed] Loren Coburn. D. W. Grover. C. L. Littlefield.'

"The plaintiff became the owner by purchase of the rights of Littlefield and Grover under these contracts, and no question is raised as to plaintiff being the owner of whatever rights Littlefield and Grover acquired by virtue of such contracts. The latter agreement was signed and executed by defendant Coburn alone; but, as defendants in their verified answer allege that defendant Coburn is the owner in fee of the lands described in the complaint, it probably was not necessary for defendant Upton to sign it. We must then take the two contracts together, and from them endeavor to arrive at the understanding of the parties so as to give to the plaintiff all its rights thereunder and at the same time protect the rights of defendants. As to the hardships, advantages, or disadvantages which may result to the parties by the proper construction of the contracts, we have nothing to do. It is the policy of the law to uphold and enforce contracts as made by the parties, regardless of the hardships that may be caused thereby. In making contracts the parties deal at arms' length, and if they are competent, in the absence of fraud, duress, or mistake, they must abide by their contracts to which they have affixed their signatures if supported by sufficient consideration.

"The evident object of the defendants in making the contracts was to sell, at the prices named, the growing timber and tan-bark on the lands described in the complaint, and get the money therefor. The object of Grover and Littlefield was to secure the said growing timber and tan-bark for the purpose of manufacturing the same, and for the purpose of making a profit on it after paying the stumpage and the expenses of manufacturing it. In order to manufacture the trees into lumber, it was necessary that Grover and Littlefield should have the right to build a sawmill upon the lands. In order to get the timber, wood, and tan-bark to the saw-mill, or off the land to the market, it was necessary to have the wagon road. Defendants, in order to sell the timber and tan-bark, were willing to and did give the right of way and the right to build the sawmill, and the right of ingress and egress for the purpose of taking off the timber. The right of way was given in consideration with and for the purposes of the contracts, and for no other purpose; and so of the right to allow the sawmill to be erected and maintained. The sawmill was to be for the sawing of the timber on the tract of land described; the wagon road was to be for hauling the lumber, tan-bark and products off the land, and for purposes in connection therewith. The agreements, taken together, constituted a sale of the timber. The price was fixed. Payments were to be made as the lumber and manufactured products were sold. The first agreement provided that it should be in force for two years, with the privilege of a further continuance for five years additional. The second or supplemental agreement provided for the sale of all the stumpage, particularly described the land, and provided that the prices should be the same as in the first agreement, and contained a clause that 'this agreement shall hold good until the said stumpage shall all have been cut off said land before described.' Although no time is fixed by the latter agreement within which the timber must be cut and removed, it is not reasonable to allow the parties purchasing the timber an indefinite time or forever to remove it. It must be presumed that the parties intended to act in good faith with each other; that the purchasers of the timber would proceed to erect a sawmill, build the road, and manufacture the timber, posts, shingles, tan-bark, and other products with reasonable diligence considering all the circumstances. It must also be presumed that it was intended that the products should be marketed with reasonable diligence, and the stumpage paid as the sales were made, or at regular reasonable intervals of time. The title to the timber, when severed from the land and manufactured, is to pass by the terms of the contract to the plaintiff; but, on the other hand, the plaintiff must give to the defendants an account of the lumber sawed each week as provided in the contracts.

"The trial court should have quieted the title of plaintiff to the easement to build a wagon road, to erect a sawmill, for and during the time necessary for plaintiff to remove the timber and products from the land, but for no longer time. It was never intended by defendants to give these easements forever, or for any other purposes than in connection with removing the timber. The court should also have quieted the title and the right of plaintiff to cut and manufacture the growing timber upon the lands, provided it kept its contract and paid for the products as sold; but it should have heard evidence, and in view of such evidence, and what is fair and right, should have fixed the time within which the plaintiff would be allowed to remove the timber. It certainly would not be right or just or equitable to allow the plaintiff to keep the timber bound up by the contracts, and thus prevent the defendants forever from selling it. In the meantime the defendants have to pay taxes on the land while the timber is continuing to grow and probably to increase in value. We are of opinion that the contracts, although inartificially drawn, are sufficiently certain to inform the court as to the intention of the parties. It is always the duty of courts to uphold and enforce contracts if it can be done under the rules as hereinbefore stated.

"The findings in some respects are not supported by the evidence. The plaintiff is not the owner of the right of way described therein except for and in connection with the objects and purposes of the contract. Nor is it the owner of the right to erect and maintain a sawmill except for the purposes of sawing the timber off the land. Nor is it the owner forever of the right to the timber growing upon said lands. It is claimed that the plaintiff has no right to maintain an action to quiet its title, for the alleged reason that under a conveyance of standing timber, to be removed, the timber in contemplation of law is to be treated as severed from the land, and therefore converted into personal property. It is not necessary to decide the question as to the status of plaintiff's title to the growing timber as to whether or not it is to be treated as personal property. While it is yet upon the land of defendants, the plaintiff has the right to have it remain there, supported and nourished by the soil, until it has reasonable time to remove it. It has the right of way for a wagon road. It has an easement for the purpose of building and maintaining its sawmill. It has a right to go upon and over the defendants' lands for the purpose of removing the timber, wood, and tan-bark. The defendants claim an adverse estate or interest in and to all those rights, which is an adverse estate or interest in and to real property. In Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 81 Pac. 121, 109 Am. St. Rep. 107, the plaintiff, as owner of the fee, was held to be entitled to maintain an action to quiet his title against the defendant, who had a right to cut and remove the timber under a contract made with plaintiff's predecessor, and to have the adverse claim of defendant defined and determined by the judgment. It was there said that under section 738, Code Civ. Proc., it was intended in such action: 'That the court shall declare and define the interest held by the defendant, so that the plaintiff may have a decree finally adjudicating the extent of his own interests in the property in controversy. The object of the action is to finally settle and determine as between the parties all conflicting claims to the property in controversy, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled to.' On the same principle, the owner of the right to cut the growing timber, and easements in connection therewith, has the right to maintain the action to quiet his title.

"The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion."

Craig & Craig and William Craig, for appellants. Jordan, Treat & Brann, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The application for rehearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal for the First District is denied.

One of the principal grounds of petition for rehearing is that the order remanding the action for further proceedings is not sufficiently definite. We think that under a proper construction of the order of the appellate court the parties are not precluded from amending the pleadings as they may be advised, or from trying any and all issues that may be made by the pleadings as amended.

BROWN et al. v. TOWN OF SEBASTOPOL.
(S. F. 4,663, 4,758.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 6, 1908.
Rehearing Denied July 6, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—PROPERTY HELD IN TRUST BY DECEDENT—PRESENTATION OF CLAIM THEREFOR.

Where recovery is sought of specific real property held in trust by decedent at the time of his death, the party seeking recovery is not asking a payment of the claim from the assets, and he need not present it as a creditor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 780.]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—CONTRACT AND CONSIDERATION.

A complaint to enforce specific performance of a contract to convey land, specifically alleging that specified service rendered, and a specified sum agreed to be paid for the premises, was and is a just, fair, and adequate consideration and price for the land therein described, is not obnoxious to demurrer on the ground that it fails to present facts enabling the court to say that the consideration is adequate and the contract just and reasonable.

3. SAME—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—MUTUALITY.

Though part of the consideration for sale of real property to a town was in the nature of personal service, and hence not specifically enforceable, the town may enforce such contract against the other party in default, where it pleads full performance, under Civ. Code, § 3386, providing that neither party can be compelled to specifically perform unless the other party thereto has performed or is compellable to do so.

4. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—PAROL CONTRACT—EFFECT OF PART PERFORMANCE.

If, under a parol contract to convey, and after part or full payment is made, possession is delivered to and taken by the purchaser, and he enters on and occupies it, it takes it out of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Frauds, Statute of, § 295.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER TO PURCHASE REAL ESTATE—RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES.

A contract of a municipal corporation for the purchase of real estate, pursuant to power conferred by Deering's Gen. Laws 1906, p. 898, § 862, subd. 2, is construed by the same laws as private contracts, and the rights and obligations of the parties will be adjudged on the same principles.

6. FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—SALE OF REAL ESTATE—EFFECT OF PART PERFORMANCE—ESTOPPEL.

Notwithstanding failure to reduce to writing a contract to sell land to a town, the owner induced defendant to expend moneys, and make valuable improvements for the benefit of his remaining property, under promise to convey. He also let the town into possession, and openly disclaimed title, and caused himself to be relieved from assessment, on the ground that it was the town's property. Held, that parties claiming under him were estopped to hold all the benefits received while refusing performance.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—ERROR FAVORABLE TO COMPLAINING PARTY.

A party in whose favor an irregular amendment of a judgment operates cannot make any complaint thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4052-4062.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Albert G. Burnett, Judge.

Action by Barbara E. Brown, executrix of John A. Brown, deceased, and others, against the town of Sebastopol. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

S. K. Dougherty, for appellants. L. J. Scott and T. J. Butts, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title (with other lands) to a triangular piece of land situate within the corporate limits of the defendant town of Sebastopol, alleging title and right of possession in her testator. Defendant pleaded by way of answer and cross-complaint, in the cross-complaint alleging that during his lifetime John A. Brown, plaintiff's testator, entered into a contract whereby he agreed to sell and convey to the defendant town the real property in controversy, upon consideration expressed as follows: "That defendant would remove from said premises certain houses, buildings and structures then located thereon belonging to said John A. Brown, and place said houses, buildings and structures upon other lands belonging to said John A. Brown, and would lay out, make and put in condition for use a street along and across the lands of said John A. Brown * * * and would lay out, open up, make and put in condition for use Depot street in front of and adjacent to the premises hereinbefore described, and would grade and put oil on that portion of said Depot street in front of and adjacent to said premises hereinbefore described and in front of other lands and premises belonging to said John A. Brown, and that defendant would pay to said John A. Brown the sum of $50 when the said Depot street had been oiled as hereinbefore alleged." The complaint further alleged the performance, by defendant, of all the acts to be by it done, that defendant entered into possession of the disputed land with the acquiescence of Brown, and ever since has continued in such possession, and that, upon the death of Brown, $50 was tendered to the executrix of his will, with the request that a deed be executed in conformity with the agreement; that the tender was refused, and the right to a deed denied. It is then alleged that the services rendered, and the sum agreed to be paid for the premises, was and is a just, fair, and adequate consideration and price for the land therein described. Issue was joined upon this cross-complaint, and a trial resulted in findings and judgment for the defendant. From this judgment, and from the order of the court denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal.

A demurrer to the cross-complaint was interposed, upon the ground that it failed to state sufficient facts, in this, that there was an absence of an allegation of a presentation of a claim against the estate. But it is apparent from the cross-complaint that it is an action in equity, to enforce a trust as to specific real property; that plaintiffs hold legal title to a piece of land, which legal title, in equity and good conscience, they should be compelled to convey to defendant. It is well settled that where recovery is sought of specific property alleged to have been held in trust by the decedent at the time of his death, a party seeking such recovery is not asking payment of the claim from the assets of the estate, and is therefore not required to present his claim as a creditor of the estate. Byrne v. McGrath, 130 Cal. 316, 62 Pac. 559, 80 Am. St. Rep. 127; Elizalde v. Elizalde, 137 Cal. 634, 66 Pac. 369, 70 Pac. 861; Estate of Dutard, 147 Cal. 256, 81 Pac. 519. Appellants further contend that the complaint fails to present facts that will enable the court to say that the consideration is adequate, and that the contract is just and reasonable as to the plaintiffs. But the complaint specifically alleges the fairness of the contract and the adequacy of the consideration, and is not obnoxious to demurrer upon this ground. It is again urged that there is no mutuality of remedy, because the contract could not be enforced against the town. Civ. Code, § 3386. While it is true that a part of the consideration moving from the defendant was in the nature of personal service, and therefore not specifically enforceable, yet the situation here pleaded is that expressly contemplated by section 3386, where the defendant has fully performed, in which case it is well settled that the obligation, if in other respects specifically enforceable, may be enforced in specie against the party in default. It is so held in that class of cases where the consideration is, upon the one hand, purely personal and in the nature of personal services, as instanced by Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369, and McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 Pac. 1008.

The foregoing disposes of the objections urged to the sufficiency of the complaint. Coming to the evidentiary matters, urged upon the appeal from the order denying the motion for new trial, the evidence showed that John A. Brown was the owner of a tract of land within the town limits of the town of Sebastopol, and that he had subdivided this land into lots, and sold such of them as fronted upon the existing streets. He desired the town to open a new street through his lands, the value of which to him, in the enhanced prices which he could obtain for his lots, being quite apparent. He submitted to the town trustees a proposition, to the effect that if they would open, grade, and oil as a public street a certain specified piece of his land, removing, at the town's expense, the buildings upon the course of this proposed street, in a manner satisfactory to him, replacing them in such position as he might designate, and, after doing this, pay him $50 in addition, he would deed to the town a triangular piece of land, a little over 100 feet on each side, which would remain upon the opening of this street, as a public square or plaza. He was asked to make the offer in writing, but he replied that it was unnecessary; that his word was as good as his bond. This matter of Brown's proposition was called before the board of trustees at one of its regular meetings, and put to vote, and duly accepted, though the minutes failed to contain a record of this fact. The town, however, proceeded with the work, and completed it to the satisfaction of Brown, and with Brown's permission entered into possession of the disputed triangle. It is established, moreover, that after the work was done, Brown appeared before the board of trustees as a board of equalization, objecting to the assessment to him of the triangular tract, for the reason that it was no longer his, but was the property of the town, and the assessment was canceled, and the tract never thereafter assessed. As to the value of the triangular lot, the testimony varies, in fixing it, from $200 to $2,000. So far as the consideration paid by the town, it is shown that the moving of the buildings cost $170, and that $40 was expended to purchase oil to oil the road. Besides this, there was the necessary labor in grading and oiling the road, and the value to Brown's other lands in having an open street constructed through them in the place and manner by him desired, and without expense to him. The consideration is thus shown to have been adequate. The fact that some of the moneys thus expended in constructing the road were gathered by private subscription from the citizens, and did not come directly from the town treasury, cannot matter to appellants, and does not impair, in the slightest degrees, the substantial nature of the consideration. The finding of the court that Brown entered into the agreement with the members of the board of trustees of the town of Sebastopol, instead of with the town of Sebastopol, is without significance. The members were acting for the town, and, as has been above stated, they accepted Brown's proposition in regular meeting on behalf of the town. The evidence establishes with sufficient clearness, as the court finds, that the consideration for the contract was as above set forth, and that by the town it had been fully performed.

The informality and irregularity in allowing this contract, dealing with the transfer of lands, so to rest in parol is, of course, apparent. But, as laid down by Mr. Washburn (3 Washburn on Real Property, 215): "If under a parol contract to convey, and after part or full payment of the purchase money is made, the possession of the estate is delivered to and taken by the purchaser, and he enters upon and occupies the estate, it takes it out of the statute of frauds." See, also, Weber v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 447; Moulton v. Harris, 94 Cal. 421, 29 Pac. 706; Calanchini v. Branstetter, 84 Cal. 253, 24 Pac. 149. The town of Sebastopol is incorporated under the general laws of the state of California. Deering's Gen. Laws Cal. 1906, p. 635, c. 7, Act 2348: By section 862, subd. 2, thereof power is conferred upon the corporation "to purchase real estate." It is well settled that the contracts of a municipal corporation, when exercising other than its governmental functions, and within the limits of its charter powers, are construed by the same laws that govern the contracts of private parties. Thus the doctrine of estoppel in such a contract may be invoked on behalf of or against a municipality. Says Bigelow on Estoppel, § 1128: "But it is a well-settled principle, applicable alike to the states and the United States, that whenever a government descends from the plains of sovereignty, and contracts with parties, such government is regarded as a private person itself, and is bound accordingly. A state in its contracts with individuals must be judged and must abide by the same rules which govern individuals in similar cases, and when such a contract comes before a court, the rights and obligations of the contracting parties will be adjudged upon the same principles as if both contracting parties were private persons." See, also, Sacramento Co. v. S. P. Co., 127 Cal. 222, 59 Pac. 568, 825; Contra Costa Co. v. Breed, 139 Cal. 432, 73 Pac. 189. We have here presented the case where, notwithstanding the irregularity and informality in the failure to reduce the contract to writing, the owner of the legal title induced defendant to expend moneys, and make valuable improvements for the benefit of his remaining property, under promise to convey a specific piece of land. Defendant was, by the owner of the legal title, let into possession of this land, and the owner of the legal title made open disclaimer of his title before the trustees of defendant, and caused himself to be relieved from the assessment, upon the ground that it was defendant's property. Plaintiffs here seek to hold all the benefits, while refusing performance on their part. They are estopped from so doing, under fundamental and well-settled principles. Des Moines & Ft. Dodge R. R. Co. v. Lynd, 94 Iowa, 368, 62 N. W. 806; Lane v. Pacific, etc., Co., 8 Idaho, 230, 67 Pac. 656; McClanahan v. West, 100 Mo. 309, 13 S. W. 674; Blood v. Serena L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 1017, 45 Pac. 252; Carpy v. Dowdell, 115 Cal. 677, 47 Pac. 695; 1 Abbott's Municipal Corporations, § 259; City of Buffalo v. Balcom, 134 N. Y. 532, 32 N. E. 7.

The court by its original judgment decreed that the "plaintiffs take nothing by their action." It appears that this was an inadvertence, since, to certain of the lands described in the complaint, no claim was made by the town. The court then amended this judgment by decreeing to plaintiffs, as against defendant, all the lands in the complaint described, excepting such lands as were described in defendant's cross-complaint. An appeal from the judgment was pending at the time this order was made. However irregular it may be said to have been, since it was manifestly in the interest of plaintiffs, and to correct a clear oversight, plaintiffs were not injured in any way, and should not be heard to complain.

This disposes of all the questions which we deem necessary for a consideration, and for the reasons above given the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re BULL'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,981.)
(Supreme Court of California. June 9, 1908.)

1. STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The numbering of sections in statutes is a purely artificial and unessential arrangement, resorted to for convenience only, and does not prevent the construction of the act as a whole.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, §§ 282-288.]

2. TAXATION—INHERITANCE TAX—CONSTRUCTION OF STATUTE.

Act March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 342, c. 314) § 2, provides for an inheritance tax on estates not exceeding $25,000. Section 3 provides that "the foregoing rates in section 2 are for convenience termed the 'primary rates.' When the market value of such property or interest exceeds $25,000, the rates of tax upon such excess shall be as follows: (1) Upon all in excess of $25,000 and up to $50,000, one and one-half times the primary rates." Held, that section 2 does not relate exclusively to estates not exceeding $25,000, but that the primary rates therein provided for are to be computed in all cases.

3. SAME—EXEMPTION LAWS—TAXING LAWS—CONSTRUCTION.

A taxing law is to be construed strictly, and this rule extends to exemptions, as well as impositions.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Alpheus Bull, deceased. From a decree requiring payment of an inheritance tax, the widow and sole legatee appeals. Affirmed.

Platt & Bayne, for appellant. Hartley F. Peart, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. This is an appeal by the widow and sole legatee from an order or decree of the superior court, requiring her to pay an inheritance tax of $2,062.07 on the net value of her deceased husband's estate, amounting to $121,483.05. The following table shows how the probate judge computed the amount of the tax:

	Exemption.	Taxable Inheritance.	Rate.	Tax.
First $25,000.....	$10,000	$15,000 00	1 %	$ 150 00
$25,000 to $50,000....		25,000 00	1½%	375 00
$50,000 to $100,000....		50,000 00	2 %	1,000 00
Excess over $100,000		21,483 05	2½%	537 07
				$2,062 07

The only item in this estimate excepted to is the first: One per cent. of the $15,000 remaining after deducting from the first $25,000 the widow's exemption of $10,000. The objection to this item, amounting to $150, is based upon appellant's construction of sections 2 and 3 of the act of March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, pp. 342, 343, c. 314), by which the inheritance tax was imposed. It is contended that section 2 relates exclusively to estates not exceeding $25,000 in value, and makes a wholly independent provision for estimating the amount of the tax on such estates, while section 3 deals exclusively with estates exceeding $25,000 in value (the case here), and by its terms imposes a tax only upon the excess over that sum. It is true that by section 3, read by itself, and very literally, no tax is imposed, except upon the excess over $25,000 of estates having a value exceeding that sum, but that section is not to be read by itself. The numbering of sections in statutes is a purely artificial and unessential arrangement, resorted to for purposes of convenience only, and can never be allowed to hinder a correct construction of the entire act. Section 2 of this act does, in terms and in fact, relate exclusively to estates not exceeding $25,000 in value. It imposes a tax upon the unexempt portion of that sum, of from 1 to 5 per cent. according to the degree of relationship of the heir or devisee or legatee to the decedent. Section 3 imposes a tax according to a sliding scale on the excess over $25,000 in the case of all estates exceeding that valuation, but it does not, as counsel contend, omit or exempt the first $25,000, for by its first clause it imports the provisions of section 2. It reads: "Sec. 3. The foregoing rates in section two are for convenience termed the primary rates. When the market value of such property or interest exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars, the rates of tax upon such excess shall be as follows: (1) Upon all in excess of $25,000 and up to $50,000, one and one-half times the primary rates. (2) Upon all in excess of $50,000 and up to $100,000, two times the primary rates. (3) Upon all in excess of $100,000 and up to $500,000, two and one-half times the primary rates. (4) Upon all in excess of $500,000 three times the primary rates." The clause in italics connects the two sections, and gives to section 3 its proper construction. It shows that the intention of the Legislature was that the "primary rates" were to be computed in all cases. The rule of strict construction is invoked by appellant; the rule, that is to say, that a statute will not be held to have imposed a tax unless it is clear and explicit. It is no doubt true that a taxing law is to be construed strictly, but the rule extends to exemptions, as well as impositions, and the construction contended for by appellant would yield this absurd result: A widow succeeding to an estate of $25,000 would pay a tax of $150; A widow succeeding to an estate of $25,001 would pay a tax of 1½ cents. A stranger in blood to the decedent, taking by devise or bequest an estate of $25,000, would pay a tax of $1,225, but if the estate was worth a dollar over $25,000 he would pay only 7½ cents. We think a strict construction should be indulged against a rule of exemption so unequal and unjust as this would be.

The order and decree of the superior court is affirmed.

MCGINNIS v. MAYOR, ETC., OF CITY OF SAN JOSE. (S. F. 4503.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 8, 1908.)

1. MANDAMUS—GRANT OF MUNICIPAL FRANCHISE—CONTROL OF DISCRETION.

Act March 22, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 777, c. 578), providing as to the sale of street railroad and other franchises in counties and municipalities, that when application is filed with the governing or legislative body, it shall, in its discretion, advertise the fact, together with a statement that it is proposed to grant the same, etc., vests such body with sole power to determine, in its discretion, whether or not a franchise shall be granted at all, and its discretion is not to be controlled by mandamus requiring advertisement of a pending application in the manner provided thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 134.]

2. SAME.

Discretionary power to refuse to take any step toward granting a franchise sought continues until official action, notwithstanding any existing intention on the part of the legislative body or its members as to how they will ultimately vote, and as long as such discretionary power exists, it cannot be controlled by compelling action looking to the granting of such franchise.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 134.]

3. SAME—SCOPE OF REMEDY.

The act which will be compelled by mandamus must be one to which the complaining party is entitled at the institution of his proceeding, and it is the refusal or neglect to perform an act which is enjoined as a present duty that serves as its foundation, and a writ cannot be issued which will be effectual only in the event that the inferior tribunal or board shall subsequently determine a matter then pending before it, in a certain way.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 37.]

In Bank. Mandamus by J. S. McGinnis against the mayor and common council of the city of San Jose. Alternative writ discharged, and proceeding dismissed.

Partridge & Jacobs, Charles S. Wheeler (J. F. Bowle, of counsel), and S. F. Lieb, amici curiæ, for petitioner. F. B. Brown, J. E. Richards, Cobb & Rea (J. C. Campbell, Wm. B. Bosley, and S. F. Lieb, of counsel), Harry L. Titus, and Morrison, Cope & Brobeck, amici curiæ, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Application for writ of mandamus, prayed to be directed against the mayor and common council of the city of San Jose, a municipal corporation. Plaintiff, a resident, citizen, and taxpayer of the city of San Jose, seeks by this proceeding to obtain a writ of mandate, requiring the defendants to advertise a pending application for a franchise for certain street railroads in said city, in the manner provided by an act of the Legislature of the state of California, entitled "An act providing for the sale of street railroad and other franchises in counties and municipalities, and providing conditions for the granting of such franchises by legislative or other governing bodies, and repealing conflicting acts," approved March 22, 1905. St. 1905, p. 777, c. 578. An alternative writ was issued upon the filing of the petition. The matter has now been submitted for decision upon a demurrer to the petition.

The questions upon which a decision is desired by counsel are: First, whether the act in question is applicable to the city of San Jose; and, second, whether such act is void under certain provisions of our state Constitution. While we fully recognize the importance of these questions, we are met at the outset by an objection to their consideration in this proceeding, which appears to us to be unanswerable. If we assume that the act in question is in all respects valid, and, further, that it constitutes the law applicable in the matter of granting street railroad franchises in the city of San Jose, we are satisfied that plaintiff would nevertheless not be entitled to the relief sought herein, or any other relief within our power to give upon this application. If this be true, the questions above stated are practically relegated, so far as this proceeding is concerned, to the category of moot or abstract questions, the determination of which in petitioner's favor could not affect the result. Under such circumstances we do not feel that this court would be warranted in entering upon their consideration.

It is alleged in the petition that on or about November 21, 1903, the San Jose & Santa Clara Railroad Company, a corporation, filed with the clerk of defendants, and presented to defendants, its petition for the franchise; "that the said mayor and common council propose and intend to grant the said franchise as petitioned for"; that they "have threatened and do now threaten to grant" the same, "without advertising in any manner in any newspaper * * * the fact of said application, and without so advertising any statement that they propose to grant the same, and without so advertising that bids will be received for such franchise, and that it will be awarded to the highest bidder"; that each and every one of them propose and intend to vote for the granting, and they will grant the franchise petitioned for without requiring any payment therefor into the city treasury, and without any sale of such franchise; that no competition for the purchase of the franchise will be permitted, and the city will thereby be deprived of a large sum of money, and the burden of the taxpayer will be greatly increased; that petitioner himself desires to bid for such franchise, and if competitive bidding is not had, will be deprived of opportunity so to do; that on December 4, 1905, petitioner demanded of the mayor and common council that they advertise for sale the said franchise, and give an opportunity to petitioner and all others to bid therefor; that notwithstanding said demand, the mayor and common council refuse to so advertise. The act of March 22, 1905, provides that every franchise or privilege to do certain things, including the construction or operation of street or interurban railroads upon any public street or highway, "shall be granted upon the conditions in this act provided, and not otherwise." It then specifies the procedure and conditions. When an application for a franchise is filed with the governing or legislative body of the county or municipality, "thereupon said governing body shall, in its discretion, advertise the fact of said application, together with the statement that it is proposed to grant the same," in one or more newspapers of the county or municipality for a certain designated period. This advertisement must contain a statement of the character of the franchise proposed to be granted, the proposed term, if it be a street railroad, the proposed route, that the franchise will be awarded to the highest bidder, who must, during its life, pay to the county or municipality a certain portion of its gross annual receipts, and that sealed bids will be received up to a certain hour and day named therein. It then provides for the manner of said bids, the consideration thereof, the right of any person, at the time of opening of the bids, to bid a sum not less than 10 per cent. above the highest sealed bid, the sale by the governing body to the highest bidder, the execution of a bond by the successful bidder, the granting of the franchise by ordinance, and the commencement of work thereunder within a specified time.

It is very clear that this act invests the governing or other legislative body of the county, city and county, city or town, with the sole power to determine, in the exercise of its discretion, whether or not the franchise or privilege petitioned for shall be granted at all, and the only purpose of the act in this regard is to prevent the granting thereof in any other manner than that prescribed. The presentation of an application to such legislative body does not compel it to proceed to grant the franchise, or to take a single step in the direction of granting it. The Legislature has been careful to expressly provide that such body, upon the filing of the application, shall "in its discretion advertise," etc. This, of course, does not mean that the body may, in granting such a franchise, in its discretion dispense with advertising, but it does undoubtedly mean that it may, in its discretion, refrain from taking any step toward granting a franchise for the thing asked. In other words, the question whether any such franchise shall be given to any one is, notwithstanding the presentation of the application, solely with such legislative body, to be determined by it in its discretion. It is elementary that mandamus will not lie to control the discretion confided by law to an inferior tribunal or board, and no one could contend, with any show of reason, that the legislative body of the city of San Jose could be compelled by mandamus to perform any of the acts essential, under the act, to the granting of the franchise, merely because an application for such franchise had been presented to it. This, we take it, is recognized by learned counsel for petitioner, and accounts for the presence in the petition of the allegations as to the intention of the mayor and members of the common council. But, however material these allegations might be in an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain action by the legislative body in violation of the provisions of the act, which, of course, would not lie, the functions of the body in such a matter not being in any degree judicial (see Camron v. Kenfield, 57 Cal. 550; Farmers, etc., v. Thresher, 62 Cal. 407; Hobart v. Tillson, 66 Cal. 210, 5 Pac. 83), or in a proceeding to enjoin any such action, they do not affect the matter before us. The discretionary power to refuse to take any step toward granting the franchise sought continues to the very moment of official action by the legislative body, notwithstanding any existing intention on its part, or on the part of any of the members of the body, as to how they will ultimately vote thereon; and, as long as that discretionary power exists, we cannot control it by compelling action looking to the granting of such franchise. Such clearly would be the effect of granting the writ sought by petitioner herein.

We do not understand that a writ of mandate can be issued which shall be effectual only in the event that the inferior tribunal or board shall subsequently determine a matter then pending before it in a certain way. The act which will be compelled by mandamus must be one to the performance of which the complaining party is entitled at the institution of his proceeding. It is the refusal or neglect to perform an act which is enjoined by the law as a present duty that serves as the very foundation for the proceeding.

The point we have discussed is raised by the demurrer, and was expressly made by counsel on the oral argument. As we think that it effectually disposes of the proceeding, it will be unnecessary to consider any of the other propositions which have been elaborately and ably argued by learned counsel. If Act March 22, 1905, is a valid act, applicable to the city of San Jose, and a franchise for a street railroad is granted in violation of its terms, doubtless an adequate remedy can be found in a proper proceeding.

The alternative writ of mandate heretofore issued is discharged, and the proceeding is dismissed.

KULLMAN, SALZ & CO. v. SUGAR APPARATUS MFG. CO. (S. F. 4,351.)(Supreme Court of California. June 10, 1908.
Rehearing Denied July 9, 1908.)1. SALES—IMPLIED WARRANTIES.

Mere use of a trade-name in describing a machine in a contract of sale thereof will not carry with it implied warranties.

2. EVIDENCE—WRITTEN CONTRACTS—PAROL REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES.

Oral representations or warranties and implied warranties and all oral negotiations are merged in the complete written contract, and the parties must be bound by its terms.

3. SALES—IMPLIED WARRANTY—ARTICLE MADE FOR PARTICULAR PURPOSE.

An agreement to sell a machine for a certain price, installments to be paid on acceptance of the proposition and shipment of the machine, with an option of returning it within a certain time in lieu of the last payment, and giving no claim on the part paid, is a lease for experimental purposes with the privilege of completing the purchase, and not a sale within Civ. Code, § 1770, providing that one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants it reasonably fit therefor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 6291-6306; vol. 8, p. 7793.]

4. SAME—MERCHANDISE INACCESSIBLE TO EXAMINATION.

Civ. Code, § 1771, providing that one who sells or agrees to sell merchandise inaccessible to the buyer's examination thereby warrants it sound and merchantable, does not apply to a lease of a machine to see whether it will do certain work, with a privilege of purchase on specified terms.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Error in admitting evidence to vary express terms of a contract of sale will not necessitate reversal of a judgment rescinding the contract, where the complaint sufficiently and explicitly charged a breach of warranty shown by competent evidence, and the court explicitly found in accordance therewith.

6. SALES—RESCISSION OF CONTRACT—BUYER'S DELAY.

Where a buyer was diligently endeavoring to bring a machine up to the standard of efficiency warranted, the time consumed in doing so, approximating 90 days from a certain date within which privilege was given of returning it, regardless of a breach and without claim to installments paid, did not lay the buyer open to the charge of unreasonable delay in offering to rescind the contract for a breach of warranty and to restore the machine.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS AND EVIDENCE.

In reviewing findings of the trial court, the weight of the evidence will not be considered.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Kullman, Salz & Co., against the Sugar Apparatus Manufacturing Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gray & Leet, for appellant. M. B. Kellogg and A. E. Shaw, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to rescind a contract for the purchase of a "Lillie triple-effect evaporator," and for the recovery of such part of the purchase price as it had paid, for the failure of the machine to meet the requirements of a warranty expressed in the written contract between the parties. Judgment was given for plaintiff, and from the judgment and order denying its motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

Plaintiff is a California corporation engaged in the business of tanning hides. Defendant is a corporation engaged in the manufacture of machinery in the state of Pennsylvania. As a branch of its business, it manufactures evaporating apparatuses and machines, one of which is, by its trade-name, designated a "Lillie triple-effect evaporator."

In plaintiff's process of tanning, the hides are successively dipped in tannic solutions of constantly increasing strength. These solutions are obtained by running water over the tanbark and leaching the tannin therefrom. The first and weakest solution to which the hides were subjected was one of 18 or 20 degrees barkometer, and the solutions were gradually increased in strength to 45 or 50 degrees barkometer. When there was a failure of the water to extract as high as 18 or 20 per cent. from the tanbark, the result was a solution unsuitable for tanning uses, and thus a waste product. Plaintiff conceived the idea that it might be able to employ an evaporating and condensing apparatus whereby the percentage of tannin in these low solutions could be so increased as to make them available for use. Plaintiff then came into communication with Mr. Lillie, president of the defendant company, who inspected the tannin solutions, and thought, and so stated, that the apparatus manufactured by his company would do the desired work. Plaintiff desired defendant to lend it one of its machines for experimental purposes, not only to see whether the machine would perform the desired work, but as well to learn whether its use would be consistent with the method of tanning employed by the company. Mr. Lillie declined to lend the machine, for the very obvious reason that, if not purchased, it would be returned without compensation, as a second-hand outfit. The conversations and negotiations between the parties resulted in the following agreement, which is pleaded in the complaint, and became, without doubt or dispute, the original contract between the parties: "Gentlemen: I beg hereby to affirm the proffer made by me verbally to Mr. Kullman this morning, which was: To sell to you the Lillie triple-effect evaporator with condenser (jet not surface) vacuum pump and engine referred to in our letter to you of the 13th inst. for the sum of four thousand and four hundred ($4,400.00) f. o. b. Philadelphia, payable as follows, viz., $750.00 on acceptance of this proposition, $750.00 on shipment of the plant, and $2,900.00 ninety days after arrival of said shipment in San Francisco, you however to have the option of returning the apparatus (i. e., triple-effect, condenser, engine and vacuum pump, with all fittings and connections furnished therewith by us) at the end of the said ninety (90) days after the arrival of shipment in San Francisco in lieu of making the said payment of $2,900.00. Shipment of same to be by rail to the Sugar Apparatus Manufacturing Company, Philadelphia, Pa., freight prepaid by you. It is to be understood that the return of the apparatus by you will give you no claim upon any part of the $1,500.00 paid to us on account of it, and also that the apparatus is to be shipped, if returned to us, properly packed, and in as good condition as is consistent with thirty days use of it with average care. This triple-effect is shown on the accompanying blue print 167A and will be delivered to you as shown on that print, with the addition of an engine for driving and circulating pumps and a vacuum pump and jet condenser in the place of the condenser shown on the print. With the usual supply of water to the condenser to maintain vacuum of 26 inches in the third effect, you will be able to evaporate three hundred (300) gallons of water per hour from your tannin solutions if the triple-effect is operated according to the written instructions which will be given to you in detail."

Some delay followed in shipping the machine and in placing it in plaintiff's tannery. When so placed, it worked unsatisfactorily. An expert of defendant came to the Coast, labored upon the machine, and finally reported it as being in a satisfactory condition and doing the work; whereupon, and because of the delay and the past unsatisfactory performance of the machine, a written modification of the original contract was entered into between the parties, as follows: "It is agreed between Kullman, Salz & Co., and the Sugar Apparatus Manufacturing Company that this agreement is to substitute one dated June 20, 1900, regarding price, although all other conditions referring to the efficiency of apparatus, etc., are still to remain in force as per original contract. It is hereby agreed that in consideration of one thousand dollars ($1,000) paid by Kullman, Salz & Co., to the Sugar Apparatus Manufacturing Company, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, that the final and full payment on the triple-effect machine referred to in the original contract is to be $2,000, which when paid at the expiration of ninety days from this date, is to be payment in full for apparatus complete, including freight and all incidental expenses."

From this date plaintiff continued to operate the machine until, just before the limitation of the 90 days, which the parties seemed to agree was to run from June 14, 1901 (the date of the modification of the original agreement), plaintiff gave notice of rescission. Thereafter plaintiff commenced this action for rescission and the recovery of the portion of the purchase price which it had paid. Defendant answered, joining issue upon these matters, and by counterclaim sought a recovery of the unpaid portion of the purchase price. The allegations of the complaint as to the breach of contract are as follows: "That the said apparatus mentioned in said written contract was warranted to be able to evaporate 300 gallons of water per hour, as specified therein, but that the apparatus delivered to said plaintiff under said contract was not able under the conditions specified, all of which were observed fully by plaintiff, to evaporate 300 gallons of water under the conditions as specified in said contract, but failed very largely to accomplish the work required thereof. That plaintiff believed the representations of said defendant and entered into said contract solely by reason of said representations and the said warranty therein contained, and said plaintiff was unable to ascertain the truth or falsity of said representations before entering into said contract. * * * That thereafter, and within due time, the said plaintiff notified said defendant that said apparatus and machine was not satisfactory, in that the same did not evaporate 300 gallons per hour, as warranted, and in fact fell very far short of said capacity, and that in other particulars said apparatus and machine did not fulfill the requirements specified in said contract, and said plaintiff offered to return said apparatus to said defendant upon receiving a satisfactory machine or the amount theretofore paid by said plaintiff on account of the purchase price of said apparatus."

The principal contention between the parties upon this appeal turns upon the interpretation of the contract and the scope to be given to its terms. By appellant it is contended that the contract is clear, plain, and unambiguous; that the only warranty of defendant was that of the ability of the apparatus to evaporate 300 gallons an hour under the conditions specified in the warranty, namely, if the apparatus "is operated according to the written instructions which will be given to you in detail"; that the only phrase in the contract, as to the interpretation of which, by any possibility, evidence should have been received, was the phrase "Lillie triple-effect evaporator"; and that when it is made to appear, as it does appear without question, that a Lillie triple-effect evaporator was in fact delivered to plaintiff, the need even of taking evidence upon this point was at an end.

By respondent it is contended: That they have pleaded that plaintiff entered into the contract solely by reason of the "representations and the said warranty" contained in the written contract. That it was thus proper for plaintiff to show that the "Lillie triple-effect evaporator" was the trade-name of a machine, which machine was held out to purchasers, under the defendant's book or catalogue, as possessing certain specified valuable properties and characteristics, as that it could be operated by exhaust steam without pressure, that it was automatic in operation, and that it would not entrain, and therefore it was not necessary to use oil to prevent entrainment. That each of these representations were implied warranties running concurrently with the expressed warranty of capacity, and that plaintiff was therefore entitled to show a breach of any or all of them, even though they were not pleaded as warranties, but were pleaded merely as representations. Upon all of these matters the court adopted the contention of plaintiff and admitted evidence. It went even further than this, permitting plaintiff's manager to testify, as one of the representations made before the contract was entered into, that Mr. Lillie, after inspecting the plant and tannin solutions, told him "that he had an apparatus which would do that work and do it satisfactorily." The trial court in receiving this evidence did so under a sound declaration of the principles of law governing a written contract, namely, that parol evidence may not be received to add to, detract from, or vary the terms of a written instrument, and that only when an ambiguity exists may parol evidence be employed to enable the court to arrive at what was the actual meaning expressed in the contract, and that to this end, and for this limited purpose, testimony of surrounding circumstances may be given. But, while thus enunciating the true principle of law, it opened the door to the introduction of any and all kinds of evidence, notwithstanding the writing between the parties, in the further declaration: "I think I had better hear this whole story, with all its possibilities and probabilities." Following its ruling admitting all of this evidence, the trial court further embodied its conclusions upon the effect of this evidence in findings such as this: "That at the time of entering into the original contract, the defendant, by its officers and agents, represented to said plaintiff that a Lillie evaporator was possessed of certain characteristics which made it a specially valuable machine, among others, to wit: That said style of evaporator could be operated with exhaust steam, that there was and would be practically no entrainment from such a machine, that it was automatic in operation, and that it did not require the use of oil to prevent entrainment. * * * That the said apparatus furnished by defendant did not possess the qualities and characteristics as represented by said defendant at the time of entering into the agreement, in that the said apparatus was not automatic in operation; nor could said apparatus be operated with exhaust steam, and said apparatus in operation entrained very heavily, and further required the use of an immense quantity of oil to partially control said entrainment, and said apparatus at no time evaporated 300 gallons of water per hour, but failed very largely to accomplish the work required thereof, and plaintiff in operating said machine fully observed and conformed to the conditions specified in said contract of June 20, 1900."

By its rulings and by these findings it is apparent that the court adopted the theory of the plaintiff, namely, that the representations made by defendant "at the time of the entering into the original contract" constituted warranties upon which plaintiff was entitled to rely. In recognition of the indisputable rule that where the oral negotiations of the parties have ended in a complete written contract, that contract is conclusively presumed to express the full meaning of the parties and may not be modified by any antecedent representations whatsoever, plaintiff has these rulings and findings rest for support, not as did the trial court, upon the representations made "at the time of entering into the original contract," but, as has been above stated, upon what it contends to have been the warranties implied by the use in the written contract of the trade name "Lillie triple-effect evaporator." And, in the same connection, plaintiff also calls to its aid the implied warranties declared in sections 1767, 1769, 1770, and 1771 of the Civil Code. Upon the first proposition, that the mere use of a trade-name will carry with it, under the circumstances here indicated, the warranties contended for, we are referred to no authority, and the rule is quite the contrary. Under certain circumstances, the seller of personal property does, with his sale, extend the warranties of the sections of the Civil Code above referred to, and which in this connection will hereafter be considered; but the general principle of law, well settled, is that where a complete written contract is made, oral representations or warranties, and implied warranties, and all oral negotiations are merged in the written contract, and by its terms the parties must be bound. Civ. Code, § 1625; Mechem on Sales, 1254; 30 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 135; Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 3 Pac. 625; First Nat. Bank v. Hughes (Cal.) 46 Pac. 272; Farkas v. Monk, 119 Ga. 515, 46 S. E. 670; McCormick Harvester Machine Co. v. Yoeman, 26 Ind. App. 415, 59 N. E. 1069; Millett v. Marston, 62 Me. 477; Bullard v. Brewer, 118 Ga. 918, 45 S. E. 711; Naumberg v. Young, 44 N. J. Law, 331, 43 Am. Rep. 380; Conant v. Nat. State Bank of Terra Haute, 121 Ind. 323, 22 N. E. 250; Union Selling Co. v. Jones, 128 Fed. 672, 63 C. C. A. 224; Seitz v. Brewers Refrigerating Machine Co., 141 U. S. 510, 12 Sup. Ct. 46, 35 L. Ed. 837.

But if, for the purpose of explaining the phrase "Lillie triple-effect evaporator," resort may be had to the circumstances surrounding the making of the contract, still less tenable does respondent's position become. Those circumstances disclose, in accordance with the testimony of the plain-tiff's manager, that: "We (plaintiff) wanted an opportunity of demonstrating whether it would be advisable or consistent with our processes to use a concentrator of any character or of any type, and I asked him (Mr. Lillie) whether he would send me one of his apparatuses on trial." Plaintiff desired to experiment, not alone to learn whether the machine was suitable, but whether, if suitable, it was desirable or advantageous to employ it in their manufacturing process. They desired to experiment. Ninety days was considered long enough for the experiment. It was reasonable that they should pay in case they decided not to accept the machine, since upon its return it would be second-hand and of less value. Defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff with a designated type of machine of its own manufacture, precisely as, in the Seitz Case above cited, the refrigerating company agreed in writing to supply Seitz with a machine of its own manufacture designated as "No. 2 size refrigerating machine." The very fact that plaintiff was allowed the 90 days time for experiment negatives the idea that defendant was warranting, or was called upon to warrant, or was expected to warrant, the machine in any other than the one particular—that it would concentrate the tannin solutions by evaporating therefrom 300 gallons per hour. It is not until near the expiration of the 90 days that plaintiff makes complaint of the unsatisfactory working of the machine, and then only of its inability because of its small size, to evaporate the 300 gallons per hour. Mention in one of the letters of plaintiff is made of the fact that the machine requires an excessive amount of oil to prevent entrainment, though this statement is coupled with the further one that "on this score we are not disposed to raise serious objection." Moreover, it is shown that, at and previous to the time when plaintiff finally declared to defendant the unsuitableness of the machine, it was desiring to purchase a larger machine of the same Lillie type with the capacity of evaporating a thousand gallons per hour. So that, as well from the surrounding circumstances as from the letter of the law applied to this contract, it is clear that no warranty was extended by defendant other than that expressed as to the condensing capacity of the plant.

Nor can we perceive that respondent's position is bettered by the invocation of the sections of the Civil Code which are called to its aid. Section 1767 is to the effect merely that one who sells personal property, knowing that the buyer relies upon his advice or judgment warrants to the buyer that the seller does not know of the existence of any fact concerning the thing sold which would to his knowledge destroy the buyer's inducement to buy. No pleading and no evidence touches this section of the Code. Section 1769 is to the effect that the seller of an article of his own manufacture warrants it free from any latent defects not disclosed to the buyer. Nothing in the pleadings or proof touches this section. Section 1770 is to the effect that one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants by the sale that it is reasonably fit for that purpose. The pleadings are silent as to this, but moreover, this was not such a sale as is contemplated by section 1770, but was a lease of the apparatus for experimental purposes, with an option to return at the expiration of 90 days under any circumstances, and with the privilege of completing the purchase upon designated terms if, after experiment, plaintiff should be satisfied to retain it. And that the machine in question was reasonably fit for the purpose is shown from the evidence of plaintiff itself, where it insisted upon its right to continue the use of the machine until another was installed. Section 1771 is to the effect that one who sells or agrees to sell merchandise inaccessible to the examination of the buyer thereby warrants it sound and merchantable, a provision which, by no possibility, can be held applicable in the case at bar.

It follows from the foregoing that the court erred in admitting the evidence referred to, and still further erred by permitting the evidence so introduced to vary the express terms of a complete and unambiguous written contract. But while this was error, it was not such error, under the facts here presented, as to necessitate a reversal of the judgment and a new trial, for the complaint sufficiently and explicitly charged on a breach of warranty, and the court explicitly found in accordance with the allegation of the complaint. True, the evidence is conflicting; that on behalf of appellant establishing that the machine successfully evaporated in excess of 300 gallons an hour in the tests made by its agent before the supplemental contract of June 14, 1901, was entered into, and that again in 1902, while the machine was still being used in plaintiff's business. It was once more tested by the agent of defendant and shown to fulfill the requirements of the warranty. But, upon the other hand, the evidence on behalf of plaintiff, which the court adopts in its finding, was that, while strictly conforming to the directions given by defendant for the use of the machine, it was incapable of doing the work warranted. This finding, then, of a breach of warranty, is sufficient to sustain the judgment if plaintiff's offer of rescission was timely made. Upon this latter matter it is to be borne in mind that plaintiff's right of rescission was entirely independent of its contractual right to return the machine. The latter it could do within the stipulated time, regardless of any breach of warranty and without assigning any reason whatsoever for such return, paying merely for the use of the machine as contemplated by the contract. But the offer to rescind, which existed entirely independent of this right to return, could be founded only upon a substantial breach of the contract, which the court found to exist, and upon a timely offer to restore. It may not be said, under all the evidence in the case, that the offer of plaintiff in this regard was not timely. Plaintiff's testimony shows that it was diligently endeavoring to bring the machine up to the standard of efficiency warranted, and the time which it consumed in this, though approximating 90 days from June 14th, does not lay it open to the charge of an unreasonable delay. True, much argument is advanced by appellant upon the conflicting evidence in the case, to the general effect that plaintiff was not sincere either in its offer to rescind or in its mode of rescission, but that it was endeavoring merely to obtain a larger type of defendant's machine at an unconscionable advantage. But this, after all, is but an argument addressed to the weight of the evidence, which, in view of the adverse finding of the court, may not here be considered.

For the foregoing reasons, the order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

BARRY v. BEAMER et al. (Civ. 460.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 25, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 24, 1908.)

1. TRIAL—FINDINGS—PROBATIVE FACTS.

While it is improper and unnecessary for the court to find probative facts without evidence to sustain the findings, such error is immaterial where the court's finding of the ultimate fact is sufficiently supported by the evidence.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONTRACT TO WILL—EVIDENCE.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract by testator to will all his property absolutely to complainant, evidence held to warrant a finding that such contract was in fact made, that complainant performed her part thereof, and that testator violated the same by making the will conveying the property to trustees for complainant's support for life, with remainder to testator's nieces.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 393.]

3. SAME—CONTRACT TO WILL.

Where a contract by which testator agreed to will complainant all his property in consideration of her services was definitely and fully established, and it did not appear that the legal or equitable rights of any innocent third person would be affected, complainant, having performed her part of the contract, was entitled to specific performance thereof.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT.

The appellate court, in reviewing an appeal in a suit for specific performance of a contract, would not be warranted in declaring that the contract was not definite, certain, and just as found by the trial court, unless the record evidence required such a decision as a matter of law.

5. SAME—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

To the extent that the determination of a trial court rests on mere preponderance of evidence, or on the consideration of conflicting or contradictory evidence, the findings are not open to review on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; F. A. Kelley, Judge.

Action by Lucy A. Barry against R. H. Beamer and another, as trustees under the will of George J. Garey, deceased, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Clark & Anderson, for appellants. N. J. Barry, for respondent.

HART, J. The object of this action is to secure the specific enforcement of an alleged oral agreement entered into by and between George J. Garey, in his lifetime, and the plaintiff, by which, it is claimed the first named agreed to will all his property to the plaintiff herein. The court gave plaintiff judgment. Thereafter a motion for a new trial was made and the same denied by the court. From the order denying said motion this appeal is taken.

The complaint alleges: That the plaintiff and George J. Garey were brother and sister; that in the month of October, 1900, the plaintiff, who was then about 73 years of age, was, and had been for some years, a resident of Marysville, and at that time owned a small farm near that city, making her own living from the products of said farm; that she was living alone, and, at the time we are speaking of, she was visited by her brother, George J. Garey, who was a bachelor, aged about 63 years, residing at Ash Valley, in Lassen county, where he was engaged in the business of raising cattle, and where he owned considerable property, both real and personal; that Garey was then in ill health and declared to the plaintiff that "he was living in a very rough and comfortable manner" in Lassen county, and he "was dependent entirely upon hired help for assistance in his said business of farming and raising cattle, and was dependent upon such persons as he could hire to keep house for him and to give him the comforts of life, and was, a great portion of the time, compelled to live among men without such comforts as may be acquired through the assistance and society of women, and was compelled to do his own cooking, washing, and mending, and general housekeeping; that he was growing old and had not a great while to live, and he greatly desired in his declining years to have some one of his own blood near him to give to his old age the comforts of a home, to care for him in his sickness, to do his general housekeeping, to see to the cooking of his food, his washing and mending, and particularly to give to him that love and affection due from a sister to a brother"; that at the time mentioned said Garey agreed with the plaintiff that, if she would lease her property near Marysville until such time as the same could be sold, and in the meantime go with him to his home in Ash Valley, there to remain with him as long as he or she lived, and would take charge and care of the general housekeeping duties for him, and look after and minister to his wants and necessities in sickness, and would allow him to take the money derived from the leasing and sale of her said property, to be used by him in his said business, that he would support and care for her as long as he or she lived without any expense to her, and that he would make a will and thereby give, devise, and bequeath to her absolutely for herself all of the property of every kind or nature which he might own at the time of his death; that plaintiff agreed to this proposition, leased her said property, and went to the home of Garey, remaining there and acting as his general housekeeper and otherwise taking care of him until the time of his death, on the 30th day of October, 1905; that plaintiff, in accordance with said agreement, gave and turned over to said Garey all moneys she received under the lease and also the money realized from the sale of her property, of which she subsequently disposed by a sale; and that Garey used the same in his business. It further appears from the complaint that, upon the death of Garey, a last will and testament executed by him in Yolo county on the 4th day of February, 1904, was found and presented to the probate court for probate, and that by the terms of said will all his property was devised and bequeathed to the trustees, herein named as defendants, to be held by them "for the abundant support and maintenance of my sister," the plaintiff herein, with the remainder, if anything remained, of the estate after her death, to his "two nieces, Katie Garey and Lulu Garey, daughters of my deceased brother, M. J. Garey."

The answer denies all of the allegations of the complaint, and alleges that Garey had supported and maintained plaintiff for many years prior to the time that she went to his home; that plaintiff did not at any time derive sufficient means from the products of her farm near Marysville from which she could support herself; that said farm was of little value, was subject to overflow, was strongly impregnated with alkali, and was, consequently, very unproductive; and that it frequently happened that such crops as she planted did not grow or mature. It is further alleged that in consequence of the poverty of plaintiff and her inability to properly support herself, Garey had advanced to and loaned her money, and that, finally, on account of her extreme old age and growing helplessness, and out of compassion for her, and believing that he could the better care for her, and render to her the succor necessary in her helpless condition, he invited her to come to his home in Lassen county to live with him; that she went to his home under the circumstances thus indicated; and that Garey "continued to care for her as he had in the past, looking out for her wants and comforts." The answer also alleges that, at the time of the death of Garey, the plaintiff was and "is now indebted to his estate in an amount in excess of any claim made by the said Lucy A. Barry in said complaint."

The contention of the appellants is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the essential and important findings of the court. The complaint urged by appellants that, among its findings, the court found certain probative facts to be true without evidence to justify such findings, appears to be well founded; but we think that, notwithstanding that fact, the court's findings of the ultimate fact derive sufficient support from the evidence. It is manifestly unnecessary to make findings of the probative facts, or, in other words, of the evidence introduced for the purpose of proving the ultimate fact or the fact in dispute; but such findings will not vitiate the findings of the ultimate fact, if the evidence is of sufficient strength to support them. And it may be stated that the rule is that, even where probative facts only are found, yet if the ultimate fact flows as a necessary conclusion therefrom, the findings are sufficient. Emmal v. Webb, 36 Cal. 197; Biddell v. Brizzolara, 56 Cal. 381; Packard v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 183; Bull v. Bray, 89 Cal. 286, 26 Pac. 873, 13 L. R. A. 576. Therefore it follows that, if the evidence as shown by the record justifies the findings that the agreement as pleaded, and for the enforcement of which this suit was instituted, was made and entered into by and between the deceased and the plaintiff, and that the latter performed her part thereof, then the ultimate fact is established by the findings, upon which, under the law, the judgment rests in perfect security, assuming the contract as proved is one enforceable in equity, although some of the probative facts found by the court may not be warranted by the proofs.

The court, as we have seen, found that said agreement was made by the deceased and plaintiff; that the plaintiff carried out and performed her part thereof; that the deceased violated the terms of the agreement by failing to devise, by his last will and testament, all the property of which he died seised absolutely to the plaintiff; that, on the contrary, he gave, by will, all his property, except a life estate therein granted to plaintiff, to two nieces; and, as a conclusion of law, found that the plaintiff was entitled to a specific performance of said agreement. The only questions in the case, then, are: (1) Does the evidence support the findings? (2) Is the agreement as pleaded and as found by the court to have been made one which a court of equity may and ought to enforce? These questions may be answered by an examination of the evidence as presented and the equitable principles which recognize contracts of the nature of the one here alleged, resting, as this does, entirely in parol, and which sustain the enforcement of the terms thereof.

The evidence addressed to the merits of the controversy and received by the court on behalf of the plaintiff is undisputed, so far as any attempt to impeach or contradict it by the defendants appears from the record, except such effort as was made to do so by the cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses. The testimony of the plaintiff shows that the transaction involving the making of the agreement occurred under the circumstances, substantially, as alleged in the complaint; that the deceased, who had for many years been living the life of a bachelor on his Lassen county ranch, having and enjoying none of the ordinary comforts of a home, had visited the plaintiff at her residence near Marysville in October, 1900, and then and there importuned her to dispose of her possessions, turn over the money realized therefrom to him, to be used in his business, and to go to his home, live with and take care of him, and to exercise a general supervisory control over his household affairs; that he promised her that, if she would do as he thus requested and desired, he would give to her, by will, all the property of which he was the owner at the time of his death, if she outlived him, provided, further, that in the event that she should die first, then whatever property she might have she would give to him; that she accepted the proposition thus made by her brother, first leased her farm, consisting of 160 acres, and turned over to him the money received as the rent therefor, and thereafter sold said farm, and, after paying off some debts, gave to Garey the balance; that she went to Garey's Lassen county farm, and there remained, from the year 1900 until his death in the month of October, 1905; that during all that time she managed and superintended his home affairs, by cooking, washing, mending his clothes, and generally doing all the service ordinarily incident to the duties of a housewife; and that she took care of Garey when he was ill, at all times treated him tenderly and affectionately, and gave him home comforts to which he had previously been unaccustomed on said farm. The plaintiff testified that she had always made a comfortable livelihood on her own farm by raising grain, vegetables, chickens, and turkeys; that she often employed two or three men to assist her in sowing and gathering her crops and vegetables and in disposing of the products of her farm; that she was always surrounded by circumstances of comfort, and was comfortably situated at the time her brother made the agreement which is the subject of this action by which she was induced to leave and finally dispose of her own home and go to his and there permanently reside. She further testified that she took with her to her brother's home all her furniture and bed and bedding; that she took, among other things, some feather beds, a luxury theretofore unknown to what some of the witnesses characterized as Garey's "buckaroo" camp, referring to the Lassen county home of the deceased. The witness Ellery, who was once the foreman on the plaintiff's farm near Marysville, corroborated the plaintiff with regard to the character of said farm and its capabilities as a producer and the ability of plaintiff to thereby make a comfortable living. George Templeton also testified that he was acquainted with the farm of Mrs. Barry near Marysville, that he was there in 1900, and that the farm consisted of "good land," and the plaintiff then had "plenty of stock, horses, turkeys, and chickens and grain, and that she was then making a comfortable living," etc. J. G. Conklin testified to conversations had with the deceased after the plaintiff came to his ranch; that deceased had told him that the plaintiff "had put her money in with his, and he was going to live like a white man, and if he died first it would all be hers, and if she died first it would be his." He further said that Mrs. Barry had attended to all the housekeeping for Garey after her arrival at his farm; that Garey "drank a great deal of liquor and was in poor health." Mrs. Alice Dibble stated that she knew Garey for many years prior to his death, and also knew the plaintiff; that she visited Garey's house many times before plaintiff went there; that Garey "did not live very nice. He did his own cooking, and he didn't wash at all, I think. He had no women there to do anything, and they got along the best they could by 'batching.' Sometimes they had good food, and sometimes they didn't, and sometimes the men would cook, and sometimes Mr. Garey would cook. After Mrs. Barry came up she kept his bed clean and his dishes clean, did the cooking, and got on pretty well. She was a pretty good cook. I was there in August, the year he died. She took care of him. She treated him kindly. She kept things clean and was good to him. She was patient with him. She gave him his medicine if any one gave it to him. * * * She did lots of things, everything she could do. She made his bed, ironed, bathed his feet and person, combed his hair, gave him a glass of milk if he wanted it, and did anything she could for a dying man. He was dying at that time. I know she did his washing and mending. I had a conversation with George Garey regarding his business, in August last year. He told me he had Aunt Lucy well provided for. He said he had willed her everything." Mrs. Lou Templeton corroborated Mrs. Dibble relative to the conditions existing on Garey's farm before the arrival there of plaintiff, and also as to the comforts by which deceased was surrounded through the ministrations of plaintiff after she took charge of the domestic affairs of the deceased. She also testified that Garey was very "cross" and hard to please, that he slept in a sort of "dog's nest" before Mrs. Barry went to his ranch, and that after plaintiff took control of his home affairs he was given a comfortable home and was well taken care of. This witness also testified that she knew that plaintiff on one occasion gave Garey $500 and on another the sum of $1,017.60. On one occasion the deceased said to her after plaintiff went to his farm that "he was living like a white man, that Mrs. Barry was taking care of him, that it was lots different than it used to be, that he was pleased with her, that she was doing all she could, and that he was happy now." This witness further testified: "I remember Mrs. Barry signing a note with George Garey to the bank of Alturas, and that he called Aunt Lucy in and told her to put her name down. He remarked: 'That makes the estate pay it.' That was all I heard about the note." The witness George Templeton, to some of whose testimony we have before referred, stated that plaintiff had general supervision of the housework during all the years she lived with Garey, that for five years prior to his death Garey "complained all the time," and that for three of said five years "he was very bad," referring to his physical condition. "He had," continued this witness, "pains in his back, and we had to rub him with pain balm. His habits with reference to sobriety were not very good. He was always cross when he was on one of his drunks. He was hard to get along with. Mrs. Barry always took care of him. * * * He told me Mrs. Barry gave him $500, that he got $1,000 of Mrs. Barry at one time, and at another time he said he got $500. I remember one time that George gave a note to the bank of Alturas. I signed it, and Mrs. Barry also signed it with George. At that time he said to Lucy: 'I guess you'd better sign this too, and in case anything should happen to me the estate would have to pay it.'"

The foregoing embraces, we think, a fair synopsis of all the testimony brought out through the examination in chief of all the witnesses whose evidence has any bearing on the merits of the case. As we have declared, no effort was made to contradict the facts elicited from plaintiff's witnesses, except through the cross-examination of said witnesses. We think the evidence presented by the record before us is undoubtedly sufficient to establish the making of the agreement as pleaded. There are, it is quite true, what appear to be some inconsistencies and contradictions disclosed by cross-examination in the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses. There seems to be much force in the criticism by counsel of the testimony of the plaintiff herself, where she declares that, at the time she borrowed something over $1,800 and executed a mortgage on her farm to secure the payment of the same, she then had in her possession the sum of $900 in coin which she had accumulated and saved from the earnings of her farm. And counsel call attention to discrepancies in the testimony of other witnesses for the plaintiff. Many of these, from the bare record, might appear to be sufficient to discredit the entire testimony of such witnesses. Yet, since the trial judge, in whose presence these witnesses testified, and who had the opportunity, not given to reviewing courts, of seeing and hearing the witnesses, of judging of their intelligence, of observing any physical or mental infirmities with which they might then have been afflicted, of viewing the circumstances under which, by cross-examination, the seeming inconsistencies were made to appear, and, in short, of applying all the tests by which the credibility of witnesses and the weight of their testimony may, at least to moral accuracy, be determined, has seen fit to accept the declarations of the witnesses directed to the proof of the making of the pleaded agreement, we do not see how a reviewing court would be justified in saying that such testimony should be entirely disregarded. The plaintiff positively testified that she had as much as $900 when she borrowed the amount, to secure which she gave a mortgage on her farm. She could not tell whether the $900 was in gold or in silver, but declared repeatedly that she in fact had that sum then. It would seem to be almost incredible that one having in her possession such a large sum of money could not tell whether it was in gold or silver; but the trial judge for some reason seems not to have regarded the declaration as particularly significant. The plaintiff testified that at the time of the trial, May, 1906, she was 79 years of age, and it is probably true that the trial judge, in his analysis of her cross-examination, considered this fact in determining the credit and weight to which, under the circumstances, her testimony was entitled; but, as we have said, this court is not required to weigh the testimony or reconcile discrepancies therein. If the evidence as disclosed by the record is such that it cannot be said, as a question of law, to be insufficient to support the findings, then we are powerless to interfere with said findings. That the agreement is one which, having been proved, should be enforced, there can be no doubt, it seems to us.

The evidence shows that the nearest relation by consanguinity to the deceased was the plaintiff. He had for many years lived in a state of celibacy on a cattle ranch situated in an isolated section of the mountainous regions of the state—a life unaccompanied by the tender attentions which constitute home comforts in their fullest sense. His sole companions were "buckaroos" (vaqueros), or men presumably without culture or refinement, engaged in the business of herding and "rodeoing" cattle. As he grew older, naturally life to him under such circumstances became irksome and wearisome, and with his advancing years he, naturally, the more and more yearned for the companionship and the tender care of the one who, of all living persons, could the more completely and satisfactorily fill the long-existent hiatus in an unhappy and then rapidly waning life. He earnestly and, it may be, pleadingly, besought his only sister to dispose of her own home—a home where she had spent many of the years of her life in comfortable circumstances, and valued by her not more perhaps because of its intrinsic worth than because to her it was hallowed by pleasant memories and fond associations—and come to him, situated as he was, that he might be given the care and attention which he could under the circumstances only derive through the love and affection of a sister. She not alone complied with his request to live with and take care of him, but turned over to him all her means to be used in his business. The evidence shows that, while he was a man of ample means, he nevertheless practically lived, prior to the arrival of his sister at his home, in squalor and misery. His habits for sobriety were not good, according to the testimony. He slept, as one of the witnesses declared, in a "dog's nest," by which it is to be understood that the bed upon which he slept was no better, for comfort and cleanliness, than that ordinarily occupied by that animal. She changed all this. She rescued him from a life of uncleanness and misery and gave him comforts to which he had been unused, and when his last illness attacked him, she tenderly and affectionately cared for him, and thus minimized the sufferings of the last, expiring hours of his life. For five years, he declared, and well could he do so, "he had lived like a white man." Is there any possible money compensation equal to the service thus rendered and the sacrifices thus made by this sister? Could the plaintiff, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, be placed in statu quo by any known legal remedy? Why should not equity enforce such a contract as is shown here? The evidence shows an adequate consideration; that the contract is just and reasonable as to the parties against whom it is sought to be enforced; that there is no showing, nor an attempt at showing, that the plaintiff practiced fraud or undue influence in securing the contract; that it is certain and definite, not within the statute of frauds, and its enforcement will not involve the invasion of the legal or equitable rights of an innocent third party. Section 3391, Civ. Code; Stewart v. Smith (Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 667, and cases therein cited. Professor Pomeroy, in his work on Specific Performance (page 268) states the principle upon which such agreements as the one here are enforced, in the following language: "Courts of equity will, under special circumstances, enforce a contract to make a will, or to make a certain testamentary disposition, and this may be done, even when the agreement was parol, where in reliance upon the contract the promisee has changed his condition and relations so that a refusal to complete the agreement would be a fraud upon him. (Italics ours.) The relief is granted, not by ordering a will to be made, but by regarding the property in the hands of the heirs, devisees, assignees, or representatives of the deceased promisor, as impressed with a trust in favor of the plaintiff, and by compelling defendant, who must of course belong to some one of these classes of persons, to make such a disposition of the property as will carry out the intent of the agreement."

The principle thus stated has been applied in many cases in California and other jurisdictions. One of the leading California cases upon the subject is McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 Pac. 1008, Healy, who was for many years engaged in the stock-raising business on an extensive scale in one of our northern counties, after acquiring considerable wealth, visited his native country, Ireland. There he met McCabe, then a boy of 14 years of age, to whom he became attached. He importuned the boy's mother, who was his sister, to allow the boy to return with him to this country, agreeing to educate the lad, train him in the business in which he was engaged, and if, upon learning the business, the boy would properly look after the same, he (Healy) would, upon his death, leave him all his property. The "plaintiff, his mother, and his guardian accepted this proposition made by Healy, and upon the strength of these promises plaintiff was given into the possession of Healy, brought by him from Ireland to Lassen county, Cal., and for 17 years these two people lived together, keeping faith to the full letter and spirit of the aforesaid understanding." Healy died intestate, and McCabe brought suit to enforce the agreement made by Healy. Sustaining the decree of the trial court enforcing the performance of the terms of said agreement, the Supreme Court, among other things, says: "The facts of this case, when tested by the law as the court finds it, demand the relief given by the chancellor's decree. * * * Appellants, in their brief, have cited no case where relief has been denied upon facts in any substantial degree similar to those here presented, and it is doubtful if there is such a case to be found in the law books. It is not plain to the understanding what additional element in the nature of further covenants between Healy, upon the one part, and the boy, his guardian, and his mother, upon the other part, could have been inserted into this contract which would have given it greater legal strength." A significant distinction between that case and the one at bar, and favorable to the latter, is to be observed in the fact that in the former there must have been, under the terms of the agreement and in the very nature of the situation, a considerable period during which the promisee could perform no actual service, while in this case the plaintiff immediately proceeded to render the service she agreed to perform and to carry out other covenants of the agreement which she promised to execute. "It is the settled doctrine of this court," says Chief Justice Beatty, in Bell v. Wyan, 147 Cal. 515, 82 Pac. 41, "that a man may bind himself by a contract, written or oral, to make a particular disposition of his property by will, and that such contract may be specifically enforced in favor of the promisee." In the late case of Stewart v. Smith, supra, this court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Burnett, elaborately discusses this principle. In that opinion will be found, in addition to an interesting discussion of the proposition, a long line of authorities cited, in which the principle is exhaustively considered. But there is no need of pursuing the subject, for it is a firmly settled proposition, so elementary that it requires no discussion, that a man may dispose of his own property at his pleasure and in any manner which may best suit his own judgment, and, as is said in the leading case of Johnson v. Hubbell, 10 N. J. Eq. 332, 66 Am. Dec. 776: "No good reason can be assigned why he may not make a legal agreement to dispose of his property to a particular individual, or for a particular purpose as well by will as by a conveyance to be made at some specific future period, or upon the happening of some future event. It may be unwise for a man in this way to embarrass himself as to the final disposition of his property, but he is the disposer by law of his own fortune, and the sole and best judge as to the time and manner of disposing of it. A court of equity will decree the specific performance of such an agreement upon the recognized principles by which it is governed in the exercise of this branch of its jurisdiction." There is not to be found in this case the element present in the case of Owen v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 Pac. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369, which furnished the very strongest reason for denying the specific performance of an agreement similar in terms to the one here. The rights of innocent third parties have not intervened here to justify the refusal by a court of equity, upon that ground, to award the relief asked for. After McNally had made the agreement with the plaintiff, he married, and the court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Henshaw, says that a contract such as this, if so construed as to be in restraint of marriage, would be void, and that therefore "the only permissible conclusion is that the parties contracted in contemplation of that event. Upon its happening, the rights of innocent third parties intervened and a decree of specific performance could not be awarded," citing Gall v. Gall, 64 Hun, 600, 19 N. Y. Supp. 332.

Counsel for appellants have cited many authorities which they claim sustain their several contentions, but we think an examination of them will show, upon the facts, a marked distinction between them and the case here. It is earnestly and correctly argued that a contract such as this, whose existence and terms must depend for their establishment upon the uncertainty of the memory of witnesses, should be, when sought to be enforced by a court of equity, "scrutinized with particular care," and that "only upon a satisfactory showing that it is definite and certain and just will it be enforced." Owens v. McNally, supra. That a court of equity should thus be particular and cautious in the enforcement of such agreements is a proposition which cannot be gainsaid, and we assume, as we are bound to do, that the court to which the evidence was addressed, and which must determine the question of the truth or falsity of all the testimony and settle and reconcile to its own satisfaction any discrepancies in such testimony, if any appear, or whether the memory of any particular witness or that of all of them may or may not be depended upon, has exercised the particular care required in such cases, and has concluded that a satisfactory showing was made that the agreement here is definite and certain and just. To us, as a reviewing court, the agreement, from the evidence presented, appears to be so, and, as we have endeavored to make clear in another part of this opinion, we would not be warranted in declaring that it is not definite and certain and just, unless the record evidence is such as to support us in so declaring as a question of law. This, we say, we are not justified in doing in this case. It is hardly necessary to refer to authorities upon this point. They are numerous in this as well as in every other state in the Union; but the language used by our Supreme Court in discussing this question in Brisson v. Brisson, 90 Cal. 324, 27 Pac. 189, is so pertinent to the case at bar that we quote: "It may be conceded, as is claimed by the appellant, that the evidence of a verbal agreement between husband and wife that will create a constructive trust should be clear, satisfactory, and conclusive; but it must also be conceded that whether the evidence in any case is of this character must be determined by the trial court, and this court must accept the determination of the trial court thereon as conclusive." And, again, in Wadleigh v. Phelps, 149 Cal. 627, 87 Pac. 93, it is said: " * * * This question of fact, like all other questions of fact, is one for the trial court. All questions as to preponderance and conflict of evidence are for the trial court. To the extent that its determination rests upon the mere preponderance of evidence, or upon the consideration of conflicting or contradictory evidence, the findings of the trial court are not open to review in this court." See, also, Shults v. Shults, 159 Ill. 654, 43

N. E. 800, 50 Am. St. Rep. 188; Steinmeyer v. Seibert, 190 Pa. 471, 42 Atl. 880, 70 Am. St. Rep. 641; Elliot v. Whitmore, 23 Utah, 342, 65 Pac. 70, 90 Am. St. Rep. 700; Shahan v. Swan, 48 Ohio St. 25, 26 N. E. 222, 29 Am. St. Rep. 517.

There is, as before observed, no contradictory evidence in the case at bar upon the vital points involved. The discrepancies or, rather, apparent inconsistencies, shown by the cross-examination of plaintiff and of some of her witnesses, constitute alone the foundation for the claim that the evidence is contradictory, and that the pleaded agreement was not proved.

We can see no reason for disturbing the findings, and thus the decree of the court below, and discover no prejudicial errors in the court's rulings.

The order is therefore affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 167

LOWE v. YOLO COUNTY CONSOL. WATER CO. (Civ. 452.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 23, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 22, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—DEMURRER—COMPLAINT.

A demurrer to a complaint is addressed to the case as presented.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — WATER COMPANIES—IRRIGATION — FAILURE TO FURNISH WATER—ACTIONS—COMPLAINT.

A complaint, in an action against a water company for failure to deliver water for irrigation, which does not show that Civ. Code, § 552, relating to the duties of a corporation organized to furnish water for irrigation to persons entitled to the use of the water, has any application, is not bad for failing to allege that the company has sufficient water to supply plaintiff, after other consumers entitled to preference have been supplied, as provided by said section.

3. SAME.

A complaint, in an action against a water company for failure to deliver water for irrigation, which shows that the company is the owner of water rights, that at the time of the demand therefor alleged, and subsequent thereto, it had sufficient water to irrigate the lands referred to, including the land of plaintiff, and that, notwithstanding the payment and tender alleged, it refused to comply with the demand to the extent of its reasonable ability, states a cause of action within St. 1885, p. 95, c. 115, providing that every company appropriating water for sale, on demand and tender of the established water rates, shall sell water at the established rates, to the extent of the actual supply, etc.

4. SAME—NEED OF IRRIGATION.

A complaint, in an action against a water company for failure to deliver water for irrigation, which alleges that, by reason of the refusal of the company to furnish plaintiff with water, a crop growing on his land described was destroyed, sufficiently shows that plaintiff's land needed irrigation.

5. TENDER—PLEADING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2076, providing that the person to whom a tender is made must at the time specify any objection, or he will be deemed to have waived it, etc., a complaint, in an action against a water company for failure to furnish water for irrigation, which alleges that plaintiff tendered defendant in cash a specified sum for the payment of such water as might be furnished at the rates established, sufficiently alleges a tender, as against a general demurrer, for, in the absence of any objection, proof of the tender as alleged would be sufficient.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—WATER COMPANIES — IRRIGATION — FAILURE TO SUPPLY WATER — ACTIONS — DEMAND AND TENDER EXCUSED.

A complaint, in an action against a water company for failure to deliver water for irrigation, which alleges that, prior to the demand for water, the company refused to furnish plaintiff with water for irrigation purposes, or at all, shows the absence of any necessity for any specific demand for water and tender therefor at the rates established; the allegation of refusal implying a request to furnish plaintiff with water, and its refusal excusing any more specific demand or any tender.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS RULINGS ON DEMURRERS.

Where the omissions in a complaint defectively alleging facts necessary to a cause of action were supplied by the answer, and all the material issues were clearly presented by the pleadings, the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint on the ground of such defects was not reversible error.

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — WATER COMPANIES — IRRIGATION — OBLIGATION TO FURNISH WATER.

The obligation of a corporation organized to sell and distribute water to furnish water is created by Const. art. 14, § 1, declaring that the use of water appropriated for sale or distribution shall be a public use and subject to regulation in the manner prescribed by law, and does not arise under St. 1885, p. 95, c. 115, requiring a corporation appropriating water for sale or distribution to furnish water to the extent of the actual supply, and providing that any corporation neglecting so to do shall be liable in damages to the extent of the actual injury sustained; and a water company guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice in failing to furnish water is liable to exemplary damages within Civ. Code, § 3294, providing that in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract exemplary damages may be recovered, where defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice.

9. STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION — OVERTURNING PRINCIPLES OF LAW.

It will not be presumed that the Legislature in the enactment of a statute intended to overturn established principles of law, unless such intention is made to clearly appear either by express declaration or by necessary implication.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; E. E. Gaddis, Judge.

Action by O. A. Lowe against the Yolo County Consolidated Water Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

N. A. Hawkins, for appellant. A. C. Huston, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal on the judgment roll alone from a judgment rendered upon the verdict of a jury awarding plaintiff $599, actual damages, and $500, exemplary damages, for failure to deliver water to the plaintiff for the irrigation of certain lands consisting of 42 acres in Yolo county.

Appellant declares that "the sufficiency of the complaint and the right of plaintiff to recover exemplary damages are the only questions involved on the appeal."

1. The first point urged against the complaint is based upon the principle that prior users have a preferred claim to the waters supplied by a corporation organized for the sale and distribution of water, and therefore it is contended plaintiff must allege that the defendant has sufficient water to supply plaintiff's wants "after all other consumers theretofore applying as well as theretofore supplied, or who had contracts with the defendant for the supplying of water had been fully supplied." The claim is made by virtue of section 552 of the Civil Code, which provides that: "Whenever any corporation, organized under the laws of this state, furnishes water to irrigate lands which said corporation has sold, the right to the flow and use of said water is and shall remain a perpetual easement to the land so sold, at such rates and terms as may be established by said corporation in pursuance of law. And whenever any person who is cultivating land, on the line and within the flow of any ditch owned by such corporation has been furnished water by it, with which to irrigate his land, such person shall be entitled to the continual use of said water, upon the same terms as those who have purchased their land of the corporation." But, as pointed out by respondent, there is nothing in the complaint to show that said section 552 has any application, and the demurrer, of course, is addressed to the case as presented, and we cannot assume that there are others entitled to preference. If so, it is the proper procedure to disclose it by the answer, as it is matter of defense. Fellows v. City of Los Angeles, 151 Cal. 52, 90 Pac. 137. As said in Crow v. San Joaquin Irr. Co., 130 Cal. 309, 62 Pac. 562, 1058: "Under the provisions of section 1 of article 14 of the Constitution, and of the act of March 12, 1885, to enforce the same, the sale, rental, or distribution of water is declared to be a 'public use,' and it is made the duty of a water company supplying water for distribution to furnish water upon tender of the established rates, and no other duty than such tender can be lawfully prescribed or imposed by such company as a condition for supplying water as required by law."

We think that plaintiff shows clearly by his complaint that he is entitled to the water which he claims. It appears that appellant is the owner of large and valuable water rights; that through its various ditches it was diverting the waters of Cache creek and supplying the same to the farming neighborhoods mentioned; that at all the times herein mentioned the said defendant had sufficient water to supply the demands of the stockholders and also to furnish the plaintiff herein with the water necessary to irrigate the lands hereinbefore referred to at the time of the service of the demand as alleged and subsequent thereto, "and, furthermore, that at the time of said demand and subsequent thereto, the said defendant had an ample supply of appropriated waters as aforesaid for the purpose of furnishing the said plaintiff with water for the irrigation of said lands; that notwithstanding the said payment and tender the said defendant refused to comply with said demand to the extent of its reasonable ability so to do, and said defendant further refused to and has not complied with said demand at all." By these and subsequent allegations the plaintiff brought himself within the terms of section 10 of the "act to regulate and control the sale, rental and distribution of appropriated water in this state," etc., approved March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 98, c. 115), which provides that: "Every person, company, association and corporation having in any county in the state * * * appropriated waters for sale, rental or distribution to the inhabitants of such county, upon demand therefor and tender in money of such established water rates, shall be obliged to sell, rent or distribute such water to such inhabitants at the established rates regulated and fixed therefor, as in this act provided, whether so fixed by the board of supervisors or otherwise, to the extent of the actual supply of such appropriated waters of such person, company, association or corporation for such purposes. If any person, company, association or corporation, having water for such use, shall refuse compliance with such demand, or shall neglect for the period of five days after such demand to comply therewith to the extent of his or its reasonable ability so to do shall be liable in damages to the extent of the actual injury sustained by the person or party making such demand or tender, to be recovered, with costs." The complaint before us alleges all the facts contemplated by said section as precedent to and the basis for the liability of the corporation, and we can see no warrant for holding that the court erred in overruling the demurrer.

2. The suggestion that "there is no averment that plaintiff's land required or needed irrigation, or that irrigation would be of any benefit," does not appeal to us as possessing substantial merit. The following allegation is sufficient to cover the point: "That by reason of the refusal of said defendant to furnish plaintiff with water as aforesaid, the said crop of alfalfa growing on said tract of land has become lost and destroyed."

3. Objection is made to the sufficiency of the tender. Conceding that the allegation is not as full and explicit as it should be, it is not open to attack by general demurrer. It is averred that the plaintiff tendered defendant in cash the sum of $100 in advance for the payment of such waters as might be furnished by defendant at the rates established by the board of supervisors. This should be deemed sufficient in the absence of any objection to the form of the tender or the amount offered. In considering the complaint we cannot presume that any such objection was made. Section 2076 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: "The person to whom a tender is made, must at the time, specify any objection he may have to the money, instrument or property, or he must be deemed to have waived it; and if the objection be to the amount of money, the terms of the instrument, or the amount or kind of property, he must specify the amount, terms or kind which he requires, or be precluded from objecting afterwards." In the absence of any such objection, proof of the tender as alleged would be sufficient, and hence the allegation, without any indication of such objection, should be held to meet the requirement of good pleading. In Mullally v. Townsend, 119 Cal. 51, 50 Pac. 1066, it is said that "Any language intended to constitute a demand, and which plainly informs the party of whom the demand is made that he is required to perform the duty or obligation to which the demand refers, is sufficient. A demand, however, like all allegations of fact, should be pleaded with directness and certainty. But whether any given essential allegation should be held sufficient on appeal often depends upon the manner in which it is attacked. Objections which go to the sufficiency of the statement of facts and not to the facts themselves, must be by special demurrer pointing out the particular defects complained of."

But again, the complaint alleges "that prior to the demand the said defendant refused to furnish the said plaintiff with water for irrigation purposes or at all." Under such circumstances, it is difficult to see the necessity for any specific demand or tender. In Remy v. Olds, 88 Cal. 542, 26 Pac. 355, it is said: "The only other point which we propose to notice, that the suit cannot be maintained because there is no allegation of demand for a deed, is equally untenable. Such demand was unnecessary. Why should the plaintiff be required to do that which the defendants have expressly notified him in writing that they would not do? The law does not require the performance of a useless act, and when it is made to appear by the defendant's own act that the demand would have been refused, they cannot be heard to object that no demand was made." Koyer v. Willmon, 150 Cal. 785, 90 Pac. 135. Appellant contends that this rule is not applicable here for the reason that "the demand creates the cause of action, and no right exists until the demand has been made." Ordinarily this would be true in the case of a party seeking water for irrigation from a public service corporation, but here the appellant placed itself in default by its refusal on any terms to furnish any water whatever to respondent. The allegation of refusal implies, of course, that some sort of request or demand was made upon appellant to furnish plaintiff with water, but its treatment of the latter excused any more specific demand or any tender.

But, again, if some of the facts necessary to a cause of action were somewhat defectively alleged, it resulted in no prejudice to appellant, as the omission was supplied by the allegations of the answer, and thereby all the material issues were clearly presented by the pleadings. In Alexander v. Central Lumber, etc., Co., 104 Cal. 536, 38 Pac. 410, 411, it is said: "It is not in all cases where error has been committed by trial courts in overruling demurrers to complaints upon the grounds of ambiguity or uncertainty that this court will order a reversal of the judgment based upon the trial of the issues made by the complaint and answer. The same rule applies to errors of this character as is invoked as to all other errors of the court. It must not be mere abstract error, but it must be prejudicial and injurious error in order to avail appellant, for otherwise he has no cause of complaint." See, also, Dennis v. Crocker-Huffman L. & W. Co. (Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 425. The rule does not apply, manifestly, where there is an entire failure to state a cause of action, but that is not the case here. At most there is some uncertainty and want of accuracy in certain allegations, but, assuming that the demurrer upon the ground that the complaint "is uncertain and ambiguous and unintelligible" challenges consideration of the alleged defects, we would not be justified in reversing the ruling of the trial court.

4. The complaint alleges as the basis for exemplary damages: "That the said defendant refused to comply with said demand and refused to supply the plaintiff with water unless the said plaintiff would repay to the said defendant the amount paid by said defendant to plaintiff for the right of way across his lands for the said ditch or canal; that the said refusal of the said defendant was wanton, willful, malicious, and without any right whatever, and was made for the purpose of extorting from this plaintiff the amount of money paid by said defendant to said plaintiff for said right of way * * * and for the purpose of damaging, injuring, and destroying the crop growing on said lands and for the purpose of vexing, harassing, and annoying this plaintiff herein." This would seem to be sufficient to bring the case within section 3294 of the Civil Code, which provides that: "In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damages, may recover damages for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant." The action is for the breach of an obligation arising from the Constitution and statutes, and not from contract, and there is no doubt the allegations of the complaint disclose oppression and malice; but it is urged by appellant that the statute of 1885, supra, section 10, provides the penalty, viz., "damages to the extent of the actual injury sustained," and that "where an obligation is created by statute and the same statute prescribes a penalty for a breach of the obligation no other or additional penalty can be allowed." But we do not understand that the obligation to furnish the water arises from the statute, but it is created rather by the Constitution, which declares that the use of all water appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution shall be a public use and subject to the regulation and control of the state, in the manner to be prescribed by law. Article 14, § 1. In Price v. Riverside Land I. Co., 56 Cal. 433, it is said: "Every corporation deriving its being from the act above cited has impressed upon it a public trust—the duty of furnishing water, if water it has, to all those who come within the class or community for whose alleged benefit it has been created. * * * The duty exists without any express statutory words imposing it wherever the public use appears." It is true the Constitution did not provide for the control and regulation of the use of the water outside of cities and towns, and the omission was supplied by the said act of 1885; but this latter is not the source of the obligation, but provides the conditions under which the obligation shall be discharged. The said act prescribes the general rule for damages for failure to discharge the duty to furnish water, but there is nothing in the statute to indicate the purpose of the Legislature to relieve the corporation from the operation of the special provision of the Code as to those exceptional cases where the delinquent is guilty of fraud, oppression or malice.

It is not to be presumed that the Legislature in the enactment of statutes intends to overturn long-established principles of law, unless such intention is made to clearly appear either by express declaration or by necessary implication. In re Garcelon's Estate, 104 Cal. 584, 38 Pac. 414, 32 L. R. A. 595, 43 Am. St. Rep. 134. In the case of Lyles v. Perrin, 119 Cal. 264, 51 Pac. 332, the right to recover punitive damages in this class of cases seems to be recognized. It is there said: "Instruction 15, asked by the defendant, by which the court was requested to instruct the jury substantially that there was no evidence in the case which would warrant any punitive damage, was properly refused." In Sutherland on Damages, p. 1093, the rule is announced as follows: "If a wrong is done willfully—that is, if a tort is committed deliberately, recklessly, or by willful negligence, with a present consciousness of invading another's right, or of exposing him to injury—an undoubted case is presented for exemplary damages." In Greenberg v. Western Turf Ass'n, 140 Cal. 358, 73 Pac. 1050, it is held, as stated in the syllabus, that: "The provision of the statute for a penalty of $100 in addition to the actual damages is not exclusive of punitive damages in a case justifying punitive damages; and it was proper to instruct the jury, in accordance with section 2292 of the Civil Code, that if they found the defendant had been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed, they might, in addition to actual damages, give damages, for the sake of example and by way of punishing the defendant." The reasoning in that case is pertinent here. We can see no good reason for holding that appellant is an exception to the rule which imposes an additional penalty for fraud, oppression, or malice.

The judgment is affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 160

GREEN v. THORNTON. (Civ. 412.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 22, 1908.)

1. MORTGAGES—ACTIONS BETWEEN MORTGAGOR AND MORTGAGEE—EJECTMENT—CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Ejectment will not lie by mortgagor against mortgagee, unless the mortgage has been paid.

2. SAME.

In ejectment by mortgagor against mortgagee, rents and profits collected by mortgagee cannot be applied by mortgagor to the payment of the mortgage, since such receipts are in the nature of an equitable set-off to the amount due, and must be settled on an accounting in equity.

3. SAME—ACTIONS TO REDEEM—RIGHT TO DISREGARD FINDINGS OF JURY.

A complaint, in one count, alleged that plaintiff's intestate executed to defendant a conveyance of the land in controversy, which, though in form a deed absolute, was in reality a mortgage, and that thereafter defendant, claiming to be the owner by virtue of the deed, entered into possession, and refused to surrender the same on demand, or render an account of rents and profits. In a second count the complaint alleged that plaintiff, in his representative capacity, was the owner of the land, and that defendant was in possession, and claimed title thereto adversely to plaintiff, founding his title on a conveyance by intestate; that the conveyance was intended as a mortgage, and that the indebtedness had been paid, but that defendant nevertheless held possession and refused to surrender the same. The prayer of the complaint was for a decree quieting title, for an accounting, and that plaintiff be permitted to pay any balance due, or should a balance be found in plaintiff's favor, that plaintiff have judgment therefor, and for possession of the land and for other relief. Held, that the complaint was to redeem from the mortgage, and not in ejectment, which theory was strengthened by the prayer, and hence the court was entitled to disregard the findings of the jury and substitute findings of its own.

4. EQUITY—PRAYER—CONSULTATION TO DETERMINE RELIEF INTENDED.

The prayer of a complaint may be consulted with a view to ascertain the kind of relief intended, where the complaint states two causes of action.

5. MORTGAGES—ACTIONS TO REDEEM—TIME TO SUE.

The right to redeem from a deed, absolute on its face, but intended as a mortgage, executed subsequent to Supreme Court decisions that, where the right to foreclose a mortgage is barred by the statute of limitations, the right to redeem is also barred, and, prior to the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 346, providing that an action to redeem may be brought within five years, is barred where the right to foreclose is barred by the statute of limitations, for the parties are deemed to have contracted in view of the rule declared by the Supreme Court decisions, and section 346, having been enacted after the deed was executed, is inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by George W. Green, administrator of the estate of Benjamin S. Green, deceased, against R. S. Thornton. Judgment for defendant, and from it and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Drown, Leicester & Drown (D. M. Delmas, of counsel), for appellant. E. F. Fitzpatrick and A. E. Shaw, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The complaint is in two counts, the first of which avers that on August 17, 1872, plaintiff's intestate, Benjamin S. Green, was and had been in the actual and exclusive possession of the lands in controversy for many years; that on that day he was indebted to the defendant and, for the purpose of securing the payment of present and future debts, he executed to defendant a conveyance which, though in form a deed absolute, was in reality a mortgage. It further alleges that on January 30, 1895, defendant, claiming to be the owner of said lands by virtue of said deed, entered into and has ever since retained possession thereof; that although demand therefor has been made, defendant refuses to surrender possession of the premises, or to render an account of the rents and profits thereof. In the second count the plaintiff, who is the administrator of the estate of Green, avers, after formal allegations, that he is, in his representative capacity, the owner of said property; that "defendant is now in possession of said premises, and claims title thereto adversely to plaintiff," founding his title upon the alleged conveyance to him by decedent; but that said conveyance was intended as a mortgage to secure present and future debts; that (as plaintiff is informed and believes) "said indebtedness has been fully paid"—"nevertheless the defendant still holds possession"—"and refuses to surrender possession." The prayer of the complaint is for: "A decree of this court quieting his title to said land," "that an accounting be taken" concerning said indebtedness and rents. "That in case the balance be found in defendant's favor, plaintiff be permitted to pay the same to defendant in satisfaction thereof." "That in case the balance be found in plaintiff's favor, plaintiff have judgment therefor against defendant, and judgment for possession of said lands." For other just and equitable relief. Defendant in his answer admits that he entered into possession of the lands, and still holds under the conveyance from Green, denies that the conveyance was a mortgage, and pleads the five-year statute of limitations founded upon adverse possession. The case was submitted to a jury upon special issues. The jury answered the questions submitted to them in favor of the plaintiff. Among other matters they found that the conveyance from Green was a mortgage, and that defendant had not had five years' adverse possession. After the coming in of the verdict defendant filed an amendment to his answer, in which he pleaded that the action had not been commenced within four years after the cause of action had accrued. The court then substituted findings of its own for the verdict of the jury. In these it found, as had the jury, that the conveyance from Green was a mortgage, but that the action was barred, not having been commenced within four years after the cause of action had accrued. It also found that, at the time of the making of the deed, Green was not the owner of the property, but was merely in possession of it, and by his deed conveyed such possession to defendant; that from the date of the conveyance to the time of his death in 1882, Green occupied the property as a tenant at will of Thornton; also that defendant was rightfully in possession of the property, and had been in such possession for more than four years before the commencement of the action.

Before taking up a discussion of the case, it may be well to state that the litigation involving the lands in controversy had been before the Supreme Court so often that, on the occasion of its last appearance there, November 10, 1900, in the case of Green v. Thornton, 130 Cal. 482, 62 Pac. 750, the court made the following comment and enumeration of the cases wherein adjudications had been had: "The contest, in relation to the premises in question, in its various forms, has been in this court on several different occasions. In fact it has become a sort of Jarndyce v. Jarndyce"—citing the various cases involving this land: Hyde v. Thornton, 83 Cal. 83, 23 Pac. 126; Hyde v. Boyle, 86 Cal. 352, 24 Pac. 1059; Hyde v. Boyle, 89 Cal. 590, 26 Pac. 1092; Hyde v. Boyle, 93 Cal. 1, 29 Pac. 247; Hyde v. Boyle, 105 Cal. 102, 38 Pac. 643; Robinson v. Thornton, 102 Cal. 675, 34 Pac. 120; Robinson v. Thornton, 114 Cal. 275, 46 Pac. 79; Robinson v. Thornton, 129 Cal. 12, 61 Pac. 946. The case of Green v. Thornton, 130 Cal. 482, 62 Pac. 750, and the present one are quite similar. That was an action to quiet title. There Hannah Green the widow of Benjamin S. Green, was the plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of the property, while in this case the plaintiff is the administrator of the estate of Benjamin S. Green, claiming that the deed from Green to Thornton was a mere mortgage. The only material difference in the facts of the two cases is that here evidence was introduced to show that the deed was intended as a mortgage. In that case defendant prevailed.
